Edward R. Murrow Fri., Feb. 1, 1957

This is the news:

An airliner... bound for Miami... crashed here in New York tonight shortly after take-off from LaGuardia Field. It was Northeast Airlines Flight 823. "Just minutes" after take-off, the control tower operator saw what he describes as "a blinding flash in the sky", and the aircraft was lost on the radar. It crashed into the city prison on Riker's Island, in the East River. Reports of the number of persons on board vary from 57 to 93. Police say there are 60 known survivors. They report 33 persons missing and believed dead. My colleague, Tom Costigan, arrived at the island a few minutes ago by Navy tug. Here is his report.

Tape runs 1:15

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Feb. 1, 1957

This is the news:

An airliner... bound for Miami... crashed here in New York tonight shortly after take-off from LaGuardia Field. It was Northeast Airlines Flight 823. "Just minutes" after take-off, the control tower operator saw what he describes as "a blinding flash in the sky", and the aircraft was lost on the radar. It crashed into the city prison on Riker's Island, in the East River. Reports of the number of persons on board vary from 57 to 93. Police say there are 60 known survivors. They report 33 persons missing and believed dead. My colleague, Tom Costigan, arrived at the island a few minutes ago by Navy tug. Here is his report.

Tape runs 1:15

~~This is the news:~~

The United States today introduced two resolutions in the United Nations General Assembly dealing with the Middle East problem. The first resolution calls on Israel to pull its forces back to the 1949 armistice line "without further delay." It "deplores" Israel's non-compliance with previous demands... by the General Assembly... that this be done. The second resolution deals with the problem of maintaining peace, once Israel's withdrawal is complete. It asks Secretary General Hammarskjold in consultation with Israel and Egypt to deploy United Nations troops along the line set forth in the 1949 armistice agreement. It does not specify the deployment of U.N. forces on both sides of the demarcation line. The resolution says that when Israeli troops have been pulled out of the Gaza Strip... and from positions commanding the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba... the secretary general should implement the "other measures" proposed in his report to the assembly last week. Hammarskjold indicated, in that report, that United Nations troops should be stationed on the Gulf of Aqaba to keep it open to Israeli ships. He is asked to consult with Israel and Egypt on these measures and report back. The two resolutions were submitted with the support of six other countries -- Yugoslavia, Norway, India, Indonesia, Colombia and Brazil. Canada was to have co-sponsored the resolutions, but changed its mind. The Canadian foreign minister, Lester Pearson, regarded the language as too vague.

A clash between U.N. and Israeli forces took place today in the Gaza Strip. According to the United Nations information center in Cairo, five Israeli soldiers were intercepted by U.N. troops beyond what was supposed to be the most advanced Israeli position. The United Nations forces consisted of a Swedish patrol. The Israelis reportedly took cover and opened fire. Their fire was returned. The United Nations announcement says, "Fortunately, no casualties occurred." Israel says its forces crossed the boundary by mistake.

In Algeria today, two trains were derailed by the Arab underground. Three European crewmen were killed. The general strike called by nationalist leaders in Algeria has gone through its fifth day. But more than half of the Moslem workers are reported back on their jobs.

President Eisenhower and King Saud, of Saudi Arabia, have decided to extend their talks. The conversations were scheduled to end today, but Secretary of State Dulles indicated they will now be concluded next Thursday or Friday. A joint communique, he said, will be issued at that time. Dulles said the talks, so far, have gone "extremely well... a good many misunderstandings have been cleared up." The President and King Saud met today for about an hour. Mr. Eisenhower plans to spend the week-end in Augusta, Georgia. And the king will go to White Sulphur Springs for a few days of rest.

Today... in the Senate... Secretary Dulles concluded secret testimony on President Eisenhower's new Middle East program. Democratic Leader Johnson said afterward that Dulles has agreed to two amendments. One would give "appropriate" committees of Congress 15 days advance notice on how the proposed economic aid money is to be spent. The other amendment, Johnson said, would make certain that the emergency authority to spend this money expires at the end of the current fiscal year.

Russia charged today that the western powers are deliberately stalling on disarmament. The official Soviet news agency Tass said the West is trying to delay solution of the problem "indefinitely". The western powers, it said, have avoided "a direct answer" to the latest Russian disarmament proposals. The Tass statement also charged the United States with "speeding up" preparations for an atomic war.

Yugoslavia announced formally today that the proposed visit of Marshal Tito to the United States has been called off "for the present". A government spokesman emphasized the phrase "for the present".

The Budapest radio says the Hungarian government has released Richard Roraback of Dobbs Ferry, New York, and that he is being expelled from the country. Roraback was seized by Hungarian border guards three weeks ago, as he was helping refugees across the frontier. He is expected to reach Austria tomorrow.

In Washington tonight, Secretary of Defense Wilson issued a statement denying that he ever meant "to cast any reflection on the individual young men who joined the National Guard during the Korean conflict. They had," he said, "every right to elect to do so." / Wilson also said, "We fully recognize the great contribution of guard units mobilized during the Korean War, as well as in prior wars in the service of our country." Secretary Wilson did not make a full retreat from his statement... last week... that the guard had been used as "draft-dodging" device. "It cannot be denied," he said tonight, "that the lot of those who entered the National Guard... and were not mobilized... was easier than that of the young men who were inducted." Wilson said he was issuing his statement to "avoid any further misunderstanding" and to clarify his position. President Eisenhower said on Wednesday that Wilson had made "a very unwise statement." / ~~And today, on the floor of the Senate, Senator Aiken of Vermont~~

Edward R. Murrow: February 1, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

It seems to be generally agreed that NATO's defense of Europe is being revolutionized by the development of Nuclear weapons. But just what the revolution will mean in terms of NATO's manpower, fighting techniques, or perhaps even its survival, is by no means clear. General Norstad, the NATO Supreme Commander now in Washington, said yesterday that NATO manpower had been reduced in 1954 because the increased power of nuclear weapons permitted it, but that the manpower level could not be allowed to fall further. Thus he did not support the plate-glass window theory of European defense, which is that if the Soviet Union breaks the window, the war automatically becomes universal and is fought principally by the strategic air commands. Under this theory the whole ground force system of NATO would be obsolete. Washington authorities now say that the nuclear weapons expected from us by our NATO allies must be regarded as reinforcing existing NATO strength, not substituting for it.

A common understanding is growing about NATO, according to President Eisenhower, undoubtedly it is based on our supplying our NATO allies with modern weapons, including guided missiles. But this cannot happen right away. If the weapons or missiles are to have atomic warheads, the McMahon Act will have to be revised. As it stands, it forbids our turning over such atomic materials to foreign countries. Inter-departmental talks are already being held in Washington on revising the McMahon Act, but action in the present session of Congress is not expected. There will be opposition to revision on the ground that we have no guarantee our weapons will not be used contrary to our policies.

General Norstad said yesterday that NATO defense can be kept adequate for the time being without revising the McMahon law. Presumably this would be through extending the atomic support commands which are a new factor in our defense planning. Teams of six thousand men, equipped with nuclear weapons, could be stationed at strategic places in the defense areas manned by other NATO countries. These would be American teams. One already is being tried out in Italy.

But while NATO leaders are conferring, and drafts of a revised McMahon Act are being written, and negotiations about our supplying guided missiles are going on, the fate of NATO may be decided in quite a different way on quite a different level. It may depend on whether German voters decide in September to re-elect Chancellor Adenauer, or switch to the Social Democrats. Adenauer is for a strong NATO. The Social Democrats are first, last and all the time, for German unification, which they propose to achieve by setting up a general European security system guaranteed jointly by the United States and Soviet Union.

If Adenauer wins, the Germans will make their promised contribution of twelve divisions to NATO. NATO will continue to be regarded as the shield of Europe, and the plans for reinforcing it can proceed. But if the Social Democrats win, the days of NATO as a shield will be numbered. Some observers believe that even if the Social Democrats win, Ollenhauer, as their Chancellor, would keep the promise of supplying five divisions to NATO by the end of the year. Even so, the whole course of European power politics would change. Accent would be on German unification. The Socialists would be willing to exchange security backed by American nuclear weapons for a political association based solely on a treaty.

A crucial debate was held in the West German Parliament yesterday that brought these ideas clearly to light. Adenauer's Foreign Minister and possible successor, Von Brentano, said that while everyone must want re-unification, the problem of re-unification had to be recognized as a functional disorder of American-Soviet relations. That is, it isn't something Germany can hope to get by itself. He also said Germany must not sacrifice realistic defense weapons for paper pledges. And there was one price Germany could not pay for unification, and that was liberty. Ollenhauer retorted that this proved that the Adenauer government no longer had any constructive plans for unification, and its only policy was to stick with the West.

These are the ideas that will go to the voters. Public opinion polls show the two sides running about fifty-fifty. The tide for the Social Democrats has ebbed somewhat since the Soviet Union crushed Hungarian liberties. But the outcome is very much in doubt. And that is to say that the future of NATO, and of Western defense planning in Europe, also is in doubt.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - NEWS

Friday, February 1, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

EDWARD R. MURROW: An airliner bound for Miami, crashed here in New York tonight shortly after take-off from laGuardia field. It was North East Air Lines, flight 823. Just minutes after take-off the control tower operator saw what he described as a blinding flash in the sky. Anti-aircraft was lost on radar. It crashed into the city prison on Rikers Island in the East River. Reports of the number of persons on board vary from 57 to 93. Police say there are 60 known suvivors. They report 33 persons missing and believed dead. My colleague, Tom Costigan, arrived at the island a few minutes ago by navy tug. Here is his report.

TOM COSTIGAN: I am standing in the wheel house of the tug-boat, U.S. Shamokan, just off the west side of Rikers Island. We cannot see the wreck as yet because of the heavy snow and the mist that surrounds the island which is the middle of the East River at the junction where it goes to the Long Island Sound area. Tugboats, ferry boats and police and coast guard cutters are arriving at the island by the minute. One disaster unit has just touched to the island and a group of firemen and doctors and nurses have gone up toward the scene of the wreck carrying medical supplies and strechers. About fifteen or twenty vessels so-far in and around the New York harbor area have responded to the distress signals following the first flash of the crash. The suvivors will be taken off from the west side of the island where several tugboats and ferry boats are standing by for quick run back to the shore of Manhattan and the Bronx. There are no bridges to this island. Everything must go by water and that is one of the main reasons for the tragedy that attends this disaster. This is Tom Costigan. Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW: And to repeat: It was North East Air Lines, flight 823, bound for Miami, out of laGuardia field. Police say there are 60 known suvivors.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - NEWS

Friday, February 1, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

EDWARD R. MURROW: An airliner bound for Miami, crashed here in New York tonight shortly after take-off from laGuardia field. It was North East Air Lines, flight 823. Just minutes after take-off the control tower operator saw what he described as a blinding flash in the sky. Anti-aircraft was lost on radar. It crashed into the city prison on Rikers Island in the East River. Reports of the number of persons on board vary from 57 to 93. Police say there are 60 known suvivors. They report 33 persons missing and believed dead. My colleague, Tom Costigan, arrived at the island a few minutes ago by navy tug. Here is his report.

TOM COSTIGAN: I am standing in the wheel house of the tug-boat, U.S. Shamokan, just off the west side of Rikers Island. We cannot see the wreck as yet because of the heavy snow and the mist that surrounds the island which is the middle of the East River at the junction where it goes to the Long Island Sound area. Tugboats, ferry boats and police and coast guard cutters are arriving at the island by the minute. One disaster unit has just touched to the island and a group of firemen and doctors and nurses have gone up toward the scene of the wreck carrying medical supplies and strechers. About fifteen or twenty vessels so-far in and around the New York harbor area have responded to the distress signals following the first flash of the crash. The suvivors will be taken off from the west side of the island where several tugboats and ferry boats are standing by for quick run back to the shore of Manhattan and the Bronx. There are no bridges to this island. Everything must go by water and that is one of the main reasons for the tragedy that attends this disaster. This is Tom Costigan. Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW: And to repeat: It was North East Air Lines, flight 823, bound for Miami, out of laGuardia field. Police say there are 60 known suvivors.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news.

An airliner..bound for Miami..crashed here in New York tonight shortly after take-off from LaGuardia Field. It was Northeast Airlines Flight 823. "Just minutes" after take-off, the control tower operator saw what he describes as "a blinding flash in the sky", and the aircraft was lost on the radar. It crashed into the city prison on Ricke's Island, in the East River. Reports of the number of persons on board vary from 57 to 93. Police say there are 60 known survivors. They report 33 persons missing and believed dead. My colleague, Tom Costigan, arrived at the isalnd a few minutes ago by Navy tug. Here is his report.

COSTIGAN: I am standing in the wheel house of the tug-boat, U.S. Shamokan, just off the west side of Rikers Island. We cannot see the wreck as yet because of the heavy snow and the mist that surrounds the island which is the middle of the East River at the junction where it goes to the Long Island Sound area. Tugboats, ferry boats and police and coast guard cutters are arriving at the island by the minute. One disaster unit has just touched to the island and a group of firemen and doctors and durses have gone up toward the scene of the wreck carrying medical supplies and strechers. About fifteen or twenty vessels so far in and around the New York Harbor area have responded do the distress signals following the first flash of the crash. The survivors will be taken off from the west side of the island where several tugboats and ferry boats are standing by for quick run back to the score of Manhattan and the Bronx. There are not bridges to this island. Everything must be by water and that is one of the main reasons for the tragedy that attends this desaster. This is Tom Costigan. Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: And to repeat: It was North East Air Lines, flight 823, bound for Miami, out of LaGuardia, field. Police say there are 60 known survivors.

The United States today introduced two resolutions in the United Nations General Assembly dealing with the Middle East problem. The first resolution calls on Israel to pull its forces back to the 1949 armistice line "without further delay." It "deplores" Israel's non-compliance with previous demands..by the General Assembly..that this be done. The second resolution deals with the problem of maintaining peace, once Israel's withdrawal is complete. It asks Secretary General Hammarskjold in consulting with Israel and Egypt to deploy United Nations troops along the line set forth in the 1949 armistice agreement. It does not specify the deployment of the U.N. forces on both sides of the demarcation line. The resolution says that when Israeli troops have been pulled out of the Gaza Strip..and from positions commanding the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba..the secretary general should implement the "other measures"proposed in his report to the assembly last week. Hammarksjold indicated, in that report, that United Nations troops should be stationed on the Gulf of Aqaba to keep it open to Israeli ships. He is asked to consult with Israel and Egypt on these measures and report back. The two resolutions were submitted with the support of six other countruies -- Yugoslavia, Norway, India, Indonesia, Colombia, and Brazil, Canada was to have co-sponsored the resolutions, but changed its mind. The Canadian Foreign minister, Lester Pearson, regarded the language as too vague.

A clash between U.N. and Israeli forces took place today in the Gaza Strip. According to the United Nations information center in Cairo, five Israeli soldiers were intercepted by U.N. troops beyond what was supposed to be the most advanced Israeli position. The United Nations forces consisted of a Swedish patrol. The Israelis reportedly took cover and opened fire. Their fire was returned. The United Nations announcement says, "Fortunately, no casualties occured." Israel says its forces crossed the boundaryby mistake.

In Algeria today, two trains were derailed by the Arab underground. Three European crewmen were killed. The general strike called by nationalist leaders in Algeria has gone through its fifth day. But more than half of the Moslem workers are eported back on their jobs.

President Eisenhower and King Saud, of Saudi Arabia, have decided to extend their talks. The conversations were scheduled to end today, but Secretary of State Dulles indicated they will now be concluded next Thursday or Friday. A joint communique, he said, will be issued at that time. Dulles said the talks, so far, have gone "extremely well..a good many misunderstandings have been cleared up." The President and King Saud met today for about an hour. Mr. Eisenhower plans to spend the week-end in Augusta, Georgia. And the king will go to White Sulphur Springs for a few days of rest.

Today..in the Senate..Secretary Dulles concluded secret testimony on President Eisenhower's new Middle East program. Democratic Leader Johnson said afterward that Dulles has agreed to two amendments. One would give "appropriate" committees of Congress 15 days advance notice on how the proposed economic aid money is to be spent. The other amendment, Johnson said, would make certain that the emergency authority to spend this money expires at the end of the current fiscal year.

Russia charged today that the western powers are deliberately stalling on disarmament. The official Soviet news agency Tass said the West is trying to delay solution of the problem "indefinitely". The western powers, it said, have avoided "a direct answer" to the latest Russian disarmament proposals. The Tass statement also charged the United States with "speeding up" preparations for at atomic war.

Yugoslavia announced formally today that the proposed visit of Marshal Tito to the United States has been off "for the present". A government spokesman emphasized the phrase "for the present."

The Budapest radio says the Hungarian government has released Richard Roraback of Dobbs Ferry, New York, and that he is being expelled from the country. Roraback was seized by Hungarian border guards three weeks ago, as he was helping refugees across the frontier. He is expected to reach Austria tomorrow.

In Washington tonight, Secretary of Defense Wilson issued a statement denying that he ever meant "to cast any relfection on the individual young men who joined the National Guard during the Korean conflict. They had" he said, "every right to elect to do so." Wilson also said, "We fully recognize the great contirbution of guard units mobilized during the Korean War, as well as in prior wars in the service of our country." Secretary Wilson did not make a full retreat from his statement..last week..that the guard had been used as a "draft-dodging" device. "It cannot be denied," he said, tonight, "that the lot of those who entered the National Guard,.and were not mobilized..was easier than that of the young men who were inducted." Wilson said he was issuing his statement to "avoid any further misunderstanding" and to clarify his position. President Eisenhower said on Wednesday that Wilson had made "a very unwise statement."

It seems to be generally agreed that NATO's defense of Europe is being revolutionized by the development of nuclear waapons. But just what the revolution will mean in terms of NATO's manpower, fighting techniques, or perhaps even its survival, is by no means clear. General Norstad, the NATO Supreme Commander now is Washington, said yesterday that NATO manpower had been reduced in 1954 because the increased power of nuclear weapons permitted it, but that the manpower level could not be allowed to fall further. Thus he did not support the plate-glass window theory of European defense, which is, that if the Soviet Union breaks the window, the war automatically becomes universal and is fought principally by the strategic air commands. Under this theory the whole ground force system of NATO would be obsolete. Washington authorities now say that the nuclear weapons expected from us by our NATO allies must be regarded as reinforcing existing NATO strenght, not substituting for it.

A common understanding is growing about NATO, according to President Eisenhower, undoubtedly it is based on our supplying our NATO allies with modern weapons, including guided missiles. But this cannot happen right away. If the weapons or missiles are to have atomic warheads, the McMahon Act will have to be revised. As it stands, it forbids our turning over such atomic material to foreign countries. Inter-departmental talks are already being held in Washington on revising the McMahon Act, but action in the present sessions of Congress is not expected. There will be opposition to revision on the ground that we have no guarantee our weapons will not be used contrary to our policies.

General Norstad said yesterday that NATO defense can be kept adequate for the time being without revising the McMahon law. Presulably this would be through extending the atomic support commands which are a new factor in our defense planning. Teams of six thousand men, equipped with nuclear weapons, could be stationed at strategic places on the defense areas manned by other NATO countries. These would be American teams. One already is being tired out in Italy.

But while NATO leaders are conferring, and drafts of a revised McMahon Act are being written, and negotiations abuut our supplying guided missiles are going on, the fate of NATO may be decided in quite a different way on quite a different leve. It may depend onwhether German voters decide in September to reelect Chancellor Adenauer, or switch to the Social Democrats. Adenauer is for a strong NATO. The Social Democrats are first, last and all the time, for German unification, which they propose to achieve by setting up a general European security system guaranteed jointly by the United States and Soviet Union.

If Adenauer wins, the Germans will make their promised contribution of twelve divisions to NATO. NATO will continue to be regarded as the shield of Europe, and the plans for reinforcing it can proceed. But if the Social Democrats win, the days of NATO as a shield will be numbered. Some observers believe that even if the Social Democrats win, Ollenhauer, as their Chancellor, would keep the promise of supplying five divisions to NATO by the end of the year. Even so, the whole course of European power politics would change. Accent would be on German unification. The Socialists would be willing to exchange security backed by American nuclear weapons for a political association bases solely on a treaty.

A crucial debate was held in the West German Parliament yesterday that brought these ideas clearly to light. Adenauer's Foreign Minister and possible successor, Von Brentano, said that while everyone must want re-unification, the problem of re-unification had to be recognized as a functional disorder of American-Soviet relations. That is, it isn't something Germany can hope to get by itself. He also said Germany must not sacrifice realistic defense weapons for paper pledges. And there was one price Germany could not pay for unification, and that was liberty. Ollenhauer retorted that this proved that the Adenauer government no longer had any constructive plans for unification, and its only policy was was to stick with the West.

There are the ideas that will go to the voters. Public opinion polls show tha two sides running abuut fifty-fifty. The tide for the Social Democrats has ebbed somewhat since the Soviet Union crushed Hungarian liberties. But the outcome is very much in doubt. And that is to say that the future of NATO, and of Western defense planning in Europe, also is in doubt.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment.now.,there is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: Once again, the plane which crashed tonight shortly after 6:00 p.m., just after its take off from Laguardia Field, was Northeast Airlines Flight 823, bound for Miami. Police say there are 60 known survivors.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Feb. 4, 1957

This is the news:

France today defended its Algeria policy in the United Nations. In a long speech before the political committee, Foreign Minister Pineau recited the French achievements in Algeria... and reaffirmed France's offer to the Algerian nationalists for a cease-fire. He accused Russia of supporting the revolt through the Communist International. But the rebels, he said, are getting their "most continuous and effective support" from Egypt. He cited President Nasser's statement last year that the independence movement in Algeria is "our" struggle. Pineau reiterated the view that Algeria is an internal French problem. He said it was "only fair" to warn that if the United Nations passes a resolution on Algeria, France would in no way feel bound to comply.

[redacted]

Hearings on President Eisenhower's new Middle East policy continued today in the Senate. W.C. Daniel, national commander of the American Legion, testified in favor of the President's request for authority to use American troops, if necessary, to block Soviet aggression. "Indecision and equivocation got us into this mess," Daniel said. "Drawing a clear line against Communism may get us out." The legion commander objected to Mr. Eisenhower's proposal for strengthening the Middle East countries through economic aid. Financial assistance to some Arab states, he said, "could very well be used as down payments to Russia for military supplies."

The House Armed Services Committee opened hearings today on the order requiring enlistees in the National Guard to undergo six months of active duty training. Secretary of the Army Brucker said [redacted] the fighting readiness of the National Guard is "drastically impaired" by lack of active duty training. The six-months training program was decided upon, he said, only after "the most painstaking study". Brucker testified after a group of National Guard commanders had a meeting with President Eisenhower at the White House. Their spokesman, Major General Milton Reckford, said afterward that the meeting with the President was "most satisfactory from our point of view". Reckford said they had been assured the strength of the National Guard will not be "materially reduced". The name of Secretary of Defense Wilson, he said, did not come up. Wilson recently created a furor when he said the guard had been a haven for draft-dodgers during the Korean War. At his news conference last week, President Eisenhower called the remark "very unwise."

Attorney General Brownell testified before the House Judiciary Committee today on behalf of the Administration's civil rights program. Brownell said the program would not extend the area of federal jurisdiction over civil rights. "Rather," he said, "it would permit the Federal Government to take civil remedial action, instead of having to depend solely upon criminal procedures." Brownell said the legislation is needed... in his words... "to affirm the determination of Congress to secure equal justice under law for all of our citizens."

Another cabinet member... Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey... went today before a joint economic committee of the Senate and House. Humphrey renewed his invitation to Congress to cut the budget, if it can. And he warned again of what he called "the pressures to spend". Avoidance of a disastrous inflation, Humphrey said, depends in large degree on public self-restraint.

King Saud, of Saudi Arabia, had his eyes examined today at Walter Reed Army Hospital... and got a new pair of glasses. ~~The hospital also issued a report on his three-and-a-half-year-old son. It said the young prince is suffering from partial spastic paralysis of the right arm and leg... and it presecribed physical therapy and a leg brace attached to an orthopedic shoe. Surgery, the hospital said, is not indicated at this time.~~" The king and President Eisenhower will conclude their talks later this week.

The White House announces that President Heuss of West Hermany will visit Washington for three days, starting March 6th. He will confer with President Eisenhower and then, in a private capacity, he will tour several states.

The United Press says that David K.E. Bruce has been chosen to succeed Dr. James B. Conant as United States ambassador to West Germany. Bruce is a Democrat. He once served as ambassador to France.

Thirty-seven coal miners were killed today in the Pocahontas mine in Bishop, Virginia. The tragedy was blamed on an underground gas explosion. The blast occurred shortly after 177 men had gone to work on the early morning shift. Company officials say the section of mine involved was inspected before the accident and pronounced safe.

A federal grand jury... here in New York... today indicted two men and a woman on charges of espionage. Jack Soble, his wife Myra, and Jacob Albam, are formally accused of conspiring to transmit to Russia, information relating to national defense, "particularly to the intelligence activities of the United States and the armed forces." Ten Russians, named as co-conspirators are now outside the United States. One of them, Vassili Molev, was on the Soviet Embassy staff in Washington until last week. Jacob Albam... and the Sobles... are the first persons indicted under the 1954 statute, which provides the death penalty for espionage in peacetime. A government spokesman says the prosecution will not seek the death penalty, although technically... if they are convicted... it could be imposed by the court.

Edward R. Murrow: February 4, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

If the epitaph of the United Nations is ever written - assuming there is anyone about to write it - it will have to read "Moral force was not enough". - not enough to prevent a planet from going over the brink into complete disaster. It was not moral force that stopped Communist aggression in Korea - it was the blood and metal of the free world, especially the United States.

It is easy enough for us to deplore the ineffectiveness of moral force when we are not directly involved. In order to get the thing in perspective we might look forward a few years to the time when a vast majority of the United Nations will ask us to get out of Okinawa, which we occupy by right of Conquest. We are not likely to do so.

It was not the moral force of the United Nations that brought about the cease fire in Egypt, and the withdrawal of British, French and Israeli troops. It was primarily the Russian threat of military action and the American threat of economic sanctions.

In the case of Hungary moral force of the United Nations was not strong enough to open the borders so that a few neutral observers could watch the slaughter. The degree of independence that has been won by Poland from Moscow's domination was not the result of a U.N. resolution, but rather the bold stubborn pride of the Poles who would be master in their own house, even though for the time being it remains a Communist house.

The value of the United Nations, other than being a public forum, is moral. And when national self-interest is involved the moral power and persuasiveness evaporate. That is why the French say to the U.N.: "Hands off Algeria"; the British say: "Cyprus is no concern of a world organization". That is why the Israelis say they will stand at the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba and in the Gaza Strip, until firm and fast guarantees are forthcoming. That is why Nehru says there will be no U.N. forces in Kashmir. And it is for the same reason that this country would in all likelihood refuse to turn over to the U.N. any area regarded as vital to our national interest.

The United Nations has no automatic legal authority. It is not a government - can only hope to get what it wants by exerting moral power. In the Middle East crisis the United States has been greatly concerned that the U.N. should exercise this moral power. But when it comes to trying to prevent the area from falling into the hands of the Communists, it is King Saud with whom we deal, who is not exactly to be equated with moral power.

It has been proposed that the Israeli troops in the Gaza Strip and along the Gulf of Aqaba be replaced by U.N. forces. This could be done if both Egypt and Israel agree. They don't. And so long as they both refuse, the moral power of the U.N. is frustrated.

And the latest development involves India's Prime Minister Nehru, a most eloquent man on the subject of the morality of nations. He has great moral prestige in Asia and Africa. But when it comes to Kashmir, it appears that it is geography rather than morality that counts. He has refused to permit U.N. forces to be stationed on what he calls Indian territory. And he does this in the face of a unanimous resolution by the U.N. Security Council, which denies that Kashmir is Indian territory, and which calls for a plebiscite under which the people who live there might decide whether they wish to join India or Pakistan. It is generally agreed that in a free vote a majority would vote for Pakistan. Mr. Nehru was presented with a striking opportunity to increase the moral force of the United Nations, but it would probably have cost him Kashmir, and his example of a voluntary limitation of sovereignty - a sacrifice in order to serve peace constructively - would scarcely have influenced other nations to go and do likewise.

As a matter of fact the U.N. has passed four resolutions asking for a plebiscite, but nothing happened. It must be emphasized that Mr. Nehru is not alone in flouting the moral force of the United Nations. It just seems to be a case where high moral conduct and attention to the wishes of the rest of the nations is all right and to be applauded so long as it doesn't happen too near home.

Even in the field of armaments, we may supply them for the highest of moral reasons, though that isn't very likely. For example, if we supply arms to King Saud, he will promise not to use them against Israel. We may believe him, but will the Israelis? We supply arms to Pakistan; they promise not to use them against India. We may be convinced but the Indians aren't.

The world remains, even the small nations in it, more willing to put its trust in weapons in hand than moral power in the U.N. All nations seem to say: "Let all nations be upright, moral, responsive to world opinion - but at a distance."

George Bogan.

Word for Today

His tory would seem to demonstrate that moral force... and force of arms... are both required in dealing with aggression and the threat of it. Frederick William the First said, very ~~vigorously~~, "When one in this world wants to decide something with the pen, he does not do it unless supported by the strength of the sword." This is not to say that moral power is to be belittled.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

France today defended its Algeria policy in the United Nations. In a long speech before the political committee, Foreign Minister Pineau recited the French achievements in Algeria...and reaffirmed France's offer to the Algerian nationalists for a cease-fire. He accused Russia of supporting the revolt through the Communist International. But the rebels, he said, are getting their "most continuous and effective support" from Egypt. He cited President Nasser's statement last year that the independence movement in Algeria is "our" struggle. Pineau reiterated the view that Algeria is an internal French problem. He said it was "only fair" to warn that if the United Nations passes a resolution on Algeria, France would in no way feel bound to comply.

Hearings on President Eisenhower's new Middle East policy continued today in the Senate. W.C. Daniel, national commander of the American Legion, testified in favor of the President's request for authority to use A merican troops, if necessary, to block Soviet aggression. "Indecision and equivocation got us into this mess," Daniel said. "Drawing a clear line against Communism may get us out." The legion commander objected to Mr. Eisenhower's proposal for strengthening the Middle East countries through economic aid. Financial assistance to some Arab states, he said, "could very well be used as down payments to Russia for military supplies."

The House Armed Services Committee opened hearings today on the order requiring enlistees in the National Guard to undergo six months of active duty training. Secretary of the Army Brucker said the fighting readiness of the National Guard is "drastically impaired" by lack of active duty training. The six-months training program was decided upon, he said, only after "the most painstaking study". Brucker testified after a group of National Guard commanders had a meeting with President Eisenhower at the White House. Their spokesman, Major General Milton Reckford, said afterward that the meeting with the President was "most satisfactory from our point of view". Reckford said they had been assured the strength of the National Guard will not be "materially reduced". The name of Secretary of Defense Wilson, he said, did not come up. Wilson recently created a furor when he said the guard had been a haven for draft-dodgers during the Korean War. At his news conference last week, President Eisenhower called the remark "very unwise."

Attorney General Brownell testified before the House Judiciary Committee today on behalf of the Administration's civil rights program. Brownell said the program would not extend the area of federal jurisdiction over civil rights. "Rather," he said, "it would permit the Federal Government to take civil remedial action, instead of having to depend solely upon criminal procedures." Brownell said the legislation is needed...in his words..."to affirm the determination of Congress to secure equal justice under law for all of our citizens."

Another cabinet member...Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey...went today before a joint economic committee of the Senate and House. Humphrey renewed his invitation to Congress to cut the budget, if it can. And he warned again of what he called "the pressures to spend. Avoidance of a disastrous inflation, Humphrey said, depends in large degree on public self-restraint.

King Saud, of Saudi Arabia, had his eyes examined today at Walter Reed Army Hospital...and got a new pair of glasses. The king and President Eisenhower will conclude their talks later this week.

The White House announces that President Heuss of West Germany will visit Washington for three days, starting March 6th. He will confer with President Eisenhower and then, in a private capacity, he will tour several states.

The United Press says that David K.E. Bruce has been chosen to succeed Dr. James B. Conant as United States ambassador to West Germany. Bruce is a Democrat. He once served as ambassador to France.

Thirty-seven coal miners were killed today in the Pocahontas mine in Bishop, Virginia. The tragedy was blamed on an underground gas explosion. The blast occurred shortly after 177 men had gone to work on the early morning shift. Company officials say the section of mine involved was inspected before the accident and pronounced safe.

A federal grand jury...here in New York...today indicted two men and a woman on charges of espionage. Jack Soble, his wife Myra, and Jacob Albam are formally accused of conspiring to transmit to Russia information relating to national defense, "particularly to the intelligence activities of the United States and the armed forces." Ten Russians named as co-conspirators are now outside the United States. One of them, Vassili Molev, was on the Soviet Embassy staff in Washington until last week. Jacob Albam...and the Sobles...are the first persons indicted under the 1954 statute which provides the dealth penalty for espionage in peacetime. A government spokesman says the prosecution will not seek the death penalty, although technically...if they are convicted...it could be imposed by the court.

If the epitaph of the United Nations is ever written - assuming there is anyone about to write it - it will have to read "Moral force was not enough", not enough to prevent a planet from going over the brink into complete disaster. It was not moral force that stopped Communist aggression in Korea - it was the blood and metal of the free world, especially the United States.

It is easy enough for us to deplore the ineffectiveness of moral force when we are not directly involved. In order to get the thing in perspective we might look forward a few years to the time when a vast majority of the United Nations will ask us to get out of Okinowa, which we occupy by right of Conquest. We are not likely to do so.

It was not the moral force of the United Nations that brought about the cease fire in Egypt, and the withdrawal of British, French and Israeli troops. It was primarily the Russian threat of military action and the American threat of economic sanctions.

In the case of Hungary moral force of the United Nations was not strong enough to open the borders so that a few neutral observers could watch the slaughter. The degree of independence that has been won by Poland from Moscow's domination was not the result of a U.N. resolution, but rather the bold stubborn pride of the Poles who would be master in their own house, even though for the time being it remains a Communist house.

The value of the United Nations, other than being a public forum, is moral. And when national self-interest is involved, the moral power and persuasiveness evaporate. That is why the French say to the U.N. "Hands off Algeria"; The British say: Cyprus is no concern of a world organization". That is why the Israelis say they will stand at the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba and in the Gaza Strip, until firm and fast guarantees are forthcoming. That is why Nehru says there will be no U.N. forces in Kashmir. And it is for the same reason that this country would in all likelihood refuse to turn over to the U.N. any area regarded as vital to our national interest.

The United Nations has no automatic legal authority. It is not a government - can only hope to get what it wants by exerting moral power. In the Middle East crisis the United States has been greatly concerned that the U.N. should exercise this moral power. Bur when it comes to trying to prevent the area from falling into the hands of the Communists, it is King Saud with whom we deal, who is not exactly to be equated with moral power.

It has been proposed that the Israeli troops in the Gaza Strip and along the Gulf of Aqaba be replaced by U.N. forces. This could be done if both Egypt and Israel agree. They don't. And so long as they both refuse, the moral power of the U.N. is frustrated.

And the latest development involves India's Prime Minister Nehru, a most eloquent man on the subject of the morality of nations. He has great moral prestige in Asia and Africa. But when it comes to Kashmir, it appears that it is geography rather than morality that counts. He has refused to permit U.N. forces to be stationed on what he calls Indian territory. And he does this in the facr of a unanimous resolution by the U.N. Security Council, which denies that Kashmir is Indian territory, and which calls for a plebiscite under which the people who live there might decide whether they wish to join India or Pakistan . It is generally agreed that in a free vote a majority would vote for Pakistan. Mr. Nehru was presented with a striking opportunity to increase the moral force of the United Nations, but it would probably have cost him Kashmir, and his example of a voluntary limitation of sovereignty - a sacrifice in order to serve peace constructively - would scarcely have influenced other nations to go and do likewise.

As a matter of fact the U.N. has passed four resolutions asking for a plebiscite, but nothing happened. It must be emphasized that Mr. Nehru is not alone in flouting the moral force of the United Nations. It just seems to be a case where high moral conduct and attention to the wishes of the rest of the nations is all right and to be applauded so long as it doesn't happen too near home.

Even in the field of armaments, we may supply them for the highest of moral reasons, though that isn't very likely. For example, if we supply arms to King Saud, he will promise not to use them against Israel. We may believe him, but will the Israelis? We supply arms to Pakistan; they promise not to use them against India. We may be convinced, but the Indians aren't.

The world remains, even the small nations in it, more willing to put its trust in weapons in hand than moral power in the U.N. All nations seem to say: "Let all nations be upright, moral, responsive to world opinion - but at a distance."

This is Ed Murrow. I"ll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: His tory would seem to demonstrate that moral force...and force of arms...are bo h required in dealing with aggression and the threat of it. Frederick William the First said, "when one in this world wants to decide something with the pen, he does not do it unless supported by the strnegth of the sword." This is not to say that moral power is to be belittled.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Feb. 5, 1957

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles held his first news conference today in seven weeks. And for a first-hand report, we switch to Bill Downs in Washington.

(Downs runs approx 4 mins Returns on cue "--to Ed Murrow
in N.Y."

That was my colleague, Bill Downs, reporting on the Dulles news conference.

Today, President Eisenhower had his second Arab visitor within a week. Crown Prince Ilah of Iraq conferred at the White House for 45 minutes, and said afterward that he has asked for more arms aid. / Iraq [redacted] is a member of the pro-Western Baghdad Pact. / Prince Ilah agreed with King Saud, of Saudi Arabia, that [redacted] other Arab leaders would have a higher appreciation for the President's new Middle East policy, if they could have it explained to them at first hand. King Saud spent a quiet day at Blair House. He is expected to have a final meeting with Mr. Eisenhower on Friday.

President Eisenhower had his regular weekly meeting today with Republican congressional leaders. He was informed that the Senate probably will open debate on his Middle East resolution next week.... and that Senate hearings on his civil rights legislation are scheduled to get underway next Tuesday. The hearings in the House began yesterday. And today... in a House committee... a southern state official attacked the Administration civil rights program as unworkable. Edward Scheidt, North Carolina commissioner for motor Vehicles, contended that the size of the F.B.I. could be doubled, "and it would still not have enough men to handle all the investigations that would result from implementation of the program." The legislation, he argued, "threatens to shake the very foundations of law enforcement in the United States." Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, testified in favor of the civil rights measure. He called it a "minimum, meaningful bill" that is necessary and long overdue. Wilkins said that in 1954, 22-thousand Negroes in Mississippi registered to vote... but that, a year later, the number had been forced down to around 8-thousand.

Secretary of Welfare Folsom told a House committee today that federal action to help states solve their school construction problems is "imperative". He was testifying on behalf of the Administration's four-year school construction program. Folsom warned Congress that if it does not appropriate more than a billion dollars for new classrooms now, many children will be handicapped permanently with education which is inadequate. "We are confronted with a condition," he said, "not a theory. Neglect of educational opportunities for our children means a loss to them... and to the nation... which may never be regained."

The Senate today opened an investigation of the oil crisis, resulting from blockage of the Suez Canal. The chairman of the investigating committee... Senator O'Mahoney of Wyoming... said legislation may be needed to deal with the problem of higher oil prices. He said he could not understand the increases in the price of oil, in view of reports he had received of large reserves. Democratic Senator Neeley charged that the oil shortage in Europe is "proof" that the "oil lobby" is more powerful than the President and the Congress." Defense Mobilizer Fleming told the committee that domestic oil producers have been cooperating "willingly" with the government to work out the problem on a voluntary basis. He said the national defense aspects of the agreement with the 15 major oil companies are more important than the possible violation of anti-trust legislation. Fleming conceded that the companies are shipping too little crude oil and too much gasoline and other refined products. The Suez Canal, he said, may be reopened "much sooner than we had hoped."

On the New York Stock Market today, prices dropped one to five dollars a share. Losses were widespread and evenly distributed among metals, oils, motors, aircrafts and rails. The drop followed a series of pessimistic reports on business... including a warning last night by former President Hoover that current inflationary trends, unless checked, could LEAD to a major depression.

— INSERT!

Today in Moscow, the Supreme Soviet (which is Russia's version of parliament) met in the Kremlin palace and was presented a new budget. If taken on face value, the budget calls for a slight cut in defense spending. Soviet Finance Minister Zverev claimed 16 percent of the total budget will be spent on defense, compared to a little more than 18 percent last year. These figures do not include expenditures, either for guided missiles or nuclear weapons. It was announced that, in 1957, Russia will continue to concentrate on development of heavy industry. At the same time, Soviet workers were promised more consumer goods. The goal will be to increase total industrial production by 7 percent. This is not so ambitious a goal as was set a year ago. That called for an 11 percent increase in industrial expansion, and was severely criticized by the Central Committee. The goal this year is regarded as "more realistic". The Supreme Soviet will meet for five days, and wind up with a report by Foreign Minister Shepilov, on Soviet foreign policy.

Last week, a German blood specialist went to Moscow to treat a government official whom authorities refused to name. Today... in a report from Moscow... my colleague Daniel Schorr identified the "mystery patient" as Vyacheslav Malyshev, minister of machine building, and a member of the state planning commission.

The premier of Ceylon today joined Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai in calling for another Asian-African conference, similar to the meeting held in Bandung in 1955. The joint statement was issued at the end of Chou's five-day visit to Ceylon. The problems of the Middle East, it said, cannot be solved by the continuation of power politics, "or the substitution of one power for some other to fill up a so-called power vacuum." Chou told a news conference the Chinese Communist government will survive if -- in his words -- the United States refuses to recognize it "for a thousand years."

The supreme allied commander in Europe... General Lauris Norstad... told reporters in Paris today that he expects to have at least six West German divisions under his command by next December. These forces, he said, will go "a long way" toward making up the German deficiency "which we feel very keenly at the present time." Norstad said the alliance has an atomic capability... based on the United States Strategic Air Command and the British Bomber Command... which he described as "very considerable". Nevertheless, he warned that if NATO countries persist in making manpower cuts, his command will be forced to undertake "a basic revision" in the concept of its mission.

Vice President Nixon will represent the United States next month at ceremonies marking the granting of independence to the Gold Coast. The African colony, belonging to Britain, will become an independent member of the British Commonwealth on March 6th. Nixon will go as head of an American delegation yet to be named.

George Bryan

A series of explosions... due to leaking gas... destroyed a business block in downtown Reno today, killing at least one person. Police say the death toll may go higher. Forty persons were injured.

Word for Today

Mr. Dulles is sure that American policy on Suez will be justified by the verdict of history. To break with our allies, he said, was one of the hardest decisions on behalf of principle this government ever had to make. Yet it is true, as Henry Ward Beecher observed, "Not that which men do worthily but that which they do successfully is what history makes haste to record."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, February 5, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: The Secretary of State, Dulles, held his first news conference today in seven weeks. And for a first hand report, we switch to Bill Downs in Washington.

DOWNS: Today's was one of the strangest news conferences Secretary of State Dulles has ever held. The Secretary of State, who looked surprisingly fit, when he returned from his Florida convalecence, looked tired today and it showed. The State Department, he said, is still studying what it will do about the three American reporters who defied the department's ban and went to Red China on news missions. The government would maintain its ban on travel to Communist China as long as Americans are held prisoners there.

Asked about the lambasting, that he has been getting from Democratic senators, Mr. Dulles said today that he did not think these attacks on him in Congress were particularly bitter, just normal for American politics, and he has no plans to resign or retire. The Secretary of State was downright sentimental when he spoke of his gratitude at President Eisenhower's coming to his defense. He said that it makes you feel pretty good, when a person as wise and experienced as Mr. Eisenhower, defends you. He later thanked the reporter, who put the question to him.

But the unreal parts of this news conference came in the Secretary's discussion of the Middle East and the problems which threaten that area's very shaky peace. Would Mr. Dulles approve of sanctions against Israel, if Israel refused to withdraw from Gaza and the Aqaba Gulf, as demanded by the United Nations? The Secretary replied that he would not unilaterally impose such sanctions, but if the U.N. voted sanctions, then we would consider the matter. Would the United States then fight for the existence of Israel against an attack by Soviet Russia? Mr. Dulles implied that we would. Another reporter asked if the United States still regarded the Tripartite Declaration, guaranteeing the Israeli-Arab borders as still in effect? Mr. Dulles said that we still abide by that policy declaration, although he did not know how the French and the British felt about it, since their Suez attack breaking that guarantee. The Secretary of State thinks that his plea will justify America's breaking with Britain and France on the issue of aggression and the use of force in international matters. But, he also said that the history of the Suez crisis is too fresh and tender to be bared at the review of American foreign policy, he is preparing for the Congress. Mr. Dulles believes Israel will retire to her own borders because she has a decent respect for the opinions of mankind. That Israel depends on the good will of other nations and was itself created by the U.N. Well, would Egypt also respect the U.N. decisions about the future of the Suez Canal? Secretary of State Dulles replied that Egypt could also be expected to heed the moral arguments and allow Israeli shipping through the Suez. Mr. Dulles did not explain why he should be so optimistic about the effects of moral pressure. Egypt has been defying moral pressure to ban Israeli shipping through the Suez for the past eight years. And after the seizure of the Suez, by Egypt last year, Mr. Dulles, himself, exerted all the moral pressure the United States commands, but it too was disregarded by Israel and by America's two closest allies, Britain and France in the combined attack on Egypt. And according to most diplomats here in Washington, it was not moral pressure that stopped that attack before the Anglo-French forces could complete their mission. These sources say that offensive against the Nasser government was stopped by the threat of nuclear retailiation from Moscow. Mr. Dulles hopes for passage soon of the President's proposal for the Middle East warning Russia against aggression there. But, in his discussion today, the Secretary of State mentioned no policy aimed at settling the basic arguments between the Arabs and the Israelis where the greatest danger of renewed warfare lies. This news conference today somehow seemed familiar. It recalled the days of the questions asked of another Secretary of State named Dean Acheson, who finally admitted under questioning that America had no workable policy, at one time, toward faction-torn China. That the State Department was waiting for the dust to settle. Mr. Dulles's hopes for tranquility, if not peace in the Middle East, as set down today, are not policies. Neither are his hopes for the efficacy of international moral pressure. Hopes, in this field have a way of turning to dust, that settles slowly.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York

MURROW: That was my colleague, Bill Downs, reporting on the Dulles news conference.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, February 5, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: The Secretary of State, Dulles, held his first news conference today in seven weeks. And for a first hand report, we switch to Bill Downs in Washington.

DOWNS: Today's was one of the strangest news conferences Secretary of State Dulles has ever held. The Secretary of State, who looked surprisingly fit, when he returned from his Florida convalecence, looked tired today and it showed. The State Department, he said, is still studying what it will do about the three American reporters who defied the department's ban and went to Red China on news missions. The government would maintain its ban on travel to Communist China as long as Americans are held prisoners there.

Asked about the lambasting, that he has been getting from Democratic senators, Mr. Dulles said today that he did not think these attacks on him in Congress were particularly bitter, just normal for American politics, and he has no plans to resign or retire. The Secretary of State was downright sentimental when he spoke of his gratitude at President Eisenhower's coming to his defense. He said that it makes you feel pretty good, when a person as wise and experienced as Mr. Eisenhower, defends you. He later thanked the reporter, who put the question to him.

But the unreal parts of this news conference came in the Secretary's discussion of the Middle East and the problems which threaten that area's very shaky peace. Would Mr. Dulles approve of sanctions against Israel, if Israel refused to withdraw from Gaza and the Aqaba Gulf, as demanded by the United Nations? The Secretary replied that he would not unilaterally impose such sanctions, but if the U.N. voted sanctions, then we would consider the matter. Would the

United States then fight for the existence of Israel against an attack by Soviet Russia? Mr. Dulles implied that we would. Another reporter asked if the United States still regarded the Tripartite Declaration, guaranteeing the Israeli-Arab borders as still in effect? Mr. Dulles said that we still abide by that policy declaration, although he did not know how the French and the British felt about it, since their Suez attack breaking that guarantee. The Secretary of State thinks that his plea will justify America's breaking with Britain and France on the issue of aggression and the use of force in international matters. But, he also said that the history of the Suez crisis is too fresh and tender to be bared at the review of American foreign policy, he is preparing for the Congress. Mr. Dulles believes Israel will retire to her own borders because she has a decent respect for the opinions of mankind. That Israel depends on the good will of other nations and was itself created by the U.N. Well, would Egypt also respect the U.N. decisions about the future of the Suez Canal? Secretary of State Dulles replied that Egypt could also be expected to heed the moral arguments and allow Israeli shipping through the Suez. Mr. Dulles did not explain why he should be so optimistic about the effects of moral pressure. Egypt has been defying moral pressure to ban Israeli shipping through the Suez for the past eight years. And after the seizure of the Suez, by Egypt last year, Mr. Dulles, himself, exerted all the moral pressure the United States commands, but it too was disregarded by Israel and by America's two closest allies, Britain and France in the combined attack on Egypt. And according to most diplomats here in Washington, it was not moral pressure that stopped that attack before the Anglo-French forces could complete their mission. These sources say that offensive against the Nasser government was stopped by the threat of nuclear retailiation from

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, February 5, 1957
7:45 - 8:00

Moscow. Mr. Dulles hopes for passage soon of the President's proposal for the Middle East warning Russia against aggression there. But, in his discussion today, the Secretary of State mentioned no policy aimed at settling the basic arguments between the Arabs and the Israelis where the greatest danger of renewed warfare lies. This news conference today somehow seemed familiar. It recalled the days of the questions asked of another Secretary of State named Dean Acheson, who finally admitted under questioning that America had no workable policy, at one time, toward faction-torn China. That the State Department was waiting for the dust to settle. Mr. Dulles's hopes for tranquility, if not peace in the Middle East, as set down today, are not policies. Neither are his hopes for the efficacy of international moral pressure. Hopes, in this field have a way of turning to dust, that settles slowly.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York

MURROW: That was my colleague, Bill Downs, reporting on the Dulles news conference.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1957
7:45--8:90 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Secretary of State, Dulles, held his first news conference today in seven weeks. And for a first hand report, we switch to Bill Downs in Washington.

DOWNS: Today's was one of the strangest news conferences Secretary of State Dulles has ever held. The Secretary of State, who looked surprisingly fit, when he returned from his Florida convalescence, looked tired today and it showed. The State Department, he said, is still studying what it will do about the three American reporters who defied the Department's ban and went to Red China on news missions. The government would maintain its ban on travel to Communist China as long as Americans are held prisoners there.

Asked about the lambasting, that he has been getting from Democratic Senators, Mr. Dulles said today that he did not think these attacks on him in Congress were particularly bitter, just normal for American politics, and he has no plans to resign or retire. The Secretary of State was downright sentimental when he spoke of his gratitude at President Eisenhower's coming to his defense. He said that it makes you feel pretty good, when a person as wise and experienced as Mr. Eisenhower, defends you. He later thanked the reporter, who put the question to him.

But the unreal parts of this news conference came in the Secretary's discussion of the Middle East and the problems which threated that area's very shaky peace. Would Mr. Dulles approve of sanctions against Israel, if Israel refused to withdraw from Gaza and the Aqaba Gulf, as demanded by the United Nations? The Secretary replied that he would not unilaterally impose such sanctions, but if the U.N. voted sanctoons, then we would consider the matter. Would the United States then fight for the existence of Israel against an attack by Soviet Russia? Mr. Dulles impleed that we would. Another reporter askad if the United States still regarded the Tripartite Declatation, guaranteeing the Israeli-Arab borders as still in effect? Mr. Dulles said that we still abide by that policy declaration, although he did not know how the French and the British felt about it, since their Suez attack breaking that guarantee The Secretary of State thinks that his plea will justify America's breaking with Britain and France on the issue of aggression and the use of force in international matters. But, he also said that the history of the Suez crisis is too fresh and tender to be bared at the review of American foreign policy , he is preparing for the Congress. Mr. Dulles beleives Israel will retire to her own borders because she has a decent respect for the opinions of mankind. That Israel depends on the good will of other nations and was itself created by the U.N. Well, would Egypt also respect the U .N. decisions about the future of the Suez Canal? Sectetary of State Dulles replied that Egypt could also be expected to heed the moral arguments and allow Israeli shipping through the Suez. Mr. Dulles did not explain why he should be so optimistic about the effects of moral pressure. Egypt has been defying moral pressure to ban Israeli shipping thouugh the Suez for the past eight years. And after the seizure of the Suez, by Egypt last year, Mr. Dulles , himself, exerted all the moral pressure the United States commands, but it too was disregarded by Israel and by America's two closest allies, Britain and France in the combined attack on Egypt. And according to most diplomats here in Washington, it was not moral pressure that stopped that attack before the Anglo-Frecch forces could complete their mission. These sources say that offensive against the Nasser government was stopped by the threat of nuclear retaliations from Moscow. Mr. Dulles hopes for passage soon of the President's proposal for the Middle East warning Russia against aggression there. But, in his discussion today, the Secretary of State mentioned no policy aimed at settling the basic arguments between the Arabs and the Israelis where the greatest danger of renewed warfare lies. This news conference today somehow seemed familiar. It recalled the days of the questions asked of another Secretary of State named Dean Acheson, who finally admitted under questioning that America had no workable policy, at one time, to toward faction - torn China. That the State Department was waiting for the dust to settle. Mr. Dulles's hopes for tranquility, if not peace in the Middle East, as set down today are not policies. Neither are his hopes for the efficacy of international moral pressure. Hopes, in this field have a way of turning to dust, that settles slowly.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Bill Downs, reporting on the Dulles news conference.

Today, President Eisehhower had his second Arab visitor within a week. Crown Prince Illah of Iraq conferred at the White HOuse for 45 minutes, and said afterward that he has asked for more arms aid. Iraq is a member of the pro- Western Baghdad Pact. Prince Illah agreed with King Saud of Saudi Arabia, that other Arab leaders would have a higher appriceation for the President's new Middle East policy, if they could have them explained to them at first hand. King Saud spent a quiet day at Blair House. He is expected to have a final meeting with Mr. Eisenhower on Friday.

President Eisenhower had his regular weekly meeting today with Republican congressional leaders. He has informed that the Senate probably will open debate on his Middle East resolution next week...and that Senate hearings on his civil rights legislation are scheduled to get underway next Tuesday. The hearings in the House began yesterday. And today...in a House committee... a southern seate official attacked the Administration civil rights program as unworkable. Edward Scheidt, North Carolina commissioner for motor vehicles, contended that the size of the F.B.I. could be doubled, "and it would still not have enough men to h ndle all the investigations that would result from implementation of the program." The legislation, he argued, "threatenes to shake the very foundation of the law enforcement in the United States." Roy Wilkins, ...-

executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, testifeed in favor of the civil rights measure. He called it a "minimum, meaningful bill" that is necessary and long overdue. Wilkins said that in 1954, 22-thousand Negroes in Mississippi registered to vote...but that...a year later, the number had been forced down to around 8-thousand.

Secretary of Welfare Folson told a House committee today that federal action to help states solve their school construction problems is "imperative" He was testifying on behalf of the Administration's four-year school construction program. Folson warned Congrsss that if it does not appropriate more than one billion follars for new classrooms now, many children will be handicapped permanently with education which is inadequate. "We are confronted with a condition," he said, "not a theory. Neglect of educational opportunities for our children means a loss to them...and to the nation...which may never be regained."

The Senate today opened an investigation of the oil crisis, resulting from blockage of the Suez Canal. The chairman of the investigating committee... Senator O'Mahoney of Wyoming...said legislation may be needed to deal with the problem of higher oil prices. He said he could not understand the increases in the price of oil, in fiew of reports he had received of large reserves. Democratic Senator Neeley charged that the oil shortage in Europe is "proof" that the oil lobby "is more powerful than the President and the Congress." Defense Mobilizer Fleming told the committee that domestic oil producers have been cooperating "willingly" with the government to work out the problem on a voluntary basis. He said the national defense aspects of the agreement with the 15 major oil companies are more important than the possible violation of anti-trust legislation. Fleming conceded that the sompanies are shipping too little crude oil and too much gasoline and other refined products. The Suez Canal, he said, may be reopened "much sooner than he had hoped."

On the New York Stock Market ooday, prices dropped one to five dollars a share. Losses were widespread and evenly distributed among metals, oils, motors, airfrafts and rails. The drop followed a series of pessimistic reports on business...including a warning last night by former President Hoover, that current inflationary trends, unless checked, could lead to a major depression.

A series of explosions...due to leaking gas...destroyed a business block in downtown Reno today, killing at least one person. Police say the death toll may go higher. Forty persons were injured.

Today in Moscow, the Supreme Soviet (which is Russia's version of parliament)met in the Kremlin palace and was presented a new budget. If taken on face value, the budget calls for a slight cut in defense spending. Soviet Fiaande Minister Zverev claimed 16 percent of the total budget will be spent on defense compared to a little more than 18 percent last year. These figures do not include expenditures, either for guided missiles or nuclear weapons. It was announced that, in 1957, Russia will continue to concentrate on development of heavy industry. At the same time, Soviet workers were promised more consumer goods. The goal will be to increase total industrial production by 7 percent. This is not so ambitious a goal as was set a year ago. That called for an 11 percent increase in industrial expansion, and was severely criticized by the Central Committee. The goal this year is regarded as "more realistic." The Supreme Soviet will meet for five days, and wind up with a report by Foreign Minister Shepilov on Soviet foreign policy.

Last week, a German blood specialist went to Moscow to treat a government official whom authorities refused to name. Today...in a report from Moscow...my colleague Daniel Schorr identified the "mystery patient" as Vyacheslav Malyshev, minister of machine building and member of the state planning commission.

The premier of Ceylon today foined Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai in calling for another Asian - Aftican conference similar to the meeting held in Bandung in 1955. The joint statement was issued at the end of Chou's five-day visit to Ceylon. The problems of the Middle East, it said, cannot be solved by the continuation of power politics, "or the substitution of one power for some other to fill up a so-claled power vacuum." Chou told a news conference the Chinese Communist government will survive if--in his words -- the United States refuses to recognize it "for a thousand years."

The supreme allied commander in Europe .. General Lauris Norstad..told reporters in Paris today that he expects to have at least six West German divisions under his command by next December. These forces, he said, will go "a long way" toward making up the German deficiecy "which we feel very keenly at the present time." Norstad said the alliance has an atomic capability ..based on the United States Strategic Air Command and the British Bomber Command..which he described as "very considerable." Nevertheless, he warned that if NATO countries persist in making manpower cuts, he command will be forced to undertake "a basic revision " in the concept of its mission.

Vice President Nixon will represent the United States next month at ceremonies marking the granting of independence to the Gold Coast. The African colony, belonging to Britain, will become an independent member of the British Commonwealth on March 6th. Nixon will go as head of an American delegation yet to be named.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: Mr. Dulles is sure than American policy on Suez will be justified by the verdict of history. To break with our allies, he said, wasone of the hardest decisions on behalf of principal this government ever had to make. Yet it is true, as Henry Ward Beecher observed, "Not that which men to worthily, but that which they do successfully is what history makes haste to record."

Goodnight and tood luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Feb. 6, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower warned today that the government may have to impose wage and price controls, unless labor and management cooperate to hold the line against inflation. The President told his news conference that when he recently appealed to labor and industry leaders to hold down wages and prices, he wasn't "merely asking them to be altruistic." Mr. Eisenhower said, "I believe any intelligent man can see the direction we will have to go unless wisdom is exercised... not only in government... but in the economy as a whole."

The New York stock market rallied today, after yesterday's set-back. Gains of one to two points were registered over a wide range.

Mr. Eisenhower told his news conference "something" has to be done to step up oil shipments to Europe. He doesn't want the government to have to intervene. But the oil interests, he said, should consider where our long-term interests lie. "Certainly they demand a Europe that is not, economically, flat on its back."

→

The President opened his news conference by announcing the resignation of Arthur Fleming as director of the Office of Defense Mobilization. He said the resignation was accepted "with regret". Fleming will be succeeded by Gordon Gray, who was secretary of the army in the Truman Administration.

Regarding the Middle East, Mr. Eisenhower said his talks with King Saud, of Saudi Arabia, had cleared away "much of the underbrush of misunderstanding" concerning American policy in the area. King Saud told reporters today that the President's program is "a good one... entitled to consideration and appreciation by the Arab people."

Mr. Eisenhower said he believes Israel will comply with the United Nations demand that it complete its withdrawal from Egyptian territory. "I personally believe," he said, "that Israel has a decent respect for the opinion of mankind." The President refused to say... in answer to a question... whether the United States would join in economic sanctions against Israel, if it refuses to pull out of positions commanding the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. He said, "I would not want to speculate on future actions of the United Nations... or of this country... to any degree." Then he added, "But I certainly say this---we are committed to the support of the United Nations." [redacted] said. [redacted]

Israel announced today, at the United Nations, that it will cooperate with the U.N. for the establishment of peace... but that it wants assurance Egypt will also cooperate. It was announced that the Israeli ambassador, Abba Eban, has asked Secretary General Hammarskjold what measures will be taken to insure freedom of Israeli shipping through the Gulf of Aqaba. Hammarskjold was also asked to inquire of Egypt whether it will refrain from "belligerent acts by land, sea and air", if Israel completes its withdrawal. Hammarskjold is preparing a report on the situation, [redacted]

Israel charges that Syrian shore batteries fired on Israeli fishermen on the Sea of Galilee today for 45 minutes. There were no casualties.

Jordan today ordered the confiscation of all Communist propaganda in the country... including newspapers, magazines and books. The crackdown began yesterday, with the banning of a daily bulletin issued in Jordan by the Soviet news agency Tass.

The Soviet government today accused the United States of waging "a secret war" against Russia by means of spies and saboteurs. The government charged... in a statement handed to Western correspondents... that the "war" is being directed not only against Russia but against its satellites and "all sovereign and independent states." It did not name these states. As "proof" of espionage carried on in Russia, the correspondents were shown four alleged spies, said to have been dropped ~~down~~ in Russia by United States Intelligence.

President Eisenhower ~~confirmed... at his news conference~~ today... that talks ~~are underway with Britain on a possible meeting~~ with Prime Minister Macmillan. ~~Since arrangements are not completed, he declined~~ to comment on reports the meeting ~~may take place in Bermuda next month.~~

The British defense minister... Duncan Sandys... reported to the House of Commons today on his visit last week in Washington. He said "full accord" was reached (in discussions with Secretary of Defense Wilson) on the broad objectives. There was agreement, he said, to extend previous arrangements for collaboration on research, "especially in guided missiles." Sandys reported discussion of a plan whereby Britain would be supplied with "certain American weapons". He did not identify these weapons, but reportedly they are intermediate-range missiles capable of mounting atomic warheads. He said, "This plan is now being examined by the two governments and their service staffs." Sandys said he found "a warm desire" in Washington for resumption of what he termed "the special and intimate relationship which has so long existed between Britain and the United States."

In Congress today, the House passed and sent to the Senate a "baby" soil bank bill to help ranchers affected by the drought. Secretary of Agriculture Benson had opposed the measure... on grounds it would create more problems than it would solve. The bill would authorize payments to ranchers who agree to keep livestock off parched grazing land. Its purpose is to prevent permanent damage to grazing land in the drought belt.

IN CONGRESS TODAY,

The House Ways and Means Committee [redacted] voted to continue business and excise taxes at their present level for another year. The committee acted after hearing Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey testify that it would be "inexcusable" to let the government go back to deficit spending.

Edward R. Murrow: February 6, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

ERIC SEVERIDE WTOP

44 return

Secretary Dulles told his news conference yesterday that we won't allow newsmen to enter Red China because the Chinese government is trying to blackmail us. It is holding ten Americans as prisoners who won't be released until we permit the newsmen to go in. He called it a kind of barter for the bodies of Americans, and said that as long as the Communists put it that way we could not escape the consequences. "That kind of blackmail I do not intend to satisfy" he said.

The assumption in this line of thinking is that we would be doing the Chinese communists a favor by allowing our newsmen to enter the country. And the inference is that it would be more of a favor to the Chinese than to ourselves. Mr. Dulles seemed to imply this when he said that the men whom the Chinese would admit would be picked by them.

It is this assumption that is at the heart of the matter. If the assumption is true, Mr. Dulles has at least an arguable case. But Mr. Dulles leaves out of account the American right to know. Whether or not it is a favor to the Chinese if our newsmen are admitted, it is of enormous value to the American public. And that makes Mr. Dulles' picture of blackmail hard to accept. What it comes down to is that we must refuse to allow ourselves to know about China because, if we did, we would obtain the release of the ten American prisoners.

President Eisenhower who previously had endorsed the State Department's stand on newsmen going into China, was asked at his news conference today whether he thought it would be immoral to lift the ban on the newsmen. He said this time he would have to talk with Mr. Dulles before answering the question.

All American networks, news services, major newspapers and news periodicals have been trying faithfully and persistently to get their representatives into Red China. This has been in the normal fulfilment of their duty to the American public. The fact that China is communist has not deterred them any more than it has in the case of the Soviet Union and its satellites.

Until last August the effort to get newsmen into China was blocked chiefly by the stern refusal of the Peiping regime. Then the policy changed, and eighteen American journalists were invited to spend a month in the country as guests of the government. It also was announced that soon any qualified American journalist who complied with the formalities of application would be admitted.

When the eighteen were invited, the State Department announced that it would not be in the interests of the United States for them to accept, and went on to warn them that their passports would be taken up, and that they might be prosecuted under laws forbidding the violation of passport restrictions, and banning financial transactions with Red China.

The State Department raised the point of the imprisoned Americans at this juncture. Certainly the official case was that we would not let newsmen into China until the prisoners were released. Only yesterday was this put the other way around, that it was the Chinese who were refusing to release the prisoners until the correspondents were allowed to enter.

Since Mr. Dulles has spoken of the Chinese government "picking" the men invited, it is only fair to point out that those who received invitations were mostly men who had applied for admittance as representatives of their organizations. When the State Department announced its ban, all the organizations involved instructed their representatives not to accept. But they delivered strong protests to the State Department. Among those sending them were Publisher Arthur Hays Sulzberger of the New York Times, Frank Starzel, general manager of the Associated Press; Frank Bartholomew, president of the United Press; Herbert Brucker of the Hartford Courant, the chairman of the Freedom of Information committee of the Society of Newspaper

RECEIVED
FEB 7 1955
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

Editors, Erwin Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor, and officials of both C.B.S. and N.B.C. [Today these protests were powerfully reinforced by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, which appealed both to the President and Congress against the State Department policy.]

At one time the State Department refused to authorize newsmen to enter Red China simply because it could not protect them there. Later it added the reason that Americans are imprisoned in China. / Both reasons are curbs to the American right to know, and as such have never satisfied most of those responsible for the news services of the country. / But until lately they have not cared to press the State Department. [Now that Mr. Dulles has developed the blackmail theory, and we are told that we can get the prisoners out if we let the newsmen in, a better reason for letting the newsmen in, and letting the American public know, would be hard to find.]

Word for Today

The position of this government on allowing American newsmen in Red China would appear to be... primarily... a matter having to do with logic. To the thinking of Secretary Dulles, it is a logical stand to take. Others would disagree. Elizabeth Jackson said, "Whatever our characteristic American virtues are, logic isn't one of them." And W.D. Howells said, "Try as you may, you can't be logical and complimentary at the same time."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower warned today that the government may have to impose wage and price controls, unless labor and management cooperate to hold the line against inflation. The President told his news conference that when he recently appealed to labor and industry leaders to hold down wages and prices, he wasn't "merely asking them to be altruistic." Mr. Eisenhower said, "I believe any intelligent man can see the direction we will have to go unless wisdom is exercised..not only in government..but in the economy as a whole."

The New York stock market rallied today, after yesterday's set-back. Gains of one to two points were registered over a wide range.

Mr. Eisenhower told his news cofference "something" has to be done to step up oil shipments to Europe. He doesn't want the government to have to intervene. But the oil interests, he said, should consider where our long-term interests lie. "Certainly they demand a Europe that is not, economically, flat on its back."

The Presddent opened his news conference by announcing the resignation of Arthur Fleming as director of the Office of Defense Mobilization. He said the resignation was accepted "with regret." Fleming will be succeeded by Gordon Gray, who was secretary of the army in the Truman Administration.

Regarding the Middle East, Mr. Eisenhower said his talks with King Saud, of Saudi Arabia, had cleared away "much of the underbrush of misunderstanding," concerning American policy in the area. King Saud told reporters today that the President's program is " a good one..entitled to consideration and appreciation by the Arab people"

Mr. Eisenhower said he believes Israel will comply with the United Nations demand that it complete its withdrawal from Egyptian territory. "I personally believe.", he said, "that Israal has a decent respect for the opinion of mankind." The President refused to say..in answer to a question..whether the United States would join in economic sanctions against Israel, if it refuses to pull out of positions commanding the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. He said, " I would not want to speculate on future actions of the United Nations..or of this country to any degree." Then he added, "But I certainly say this--we are committed to the support of the United Nations."

Israel announced today, as the United Nations, that it will cooperate with the U..N.for the establishment of peace..but that it wants assurance Egypt will also cooperate. It was announced that Israeli ambassador, Abba Eban, has asked Secretary General Hammarskjold what measures will be taken to insure freedom from "beligerant acts by land, sea and air", if Israel completes its withdrawal. Hammarskjold is preparing a report on the situation.

Israel charges that Syrian shore batteries fired on Israeli fishermen on the Sea of Galilee today for 45 minutes. There were no causualties.

Jordan today ordered the confiscation of all Communist propaganda in the country..including newspapers, magazines and books. The crackdown began yesterday, with the banning of a daily bulletin issued in Jordan by the Soviet news agency Tass.

The Soviet government today accused the Untted States of waging "a secret war" against Russia by means of spies and sabateurs. The government charged--in a statement handed to Western correspondents..that the "war" is being directed not only against Russia but against its satellites and "all sovereign and independent states." It did not name these ttates. As "proof" of espionage carried on in Russia, the correspondents were shown four alleged spies, said to have been dropped in Russia by United States Intelligence.

The British defense Minister..Duncan Sandys..reported to the House of Commons today on his visit last week in Washington. He said "full accord" was reached (in discussions with Secretary of Defense Wilson) on the broad objectives. There was agreement, he said, to extend previous arrangements for collaboration in research, "especially in guided missiles." Sandys reported discussion of a plan whereby Britain would be supplied with "certain American weapons." He did not identify these weapons, but reportedly they are intermediate - range missiles capable of mounting atomic warheads. He said, "This plan is not being examined by the two governments and their service staffs." Sandys said he found " a warm desire" in Washington for resumption of what he termed "the special and intimate relationship which has so long existed between Britain and the United States."

In Congress today, the House Ways and Means Committee voted to continue business and exise taxes at their present level for another year. The committee acted after hearing Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey testify that it would be "inexcusable" to let the government go back to deficit spending.

Secretary Dulles told his news conference yesterday that we won't allow newsmen to enter Red China because the Chinese government is trying to blackmail us. It is holding ten Americans as prisoners who won't be released until we permit the newsmen to go in. He called a kind of barter for the bodies of Americans, and said that as long as the Communists put it that way, we could not escape the consequences. "That kind of blackmail I to not intend to satisfy" he said.

The assumption in this line of thinking is that we would be doing the Chinese communists a favor by allowing our newsmen to enter the country. And the inference is that it would be more of a favor to the Chinese than to ourselves. Mr. Dulles seemed to imply this when he said that the men whom the Chinese would admit would be picked by them.

It is this assumption that is at the heart of the matter. If the assumption is true, Mr. Dulles has at least an arguable case. But Mr. Dulles leaves out of account the American "right to know". Whether or not it is a favor to the Chinese if our newsmen are admitted, it is of enormous value to the American public. And that makes Mr. Dulles's picture of blackmail hard to accept. What it comes down to is that we must refuse to allow ourselves to know about China because, if we did, we would obtain the release of ten American prisoners.

President Eisenhower who previously had endorsed the State Department's stand on newsmen going into China, has asked at his news conference today whether he thought it would be immoral to lift the ban on the newsmen. He said this time he would have to talk with Mr. Dulles before answering the question.

All American networks, news services, major newspapers and news periodicals have been trying faithfully and persistently to get their representatives into Red China. This has been in the normal fulfilment of their duty to the American public. The fact that China is communist has deterred them any more than it has in the case of the Soviet Union and its satellttes.

Unitl last August the effort to get newsmen nnto China was blocked chiefly by the stern refusal of the Peiping regime. Thent the policy changed, and eighteen American journalists were invited to spend a month in the country as guests of the government. It also was announced that soon any qualified American journalist who complied with the formalities of application would be admitted.

When the eighteen were invited, the State Department announced that it would not be in the interests of the United States for them to accept, and went on to warn them, that their passports ouuld be taken up, and that they might be prosecuted under laws forbidding the violation of passport restrictions , and banning financial transactions with Red China.

The State Department raised the point of the imprisoned Americans at this juncture. Certainly the official cast was, that we could not let newsmen into China until the prisoners were released. Only yesterday was this put the other way around, that it was the Chinese who were refusing to release the prisoners until the correspondents were allowed to enter.

Since Mr. Dulles has spoken of the Chinese government "picking" the men invited, it is only fair to point out that those who received invitations were mostly men who had applied for admittance as representatives of their organizations. When the State Department announced its ban, all the organizations involved instructed their representatives not to accept. But they delivered strong protests to the State Department. Among those sending them were Publisher Arthur Hays Sulzberger of the New York Times, Frank Starzel, general manager of the Associated Press; Frank Bartholemew, president of the United Press; Herbert Brucker of the Hartford Courant, the chairman of the Freedom of Information Committee of the Society of Newspaper Editors, Erwin Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor, and officials of both C.B.S. and N.B.C. Today these protests were powerfully reinforced by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, which appealed both to the President and Congress against the State Department policy.

At one time the State Department refused to authorize newsmen to enter Red China simply because it could not protect them there. Lader it added the reason that Americans are imprisoned in Red China. Both reasons are curbs to the American right to know, and as such have never satisfied most of those responsible for the news services of the country. But until lately they have not cared to press the State Department. Now that Mr. Dulles has developed the blackmail theory, and we are told that we can get prisoners out if we let the newsmen in, a better reason for letting the newsmen in, and letting the American public know, would be hard to find.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

a

MURROW: The position of this government on allowing American newsmen in Red China would appear to be..primarily..a matter having to do with logic. To the thinking of Secretary Dulles, it is a logical stand to take. Others would disagree. Elizabeth Jackson said, "Whatever our characteristic American virtues, are, logic isn't one of them." And W.D. Howells said, " Try as you may, you can't be logical and complimentary at the same time."

Good night and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Feb. 7, 1957

This is the news:

The British government today announced qualified approval of a free European market, in which Britain would be a partner. The government did this in a "white paper"... endorsing a plan which would integrate much of the trade of Western Europe and wipe out many tariff barriers. The "white paper" proposes that details of the plan be discussed next week, when the Organization for European Economic Cooperation meets in Paris. Ultimately this organization... known as the O.E.E.C.... would be combined with the customs union, now being negotiated by the Benelux countries, Italy, West Germany and France. [redacted] Seventeen nations of Western Europe would then be joined in a free trade area and a common market for their manufactured goods. In this... at least for the time being... Britain has [redacted] one major reservation. It wishes to continue its preferential trade agreements with the countries of the British Commonwealth.

In a separate move today, the Bank of England cut the interest rate for lending money from 5 and a half percent to 5 percent. A Bank of England official called the reduction "a sure indication that things are getting better in Britain." The interest rate had been raised one full percent a year ago as an anti-inflation measure. Financial observers say that today's action... cutting it back one-half percent... may have been designed to stimulate industrial investment.

The United States announced today that arrangements have been made for economic talks with Poland. The State Department said the talks will be held in Washington "in the near future"... and that they will concern the request of the Communist government of Poland for economic aid. Poland has indicated interest in obtaining credit, with which to buy surplus cotton and wheat... and other commodities.

Secretary of Commerce Weeks told a news conference today that there is "no disposition" on the part of the Administration to impose direct controls on wages and prices as a means of curbing inflation. He said, "No plans are being made, no studies are being made for such controls." President Eisenhower told his news conference yesterday the government might have to move in with controls "of some kind" unless business and labor exercise restraint. He indicated inflation is a serious threat. Secretary Weeks said today the "complete picture" shows that the economy is healthy. He said he sees no "basic" difference between his position and that of the President.

Russia agreed today to resume disarmament talks in London with the United States, Canada, Britain and France. Russia proposed that the meeting... next month... be held on the foreign ministers level. The United Nations

General Assembly voted last month for a resumption of five-power disarmament talks. The assembly did not specify on what level they should take place.

The State Department took cognizance today of reports that Russia has resumed its arms shipments to Egypt. A department spokesman said the United States does not have "positive confirmation" that such shipments are being made. But if they are, he said, that could be regarded as a violation of the General Assembly resolution of November second. That resolution called on all U.N. members "to refrain from introducing military goods in the area of hostilities."

The Egyptian government is demanding the death penalty for four British subjects, arrested on spy charges more than six months ago. This was announced today by the government prosecutor, who said 16 other persons also face the death penalty on charges of espionage.

In the United Nations today, the Afro-Asian bloc decided... in a secret caucus... to press for sanctions against Israel for its refusal to withdraw from the Gaza Strip and the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba without security guarantees. An Arab spokesman said a resolution calling for economic sanctions against Israel will be presented early next week.

In Moscow today, Russia ordered the expulsion of two American naval attaches. Two other American attaches were ordered expelled from Russia less than a week ago. Moscow claims the naval officers photographed military installations.

Moscow has finally given its version of what happened to Raoul Wallenberg, a Swedish diplomat who disappeared in Budapest 12 years ago... and has not been seen since. Russia informed the Swedish government today that Wallenberg died in 1947, in a Moscow prison, "presumably of a blood clot in the heart." The Soviet note blamed his imprisonment on an agent operating under instructions from the Russian security chief, Lavrenti Beria, who has since been executed. At the time of his disappearance, Wallenberg was representing the Red Cross in Budapest. The Swedish government... since 1945... has sent Russia more than 20 notes, demanding information as to his fate. Sweden said tonight that it will press Moscow for further details.

Look Magazine said today that it has asked the State Department for an open hearing on the department's move to revoke the passport of one of its correspondents who recently visited Red China. Gardner Cowles, president of Look, said the magazine's Moscow correspondent, Edmund Stevens, had been advised that his passport would be invalidated for all travel other than to return to the United States. Cowles said, "The question of a reporter's right to travel involves important aspects of freedom of the press, and the sooner it is fully tested in open hearing the better." Stevens entered Communist China in December with Look photographer Philip Harrington. No action has been taken against Harrington, who is back in this country. The third American newsman to enter China in defiance of the State Department ban was William Worthy of the Baltimore Afro-American, who has also done occasional broadcasts for CBS. Worthy is now in Budapest. He said today that the American Legation there asked him to turn in his passport... to be marked "Valid Only for Return to the United States"... but that he refused.

Edward R. Murrow: February 7, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The proclaimed objective of American foreign policy is to achieve "equal justice for all under law." "Every move we make" said President Eisenhower recently, "must be balanced by a consideration of justice for both sides." He also said in discussing the Middle Eastern crisis: "There can be no peace without law and there can be no law if we work to invoke one code of international conduct for those we oppose, and another for our friends." He also said: "There must be one law for all, not just one for us and one for the others. We must have one law that rules us all."

If the United Nations imposes sanctions on Israel, and the United States helps impose them - which now appears to be likely - others will be entitled to say that this is the Eisenhower Administration's idea of how to work for "equal law for all."

This is an uncomfortable position for the Administration, for we would not be supporting a single standard of morality. We would be accepting one standard for Israel, and a different one for Egypt, the Soviet Union and for India. Israel, a small nation, can be punished for not pulling out of the Gaza strip and the Aqaba coast, without guarantees of security. But the Soviet Union cannot be punished for not pulling out of Hungary, or India out of Kashmir, or Egypt for closing the Suez Canal to Israel, and Repeatedly violating Israel's frontier. ~~It is true that~~ The United Nations has ~~not~~ passed a resolution specifically ordering the Russians out of Hungary, But has not ordered the Indians out of Kashmir, nor has it voted sanctions against Egypt. But it found the Soviet Union, India and Egypt in the wrong. The fact that it didn't act is the way the double standard of morality operates. Yesterday, when the point was raised to President Eisenhower that Egypt had been condemned for closing the Canal against Israel, he said that he was not aware that the United Nations had ever done anything about it, as though that disposed of the question.

When the Suez crisis broke, we made commitment to the United Nations the central theme of our policy, and it continues to be so. It remains so despite the disdain of the Soviet Union for the U.N. resolutions on Hungary, and the disregard of India for the resolutions over Kashmir. ~~The double standard of the United Nations has never been obscured, but it never has been more open and unashamed than it has become since the United States cracked down on Britain, France and Israel.~~ ~~And~~ If the United States goes along with sanctions against Israel, it will, in effect, be telling the world that it is trying to achieve the single standard tomorrow by living the double standard today.

One reason the Administration is in such an awkward position is that it adopted the U.N. as a guide after it had lost its ability to muster a two-thirds majority in the Assembly for the things we believe in. That is, we placed American policy at the mercy of United Nations politics. There is at present no stable two-thirds majority that would apply the law equally to Israel, Egypt, the Soviet Union and India.

That puts the United States in a dilemma. It can abandon parts of its principles so as to stay with, and pretend to lead, the majority, or it can openly go into the minority and stick to its principles. The Administration apparently has chosen not to go into the minority. It is playing Assembly politics.

That means that we have to play with blocs, each one dedicated to its own interests. The blocs we can count on to accept equal law for all are less than two-thirds of the Assembly. Or to put it the other way, ~~a~~ one-third of the Assembly, or twenty-seven votes, can beat any proposal the United States makes. The Soviet Union has ten votes, the Arab bloc eleven. The Afro-Asian bloc of fifteen can swing things against us.

We could, of course, go into the minority. But the show-down would show that we were in the minority, and this we do not choose to do. The upshot is, that we compromise with the double standard. How we come to do it may be quite explicable. But no explanation is likely to convince opinion in the world, or in this country, that this is the most effective way to serve the cause of equal justice to all. Even if we think we are leading the U.N. majority in that direction, nothing can be clearer than that the U.N. majority at present is leading us in the opposite direction. For whatever we agree to in the U.N. will be regarded as our definition of "equal justice for both sides," for it is to that proposition that we are solemnly committed — regardless of votes in the assembly.

George Bryan —

Word for Today

There ~~has~~ have been occasions in the United Nations when the United States has found it necessary to compromise. [redacted] There are times, in politics, when compromise is required. But it can be overdone. For as Nathaniel Hawthorne said, "No man can for any considerable time employ two standards without finally getting bewildered as to which of them is true."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK
THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M.,E.S.T.

This is the news:

The British government today announced qualified approval of a free European makket, in which Britain would be a partner. The government did this in a "white paper" ..endorsing a plan which would integrate much of the trade of Western Europe and wipe out many tariff barriers. The "White paper" proposes that details of the plan be disuussed next week, when the Organization for European Economic Cooperation meets in Paris.

Ultimately this organization..known as the O.E.E.C...would be combined with the customs union, now being negotiated by the Benelux countries, Italy, West Germany and France. Seventeen nations of Western Europe would then be joined in a free trade area and a common market for their manufactured goods. In this..at least for the time being..Britain has one major reservation. It wishes to continue its preferential trade agreements with the countries of the British Commonwealth.

In a separate move today, the Bank of England cut the interest rate for lending money from 5 and a half percent to 5 percent. A Bank of England official called the reduction "a sure indication that things are getting better in Britain." The interest rate had been raised one full percent a year ago as an anti inflation measure. Financial observers say that today's action..cutting it back one half percent..may have been designed to stimulate industrial investment.

The United States announced today that arrangements have been made for economic talks with Poland. The State Department said the talks will be held in Washington "in the near future"...and that they will concern the request of the Communist government of Poland for economic aid. Poland has indicated interest in obtaining credit with which to buy surplus cotton and wheat..and other commodities.

Secretary of Commerce Weeks told a news conference today that there is "no disposition" on the part of the Administration to impose direct control on wages and prices as a means of curbing inflation. He said, "No plans are being made, no studies are being made for such controls." President Eisenhower told his news conference yesterday the government might have to move in with controls "of some kind" unless business and labor exercise restraint. He indicated inflation is a serious threat. Secretary Weeks said today the "complete picture" shows the ecomomy is healthy. He said he sees no "basic"diference between his position and that of the President.

Russia agreed today to resume disramament talks in London with the United States, Canada, Britain and France. Russia proposed that the meeting ..next month..be held on the foreign ministers level.The United Nations General Assembly voted last month for a resumption of five-power disarmament talks. The assembly did not specify on what level they should take place.

The State Department took cognizance today of reports that Russia has resumed its arms shipments to Egypt. A department spokesman said the United States does not have "positive confirmation" that such shipments are being made. But if they are, he said, that could be regarded as a violation of the General Assembly resolution of November second. That resolution called on all U.N. members to "refrain from introducing military goods in the area of hostilities."

The Egyptian government is demanding the death penalty for four British subjects, arrested on spy charges more than six months ago. This was announced today by the government prosecutor, who said 16 other prerson also fact the death penalty on charges of espionage.

In the United Nations today, the Afro-Asian bloc decided in a second caucus ..to press for sanctions against Israel for its refusal to withdraw from the Gaza Strip and the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba without security guarantees. And Arab spokesman said a resolution calling for economic sanctions against Israel will be presented early next week.

In Moscow today, Russia ordered the expulsion of two American naval attaches. Two other American attaches were ordered expelled from Russia less than a week ago. Moscow claims the naval officers photographed military installations.

Look Magazine said today that it has asked the State Department for an open hearing on the department's move to revoke the passport of one of its correspontents who recently visited Red China. Gardner Cowles, President of Look, said the magazine's Moscow correspondent, Edmund Stevens, had been advised that his passport would be invalidated for all travel other than to return to the United States. Cowles said, "The question of a reporter's right to travel involves important aspects of freedom of the press, and the sooner it is fully tested in an open hearing the better." Stevens entered Communist China in December with Look photographer Philip Harrington. No action has been taken against Harringron, who is back in this country. The third American newsman to enter China in defiance of the State Dempartment ban was William Worthy of the Baltimore Afro-American, who has also done occasional broadcasts for C.B.S. Worthy is now in Budapest. He said today that the American Legation there asked him to turn in his passport ..to be marked"Valid Only for Return to the United States."...but that he refused.

The proclaimed objective of American foreign policy is to achieve "equal justice for all under law." "Every move we make" said President Eisenhower recently, "must be balanced by a consideration of justice for both sides." He also said in discussing the Middle Eastern crisis"There can be no peace without law, and there can be no law if we work to invoke one code of international conduct for those we oppose, and another for our friends." He also said:"There must be one law for all, not just one for us and one for others. We must have one law that rules us all."

If the United Sttions imposes sanctions on Israel , and the United States helps impose them - which now appears to be likely - others will be entitled to say that this is the Eisenhower Administration's idea of how to work for "equal law for all."

This is an uncomfortable position for the Administration, for we would not be supporting a single standard of morality. We would be accepting one standard for Israel, and a different one for Egypt, the Soviet Union and for India. Israel, a small nation, can be pubished for not pulling out of the Gaza Strip and the Aqaba coast, without guarantees of security. But the Soviet Union cannot be punished for not pulling out of Hungary or India out of Kashmir, or Egypt for closing the Suez Canal to Israel, and repeatedly violating Israel's frontier. The United Nations has passed a resolution specifically ordering the Russians out of Hungary but has not ordered the Indians out of Kashmir, nor has it voted sanctions against Egypt. Bit it found the Soviet Union, Indian and Egypt in the rong. The fact that it didn't act is the way the double standard of morality operates. Yesterday, when the point was raised to President Eisenhower that Egypt had been condemned for closing the Canal against Israel, he said that he was not aware that the United Nations had ever done anything about it, as though that disposed of the question.

When the Suez crisis broke, we made commitment to the United Nations the central theme of our policy, and it continues to be so. It remains so despite the disdain of the Soviet Union for the U.N. resolutions on Hungary. and the disregard of India for the resolutions over Kashmir. If the United States goes along with sanctions against Israel, it will, in effect, be telling the world that it is trying to achieve the single standard tomorrow by living the double standard today.

One reason the Administration is in such an awkward position is that it adopted the U.N. as a guide after it had lost its ability to muster a two-thirds majority in the Assembly for the things we believe in. That is, we placed American policy at the mercy of United Nations politics. There is at present no stable two-thirds majority that would apply the law equally to Israel, Egypt, the Soviet Union and India.

That puts the United States in a dilemma. It can abandon parts of its principles so as to stay with, or pretend to lead, the majority, or it can openly go into the minority and stick to its principles. The Administration apparently has chosen not go to into the minority. It is playing Assembly pooitics.

That means that we have to play with blocs, each one dedicated to its own interests. The blocs we can count on to accept equal law for all are less than two-thirds of the Assembly. Or to put it the other way, a one third of the Assembly, or twenty-seven votes, can beat any proposal the United States makes. The Soviet Union has ten votes, the Arab bloc eleven. The Afro - Asian bloc of fifteen can swing things against us.

We would, of course, go into the minority. But the show-down would show that we were in the minority and this we do not choos to do. The upshot is that we compromise with the double standard. How we come to do it may be quite explicable. But no explanation is likely to convince opinion in the world or in this country, that this is the most effective way to serve the cause of quual justice for all. Even if we think we are leading the U.N. majority in that direction, nothing can be clearer than that the U.N. majority at present is leading us in the opposite direction. For whatever we agree to in the U.N. will be regarded as our definition of "equal justice for both sides." For it is to that proposition that we are solemnly committed --regardless of the votes in the assembly.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: There have been occasions in the United Nations when the United States has found it necessary to compromise. There are times, in politics, when compromise is required. But it can be overdone. For as Nathaiel Hawthorne said, "No man can for any considerable time employ two standards without finally getting bewildered as to which of them is true."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Feb. 8, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower... and King Saud of Saud Arabia... today concluded their talks on the Middle East. A joint communique says the United States will continue to maintain its air base at Dhahran for at least five more years. In return, the United States promises to provide Saudi Arabia with military goods and services "for the purposes of defense and the maintenance of internal security." Both President Eisenhower and King Saud promise... in the communique... to work for settlement of the Middle East problem within the framework of the United Nations. And both declare their "firm opposition" to the use of force, as a means of settling international disputes. The king goes on record as receiving "with satisfaction" President Eisenhower's explanation of his Middle East doctrine. He welcomes "every step" that promotes independence and self-determination.

Tomorrow, King Saud will fly to Spain ~~on~~ IN the President's personal aircraft... and then on to Egypt. Mr. Eisenhower flew this afternoon to Thomasville, Georgia, for a vacation of about a week.

The White House today declined to confirm reports that President Eisenhower will meet British Prime Minister Macmillan in Bermuda next month. A White House spokesman noted that the reports refer only to "tentative" plans for such a conference. He said, "Until there is complete agreement, we don't talk about it." The date most frequently mentioned for the meeting is March 21st.

The United States said today that it will help set up Euratom -- the program under which West European countries would pool their atomic energy for the common good. The State Department said the United States "welcomes" the program... that it anticipates "active association" in what it called "a bold and imaginative undertaking." ~~The statement was issued after a committee of European scientists called at the State Department in White House.~~

A member of the Atomic Energy Commission... Dr. John von Neumann... died in Walter Reed Hospital today of cancer. He was 53 years old. Last year, Dr. von Neumann received a citation from President Eisenhower... crediting him with "materially increasing the scientific progress of the country in the atomic field.

The government announced today that a million, 600-thousand fewer persons were employed in January, than in December. /A decline is normal in January... because of lay-offs after Christmas. /But the employment drop last month was the biggest registered in any January since 1949. "Abnormally severe weather" was a factor -- it cut down outdoor work, such as in the construction industry. /But the government also reports a larger-than-usual drop in factory employment. Factories employed 200-thousand fewer persons in January, than in December.

The increase in oil prices is going to be investigated by a federal grand jury. Judge Albert Bryan... of the United States District Court in Alexandria, Virginia... granted a request for an inquiry, filed by the Justice Department. Judge Bryan said he will order a special grand jury to meet on March 4th. Most major companies raised the price of crude oil by 35 cents a barrel, after the closing of the Suez Canal. This was necessary, they said, to make more oil available for shipment to Western Europe. /The Justice Department said today that it has no jurisdiction over prices, as such. But collusion to raise prices on an industry-wide basis, it said, would constitute violation of the anti-trust laws.

Israel said today that it has reached a deadlock in its negotiations with United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold over withdrawal of Israeli forces from the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. The statement was made in Tel Aviv by the director-general of the Israeli foreign ministry, Walter Eytan. Israeli forces will pull out of their positions on the Gulf of Aqaba, he said, provided United Nations troops move in immediately and stay there. Or if Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Jordan will make an agreement with Israel, guaranteeing free passage in the gulf. Israel is ready to evacuate its troops from Gaza... but not its civil administrators. "There cannot be any further withdrawal," he said, "without guarantees for Israel's vital needs."

Here in New York, the United Nations debate on Algeria went through its fifth day. Early this week, France accused Russia and Egypt of fomenting the Algerian revolt. Egypt accused the French today of cloaking the real issue, which Egypt said is "the struggle of the Algerian people for freedom and justice."

West German Chancellor Adenauer said today that he has received a new message from Soviet Premier Bulganin. Adenauer declined to reveal the contents of the message... but said he is "convinced" Soviet foreign policy is about to undergo a change. The United Press quotes Russian Embassy sources in Bonn as saying that the Bulganin message contained "concrete proposals" regarding German reunification, disarmament and trade.

The American correspondent William Worthy... who recently visited Red China... refused for the second time today to surrender his American passport. The United States legation in Budapest asked Worthy to turn in his passport, so that it could be stamped "Valid Only for Return to the United States." Worthy said he refused in order to establish the grounds for a test case.

If all that mattered in the Middle East was that the United States kept the airbase at Dhahran, and that Arab leaders had a better understanding of the Eisenhower doctrine, the visit of King Saud could be called an unqualified success. It has brought both these results. Both are valuable though it is not easy for the public to know just how valuable. Since they have value, something presumably has been paid for them. The nature and extent of the price has not been disclosed.

One measure of the success of the visit is what these gains are worth. Another is whether the price has been reasonable. But another measure is whether the visit has advanced other American interests, and has contributed to the establishment of peace in the region. For more is involved in the Middle East than the Dhahran air base, and an understanding of the Eisenhower doctrine.

First to look at the Dhahran base. Its value to us is fully known only to the Strategic Air Command and the United States defense heads. Presumably the base is essential to our defense system, but the public does not know how much the system would be crippled without it. A hint of its usefulness was given in the disclosure that the round-the-world jet bombers were refuelled from the Dhahran base. ~~Maybe it is valuable for other reasons too. But this is not for a layman to judge.~~

Then for a look at the value of having King Saud endorse the Eisenhower doctrine. This he has done, though only in part. Two of the main lines of the doctrine could not have been hard for the King to understand and welcome. One promises the use of force, if necessary, against Soviet aggression in the Middle East. The other is a promise of economic assistance. Taken at their face value these are greatly to Saudi Arabia's interest, and what he learned here was to take them at their face value.

But there is another implication in the Eisenhower doctrine. We are fervently committed to the establishment of peace in the Middle East, and for us that means peace between the Arab States and Israel, on a basis of justice to both sides. This might be called the unmentioned topic in the report of the negotiations. Not altogether unmentioned, for King Saud is to get arms. ~~And since he does not need arms against the Soviet Union,~~ and in effect the arms go to tip the balance in favor of the Arabs against Israel. ~~Washington would hardly call that promoting our kind of peace, even if Washington is selling the arms.~~

The State Department has been hoping to ~~XXXX~~ modify King Saud's

attitude toward Israel, and whether it has done so during this visit only time will tell. In the past King Saud has been committed to the extermination of Israel. Maybe ~~Presumably~~ he has modified his views. But if instead of insisting on extermination he now wants Israel's humiliation before the world, and a drastic reduction of Israel's territory, that could come about without "the use of force" and "without aggression against the political independence or territory of Middle East nations" to which Saudi Arabia has agreed, according to the communique. Such terms would not do much to establish the peace of justice which the United States wants. No matter how the communique puts it, it takes a lively imagination to believe that King Saud was converted to our view of the peace for Israel, or that he ~~HAWXXXXXXXX~~ now has become a missionary to Colonel Nasser for our view. But King Saud is still closely affiliated with Nasser. His endorsement of the Eisenhower doctrine has not weakened that bond. In his last-minute Television AND RADIO appearance he stressed this fact, as though to warn against too great hopes in this country. Nasser's ambition is power, not peace, or [redacted] it is peace on his own terms. He aspires to become the unopposed leader of the Arab world, something he can only become at the expense of Israel, and probably only with Soviet help. The Eisenhower doctrine not only stands in the way of such ambitions, it was partly promulgated to stand in the way.

We are not told the terms of the arms assistance being given King Saud. Reports suggest that he trimmed his initial request for arms worth 250 million dollars to be delivered over five years, and that he will get three-fourts of the amount as a grant. It also is suggested that he might get the rest by paying cash for it.

Everybody that gets arms from us has to promise not to use them for aggression, and Saudi Arabia will have to do it too. That is a pledge not to attack Israel with our arms. The adherence to the United Nations charter, which the King promised anew, also is a pledge. The only way we can enforce such a pledge is that we have inspection rights, and can halt arms deliveries if conditions are being violated. But that is no guarantee of peace.

To sum up, the results of the visit are equivocal. We keep the Dhahran base, we have sold part of the Eisenhower doctrine to King Saud, and he agrees to uphold the U.N. charter, to which, of course, he already was committed. But we have had to give him arms which affect the balance of Arab power against Israel. We may have dissuaded him from a determination to exterminate Israel. But it is highly doubtful that we have persuaded him, or any Arabs through him, to a peace giving equal justice to both sides in the Arab-Israel conflict.

Word for Today

The talks between President Eisenhower and King Saud have resulted in agreement on a number of points. The lease on the Dhahran air base has been renewed. We are going to supply Saud with arms. No comment [illegible] But Bronson Alcott said, "The deepest truths are best read between the lines and for the most part refuse to be written."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower and King Saud of Arabia..today concluded their talks on the Middle East. A joint communique says the United States will continue to maintain its air base at Dhahran for at least five more years. In return, the United States promises to provide Saudi Arabia with military goods and services "for the purposes of defense and the maintenance of internal security." Both Bresident Eisenhower and King Saud promise .. in the communique.. to work for settlement of the Middle East problem within the framework of the United Nations. And both declare their "firm opposiiion " to the use of force, as am means of settling international disputes. The king goes on record as receiving "with satisfaction" President Eisenhower's explanation of his Middle East doctrine. He welcomes "every step" that promotes independence and self-determination Tomorrow, King Saud will fly to Spain in the President's personal aircraft, and then on to Egypt. Mr. Eisenhower flew this afternoon to Thomasville, Georgia for a vacation of about a week.

Thi White House today declined to confirm reports that President Eisenhower will meet British Prime Minister Macmillan in Bermuda next month. A White House spokesman noted that the reports refer only to "tentative" plans for such a conference. He said, "Until there is complete agreement, we don't talk about it." The date most frequently mentioned for the meeting is March 21.

The United States said today that it will help set up Euratom-- the program under which West European countries would pool their atomic energy for the common good. The State Deparment said the United States "welcomes" the program..that it anticipated "active association" in what it called "a bold and imaginative undertaking."

A member of the Atomic Energy Commission..Dr. John von Neuman..died in Walter Reed Hospital today of cancer. He was 53 years old. Last year von Neumann received a citation from President Eisenhower..crediting him with "materially increasing the scientific progress of the country in the atomic field."

The government announced today that a million, 600-thousadd fewer persons were employed in January than in December. A decline is normal in January.. because of the lay-offs after Christmas. But the employment drop last month was the biggest registered in any January since 1949. "Abnormally severe weather " was a factor --it cut down outdoor work, such as in the construction industry. But the government also reports a larger-than-usual drop in factory employment. Factories employed 200 - thousand fewer persons in January tha in December.

The increase in oil prices is going to be investigated by a federal grand jury. Judge Albert Bryan..of the United States District Court in Alexandria, Virginia..granted a request for an inquiry filed by the Justice Department. Judge Bryan said he will order a special grand jury to meet on March 4th. Most major compaines raised the price of crude oil by 35 cents a barrel. after the closing of the Suez Canal. This was necessary they said, to make more oil available for shipment to WEstern Europe. The Justice Department said today that it has no jurisdiction over prices as such. But collusion to raise prices on an industry - wide basis, it said, would constitue violation of the anti-trust laws.

Israel said today that it has reached a deadlock in its negotiations with United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold over withdrawal of Israeli forces from the endrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. The statement was mede in Tel Aviv by the director - general of the Israeli foreign ministry, Walter Eytan. Israeli forces will pull cut of their positions on the Gulf of Aqaba, he said , provided United Nations troops move in immediately and stay there. Of if Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Jordan will make an agreement with Israel, guaranteeing free passage in the gulf. Israel is ready to evacuate its troops from Gaza..but not its civil administrators. "There cannot be any further withdrawal," he said, "without guarantees for Israel's vital needs."

Here in New York, the United Nations debate on Algeria went thorugh its fifth day. Early this week, France accused Russia and Egypt of fomenting the Algerian revolt. Egypt accused the French today of cloaking the real issue, which Egypt said is "the struggle of the Algerian people for freedom and justice."

West German Chancellor Adenauer said today that he has received a new message from Soviet Premier Bulganin. Adenauer declined to reveal the contents of the message..but said he is "convinced" Soviet foreign policy is about to undergo a change. The United Sress quotes Russian Embassy sources in Bonn as saying that the Bulganin message contained "concrete proposal; regarding German reunification, disarmament and trade.

The American correspondent William Worthy..who recently visited Red China..refused for the scond time today to surrender his American passport. The United States legation in Budapest asked Worthy to turn in his passport, so that it could be stamped "Valid Only for Return to the United States". Worthy said he refused in order to establish the ground for a test case.

If all that mattered in the Middle East was that the United States kept the airbase at Dhahran, and that Arab leaders had a better understanding of the Eisenhower doctrine, the visit of King Saud could be called an unqualified success. It has brought both these results. Both are valuable though it is not easy for the public to know just how valuable. Since they have value, something presumably has been paid for them. The nature and extent of the price has not been disclosed.

One measure of the success of the visit is that these gains are worth. Another is whether the price has been reasonable. But another measure is whether the visit has advanced other American interests, and has contributed to the establishment of peace in the region. For more is involved in the Middle East than the Dhahran air base, and an understanding of the Eisenhower doctirne.

First to look at the Dhahran base. Its value to us is fully known only to the Strategic Air Command and the United States defense heads. Presumably the base is essential to our defense system, but the public does not know how much the system would be crippled without it. A hint of its usefulness was given in the disclusure that the round- the-world jet bombers were refuelled from Dhahran base.

Then for a look at the value of having King Saud endorse the Eisenhower doctrine. This he has done, though only in part. Two of the main lines of the doctrine could not have been hard for the king to understand and welcome. One promises the use of force, if necessary, against Soviet aggression in the Middle East. The other is a promise of economic assistance. Taken at their face value these are greatly to Saudi Arabia 's interest, and what he learned here was to take them at their face value.

But there is another implication in the Eisenhower doctrine. We are fervently committed to the establishment of peace in the Middle East, and for us that means peace between the Arab States and Israel, an a basis of justic e to both sides. This might be called the unmentioned topic in the report of the negotiations. Not altogether unmentioned , for King Saud is to get arms and in effect, the arms go to tip the balance in favor of the Arabs against Israel.

The State Department has been hoping to modify King Saud's attitude toward Israel, and whether it has done so during this visit only time will tell. In the past King Saud has been committed to the extermination of Israel. Maybe he has modified his views, but King Saud is still closely affiliated with Nasser. His endorsement of the Eisenhower doctrine has not weakened that bond.

In his last-minute television and radio appearance he stressed this fact, as though to warn against too great hopes in this country. Nasser's ambition is power, not peace, or it is peace on his own terms. He aspires to become the unopposed leader of the Arab world, something he can only become at the expense of Israel, and probably only with Soviet help. The Eisenhower doctrine not only stands in the way of such ambitions, it was partly promulgated to stand in the w ay.

We are not told the terms of the arms assistance being given King Saud. Reports suggest that he trimmed his initial request for arms worth 250 million dollars to be delivered over five years, and that he will get three fourths of that amount as a grant. It also suggested that he might get the rest by paying cash for it.

Everybody that gets arms from us has to promise not to use them for aggression, and Saudi Arabia will have to do it too. That is a lledge not to attack Israel without arms. The adherence to the United Nations charter, which the King now promised anew, also is a pledge. The only way we can enforce such a pledge is that we have inspection rights, and can hold arms deliveries if conditions are being violated. But that is not guarantee or peace.

To sum up, the results of the visit are equivocal. We keep the Dhahran base, we have sole part of the Eisenhower doctrine to King Saud, and he agrees to uphold the U.N. charter, to which, of course, he already was committed. But we have had to give him arms which affect the balance of Arab power against Israel. We may have dissuaded him from a determination to exterminate Israel. But it is highly doubtful that we have persuaded him, or any Arabs through him, to a peace giving equal justice to both sides in the Arab - Israel conflict.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN :

MURROW: The talks between President Eisenhower and King Saud have resulted in agreement on a number of points. The lease on the Dhahran air base has been renewed. We are going to supply Saud with arms. But Bronson Alcott said, "The deepest truths are best read between the lines and for the most part refuse to be written."

Goodnight and good luck!

COLLINGWOOD FOR MURROW
Feb. 11, 1957.

Good evening.

The United States has disclosed a new development in the Middle East situation. In a meeting at the State Department, Secretary Dulles proposed to Israeli Ambassador Eban a new two-point plan aimed at meeting, at least in part, Israel's conditions for withdrawing her forces from the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba.

The points are these-----the United States would publicly declare its support of free navigation in the Gulf of Aqaba, from which Egyptian guns have barred Israeli ships---and we would declare our purpose, and use our influence as members of the UN to have/UN forces or UN [redacted] observers in large numbers take up positions in the Gaza Strip to prevent its use as a base for Egyptian military raids into Israel.

Eban reportedly promised to refer the proposal quickly to his government and to present an answer in the next 24 to 48-hours.

[redacted]

If she does not withdraw

There was opposition to the proposal of sanctions against Israel from both the United Nations and the American Congress today. At the UN, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold gave the General Assembly a special report in which he warned that any steps to punish Israel at this time might only introduce "new elements of conflict" and complicate the Middle East situation.

His report said he has made no progress in getting Israel to withdraw from Egypt and he asked for guidance as to what he should do next. He had no suggestions beyond a continuation of his contacts with Israeli and Egyptian officials.

Hammarskjold did point out that Egypt has re-affirmed privately her "intent to observe fully the provisions of the 1949 armistice agreement."

On Capitol Hill, members of both parties from both the Senate and House protested against singling out Israel for sanctions. They said such a policy would be "grossly unfair" and "wrong." As New Hampshire's Senator Bridges put it, "it would be wrong for the UN to apply sanctions against Israel if it is going to do nothing about Russia for defying the UN on Hungary, or about India for degying the UN on Kashmir, or about Egypt for defying the UN in respect to Israeli shipping in the Suez Canal."

With these attacks on sanctions, also came attacks on President Eisenhower's Middle East doctrine. Minnesota's Democratic Senator Humphrey said the doctrine seems to be "to punish and reprimand only our friends." And he asked whether the policy is "tanks for Saudi Arabia and sanctions for Israel."

In the House, Representative Edith Nourse Rogers of Massachusetts said Congress is "overwhelmingly" opposed to economic restrictions against Israel and would not support the Executive branch of the government on the issue.

Democratic Senators Fulbright of Arkansas and O'Mahoney of Wyoming led the attack on the Middle East doctrine. They referred to it as a step toward "police-state tactics" and a request for "blank check" authority to make war. They offered substitutes and proposed amendments.

The President's plan got backing however from former NATO Commander General Alfred Gruenther. Gruenther said it lays the "keystone" for effective American policy in the Middle East-----that it would be a means of halting Russia's "vicious meddling" in the area.

The Middle East plan undoubtedly will be the main topic in the forthcoming talks [redacted] President Eisenhower will have with Britain's Prime Minister MacMillan and French Premier Mollet. The White House announced today that the meeting with Mollet will take place in Washington two weeks from tomorrow. Then the President will go to Bermuda to confer with MacMillan on March twenty-first.

[redacted]

General Lauris Norstad, the new Supreme/Commander ~~of~~ Allied in Europe arrived in London for talks with British defense leaders. And it appears that those talks will be tough ones because of Britain's desire to reduce her military manpower. Norstad told newsmen that there is no room for further cuts in NATO forces. And, as to Britain's argument to put greater reliance on nuclear weapons, Norstad said a manpower cut was made on this premise once and/that it can't be done again. Later, at a banquet in his honor, he warned that if NATO ground forces were too weak to repel an invader, Central Europe would face a fate "so hideous" the mind could not grasp it. Speaking of nuclear weapons, Norstad said that, however decisively they may loom in any final balancing, they are not in themselves able to hold the European air and ground. NATO, he said, still needs men.

Britain's Prime Minister MacMillan reiterated Britain's plans to "reshape her defenses"---but said she only wants to "make them more effective", not to scrap them.

Russia's Premier Bulganin made another bid today for closer relations between his country and West Germany. In a letter to West German Chancellor Adenauer, Bulganin proposed "profitable" trade with West Germany and Moscow's good offices in seeking German reunification. He said "war or peace in Europe depends first of all on how we settle the relations between us." And the letter warned the German people against taking what Bulganin termed "the fatal road" upon which he said they are being pushed by aggressive Western forces.

The letter contained none of the threats and invective that hav e characterized many Russian declarations on West Germany. But neither did it give any new Russian view on free elections for Germany. That is the issue which wrecked reunification hopes in the past.

Russia's Foreign Minister Shepilov called in the Ambassadors of the United States, Britain and France tonight and handed them official notes for their governments. All refused to discuss the contents of the notes, which were handed out on the eve of a major foreign policy announcement scheduled to be made tomorrow at a joint session of the Supreme Soviet.

Russia did a little re-unifying of her own today. The Parliament approved a government decree which clears the way for the return home of five minority racial groups which Stalin exiled from South Russia in World War Two. The decree denounced the expulsion as a "gross violation of Leninist principles."

In Venice, party left-wingers have handed Pietro Nenni a setback in his bid to ally Italy's Socialist party with the Social Democrats. In the balloting for the party's 81-x man central committee, Nenni supporters got only 27-seats. They had expected fifty. The result could oust Nenni from the post of party General Secretary, and almost certainly will hold up plans for Socialist reunification.

At home, the American Communists---holding their convention in New York---debated their key ideological proglem-----whether to stick to the Moscow line or follow a more independent "American road to Socialism."

Before taking up that question, the delegates adopted a resolution pledging support to the anti-segregation movement in the South. It also pledged to battle for "suffrage for all Southerners" and desegregation of public schools. And the convention adopted an economic resolution, calling for a continued battle "against the big monopolies."

Senate Republican leader Knowland has called on the UN Security Council to ban use of the veto by any nation involved in an international dispute. In a speech prepared for delivery at Georgetown University, Knowland said that if Russia walks out of the UN as a result of such an action, "so be it." He said if Russian actions during the Korean and Hungarian conflicts are examples of what we must contemplate for the future, the UN will have a better chance of survival without them than with them.

New York's waterfront difficulties continued today. The head of the ~~xxxxxxx~~ tugboat operators' union said late today that there is no chance of a settlement in that dispute.

The government sent its top mediator, Joseph Finnegan, to New York to try to ward off a longshoremen's strike set for tomorrow. He met this morning with the union and this afternoon with representatives of both sides. There is no word on the outcome.

think 11 February 1957

The stock market took something of a beating today. Losses of from one to ~~four~~ FIVE dollars a share came on top of a week of fairly substantial declines which in turn was part of a three month pattern of generally lower prices. On paper, at least, stock owners are nearly ~~three~~ FOUR billion dollars poorer tonight than they were when they woke up this morning, and more than ~~seven~~ EIGHT billion dollars poorer than they were a week ago.

Whether you own stocks or not, the behaviour of the stock market is worth watching because the stock market is a mirror of expert attitudes about our economy and right now it is reflecting uneasiness and uncertainty. By no means all the experts are uneasy, but most of them are uncertain. Their reasons are worth exploring because even if you keep ~~large quantities of~~ all your valuables in the mattress, the economic situation affects us all.

From one point of view the economic picture looks great.... Employment is up, ~~and~~ overall production is running at record levels, retail sales are good, and economic activity as a whole is rolling along at a merry clip.... But there are other things in the picture that cause investors concern..... The role of government policies for one thing. Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey and former President Hoover sent a tremor down a lot of spines when they conjured up the possibility of a depression that would curl your hair unless Federal spending is controlled. However, other prophets are counting on high government spending to stimulate economic activity.... The Government's tight money policy is still causing a lot of debate... some say its the only cure, others that its worse than the disease... Anyway, the very lack of unanimity of opinion on the government's role contributes to the uncertainty.... Then there are a number of troubling soft spots... New automobiles aren't selling as fast as they were supposed to, or at least not as fast as the automakers expected they would... Building and construction is still declining... These have had their effect on the outlook for steel production... Its not as rosy as it seemed a few months ago... Inventories are pretty high and still inching up... The textile industry is slow.. Profit margins are falling... Every day business reports come out showing that companies who have been doing more business have been making less money....

Now, these things are disturbing to a man who's thinking of putting a little money into a stock. They're disturbing to economists, too.. The question is -- as it periodically is -- whether things like these are danger signals indicating a fundamental weakness in the conomy, or whether they foreshadow no more than one of those ~~periodic~~ cyclical readjustments which the healthy body economic can shrug off with no more difficulty than a man can shrug off an annoying cold... On that the experts do not agree... There are a few who think that we are on the verge of a serious economic decline. More feel that while there may be some difficulties, the economy will surmount them without real trouble. Some feel that there isn't really any basic trouble at all and that 1957 will turn out to be a banner year... But most of the experts are taking a cautious wait and see position -- they aren't committing themselves. This is typical of experts in general and economists in particular. As George Bernard Shaw, I think it was, once said. "If all the economists in the world were laid end to end they wouldn't reach a conclusion."... With respect to anything as fluid and constantly changing as the state of a nation's economy, you can hardly blame them. The point is that the very absence of a conclusion on the part of the experts reflects an uncertainty about the future which has communicated itself ~~to the~~ investing public. It is still true that most ~~experts~~ informed students of ~~these~~ things are ~~reasonably~~ optimistic about the medium term and long term future of the economy. But when enough imponderables cause enough people to be cautious, the trend in stocks is down. That seems to be what is happening in the stock market these days.

TH I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOTNOTE TO THE DAYS NEWS.

But first, here is Stuart Metz.

FOOTNOTE

General Lauris Norstad, the NATO commander is in London, trying to persuade the British not to cut down their contribution of manpower to NATO. Norstad, an air force General, says long range retaliatory atomic air power is not enough. "New technologies, he said, however decisive they loom in any final balancing are not in themselves able to hold the European air and ground. The shield still needs men."

THIS IS C.C.... SEE YOU TOMORROW

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Evening:

The United States has disclosed a new development in the Middle East situation. In a meeting at the State Department , Secretary Dulles proposed to Israeli Ambassador Eban a new two-point plan aimed at meeting, at least in part, Israel's conditions for withdrawing her forces from the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba.

The points are these --- the United States would publicly declare its support of free navigation in the Gulf of Aqaba, from which Egyptian guns have barred Israeli ships -- and we would declare our purpose, and use our influence as members of the UN to have UN forces or UN observers in large numbers take up positions in the Gaza Strip to prevent its use as a base for Egyptian military raids into Israel.

Eban reportedly promised to refer the proposal quickly to his government and to present an answer in the next 24 to 48 hours.

There was opposition to the proposal of sanctions against Israel if she does not withdraw from both the United Nations and the American Congress today. At the UN, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold gave the General Assembly a special report in which he warned that any steps to punish Israel at the time might only introduce "new elements of conflict" and complicate the Middle East situation.

His report said he has made no progress in getting Israel to withdraw from Egypt and he asked for guidance as to what he should do next. He had no suggestions beyond a continuation of his contacts with Israeli and Egyptian officials.

Hammarskjold did point out that Egypt has re-affirmed privately her "intent" to observe fully the provisions of the 1949 armistice agreement."

On Capitol Hill, members of both parties from both the Senate and House protested against singling out Israel for sanctions. They said a policy would be "grossly unfair" and"wrong". As New Hampshire's Senator Bridges put it, "it would be wrong for the UN to apply sanctions against Israel if it is going to do nothing about Russia for defying the UN on Hungary, about India for defying the UN on Kashmir, or about Egypt for defying the UN in respect to Israeli shipping in the Suez Canal."

With these attacks on sanctions, also came attacks on President Eisenhower's Middle East doctrine. Minnesote's Democratic Senator Himphrey said the doctrine seems to be "to punish and repremand only our friends." And he asked whether the policy is "tanks for Saudi Arabia and sanctions for Israel."

In the House, Representative Edity Nourse Rogers of Massachusetts said Congress is "overwhelmingly" opposed to economic restrictions against Israel and would not support the Executive branch of the government on the issue.

Democratic Senators Fulbright of Arkansas and O'Mahoney of Wyoming led the attack on the Middle East doctrine. They referred to it as a step toward "police - state tactics" and a request for "blank check" authority to make war. They offered substituted and proposed amendments.

The President's plan got backing however from former NATO Commander General Alfred Gruenther. Gruenther said it lays the "keystone" for effective American policy in the Middle East -- that it would be a means of halting Russia's "viscious meddling " in the area.

The Middle East plan undoubtedly will be the main topic in the forthcoming talks President Eisenhower will have with Britain's Prime Minister MacMillan and French Premier Mollet. The White House announced today that the meeting with Mollet will take place in Washington two weeks from tomorrow. Then the President will go to Bermuda to confer with MacMillan on March twenty-first.

General Lauris Norstad, the new Supreme Allied Commander in Europe arrived in London for talks with British defense leaders. And it appears that those talks will be tough ones because of Britain's desire to reduce her military manpower. Norstad told newsmen that there is no room for further cuts in NATO forces. And, as to Britain's argument to put greater reliance on nuclear weapons, Norstad said a manpower cut was made on this premise once and that it can't be done again. Later, at a banquet in his honor, he warned that if NATO ground forces were too weak to repel an invader, Cantral Europe would face a fare "so hideous" the mind could not grasp it. Speaking of nuclear weapons, Norstad said that, however decisively they may loom in any final balancint, they are not in themselves able to hold the European air and ground. NATO, he said, still needs men.

Britain"s Prime Minister MacMillan reiterated Britain's plans to "reshape her defenses"..but said she only wants to make them more effective" not to scrap them.

Russia's Premier Bulganin made another bid today for closer relations between his country and West Germany. In a letter to West Germany Chancellor Adenauer, Bulganin proposed "profitable" trade with East Germany and Moscow's good offices in seeking German reunification. He said "war or peace in Europe" depends first of all on how we settle the relations between us." And the letter warned the German people against taking what Bulganin termed "the fatal road" upon which he said they are being pushed by aggressive Western forces.

The letter contained none of the threats and invective that have charactericed many Russian declarations on West Germany. But neither did it give any new Russian view on free elections for Germany. That is the issue which wrecked reunification hopes in the past.

Russia's Foreign Minister Shepilov called in the Ambassadors of the United States, Britain and France tonight and handed them official notes for their governments. All refused to discuss the contents of the note which were handed out of the eve of a major foreign policy announcement scheduled to be made tomorrow at a joint session of the Supreme Soviet.

Russia did a little re-unifying of her own today. The Parliament approved a government decree which clears the way for the return home of five minority racial groups which Stalin exiled from South Russia in World War Two. The decree denounced the expulsion oa a "gross violation of Leninist principles."

In Venice, party left-wingers have handed Pietro Nenni a setback in his bid to ally Italy's Socialist party with the Social Democrats. In the balloting for the party's 81-man central committee, Nenni supporters got only 2 seats. They had expected fifty. The result could oust Nenni from the post of the party General Secretary, and almost certainly will hold up plans for a Socialist reunification.

At home, the American Communists -- holding their convention in New York -- debated their key ideological problem -- whether to stick to the Moscow line or follow a more independent "American road to Socialism."

Before taking up that question, the delegates adopted a resolution pledging support to the anti - segretation movement in the South. It also pledged to battle for "suffrage for all Southerners" and desegregation of public schools. And the convention adopted an economic resolution, calling for a continued battle "against the big monopolies."

Senate Republican leader K owland has called on the UN Security Council to ban use of the veto by any nation involved in an international dispute. In a speech prepared for delivery at Georgetown University, Knowland said that if Russia walks out of the UN as a result of such an action, "so be it." He said if Russian actions during the Korean and Hungarian conflicts are examples of what we must contemplate for the future, the UN will have a better chance of survival without them than with them.

New York's waterfront difficulteis continued today. The head of the tugboat operators ' union said late today that there is no chance of a settlement in the dispute.

The government sent its top mediator, Joseph Finnegan, to New York to try to ward off a longshoremen's strike set for tomorrow. He met this morning with the union and this afternoon with representatives of both sides. There is no word on the outcome.

The stock market took something of a beating today. Losses of from one to five dollars a share came on top of a week of fairly substantial declines which in turn was part of a three month pattern of generally lower prices. On paper, at least, stock owners are nearly four billion dollars poorer tonight than they were when they woke up this morning. and more than eight billion dollars poorer than they were a week aog.

Whether you own stocks or not, the behavior of the stock market is worth watching because the stock market is a mirror of expert attitudes about our economy and right now it is reflecting uneasiness and uncertainty. By no means all the experts are uneasy, but most of them are uncertain. Their reasons are worth exploring because even if you keep all your valuables in a mattress,, the economic situation affects us all.

From one point of view the economic picture looks great...Employment is up...overall production is running at record levels, retail sales are good, and economic activity as a whole is rolling along at a merry clip...But there are other things in the picture that cause investors concern. The role of governmen policies for one thing. Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey and former President Hoover sent a tremor down a lot of spines when they conjured up the possibility of a depression that would curl your hair unless Federal spending is controlled. However, other prohpets are counting on high government spending to stimulate economic activity..The Government's tight money policy is still causing a lot of debate some say its the only cure, others that its worse than the disease. Anyway, the very lack of unanimity of opinion on the government's role contributes to the uncertainty. Then there are a number of troubling soft spots. New automobiles aren't selling as fast as they were supposed to, or at least not as fast as the automakers expected they would. Building and construction is still declining . These have had their effect on the outlook for steel production. Its not as rosy as it seemed a few months ago. Inventories are pretty high and still inching up. The textile industry is slow. Profit margins are falling. Every day business reports come out showing that companies who have been doing more business have been making less money.

Now, these things are disturbing to a man who's thinking af putting a little money into a stock. They're disturbing to economists, too. The question is--as it periodically is -- whether things like these are danger signals indicating a fundamental weakness in the economy, or whether they foreshadow one of those cyclical readjustments which the healthy body economic can shrug off with no more difficulty than a man can shrug off an annoying cold. On that the experts to not agree. There are a few who think that we are on the verge of a serious economic decline. More feel that while there may be some difficulties, the economy will surmount them without real trouble. Some feel that there isn't really any basic trouble at all and that 195 will turn out to be a banner year..but most of the experts are taking a cautious wait ans see position -- they aren't committing themselves. This is typical of experts in general and economists in particular. As George Bernard Shaw , I think it was, once said, "If all the economists an the world were laid end to end they wouldn't reach a conclusion." With respect to anytbing as fluid and constantly changing as the state of a nation's economy, you can hardly blame them. The point is that the very absence of a conclusion on the part of the experts reflects an undertainty about the future which has communicated itself to the investing public. It is still true that most informed students of these things are optimistic about the medium term and long term future of the economy. But when enough imponderables cause enough people to be cautious, the trend in stocks is down. That seems to be what is happening in the stock market these days.

I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the Days news. But first, here is Stuart Metz.

METZ:

COLLINGWOOD: General Lauris Norstad, the NATO commander is in London, trying to persuade the British not to cut down their contribution of manpower to NATO. Norstad, an air force General, says long range retaliatory atomic air power is not enough. "New technologies", he said, "however decisive they loom in any final balancing , are not in themselves able to hold the European air and ground. The shield still needs men."

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

COLLINGWOOD FOR MURROW.
Feb. 12, 1957.

Good evening.

President Eisenhower's Middle East doctrine won two important tests today.

Two Senate committees, holding joint hearings ~~on President Eisenhower's Middle East doctrine,~~ today systematically defeated attempts to weaken the program. In the two major actions, they rejected by a 17 to 11 vote, a proposal to strip the resolution of its economic aid features, ~~in~~ and defeated an attempt by Senator Fulbright to substitute a simple resolution which would not have the effect of law.

There is a strong possibility that the committees will wind up their work tonight. Floor debate in the Senate could then begin next Monday.

In Moscow, Russia presented her answer to the Eisenhower doctrine--a six-point plan of her own for the Middle East. It was outlined by Russia's Foreign Minister Shepilov to the Supreme Soviet. The plan boils down, essentially, to a hands-off policy, especially for the U.S. It calls for maintaining Middle East peace through peaceful negotiations, non-interference in the internal affairs of the Middle East, an end of such defense alliances as the Baghdad Pact, abolition of all foreign bases in the area, and mutual renunciation of the supply of arms to the Middle East.

INSERT

In a late development, at the UN, Russia has called for an immediate General Assembly debate on what she terms America's aggressive actions around the world. In a letter to Prince Wan---President of the Assembly---A Russian delegate Kuznetsov charged that the United States has committed aggressive actions by building military bases in Western Europe, Turkey, Iran, Japan and Okinawa capable of using atomic weapons. And he said our bases in ~~England,~~ BRITAIN, France, West Germany, and Italy constitute a threat to peace.

The Russian plan got a cool reception in the West. Washington and London diplomats and government spokesmen denounced it as a bald effort to wreck the Eisenhower doctrine. Others look upon it as a Russian effort to force the West out of the Middle East, leaving the Russians free to stir up trouble there.

There is no comment from Israel, but ~~ex~~ observers in Cairo say the Russian plan will draw warm support from neutral Arab nations.

Shapilov also said today that "in the present conditions, war is not fatalistically inevitable." He asserted again that Russia has only peaceful intentions and ~~xxxx~~ still believes that "peaceful co-existence" between Communism and Western Capitalism is possible. But he added that Russia is ready to rebuff "positively" any attack on her territory.

INSERT

Also At the United Nations, Britain and Canada endorsed the new American compromise proposal designed to get Israeli forces out of Egypt. Most UN diplomats appeared to welcome it, but withheld comment until Israel is heard from. Egypt, whose Foreign Minister Fawzi was filled in on the plan, is reported "not unhappy" over the idea.

In Jerusalem, Israel's Premier Ben-Gurion consulted his foreign affairs advisers on the offer. There was no official indication on Israel's answer, ~~but private government sources expressed doubt that the American plan is sufficient to satisfy Israeli demands.~~

The man who is known to the British as the "biggest trouble-maker in Yemen"---the Naib of Ibb---has accused Britain of deliberately fomenting border disturbances in the Yemen-Aden frontier war. He told three American newsmen that Yemen is "no aggressor"---that she is "only defending her borders and giving refuge to victims of persecution."

In London, Britain invited Yemen to a meeting later this month to ~~si~~ discuss a settlement of the border war.

On the Mediterranean island of Cyprus, a special court convicted a young Greek Cypriot of possessing a revolver and sentenced him to death. The death penalty is mandatory under British emergency regulations.

In Britain's House of Commons, Prime Minister MacMillan was challenged by a Socialist today on reports that an agreement is being worked out for establishment of American guided missile bases on British territory. MacMillan answered that he knows of no such agreement.

MacMillan lunched today with American General Lauris Norstad, Supreme Commander ~~in~~ of NATO. Norstad is in Britain to talk with defense officials on proposed British military cutbacks. One conservative government spokesman says the cutbacks would not be made without "proper consultations" with Atlantic Pact allies.

At home, the Senate committee looking into the oil situation, heard from a spokesman for independent oil producers. He told the committee that European countries are getting "90-percent of their normal requirements" of petroleum. That is more than the initial goal of the emergency "oil for Europe" program. But he contended that if there has been any failure in the program the blame should go to the Middle East Emergency Committee, appointed by the government.

A Naval supply officer who heads the agency which buys oil for all the armed services, told the committee that recent price increases will cost the military "approximately 85-million dollars more during the next year." But he said he is doing his best to limit price increases and hopes some agency can come up with some voluntary decrease.

Another Congressional committee heard the AFL-CIO and the Americans for Democratic Action call for more federal school aid than proposed by either the administration or the Democrats. They contended that neither program is adequate to meet the needs of the country.

Steelworkers union trooped to the polls to vote for a President. Their choice is between their present leader, David McDonald, or Donald Rarick, a young Pittsburgh millhand who is leading a protest against a two-dollar a month boost in union dues.

Dock Strike

~~In another labor development,~~ The International Longshoremen's Association has struck the Atlantic coast from Maine to Virginia. Some 45-thousand dockers ~~xxxx~~ walked out in renewal of a strike which was interrupted last November by a Taft-Hartley law injunction. Negotiations are still ~~xxx~~ in progress.

The administration has asked Congress to step up the federal civil defense program to the tune of more than half-a-billion dollars over the next five years. Under present law, civil defense is primarily the responsibility of state and local governments, but civil defense Director Val Peterson says the federal government should shoulder some of that responsibility. INSERT Dock Strike

Pennsylvania's Republican Representative Simpson said in Cincinnati tonight that there is no need to search for a "new label" for the GOP. In an obvious allusion to President Eisenhower's recent use of the phrase "modern Republicanism", Simpson told a Lincoln Day meeting that the modern Republicanism in which he believes is the Republicanism of Lincoln and Taft. And he added that there isn't a single Republican in America who needs to apologize for what his party basically stands for.

At a Lincoln Day dinner in New York, Daniel Riesner, President of the National Republican Club---a New York City group, ---took another line. He said "we disagree most emphatically with critics of Eisenhower Republicanism. The nation wants that brand of Republicanism."

~~Across the United States and Canada today, members of the United~~

think

12 February 1957

Today is the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, a date sporadically celebrated as an official holiday ~~in these~~ among our forty-eight states, but unofficially and privately marked and remembered where it counts -- in the hearts of people ~~everywhere.~~ in many places For Abraham Lincoln, probably more than any other American who ever lived, symbolizes the best things in the American character, not only to us, but to people all over the world. Winston Churchill can quote you Lincoln, and Konrad Adenauer. When President Soekarno, the nationalist leader of Indonesia, came to this country last year, he paid a pilgrimage to Springfield and called Lincoln one of his great teachers. The gentle Buddhist premier of Burma, U Nu reveres Lincoln, and the Lincoln scholar Herbert Mitgang says that India's Nehru keeps on his desk a brass mold of the right hand of Lincoln. "Its a beautiful hand, says Nehru, strong and firm and yet gentle. I look at it every day and it gives me strength."

Surely its remarkable that this man, who was born almost 150 years ago, and died more than 90 years ago, should still speak so clearly and so meaningfully to so many people in such diverse circumstances. One reason is that the problems with which Lincoln came to grips were in many ways the same problems we face today. His age, like ours, was a time of change and challenge, when new worlds were being born and old ones tested, when new technologies spread their promise and their threat, and when the very citadels of freedom were under assault. Lincoln came to grips with these problems.... He once said: it is said, "'Fools rush in where angels fear to tread.' ... I meet that argument -- I rush in -- I take that bull by the horns."..... And in coming to grips with his problems, he also came to grips with ours.... And the way in which he met them -- the humanity, the wisdom, the patience, the humor and the eloquence are as much a guide today as they were in his own time... His wonderful language still echoes and the context is not at all obscure... During the Hungarian revolt last year, listeners to one of the free radio stations could hear a voice saying "Four score and seven years ago...." and the voice went on... " The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract...." And then it faded out.

But not all of the wise and true things that Lincoln had to say were couched in the firm and virile prose of his classic utterances. Like many another master of communication, he was given to saying things in parables and stories -- most of them funny, all of them going straight as an arrow to the point he wished to make. In fact, Ralph Waldo Emerson once said: "I am sure if this man had ruled in a period of less facility of printing, he would have become mythological in a very few years like Aesop or one of the Seven Wise Masters, by his fables and proverbs. " Many of those fables still make a contemporary point. For instance, there was a time during the Civil War when Lincoln was assailed by conflicting advice on how to promote the public welfare. ~~just as we all are today~~. And he said that it reminded him of a farmer who had lost his way on the western frontier in the midst of a terrifying thunderstorm. The peals of thunder were terrific and the frequent flashes of lightning provided the only guide to the road. The earth seemed fairly to tremble beneath him in the war of the elements. One bolt threw him suddenly to his knees. Finding himself in this position, the traveller addressed himself to the Almighty, saying "Lord, Thou knowest it is not often that I call upon Thee. But O Lord, if it is all the same with thee, give us a little more light and a little less noise."

Many a citizen today, not too mention our leaders, must have had more than once occasion to echo that plea... And many people, all over the world, have cause today to be grateful to Abraham Lincoln, for the light he directed upon the problems of free men.... A light that shines even unto our own day.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD... I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOTNOTE TO THE DAYS NEWS.

BUT FIRST, HERE IS George Bryan.

FOOTNOTE

Benjamin Fairless, formerly chairman of U.S. Steel, has been heading a fact-finding committee on foreign aid for President Eisenhower. Today, having surveyed the situation, he put his finger on one of the great problems of foreign policy. He was saying that the Marshall Plan had saved Europe and a reporter asked whether American aid could save Asia. "I don't know," said Fairless. "Its awfully hard to save anybody unless they want to be saved."

THIS IS C.C.

SEE YOU TOMORROW

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS (COLLINGWOOD REPORTING)
CBS RADIO NETWORK

7:45 - 8:00 PM EST
TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1957

Good Evening:

President Eisenhower's Middle East doctrine won two important tests today.

Two Senate committees, holding joint hearings, today systematically defeated attempts to weaken the program. In the two major actions, they rejected by a 17 to 11 vote, a proposal to strip the resolution of its economic aid features, and defeated an attempt by Senator Fulbright to substitute a simple resolution which would not have the effect of law.

There is a strong possibility that the committees will wind up their work tonight. Floor debate in the Senate could then begin next Monday.

In Moscow, Russia presented her answer to the Eisenhower doctrine -- a six-point plan of her own for the Middle East. It was outlined by Russia's Foreign Minister Shepilov to the Supreme Soviet. The plan boils down, essentially, to a hands-off policy - especially for the U.S. It calls for maintaining Middle East peace through peaceful negotiations, non-interference in the internal affairs of the Middle East, an end of such defense alliances as the Baghdad Pact, abolition of all foreign bases in the area, and mutual renunciation of the supply of arms to the Middle East.

The Russian plan got a cool reception in the West. Washington and London diplomats and government spokesmen denounced it as a bald effort to wreck the Eisenhower doctrine. Others look upon it as a Russian effort to force the West out of the Middle East, leaving the Russians free to stir up trouble there.

There is no comment from Israel, but observers in Cairo say the Russian plan will draw warm support from neutral Arab nations.

Shepilov also said today that "in the present conditions, war is not fatalistically inevitable." He asserted again that Russia has only peaceful intentions and still believes that "peaceful co-existence" between Communism and Western Capitalism is possible. But he added that Russia is ready to rebuff "positively" any attack on her territory.

In a late development at the UN, Russia has called for an immediate General Assembly debate on what she terms America's aggressive actions around the world. In a letter to Prince Wan - President of the Assembly - Russian delegate Kuznetsov charged that the United States has committed aggressive action by building military bases in Western Europe, Turkey, Iran, Japan and Okinawa capable of using atomic weapons. And he said our bases in Britain, France, West Germany and Italy constitute a threat to peace.

Also at the United Nations, Britain and Canada endorsed the new American compromise proposal designed to get Israeli forces out of Egypt. Most UN diplomats appeared to welcome it, but withheld comment until Israel is heard from. Egypt, whose Foreign Minister Fawzi was filled in on the plan, is reported "not unhappy" over the idea.

In Jerusalem, Israel's Premier Ben-Gurion consulted his foreign affairs advisers on the offer. There was no official indication on Israel's answer.

The man who is known to the British as the "biggest trouble-maker in Yemen" - the Naib of Ibb - has accused Britain of deliberately fomenting border disturbances in the Yemen-Aden frontier war. He told three American newsmen that Yemen is "no aggressor" - that she is "only defending her borders and giving refuge to victims of persecution."

In London, Britain invited Yemen to a meeting later this month to discuss a settlement of the border war.

In Britain's House of Commons, Prime Minister MacMillan was challenged by a Socialist today on reports that an agreement is being worked out for establishment of American guided missile bases on British territory. MacMillan answered that he knows of no such agreement.

MacMillan lunched today with American General Lauris Norstad, Supreme Commander of NATO. Norstad is in Britain to talk with defense officials on proposed British military cutbacks. One conservative government spokesman says the cutbacks would not be made without "proper consultations" with Atlantic Pact allies.

At home, the Senate committee looking into the oil situation, heard from a spokesman for independent oil producers. He told the committee that European countries are getting "90-percent of their normal requirements" of petroleum. That is more than the initial goal of the emergency "oil for Europe" program. But he contended that if there has been any failure in the program the blame should go to the Middle East Emergency Committee, appointed by the government.

A Naval supply officer who heads the agency which buys oil for all the armed services, told the committee that recent price increases will cost the military "approximately 85-million dollars more during the next year." But he said he is doing his best to limit price increases and hopes some agency can come up with some voluntary decrease.

Another Congressional committee heard the AFL-CIO and the Americans for Democratic Action call for more federal school aid than proposed by either the administration or the Democrats. They contended that neither program is adequate to meet the needs of the country.

The administration has asked Congress to step up the federal civil defense program to the tune of more than half-a-billion dollars over the next five years. Under present law, civil defense is primarily the responsibility of state and local governments, but civil defense Director Val Peterson says the federal government should shoulder some of that responsibility.

The International Longshoremen's Association has struck the Atlantic coast from Maine to Virginia. Some 45-thousand dockers walked out in renewal of a strike which was interrupted last November by a Taft-Hartley law injunction. Negotiations are still in progress.

Pennsylvania's Republican Representative Simpson said in Cincinnati tonight that there is no need to search for a "new label" for the GOP. In an obvious allusion to President Eisenhower's recent use of the phrase "modern Republicanism", Simpson told a Lincoln Day meeting that the modern Republicanism in which he believes is the Republicanism of Lincoln and Taft. And he added that there isn't a single Republican in America who needs to apologize for what his party basically stands for.

At a Lincoln Day dinner in New York, Daniel Riesner, President of the National Republican Club - a New York City group, - took another line. He said "we disagree most emphatically with critics of Eisenhower Republicanism. The nation wants that brand of Republicanism."

Today is the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, a date sporadically celebrated as an official holiday among our forty-eight states, but unofficially and privately marked and remembered where it counts - in the hearts of people in many places. For Abraham Lincoln, probably more than any other American who ever lived, symbolizes the best things in the American character, not only to us, but to people all over the world. Winston Churchill can quote you Lincoln, and Konrad Adenauer. When President Soekarno, the nationalist leader of Indonesia, came to this country last year, he paid a pilgrimage to Springfield and called Lincoln one of his great teachers. The gentle Buddhist premier of Burma, U Nu reveres Lincoln, and the Lincoln scholar Herbert Mitgang says that India's Nehru keeps on his desk a brass mold of the right hand of Lincoln. "its a beautiful hand, says Nehru, strong and firm and yet gentle. I look at it every day and it gives me strength."

Surely its remarkable that this man, who was born almost 150 years ago, and died more than 90 years ago, should still speak so clearly and so meaningfully to so many people in such diverse circumstances. One reason is that the problems with which Lincoln came to grips were in many ways the same problems we face today. His age, like ours, was a time of change and challenge, when new worlds were being born and old ones tested, when new technologies spread their promise and their threat, and when the very citadels of freedom were under assault. Lincoln came to grips with these problems...He once said, it is said, "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread." I meet that argument - I rush in - I take that bull by the horns." And in coming to grips with his- problems, he also came to grips with ours...And the way in which he met them - the humanity, the wisdom, the patience, his humor, and the eloquence are as much a guide today as they were in his own time...His wonderful language still echoes and the context is not at all obscure...During the Hungarian revolt last year, listeners to one of the free radio stations could hear a voice saying "Four score and seven years ago..." and the voice went on..."The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract..." And then it faded out.

But not all of the wise and true things that Lincoln had to say were couched in the firm and virile prose of his classic utterances. Like many another master of communication, he was given to saying things in parables and stories - most of them funny, all of them going straight as an arrow to the point he wished to make. In fact, Ralph Waldo Emerson once said: "I am sure if this man had ruled in a period of less facility of printing, he would have become mythological in a very few years like Aesop or one of the Seven Wise Masters, by his fables and proverbs." Many of those fables still make a contemporary point. For instance, there was a time during the Civil War when Lincoln, as presidents have been since was assailed by conflicting advice on how to promote the public welfare. And he said that it reminded him of a farmer who had lost his way on the western frontier in the midst of a terrifying thunderstorm. The peals of thunder were terrific and the frequent flashes of lightning provided the only guide to the road. The earth seemed fairly to tremble beneath him in the war of the elements. One bolt threw him suddenly to his knees. Finding himself in this position, the traveller addressed himself to the Almighty, saying "Lord, Thou knowest it is not often that I call upon Thee. But O Lord, if it is all the same with thee, give us a little more light and a little less noise."

Many a citizen today, not to mention our leaders, must have had more than our occasion to echo that plea...And many people, all over the world, have cause today to be grateful to Abraham Lincoln, for the light he directed upon the problems of free men...A light that shones even unto our own day.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD...I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOTNOTE TO THE DAY'S NEWS. BUT FIRST, HERE IS GEORGE BRYAN.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

COLLINGWOOD: Benjamin Fairless, formerly chairman of U.S. Steel, has been heading a fact-finding committee on foreign aid for President Eisenhower. Today, having surveyed the situation, he put his finger on one of the great problems of foreign policy. He was saying that the Marshall Plan had saved Europe and a reporter asked whether American aid could save Asia. "I don't know," said Fairless. "its awfully hard to save anybody unless they want to be saved." This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow!"

Collingwood for Murrow Wed., Feb. 13, 1957

Good evening:

President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution was approved by the joint Senate foreign relations and armed services committees today -- but with a modifying amendment. The President had asked Congress to authorize the use of American armed forces, if necessary, to repel any open ~~Soviet~~ communist aggression in the area. The only condition was that the invaded country ~~could~~ should ask for our help. Today an amendment was offered by two Democratic senators... It took out the word "authorized" and said the U.S. is "prepared to use armed forces" and Humphrey of Minnesota and Mansfield of Montana... ~~adding~~ added another condition. It specifies that "such employment (of American forces) shall be consummated within the treaty obligations of the United States and within the charter of the United Nations." This amendment was written into the resolution, which ~~and~~ passed by a vote of 20 to 8. Thirteen Republicans joined seven Democrats in putting it through. ~~A reporter asked Chairman Green of the Senate~~ The White House says the President + Secretary Dulles are satisfied and pleased with the version of the Eisenhower Doctrine ~~to~~ approved by the Senate Committees - but they want to study the new language -

Foreign Relations Committee whether he thinks the resolution... as now worded... is still a "flat authorization" for use of troops in the Middle East. Green said yes he did -- in the specified circumstances. He conceded the Administration was "against" the amendment. Green said he hopes to report the modified resolution to the Senate tomorrow. Senate debate on the measure is still scheduled for next Monday.

At the United Nations tonight, the political committee voted two resolutions... not just one... on the Algerian question. One resolution, sponsored by Japan, the Philippines and Thailand, expressed hope that the Algerian situation may be "normalized" by the joint efforts of France and the Algerian people "to find an equitable solution in conformity with the principles of the United Nations Charter." The other resolution... sponsored by a group of Latin American countries... expressed hope that a "democratic" solution will be found. A resolution much stronger than either of these... sponsored by the Asian-Arab countries... would have asked France to recognize the right of the Algerian people "to exercise their fundamental right of self-determination. It was defeated by a vote of 34 to 33 with 10 abstentions. Neither of the other resolutions received the two-thirds majority needed for ratification by the General Assembly. This would appear, in effect, to commit the United Nations to a "do nothing" policy so far as Algeria is concerned — leaving France time to try to work out a solution on its own —

Israel has asked Washington for clarification of Secretary Dulles' proposals regarding the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Mr. Dulles suggested over the weekend that Israel pull its forces out of these two areas. After that is done, he said, the United States would declare its support for the principle of free navigation in the gulf and the stationing of United Nations troops in Gaza, which Israel has been demanding before withdrawal. An Egyptian government official today called these proposals "an American slap in the face of the Arabs."

In London tonight, the House of Commons approved the Conservative government's plans for cutting Britain's defense program. The defense minister, Duncan Sandys, promised that no cuts would be made without the "fullest consultation" with Britain's NATO allies. He gave no figures but said, "I do not intend to slash about indiscriminately." And he revealed that Britain has almost completed development of a megaton bomb... a phrase commonly applied to the hydrogen bomb. A Labour motion for a no confidence vote was defeated handily -- 302 to 243. A motion approving the defense policy of the Conservative government was then passed on a voice vote.

Great Britain and Jordan have issued a joint communique... setting forth the conditions for liquidating their 20-year alliance. Under terms of the treaty, Britain was allowed to maintain bases in Jordan, in return for an annual subsidy of 33-million dollars. Jordan said it wanted the treaty scrapped soon after the Anglo-French invasion of Egypt, and negotiations to that end have been in progress in Amman for more than a week. According to the joint communique... issued today... the treaty will be terminated by April first. And the last British soldier will leave Jordan within six months of the termination date. In other words, no later than October. The Jordanian government agrees to compensate Britain for whatever installations it takes over from the withdrawing British forces. Egypt, Syria and Saudi Arabia recently promised Jordan 36-million dollars a year to make up for the subsidy it will no longer get from London.

An official of the International Longshoremen's Association says the East Coast dock strike is 100 percent effective. And no one disputes his word. Forty-five ships were caught in New York Harbor, when the walkout began yesterday. And a hundred more are stranded in other ports from Maine to Virginia. Negotiations with the New York Shipping Association are continuing, but apparently the talks are making slow progress. In the words of James Finnegan, the federal mediation director, "No speed records are being broken." The hitch reportedly concerns vacation and holiday pay. The Association of American Railroads has ordered a general embargo on freight shipments to Atlantic ports affected by the walkout. It describes the embargo as "a protective measure" to keep freight from piling up on the piers. Oil shipments are exempt from the embargo, so is military freight.

David J. McDonald apparently has been re-elected president of the United Steelworkers Union. Incomplete returns give McDonald a 5-to-1 lead in the rank-and-file election over Don Rarick, local grievance committeeman from Pittsburgh. Less than a fourth of the votes have been counted, but Rarick is given little chance in view of McDonald's commanding lead. It's the first contested presidential election in the union's 20-year history.

Here in New York today, the stock market rallied after a steady four-day decline that brought the list to new lows since 1955. Trading fell off sharply on the recovery, which saw widespread gains of one to three dollars or more a share. Steel, aircraft and non-ferrous metals paced the advance... making up about half the ground lost the first two days this week. Altogether, it was the biggest advance in the market since last November.

Flames swept through a convalescent home today in Council Bluffs, Iowa, claiming at least 13 lives. Fourteen other patients were taken to hospitals to be treated for burns. The cause of the fire was not immediately determined. The fire spread so quickly that... in less than an hour... the three-story frame building was reduced to a charred shell.

think 13 February 1957

The Administration is doubtless relieved that the Eisenhower Doctrine on the Middle East has emerged [redacted] from the Senate Committee room, changed no more than it is. ~~and is on its way to the Floor where it will almost certainly be approved.~~ But better than anyone else, the Administration is aware that its relative success does not represent an act of spontaneous and irrepressible enthusiasm for the project on the part of Congress. Rather it shows that the President's prestige is still so great that he can carry Congress with him on any policy such as this which he certifies as vital, even against widespread doubts as to its wisdom and necessity.

The Eisenhower Doctrine was assailed (but its passage not seriously put in jeopardy) on a number of counts. The most important one, or at least the one which went to a matter of basic policy, was that the Doctrine, by assuming for the United States unilateral responsibility in the Middle East, will tend further to weaken the Western Alliance and separate the United States from its allies, Britain and France. The Administration plan was also attacked as vague and imprecise... and as unneccessary, on grounds that the President already has the powers asked for, anyway.

The Senate Committees -- or the Democratic members thereof -- gave Secretary Dulles a rough going -over on these points. And, since Mr. Dulles shares the unpopularity that most Secretaries of State achieve with the Senate, they didn't stop there but went on to call into question his whole conduct ~~of~~ foreign policy, and succeeded in forcing an inquiry into the whole history of our policy toward the Middle East. But, in these last couple of days, when it came down to actually voting on the Doctrine, the changes made did not go to the heart of the matter or gravely limit the powers the President had asked for. ~~most of the changes suggested were peripheral in nature.~~

The reason was that the Democratic critics had no real alternative to offer. As the President himself said about it: "I notice this. They don't bring out any particular project. They just talk about great blundering and lack of leadership. I have seen no proposals, no constructive proposals... just these generalized attacks."..... And this was largely true, for the Democratic assault on the Eisenhower Doctrine was only partly an attack on that particular document. It was also an expression of unease about the whole tactics and strategy of our policy in the Middle East. And the critical questions ~~xxxxxxxxx~~ were directed not so much at the terms of the Doctrine as at the policy which lay behind it.

What is the policy behind the Doctrine, the critical Senators wanted to know..... Not just that the United States would use armed force to resist Communist aggression in the Middle East... or that we desire to improve the economic lot of the Arab nations... But under what circumstances would we use force, what kind of economic projects would we encourage, where do we stand on the Arab-Israeli conflict and how do we hope to bring about a settlement between them, how does the Eisenhower Doctrine relate to Egypt and the Suez Canal, where does the U.N. fit in... and many more questions like that.... The administration would not, or could not, provide very many clear answers to questions like that... because, as some officials are willing to admit privately, the flesh of policy, as opposed to its skeleton, is still in the process of being created. First we must have the framework, they say, and then we will build the policy..... But its precisely that elaboration of policy that the Democrats in the Senate appear to be uneasy about. They don't trust Mr. Dulles and they don't like the way quickly devised Middle Eastern policy has turned out in the past. So even though they have, as the President pointed out, no very carefully elaborated plan of their own, the Administration's critics in the Senate are going to follow the course of the Eisenhower Doctrine long after it has received the stamp of Congressional approval.

I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOTNOTE TO THE NEWS

BUT FIRST, HERE IS _____.

FOOTNOTE

If there is anything our British cousins dearly love, its a ghost story -- and doubly if it involves a famous historical character. So they are much absorbed by the report that two Guardsmen at the Tower of London saw a ghost floating around at 3 AM this morning. The speculation is that it might have been the shade of Lady Jane Grey who was executed 402 years ago. The guardsmens shouts brought a number of their fellows to the scene.... They saw nothing.

THIS IS C.C.

SEE YOU TOMORROW

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution was approved by the joint Senate foreign relations and armed services committees today -- but with a modifying amendment. The President had asked Congress to authorize the use of American armed forces, if necessary, to repel any open Communist aggression in the area. The only condition was that the invaded country whould ask for our help. Today an amendment was offered by two Democratic senators.. Humphrey of Minnesota and Mansfield of Montana. It took out the word "authorized" and said the U.S. is "prepared to use armed forces" and added another condition. It specified that "such employment (of American forces) shall be consumated within treaty obligations of the United States and within the charter of the United Nations." This amendment was written into the resolution which passed by a vote of 20 to 8. Thirteen Republicans joined seven Democrats in putting it through. The White House says the President and Secretary Dulles are satisfied and pleased with the version of the Eisenhower Doctrine approved by the Senate Committees -- but they want to study the new language. Chairman Green said he hopes to report the modified resolution to the Senate tomorrow. Senate debate on the measure is still scheduled for next Monday.

At the United Nations tonight, the political committee voted two resolutions ..not just one..on the Algerian question. One resolution, sponsored by Japan, the Philippines and Thailand, expressed hope that the Algerian situation may be "normalized" by the joint efforts of France and the Algerian people "to find an equitable solution in conformity with the principles of the United Nations Charter." The other resolution..sponsored by a group of Latin American countries..expressed hope that a "democratic" solution will be found. A resolution much stronger than either of these..sponsored by the Asian - Arab countries..would have asked France to recognize the right of the Algerian people "to exercise their fundamental right of self-determination. It was defeated by a vote of 34 to 33 with 10 abstentions. Neither of the other resolutions received the two-thirds majority needed for ratification by the General Assembly. This would appear, in effect, to commit the United Nations to a "do nothing" policy so far as Algeria is concerned -- leaving France time to try to work out a solution on its own.

Israel has asked Washington for clarification of Secretary Dulles' proposals regarding the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Mr. Dulles suggested over the week - end that Israel pull its forces out of these two areas. After that is done, he said, The United States would declare its support for the principle of free navigation in the gulf and the stationing of United Nations troops in Gaza which Israel has been demanding before withdrawal. An Egyptian government official today called these proposals " an American slap in the face of the Arabs."

In London tonight, the House of Commons approved the conservative government's plans for cutting Britain's defense program. The defense minister Duncan Sandys, promised that no cuts would be made without the "fullest consultation" with Britain's NATO allies. He gave no figures but said, "I do not intend to slash about indiscriminately." And he revealed that Britain has almost completed development of a megaton bomb..a phrase commonly applied to the hydrogen bomb. A Labour motion for no confidence vote wad defeated handily -- 302 to 243. A motion approving the defense policy of the Conservative government was then passed on a voice vote.

Great Britain and Jordan have issued a joint communique..setting forth the conditions for liquidating their 20 - year alliance. Under terms of the treaty, Britain was allowed to maintain bases in Jordan, and did, in return for an annual subsidy of 33 - million dollars. Jordan said it wanted the treaty scrapped soon after the Angle-French invasion of Egypt, and negotiations to that end have been in progress in Amman for more than a week. According to the joint communique .. issued today..the treaty will be terminated by April first. And the last British soldier will leave Jordan within six months of the termination date. In other words, no later than October. The Jordanian government agrees to compansate Britain for whatever installations he takes over from the withdrawing British forces. Egypt, Syria and Saudi Arabia recently promised Jordan 36-million dollars a year to make up for the subsidy it will no longer get from London.

An official of the International Longshoremen's Association says the East Coast dock strike is 100 percent effective. And no one disputes his word. Forty-five ships were caught in New York Harbor, when the walkout began yesterday. And a hundred more are stranded in other ports from Maine to Virginia. Negotiations with the New York Shipping Association are continuing, but apparently the talks are making slow progress. In the words of James Finnegan, the federal mediation director, "No speed records are being broken." The hitch reportedly concerns vacation and holiday pay. The Association of American Railroads has ordered a general embargo on freight shipments to Atlantic ports affected by the walkout. It describes the embargo as "a protective measure" to keep freight from piling up on the piers. Oil shipments are exempt from the Embarga, so is military freight.

David J. McDonald apparently has been re-elected president of the United Steelworkers Union. Incomplete returns give McDonald a 5 - to - 1 lead in the rank and file election over Don Rarick, local grievance committeeman from Pittsburgh. Less than a fourth of the votes have been counted, but Rarick is given little chance in view of McDonald's commanding lead. It's the first contested presidential election in the union's 20-year history.

Here in New York today, the stock market rallied after a steady four-day decline that brought the list to new lows since 1955. Trading fell off sharply on the recovery, which saw widespread gains of one to three dollars or more a share. Steel, aircraft and non-ferrous metals paced the advance..making up about half the ground lost the first two days of this week. Altogether, it was the biggest advance in the market since last November.

Flames swept through a convalescent home today in Council Bluffs, Iowa, claiming at least 13 lives. Fourteen other patients were taken to hospitals to be treated for burns. The cause of the fire was not immediately determined. The fire spread so quickly that..in less than an hour..the three-story frame building was reduced to a charred shell.

The Administration is doubtless releived that the Eisenhower Doctrine on the Middle East has emerged from the Senate Committee room changed no more than it is. But better than anyone else, the Administration is aware that it's relative success does not represent an act of spontaneous and irrepressible enthusiasm for the project on the part of Congress. Rather it shows that the President's prestige is still so great that he can carry Congress with him on any policy such as this which he certifies as vital, even against widespread doubts as to its wisdom and necessity.

The Eisenhower Doctrine was assailed (but its passage not seriously put in jeopardy) on a number of counts. The most important one, or at least the one which went to a matter of basic policy, was that the Doctrine, by assuming for the United States unilateral responsibility in the Middle East, will tend further to weaken the Western Alliance and separate the United States from its allies, Britain and France. The Administration plan was also attacked as vague and imprecise..and as unnecessary on grounds that the President already has the powers asked for, anyway.

The Senate Committees -- or the Democratic members thereof -- gave Secretary Dulles a rough going-over on these points. And, since Mr. Dulles shares the unpopularity that most Secretaries of State achieve with the Senate, they dodn't stop there but went on to call into question his whole conduct of foreign policy and succeeded in forcing an inquiry into the whole history of our policy toward the Middle East. But in these last couple of days, when it came down to actually voting on the Doctrine, the changes made did not go to the heart of the matter or gravely limit the powers the President had asked for.

The reason was that the Democratic critics had no real alternative to offer. As the President himself said about it: "I notice this. They don't bring out any particular project. They just talk about great blundering and lack of leadership. I have seen no proposals, no constructive proposals..just these generalized attacks." And this was largely true, for the Democratic assault on the Eisenhower Doctrine was only partly an attack on that particular documnet. It was also an expression of unease about the whole tactics and strategy of our policy in the Middle East. And the critical questions were directed not so much at the terms of the Doctrine as at the policy which lay behind it.

What is the policy behind the Doctrine, the critical Senators wanted to know. Not just that the United States would use armed force to resist Communist aggression in the Middle East..or that we desire to improve the economic lot of the Arab nations..but under what circumstances would we use force, what kind of economic projects would we encourage, where do we stand on the Arab-Israeli conflict and how do we hope to bring about a settlement between them, how does the Eisenhower Doctrine relate to Egypt and the Suez Canal, where does the U.N. fit in..and many more questions like that.. The administration would not, or could not, provide very many clear answers to questions like that because, as some officials are willing to admit privately, the flesh of policy as opposed to its skeleton, is still in the process of being created. First we must have the framework, they say, and then we sill build the policy but its precisely that elaboration of policy that the Democrats in the Senate appear to be uneasy about. They don't trust Mr. Dulles and they don't like the way quickly devised Middle Eastern policy has turned out in the past. So even though they have, as the President pointed out, no very carefully elaborated plan of their own, the Administration's critics in the Senate are going to follow the course of the Eisenhower Doctrine long after it has received the stamp of Congressional approval.

I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the News. But first, here is our announcer.

ANNOUNCER:

COLLINGWOOD: If there is anything our British cousing dearly love, its a ghost story and doubly if it involves a famous historical character. So they are much absorbed by the report that two Guardsmen at the Tower of London saw a ghost floating around at 3 AM this morning. The speculation is that it might have been the shade of Lady Jane Grey who was executed 402 years ago. The Guardsmens' shouts brought a number of their fellows to the scene. They saw nothing.

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Collingwood for Murrow Thurs., Feb. 14, 1957

Good evening:

The Treasury Department asked Congress today for authority to raise the interest rate on United States savings bonds. The Treasury said it wants to increase the rate of interest on Series E and Series H bonds to three and a quarter percent. The present rate for these bonds is three percent. The increase of one-quarter of one percent doesn't sound like much, but on the basis of bonds presently outstanding it would amount to about 15-million dollars' additional interest a year. If Congress gives its approval, the higher rate will be retroactive to February first. Bonds purchased before February first are not affected. Many banks have started paying higher interest on savings accounts, and the government wants to meet this competition in the "tight money" market. As a further inducement, ~~xxxx~~ Series E bonds (under the new program) would mature in eight years and eleven months -- nine months earlier than they do now.

The Treasury asked for prompt action, and Chairman Cooper of the House Ways and Means Committee says his group will start public hearings on the Administration request next Thursday.

On the New York stock market today, prices after a good start turned mixed in late trading. The Dow Jones industrial average closed with a loss of 58 cents, after showing a gain of more than two dollars at noon.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce said today that total indebtedness in the United States -- public and private -- is now somewhere in the neighborhood of a trillion dollars. It said that in a period of prosperity, like the present, this load can be carried. But it cautioned that "a burden which feels like a ~~[illegible]~~ featherweight during prosperity may feel like a ton of bricks in a depression."

Secretary of the Interior Fred Seaton testified today before the Senate committee investigating the "oil lift" to Europe... and the recent increase in ~~[illegible]~~ oil prices. Seaton said that American oil companies are more than living up to their promise to meet Europe's emergency needs. They promised to supply 75 percent of Europe's oil requirements, he said, and they're supplying 80 percent. At the same time, Seaton warned that anyone caught violating the Anti-Trust Act, in raising oil prices, will be prosecuted "to the fullest extent of the law."

The special Senate committee investigating racketeering in labor and industry got tough today with teamsters union president Dave Beck. Beck is out of the country, but the committee ordered him, nevertheless, to produce all his personal financial records for the last seven years. The committee also reminded Beck that it wants to see him when he gets back from Europe late next month.

At the United Nations today... a defeat for Soviet Russia. By a vote of 8 to 6, the powerful steering committee rejected a Russian demand that President Eisenhower's Middle East doctrine be taken up by the General Assembly for full-scale debate. Russia claimed that the Eisenhower doctrine... and other American policies... constitute a threat to world peace. They are designed, it said, "not to relax international tensions but to make them more acute." American Ambassador Lodge called the Russian charge "a gigantic cock and bull story." The Soviet delegate was complaining, he said, because American policy is aimed at preventing in the Middle East what happened to Eastern European states like Poland and Hungary. But Lodge said the United States would welcome a debate on American policy... as demanded by Moscow... because then the "crudities" of the Russian argument would be exposed for all to see. As it turned out, the Russian move was defeated (as we said) by a vote of 8 to 6.

In a separate action today, the General Assembly approved the resumption of five-power disarmament talks in London on March 18th.

The White House said tonight that President Eisenhower has "no doubt" that the Senate and House will get together on a version of his Middle East resolution which will be "entirely satisfactory". Yesterday, the joint Senate foreign relations and armed services committees amended that resolution. The President had asked Congress to "authorize" the use of American armed forces, if necessary, to repel any open Communist aggression in the Middle East. The joint committee struck out the word "authorize". The resolution, as amended, says simply that the United States is "prepared" to employ its armed forces under those conditions. The statement issued tonight by the vacation White House in Thomasville, Georgia, says Mr. Eisenhower is "sure" the text as amended is designed to accomplish the same purpose he has in mind. A reporter asked News Secretary Hagerty if either the President or Secretary Dulles feels that he has suffered a setback. Hagerty said no, they do not.

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson returned to Washington from a vacation and said he favors the resolution in its present form. He predicted that the Senate will pass the new substitute version without substantial change.

In Tel Aviv today, the Israeli cabinet met for two hours. Then, afterwards, it sent new instructions to Abba Eban, the Israeli ambassador to the United States. These new instructions have not been divulged. It is believed, however, that they concern the assurances Secretary of State Dulles gave Israel a few days ago regarding the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Mr. Dulles said that if Israel would first withdraw its forces from those areas, the United States would then support the principle of free navigation in the Gulf of Aqaba... and would see what could be done about stationing United Nations troops or observers in Gaza, to see that it is not used as a base for further Egyptian attack. The United Press quotes informed Israeli sources as saying that the cabinet gave tentative approval to the proposal for Israeli withdrawal from the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba... but stood fast on its refusal to give up the Gaza Strip.

Today, Great Britain filled in her NATO allies on her new defense program. Britain is understood to have said that she must cut down on the number of British troops stationed on the Continent. B ritain now has 80-thousand men in Western Europe. According to informed sources, these would be reduced by more than one-third. And those remaining would be equipped with more modern weapons.

An important election was held in London today - an upset which may have deep implications for the future of British politics. For a direct report on this, we switch now to Howard K Smith in London.

Here in the United States, the East Coast dock strike continues. Because of it, the British liner Queen Elizabeth docked today in Halifax, Nova Scotia instead of N.Y. Negotiations to end the walkout are still going on.

FOLO LONDON

Ed Murrow, who is a very busy man these days, returns from his current trip to take over this microphone again tomorrow evening... And then the day after, he's off again... this time on an assignment overseas. So I'll be sitting in for him again while he's away.

I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOTNOTE TO THE DAYS NEWS

BUT FIRST, HERE IS George Byron

FOOTNOTE

For the last few days the sensation of Moscow has been a painting of a nude in an art show -- not that its particularly provocative, but that its a nude. In Stalin's day such pictures were taboo... and everyone has been wondering what the official reaction now would be. Well, today an art critic discussed it on Moscow Radio and called for more nudes and fewer pictures of Stalin. Actually, he said, it wasn't much of a picture, but a great subject.

THIS IS C.C.

Ed Murrow SEE YOU TOMORROW

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, February 14, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... In Great Britain today, an important election was held in London, an upset, which may have deep implications for the future of British politics. For a direct report on this, we switch now to Howard K. Smith in London.

SMITH: The British Labor party won itself a substantial political victory over Prime Minister Harold Macmillan's Conservative party here in London this evening. Voting took place today in a by-election to fill a recently vacated seat in Parliament. The counting of votes, which was concluded a short while ago, shows that the contested seat, which was won by the Conservatives in the last general election, was taken away tonight by the Labor candidate. In the general election two years ago, which brought the Conservatives to power in Britain, this particular seat was won by the Conservatives with a majority of more than 3,000 popular votes. It was captured by Labor tonight, by a majority of more than one thousand votes; that means 4,000 votes changed hands.

That outcome is held here to be very significant. The constituency where the contest occurred is Lewisham, a suburb on the southeastern outskirts of London. Lewisham has been described, by British commentators, as a place where the better-off of the working classes blend imperceptibly into the worse-off members of the middle class. It is, therefore, a fair representation of the ~~British~~ floating vote, the shifting weight in the middle of the political see-saw whose slight movements to either side determine the outcome of national elections in this country.

The campaign for Lewisham was bitterly fought, with about half a dozen Cabinet ministers and ex-Cabinet ministers taking active part for the two candidates. Usually, in by-elections, less than fifty per cent of the voters can be counted on to go to the polls. But in today's election, seventy per cent of the voters went to the polls, the same percentage that voted in the general election two years ago.

It is the first election since Britain changed prime ministers last month. It can hardly be interpreted otherwise than as a severe blow to the prestige of the new Prime Minister, Mr. Macmillan. The shift of votes, four thousand, changing sides out of a total of thirty-seven thousand people voting, is a shift of well over ten per cent. In a general election, that would make for a Labor landslide victory.

The Labor opposition's official newspaper, The London Daily Herald, this morning published an editorial on its front page, making clear its view that if the Government lost the by-election today, it should call a general election. A Conservative defeat, the paper said, would mean a vote of no confidence in the government, which would only hinder the progress of the nation by hanging on for the three year term it legally still has before it. It's virtually certain that the Conservative government will not accept that view. The result tonight will almost certainly cause it to hold on to power the more tightly, to try to recover prestige in the next year or two. But it will do that under tremendous psychological pressure to make changes. As the Suez venture recedes in time, it becomes ever clearer to observers here that the British people suffered a severe shock from that event.

One measure of the shock was a Gallup Poll published in Britain last week, according to which two-out-of-every-five Britons would emigrate from England if they could.

The present government has emphasized that it continues the policy of the Eden Cabinet, which undertook the Suez venture and so it is held responsible for the unusually despondent mood that the venture has left behind it. The Government will hold on; but in the realm of foreign affairs, especially, today's by-election result may apply pressure for changes to be made - possibly in the Cabinet.

In a fashion, the Conservatives yesterday made foreign affairs a major issue in today's vote. As a last minute tactic, the Conservative candidate campaigned under a new slogan, not seen until the last day of the campaign. The slogan, which appeared on placards and leaflets yesterday, was: "Let your vote give Macmillan the right message for Ike!" The reference there being to the coming meeting of Prime Minister Macmillan and President Eisenhower in Bermuda.

Back now to Charles Collingwood in New York.

COLLINGWOOD: Here in the United States, the east coast dock strike continues.

Ed. trans. P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, February 14, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... In Great Britain today, an important election was held in London, an upset, which may have deep implications for the future of British politics. For a direct report on this, we switch now to Howard K. Smith in London.

SMITH: The British Labor party won itself a substantial political victory over Prime Minister Harold Macmillan's Conservative party here in London this evening. Voting took place today in a by-election to fill a recently vacated seat in Parliament. The counting of votes, which was concluded a short while ago, shows that the contested seat, which was won by the Conservatives in the last general election, was taken away tonight by the Labor candidate. In the general election two years ago, which brought the Conservatives to power in Britain, this particular seat was won by the Conservatives with a majority of more than 3,000 popular votes. It was captured by Labor tonight, by a majority of more than one thousand votes; that means 4,000 votes changed hands.

That outcome is held here to be very significant. The constituency where the contest occurred is Lewisham, a suburb on the southeastern outskirts of London. Lewisham has been described, by British commentators, as a place where the better-off of the working classes blend imperceptibly into the worse-off members of the middle class. It is, therefore, a fair representation of the British floating vote, the shifting weight in the middle of the political see-saw whose slight movements to either side determine the outcome of national elections in this country.

The campaign for Lewisham was bitterly

fought, with about half a dozen Cabinet ministers and ex-Cabinet ministers taking active part for the two candidates. Usually, in by-elections, less than fifty per cent of the voters can be counted on to go to the polls. But in today's election, seventy per cent of the voters went to the polls, the same percentage that voted in the general election two years ago.

It is the first election since Britain changed prime ministers last month. It can hardly be interpreted otherwise than as a severe blow to the prestige of the new Prime Minister, Mr. Macmillan. The shift of votes, four thousand, changing sides out of a total of thirty-seven thousand people voting, is a shift of well over ten per cent. In a general election, that would make for a Labor landslide victory.

The Labor opposition's official newspaper, The London Daily Herald, this morning published an editorial on its front page, making clear its view that if the Government lost the by-election today, it should call a general election. A Conservative defeat, the paper said, would mean a vote of no confidence in the government, which would only hinder the progress of the nation by hanging on for the three year term it legally still has before it. It's virtually certain that the Conservative government will not accept that view. The result tonight will almost certainly cause it to hold on to power the more tightly, to try to recover prestige in the next year or two. But it will do that under tremendous psychological pressure to make changes. As the Suez venture recedes in time, it becomes ever clearer to observers here that the British people suffered a severe shock from that event.

One measure of the shock was a Gallup Poll published in Britain last week, according to which two-out-of-every-five Britons would emigrate from England if they could.

The present government has emphasized that it continues the policy of the Eden Cabinet, which undertook the Suez venture and so it is held responsible for the unusually despondent mood that the venture has left behind it. The Government will hold on; but in the realm of foreign affairs, especially, today's by-election result may apply pressure for changes to be made - possibly in the Cabinet.

In a fashion, the Conservatives yesterday made foreign affairs a major issue in today's vote. As a last minute tactic, the Conservative candidate campaigned under a new slogan, not seen until the last day of the campaign. The slogan, which appeared on placards and leaflets yesterday, was: "Let your vote give Macmillan the right message for Ike!" The reference there being to the coming meeting of Prime Minister Macmillan and President Eisenhower in Bermuda.

Back now to Charles Collingwood in New York.

COLLINGWOOD: Here in the United States, the east coast dock strike continues.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Evening:

The Treasury Department asked Congress today for authority to raise the interest rate on United States savings bonds. The Treasury said it wants to increase the rate of interest on Series E and Series H bonds to three and a quarter percent. The present rate for these bonds in three percent. The increase of one - quarter of one percent doesn't sound like much, but on the basis of bonds presently outstanding it would amount to about 15-million dollars additional interest a year. If Congress gives its approval, the higher rate will be retroactive to February first. Bonds purchased before February first are not affected. Many banks have started paying higher interest on savings accounts, and the government wants to meet this competition in the "tight money" market" As a further inducement, Series E bonds (under the new program) would mature in eight years and eleven months -- nine months earlier than they do now. The Treasury asked for prompt action, and Chairman Cooper of the House Ways and Means Committee says his group will start public hearings on the Administration request next Thursday.

On the New York stock market today prices , after a good start, turned mixed in late trading. The Dow Jones industrial average closed with a loss of 58 cents, after showing a gain of more than two dollars at noon.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce said today that total indebtedness in the United States -- public and private -- is now somewhere in the neighborhood of a trillion dollars. It said that in a period of prosperity, like the present, this load can be carried. But it cautioned that "a burden which feels like a featherwieght during prosperity may feel like a ton of bricks in a depression."

Secretary of the Interior Fred Seaton testified today before the Senate committee investigating the "oil lift" to Europe...and the recent increase in oil prices. Seaton said that American oil companies are more than living up to their promise to meet Europe's emergency needs. They promised to supply 75 percent of Europe's oil requirements, he said, and they're supplying 80 percent. At the same time, Seaton warned that anyone caught violating the Anti - Trust Act, in raising oil prices, will be prosecuted " to the fullest extent of the law."

The special senate committee investigating racketeering in labor and industry got tough today with teamsters union president Dave Beck. Beck is out of the country, but the committee oedered him, nevertheless, to produce all his personal financial records for the last seven years. The committee also reminded Beck that it wants to see him when he gets back from Europe, late next month.

At the United Nations today...a defeat for Soviet Russia. By a vote of 8 to 6, the powerful steering committee rejected a Russian demand that President Eisenhower's Middle East doctrine be taken up by the General Assembly for full - scale debate. Russia claimed that the Eisenhower doctrine .. and other American policies...constitute a threat to world peace. They are designed, it said, "not to relax international tensions but to make them more acute." American Ambassador Lodge called the Russian charge " a gigantic cock and bull story." The Soviet delegate was complaining, he said, because American policy is aimed at preventing in the Middle East what happened to Eastern European states like Poland and Hungary. But Lodge, said the United States would welcome a debate on American policy.. as demanded by Moscow because then the "crudities" of the Russian argument would be exposed for all to see. As it turned out, the Russian move was defeated (as we said) by a vote of 8 to 6.

In a separate action today, the General Assembly approved the resumption of five-power disarmament talks in London on March 18th.

The White House said tonight that President Eisenhower has "no doubt" that the Senate and House will get together on a version of his Middle East resolution which will be "entirely satisfactory". Yesterday, the joint Senate foreign relations and armed services committees amended that resolution. The President had asked Congress to "authorize" the use of American armed forces, if necessary, to repel any open Communist aggression in the Middle East. The joint committee struck out the word "authorize". The resolution, as amended, says simply that the United States is "prepared" to employ its armed forces under those conditions. The statement issued tonight by the vacation White House in Thomasville, Georgia, says Mr. Eisenhower is "sure" the text as amended is designed to accomplish the same purpose he has in mind. A reporter asked News Secretary Hagerty if either the President or Secretary Dulles feels that he has suffered a setback. Hagerty said no, they do not.

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson returned to Washington from a vacation and said he favors the resolution in its present form. He predicted that the Senate will pass the new substitute version without substantial change.

In Tel Aviv today, the Israeli cabinet met for two hours. Then, afterwards, it sent new instructions to Abba Eban, the Israeli ambassador to the United States. These new instructions have not been divulged. It is believed, however, that they concern the assurances Secretary of State Dulles gave Israel a few days ago regarding the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Mr. Dulles said that if Israel would first withdraw its forces from those areas, the United States would then support the principle of free navigation in the Gulf of Aqaba and would see what could be done about stationing United Nations troops or observers in Gaza, to see that it is not used as a base for further Egyptian attack. The United Press quoted informed Israeli sources as saying that the cabinet gave tentative approval to the proposal for Israeli withdrawal from the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba but stood fast on its refusal to give up the Gaza Strip.

Today, Great Britain filled in her NATO allies on her new defense program. Britain is understood to have said that she must cut down on the number of British troops stationed on the Continent. Britain now has 80-thousand men in Western Europe. According to informed sources, these would be reduced by more than one-third. And those remaining woudd be equipped with more modern weapons.

An important election was held in London today -- an upset which may have deep implications for the future of British politics. For a direct report on this, we switch not to Howard K. Smith in London.

SMITH: The British Labor party won itself a substantial political victory over Prime Minister Harold Macmillan's Conservative party here in London this evening. Voting took place today in a by-election to fill a recently vacated seat in Parliament. The counting of votes, which was concluded a short while ago, shows that the contested seat, which was won by the Conservatives in the last general election, was taken away tonight by the Labor candidate. In the general election two years ago, which brought the Conservatives to power in Britain, this particular seat was won by the Conservatives with a majority of more than 3,000 popular votes. It was captured by labor tonight, by a majority of more than one thousand votes; that means 4,000 votes changed hands.

That outcome is held here to be very significant. The constituency where the contest occurred in Lewisham, a suburb on the southeastern outskirts of London. Lewisham has been described, by British commentators, as a place where the better-off of the working classes blend imperceptibly into the worse-off members of the middle class. It is, therefore, a fair representation of the British floating vote, the shifting weight in the middle of the political see-saw whose slight movements to either side determine the outcome of national elections in this country.

The campaign for Lewisham was bitterly fought, with about half a dozen Cabinet ministers and ex-Cabinet ministers taking active part for the two candidates. Usually, in by-elections, less than fifty per cent of the voters can be counted on to go to the polls. But in today's electoon, seventy per cent of the voters went to the polls, the same percentage that voted in the general election two years ago.

It is the first election since Britain changed prime ministers last month. It can hardly be interpreted otherwise than as a severe blow to the prestige of the new Prime Minister, Mr. MacMillan. The shift of votes, four thousand, changing sides out of a total of thirty-seven thousand people voting, is a shift of well over ten per cent. In a general election, that would make for a Labor land-slide victory.

The Labor opposition's official news-paper, the London Daily Herald, this morning published an editorial on its front page, making clear its view that if the Government lost the by-election today, it should call a general election. A Conservative defeat, the paper said, would mean a vote of no confidence in the government, which would only hinder the progress of the nation by hanging on for the three year term it legally still has before it. It's virtually certain that the Conservative government will not accept that view. The result tonight will almost certainly cause it to hold on to power the more tightly, to try to recover prestige in the next year or two. But it will do what under tremendous psychological pressure to make changes. As the Suez venture recedes in time, it becomes ever clearer to observers here that the British people suffered a severe shock from that event.

One measure of the shock was a Gallup Poll published in Britain last week, according to which two-out-of-every five Britons would emigrate from England if they could.

The present government has emphasized that it continues the policy of the Eden Cabinet, which undertook the Suez venture and so it is held responsible for the unusually despondent mood that the venture has left behind it. The Government will hold on; but in the realm of foreign affairs, especially, today's by-election result may apply pressure for changes to be made -- possibly in the Cabinet.

In a fashion, the Conservatives yesterday made foreign affairs a major issue in today's vote. As a last minute tactic, the Conservitive candidate campaigned under a new slogan, not seen until the last day of the campaign. The slogan, which appeared on placards and leaflets yesterday, was: "Let your vote give Macmillan the right message for Ike." The reference there being to the coming meeting of Prime Minister Macmillan and President Eisenhower in Bermuda.

Back now to Charles Collingwood in New York.

COLLINGWOOD: Here in the United States, the East Coast dock strike continues. Because of it, the British liner Queen Elizabeth docked today in Halifax, Nova Scotia, instead of New York. Negotiations to end the walkout are still going on.

Ed Murrow, who is a very busy man these days, returns from his current trip to take over this microphone again tomorrow evening and then the day after, he's off again..this time on an assignment overseas. So I'll be sitting in for him again while he's away.

I"ll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the days news. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD:For the last few days the sensatiin of Moscow has been a painting of a nude in an art show -- not that its particularly provocative, but that its a nude. In Stalin's day such pictures were taboo..and everyone has been wondering what the official reaction now would be. Well, today an art critic discussed it on Moscow Radio and called for more nudes and fewer pictures of Stalin. Actually, he said, it wasn't much of a picture but a great subject.

This is Charles Collingwood. Ed Murrow will see you tomorrow.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Feb. 15, 1957

This is the news:

Dimitri Shepilov was removed today as Soviet foreign minister, after serving in the office for only nine months. /His successor is Andrei Gromyko, the first deputy foreign minister, and former Soviet ambassador to the United States. /Gromyko also served for some time as Russia's permanent representative at the U.N. No reason was given for Shepilov's dismissal. The official announcement said merely that he is being transferred to "other work". It was announced earlier in the day, that Shepilov had been named to the secretariat of the Communist Party central committee. /This is a post he held before becoming foreign minister. /Today's action was taken by the presidium of the Supreme Soviet, after a secret meeting of the central committee. /The only Soviet comment comes from the Russian ambassador in Bonn, who says Gromyko's appointment means "a strengthening of the policy of co-existence." The State Department has declined comment. The first unofficial Washington reaction is that there will be no new "sharp turn" in Soviet foreign policy. In London and Paris, there is some speculation that the Kremlin may be getting ready to adopt a "harder" line. Gromyko is a disciple of Molotov, and Molotov was Stalin's right-hand man.

→

In Washington today, Israeli Ambassador Abba Eban called at the State Department and had a long talk with Secretary Dulles. The discussion concerned Mr. Dulles' proposal for breaking the deadlock over the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Dulles recently said that if Israel would first withdraw its forces, the United States would then support the principle of free navigation in the Gulf of Aqaba. The United States, he said, would also see what could be done about posting United Nations troops in the Gaza Strip to keep Egypt from using it as a military base. Ambassador Eban said... after his conference with Dulles today... that he had presented a set of proposals to the secretary of state and that it was his "understanding" that the proposals... along with his oral observations... have now been taken under study. Eban said, "We shall be keeping in touch continually with the Department of State. He said that whether Israel completes its withdrawal depends on the outcome of additional talks. The State Department said tonight that Israel's reply had not seemed "responsive" to Mr. Dulles' proposal. It said, "The matter is being further studied on both sides. We are awaiting further clarification of the Israeli position." (In a few minutes, we shall have reports direct from Cairo and Tel Aviv on this Middle East problem.)

Secretary Dulles is flying tonight to Thomasville, Georgia, to confer with President Eisenhower on the Israeli issue "and other foreign policy matters." Mr. Dulles is being accompanied by Henry Cabot Lodge, the United States ambassador to the U.N. The United Nations General Assembly is scheduled to debate the Middle East question on Monday.

The Senate foreign relations and armed services committees today issued a joint statement declaring their "strong support" for President Eisenhower's new Middle East policy. On Wednesday, they amended his resolution which asked Congress to authorize the President to use American troops, if necessary, against any Soviet aggression in the Middle East. As amended, the resolution does not use the word "authorize". It says the United States is "prepared" to employ its armed forces in the area "if the President determines the necessity thereof." The White House said yesterday that Mr. Eisenhower is satisfied with the change... that he is "sure" the revision was designed to accomplish the same purpose he has in mind. In their joint statement today, the Senate committees expressed the view that they had actually strengthened the resolution, since it sidesteps the controversial question of the powers of the President as commander-in-chief. They said that instead of merely providing authorization, it declares United States policy. The Senate opens debate on the resolution on Monday.

The House Appropriations Committee today cut 22-million dollars from the budget President Eisenhower requested for the Treasury Department in the next fiscal year. The cut amounts to about 2 percent of the total appropriation. It also pared 58-million dollars from the 3-billion 200-million requested for the Post Office Department. The Post Office says if this cut goes through, 10-thousand "vital" workers will have to be let go.

~~The Interstate Commerce Commission today granted southern and New England railroads a 5 percent increase in general passenger rates.~~

The dock strike on the East Coast has gone through its fourth day. Hopes for an early settlement are reported squashed, due to a split in the ranks of the striking longshoremen's union.

The United Nations General Assembly today approved a compromise resolution expressing hope that the Algerian problem will be solved "in the spirit of co-operation." The vote was 76 to nothing. France, which has insisted Algeria is an internal French matter, did not vote. The resolution does not call for any specific action.

There are signs that Egypt is stalling in its effort to clear the Suez Canal. For that story... and the Egyptian reaction to Secretary Dulles' proposals... we switch to Frank Kearns in Cairo.

(tape runs 2:55
(ends on cue: "--to Edw. R.
(Murrow in N.Y."

My colleague, Winston Burdett, has been covering the story from the Israeli point of view. For his report, we switch now to Tel Aviv.

(tape runs 3:35
(ends on cue: "--to Edw. R.
(Murrow in N.Y."

Tel Aviv Cairo

You have heard the reports of two of my colleagues, Winston Burdett and Frank Kearns, setting forth the Israeli and Egyptian points of ~~[illegible]~~ view regarding a most difficult question. Cairo - Telavi -

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) Now here is George Bryan.

George Bryan

Word for Today

The Russian leaders would seem to have returned again to their game of musical chairs. Shepilov is out as foreign minister after nine months and Gromyko is in. This may be difficult to interpret, [redacted] but the philosopher Hume once remarked... very truly... "Of all sciences, there is none where first appearances are more deceitful than in politics."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - WINSTON BURDETT IN TEL AVIV

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: My colleague, Winston Burdett, has been covering the story from the Israeli point of view. For his report, we switch now to Tel Aviv.

BURDETT: According to high sources in the Israeli government tonight, Israel is still considering Sec. Dulles' proposals on the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. No decision has been reached as negotiations on the proposals continue. Prime Minister Ben-Gurion, now recovered from his attack of pneumonia, plans to leave his home in Tel Aviv for his office in Jerusalem tomorrow, and on Sunday, a second Cabinet meeting will be held on the Dulles' offer.

A Foreign Office spokesman called the Dulles' proposals "an encouraging transformation of American official thinking"; and by this is meant that the United States is now ready to recognize the Gulf of Aqaba and the narrow Strait of Tiran as an international waterway. However, before making any decision about withdrawing her troops from the shores of the Gulf, Israel wants to find out exactly how far the United States is willing to go to guarantee free passage for Israeli shipping there.

There has been a perceptible shift, these past few days, in the Israeli position, both in the Gulf of Aqaba dispute and on the Gaza issue. Israel's original stand was that her troops would never leave the Aqaba coast until they were succeeded there by military forces other than Egyptian. By this they meant stationing a UN force at the mouth of the Gulf to insure free passage.

Today it's clear that Israel would accept a firm and formal guaranty without the presence of UN troops to enforce it. They would frankly prefer a guaranty by the United States to one by the United Nations. On the Gaza question, also, Israel has modified her stand.

Gaza is a much more difficult problem, as the Israelis see it. For Israel could always shoot her way through the Straits of Tiran, if she is backed by assurances of support from the United States. But she could not shoot her way through Gaza. The Strip has 300,000 Arabs living in it, and somebody has to rule them.

Until now, the Israelis have insisted that they themselves should rule Gaza and maintain security along its borders with their own Civil Police, possibly under the eye and supervision of United Nations observers of some kind. These past two days, however, the Israelis have been talking about Tri-Partite regime for Gaza, with the United Nations, Israel and the Arab natives sharing the administrative job. The Arabs would keep the Town Council, which they now have; the Israeli police would see to security; and the United Nations would look after practically everything else.

Even on this proposal, there is evidently room for bargaining. For Israeli officials now say that their one rock-bottom condition, as far as Gaza is concerned, is that the Egyptians must never be permitted to return there. On the home front in Israel, this is a tricky moment for the government. It was easy to rally popular support for the government's hard stand when Israel seemed threatened with economic sanctions. It is much harder to resist the blandishments of apparent reasonableness, which tend to weaken the solid front and build a mood where compromises are acceptable. But the fact is that the Israeli government is now thinking in terms of compromise, up to a point.

And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - WINSTON BURDETT IN TEL AVIV

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: My colleague, Winston Burdett, has been covering the story from the Israeli point of view. For his report, we switch now to Tel Aviv.

BURDETT: According to high sources in the Israeli government tonight, Israel is still considering Sec. Dulles' proposals on the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. No decision has been reached as negotiations on the proposals continue. Prime Minister Ben-Gurion, now recovered from his attack of pneumonia, plans to leave his home in Tel Aviv for his office in Jerusalem tomorrow, and on Sunday, a second Cabinet meeting will be held on the Dulles' offer.

A Foreign Office spokesman called the Dulles' proposals "an encouraging transformation of American official thinking"; and by this is meant that the United States is now ready to recognize the Gulf of Aqaba and the narrow Strait of Tiran as an international waterway. However, before making any decision about withdrawing her troops from the shores of the Gulf, Israel wants to find out exactly how far the United States is willing to go to guarantee free passage for Israeli shipping there.

There has been a perceptible shift, these past few days, in the Israeli position, both in the Gulf of Aqaba dispute and on the Gaza issue. Israel's original stand was that her troops would never leave the Aqaba coast until they were succeeded there by military forces other than Egyptian. By this they meant stationing a UN force at the mouth of the Gulf to insure free passage.

Today it's clear that Israel would accept a firm and formal guaranty without the presence of UN troops to enforce it. They would frankly prefer a guaranty by the United States to one by the United Nations. On the Gaza question, also, Israel has modified her stand.

Gaza is a much more difficult problem, as the Israelis see it. For Israel could always shoot her way through the Straits of Tiran, if she is backed by assurances of support from the United States. But she could not shoot her way through Gaza. The Strip has 300,000 Arabs living in it, and somebody has to rule them.

Until now, the Israelis have insisted that they themselves should rule Gaza and maintain security along its borders with their own Civil Police, possibly under the eye and supervision of United Nations observers of some kind. These past two days, however, the Israelis have been talking about Tri-Partite regime for Gaza, with the United Nations, Israel and the Arab natives sharing the administrative job. The Arabs would keep the Town Council, which they now have; the Israeli police would see to security; and the United Nations would look after practically everything else.

Even on this proposal, there is evidently room for bargaining. For Israeli officials now say that their one rock-bottom condition, as far as Gaza is concerned, is that the Egyptians must never be permitted to return there. On the home front in Israel, this is a tricky moment for the government. It was easy to rally popular support for the government's hard stand when Israel seemed threatened with economic sanctions. It is much harder to resist the blandishments of apparent reasonableness, which tend to weaken the solid front and build a mood where compromises are acceptable. But the fact is that the Israeli government is now thinking in terms of compromise, up to a point.

And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - FRANK KEARNS IN CAIRO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: There are signs that Egypt is stalling in its effort to clear the Suez Canal. For that story, and the Egyptian reaction to Sec. Dulles' proposals, we switch now to Frank Kearns in Cairo.

KEARNS: The word from Cairo: the Egyptian-Israeli crisis looks drearier than ever tonight. The Egyptians are bitter, really bitter, over the reported Dulles' guaranty to Israel about the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. They are saying - they say America has abandoned all her principles and is, in effect, rewarding Israel for aggression, for attacking Egypt. One newspaper today even says all this may lead to World War III. Every source in Cairo stresses that Egypt still insists on the unconditional withdrawal of Israel from Gaza and Aqaba, in accordance with six (indistinct) resolutions; and Egyptian circles insist they'll use every weapon at their command to accomplish this. Later, some most ominous reports here tonight say President Nasser is now prepared to use his ultimate weapon, his not-so-secret weapon - the Suez Canal. These reports say Nasser will slow down, perhaps even stop, all clearance operations in the Suez Canal.

There is considerable evidence that this (indistinct) which could bring on a new world-wide crisis is already underway. Some time ago, the Egyptians suddenly announced they'd hired an Italian tanker, the Pianeta, to haul crude oil from Sinai to Suez refineries; and they said the Pianeta would sail all the way through the Canal, Port Said to Suez. Last Saturday, the Italian tanker sailed into the Canal at Port Said, proceeded almost halfway down the waterway. There it anchored, awaiting clearance of the biggest wreck in the Canal, the concrete-laden (indistinct) Akka. Well, tonight clearance crews finally towed the Akka out of the Canal, completing their biggest salvage job.

But now the Egyptians have ordered the Italian tanker to go back to Port Said. She's expected to turn around and steam back tomorrow. The Egyptians, one Western source commented tonight, apparently want to make it clear the Canal is not even close to being opened.

This is Frank Kearns, reporting from Cairo.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - FRANK KEARNS IN CAIRO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: There are signs that Egypt is stalling in its effort to clear the Suez Canal. For that story, and the Egyptian reaction to Sec. Dulles' proposals, we switch now to Frank Kearns in Cairo.

KEARNS: The word from Cairo: the Egyptian-Israeli crisis looks drearier than ever tonight. The Egyptians are bitter, really bitter, over the reported Dulles' guaranty to Israel about the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. They are saying - they say America has abandoned all her principles and is, in effect, rewarding Israel for aggression, for attacking Egypt. One newspaper today even says all this may lead to World War III. Every source in Cairo stresses that Egypt still insists on the unconditional withdrawal of Israel from Gaza and Aqaba, in accordance with six (indistinct) resolutions; and Egyptian circles insist they'll use every weapon at their command to accomplish this. Later, some most ominous reports here tonight say President Nasser is now prepared to use his ultimate weapon, his not-so-secret weapon - the Suez Canal. These reports say Nasser will slow down, perhaps even stop, all clearance operations in the Suez Canal.

There is considerable evidence that this (indistinct) which could bring on a new world-wide crisis is already underway. Some time ago, the Egyptians suddenly announced they'd hired an Italian tanker, the Pianeta, to haul crude oil from Sinai to Suez refineries; and they said the Pianeta would sail all the way through the Canal, Port Said to Suez. Last Saturday, the Italian tanker sailed into the Canal at Port Said, proceeded almost halfway down the waterway. There it anchored, awaiting clearance of the biggest wreck in the Canal, the concrete-laden (indistinct) Akka. Well, tonight clearance crews finally towed the Akka out of the Canal, completing their biggest salvage job.

But now the Egyptians have ordered the Italian tanker to go back to Port Said. She's expected to turn around and steam back tomorrow. The Egyptians, one Western source commented tonight, apparently want to make it clear the Canal is not even close to being opened.

This is Frank Kearns, reporting from Cairo.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1957

7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Dimitri Shepilov war removed today as Soviet foreign minister, after serving in the office for only nine months. His successor is Andrei Gromyko, the first deputy foreign minister and former Soviet ambassador to the United States. Gromyko also served for some time as Russia's permanent representative at the U.N. No reason was given for Shepilov's dismissal. The official announcement said merely that he is being transferred to "other work" . It was announced earlier in the day that Shepilov had been named to the secretariat of the Communist Party Central Committee. This is a post he held before becoming foreign minister. Today's action was taken by the presidaum of the Supreme Soviet, after a secret meeting of the central committee. The only Soviet comment comes from the Russian ambassador in Bonn, who says Gromyko's appointment means "a strengthening of the policy of co-existence." The State Department has declined to comment. The first unofficial Washington reaction is that there will be no new "sharp turn " in Soviet foreign policy. In London and Paris, there is some speculation that the Kremlin may be getting ready to adopt a "harder" line. Gromyko is a disciple of Molotov, and Molotov was Stalin's right-hand man.

In Washington today, Israeli Ambassador Abba Eban called at the State Department and had a long talk with Secretary Dulles. The discussion concerned Mr. Dulles's proposal for breaking the deadlock over the withdrawal of Israeli forced from the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Dulles recently said that if Israel would first withdraw its forces, the United States would then support the principle of free navigation in the Gulf of Aqaba. The United States, he said, would also see what could be done about posting United Nations troops in the Gaza Strip to keep Egypt from using it as a military base. Ambassador Eban said..after his conference with Dulles today that he had presented a set of proposals to the secretary of state and that it was his "understanding" that the proposals ..along with his oral observations ..have now been taken under study. Eban said, "We shall be keeping in touch continually with the Department of State. He said that whether Israel completes its withdrawal depends on the outcome of additional talks. The State Department said tonight that Israel's reply had not seemed "responsive" to Mr. Dulles' proposal. It said, "The matter is being further studied on both sides. We are awaiting further clarification of the Israeli position." (In a few minutes, we shall have reports direct from Cairo and Tel Aviv on this Middle East problem.

Secretary Dulles is flying tonight to Thomasville, Georgia, to confer with President Eisenhower on the Israeli issue "and other foreign policy matters." Mr. Dulles is being accompanied by Henry Cabot Lodge, the United States Ambassador to the U.N. The United Nations General Assembly is scheduled to debate the Middle East question in Monday.

The Senate foreign relations and armed services committees today issued a joint statement declaring their "strong support" for President Eisenhower's new Middle East policy. On Wednesday, they amended his resolution which asked Congress to authorize the President to use American troops, if necessary, against any Soviet aggression in the Middle East. As amended, the resolution does not use the word "authorize." It says the United States is "prepared" to employ its armed forces in the area "if the President determines the necessity thereof." The Senate opens debate on the resolution on Monday.

The House Appropriations Committee today cuts 22 - million dollars from the budget President Eisenhower requested for the Treasury Department in the next fiscal year. The cut amounts to about 2 percent of the total appropriation.

It also pared 58-million dollars from the 3-billion 200 - million requested for the Post Office Department. The Post Office says if this cut goes through, 10-thousand "vital" workers will have to be let go.

The dock strike on the East Coast has gone through its fourth day. Hopes for an early settlement are reported squashed, due to a split in the ranks of the striking longshoremen's union.

The United Nations General Assembly today approved a compromise resolution expressing hope that the Algerian problem will be solved "in the spirit of co-operation." The vote was 76 to nothing. France, which has insisted Algeria is an internal French matter, did not vote. The resolution does not call for any specific action.

There are signs that Egypt is stalling in its effort to clear the Suez Canal. For that story...and the Egyptian reaction to Secretary Dulles' proposals we switch to Frank Kearns in Cairo.

KEARNS: The word from Cairo: The Egyptian - Israeli crisis looks drearier than ever tonight. The Egyptians are bitter, really bitter, over the reported Dulles' guaranty to Israel about the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. They are saying - they say America has abandoned all her principles and is, in effect, rewarding Israel for aggression, for attacking Egypt. One newspaper today even says all this may lead to World War III. Every source in Cairo stresses that Egypt still insists on the unconditional withdrawal of Israel from Gaza and Aqaba, in accordance with six (indistinct) resolutions; and Egyptian circles insist they'll use every weapon at their command to accomplish this. Later, some most ominous reports here tonight say President Nasser is now prepared to use his ultimate weapon, his not-so-secret weapon - the Suez Canal. These reports say Nasser will slow down, perhaps even stop, all clearance operations in the Suez Canal.

There is considerable evidence that this (indistinct) which could bring on a new world-wide crisis is already underway. Some time ago, the Egyptians suddenly announced they'd hired an Italian tanker, the Pianeta, to haul crude oil from Sinai to Suez refineries; and they said the Pianeta would sail all the way through the Canal, Port Said to Suez. Last Saturday, the Italian tanker sailed into the Canal at Port Said, proceeded almost halfway down the waterway. There it anchored, awaiting clearance of the biggest wreck in the Canal, the concrete - laden (indistinct) Akka, Well, tonight clearance crews finally towed the Akka out of the Canal, completing their biggest salvage job. But now the Egyptians have ordered the Italian tanker to go back to port Said. She's expected to turn around and steam back tomorrow. The Egyptians, one Western source commented tonight, apparently want to make it clear the Canal is not even close to being opened.

This is Frank Kearns, reporting from Cairo. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: My colleague, Wnnston Burdett, has been covering the story from the Israeli point of view. For his report, we switch now to Tel Aviv.

BURDETT: According to high sources in the Israeli government tonight, Israel is still considering Secretary Dulles' proposals on the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. No decision has been reached as negotiations on the proposals continue. Prime Minister Ben-Gurion, now recovered from his attack of pneumonia, plans to leave his home in Tel Aviv for his office in Jerusalem tomorrow, and on Sunday, a second Cabinet meeting will be held on the Dulles' offer.

A Foreign Office spokesman called the Dulles' proposals "an encouraging transformation of American official thinking"; and by this is meant that the United States is now ready to recognize the Gulf of Aqaba and the narrow Strait of Tiran as an international waterway. However, before making any decision about withdrawing her troops from the shores of the Gulf, Israel wants to find out exactly how far the United States is willing to go to guarantee free passage for Israeli shipping there.

There has been a perceptible shift, these past few days, in the Israeli position, both in the Gulf of Aqaba dispute and the Gaza issue. Israel's original stand was that her troops would never leave the Aqaba coast until they were succeeded there by military forces other than Egyptian. By this they meant stationing a UN force at the mouth of the Gulf to insure free passage.

Today it's clear that Israel would accept a firm and formal guaranty without the presence of UN troops to enforce it. They would frankly prefer a guaranty by the United States to one by the United Nations. On the Gaza question also, Israel has modified her stand. Gaza is a much more difficult problem, as the Israelis see it. For Israel could always shoot her way through the Straits of Tiran, if she is backed by assurances of support from the United States. But she could not shoot her way through Gaza. The strip has 300,000 Arabs living in it, and somebody has to rule them.

Until now, the Israelis have insisted that they themselves should rule Gaza and maintain security along its borders with their own Civil Police, possibly under the eye and supervision of United Nations observers of some kind. These past two days, however, the Israelis have been talking about Tri-Partite regime for Gaza, with the United Nations, Israel and the Arab natives sharing the administrative job. The Arabs would keep the Town Council, which they now have; the Israeli police would see to security; and the United Nations would look after practically everything else.

Even on this proposal, there is evidently room for bargaining. For Israeli officials now say that their one rock - bottom condition, as far as Gaza is concerned, is that the Egyptians must never be permitted to return there. On the home front in Israel, this is a tricky moment for the government. It was easy to rally popular support for the government's hard stand when Israel seemed threatened with economic sanctions. It is much harder to resist the blandishments of apparent reasonableness, which tend to weaken the solid front and build a mood where compromises are acceptable. But the fact is that the Israeli government is now thinking in terms of Compromise, up to a point.

And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: You have heard the reports of two of my colleagues, Winston Burdett from Tel Aviv and Frank Kearns from Cairo, setting forth the Israeli and Egyptian points of view regarding a most difficult question.

This is Ed Murrow. I"ll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The Russian leaders would seem to have returned again to their game of musical chairs. Shepilov is out as foreign minister after nine months and Gromyko is in. This may be difficult to interpret, but the philosopher Hume once remarked..very truly.. "Of all sciences, there is none where first appearances are more deceitful than in politics."

Goodnight and good luck!

Collingwood for Murrow Mon., Feb. 18, 1957

Good evening:

President Eisenhower will cut short his Georgia vacation and fly back to Washington tomorrow because of the troubled Middle East situation. News Secretary Hagerty says the President wants to be in Washington when the United Nations General Assembly resumes debate on Israel's failure to withdraw from the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Reports that Mr. Eisenhower plans to address the General Assembly, he says, are "definitely not correct." The President is due to arrive in Washington around 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, Eastern Standard Time. And almost immediately he will go into a conference with Secretary of State Dulles. Mr. Eisenhower has asked Republican and Democratic leaders of Congress to meet with him at the White House on Wednesday.

The Israeli ambassador to the United States, Abba Eban, will fly home tomorrow for consultations. Israeli officials say Eban will make a full report on his talks over the week-end with Secretary Dulles... and that he will be away about a week. Last Monday, Mr. Dulles assured Israel that if it would first withdraw its forces in compliance with United Nations resolutions, the United States would then support the principle of free navigation in the Gulf of Aqaba and seek through the use of U.N. troops or observers to keep Egypt from using Gaza as a military base. In his talks with Dulles, Eban asked for a more definite commitment. This was refused, and President Eisenhower again called on Israel yesterday to pull back its forces. The United States, he said, has provided Israel with the "maximum assurance" it can reasonably expect at this time.

—>

The United States ambassador to Israel, Edward Lawson, conferred in Jerusalem today with Prime Minister Ben Gurion. The meeting was held at the request of Ben Gurion. And the Israeli prime minister is said to have raised "several points for a new approach to the problem." The "points" were not announced.

Meantime, in the United Nations, there were mounting Arab demands for sanctions against Israel. The General Assembly is due to meet tomorrow forenoon.

The debate on the President's Middle East Resolution, due to get ~~In Congress today, the Senate began debating President Eisenhower's~~ underway today, was postponed until tomorrow when the new Middle East policy. The first speech was made by Democratic Senator Senate got tied up on an appropriations bill —> when it does start, ~~Green of Rhode Island, the~~ chairman of the foreign relations committee. Green ~~urged approval of the President's resolution~~ which, he said, states "in ~~no uncertain terms" this country's determination to counter any open~~ ~~Communist~~ aggression in the Middle ~~East. The venerable senator from~~ Chairman Green of the Senate Fgn Relations Comm ~~Rhode Island~~ indicated that more amendments will be offered. The Senate, ~~he declared,~~ is no more "rubber stamp". Democratic Leader Johnson thinks that Senate debate on the resolution will run about two weeks. Both he and Republican Leader Knowland predict that it will be approved by a substantial majority. Knowland guesses that it will pass by a margin of better than 2 to 1.

In Moscow tonight, there was another of those Kremlin receptions---this time for a visiting delegation from Bulgaria. And again Communist Party boss Khrushchev had words of praise for Stalin. Stalin, he said, was "a great Communist, a great defender of the Marxist line." Khrushchev also said that the new Soviet foreign minister, Andrei Gromyko, will follow the policies laid down by Dimitri Shepilov, whom he succeeded last week. Khrushchev put it this way---"Mr. Gromyko will translate into reality Mr. Shepilov's policy, because the policy does not depend on the man but on the government."

Here in New York today... Jack Soble, one of the three alleged Russian spies, collapsed in his jail cell and was transferred to Bellevue Hospital for phychiatric examination. It was reported that he had been acting "peculiarly" for several days. He and his wife, Myra Soble, and Jacob Albam were indicted on espionage charges on February fourth.

A federal grand jury in Washington today indicted playwright Arthur Miller on charges of contempt of Congress. The charges stem from Miller's refusal last June to give the House Un-American Activities Committee the names of Communist writers with whom he attended meetings in 1947. He denied ever having been a Communist himself and said his conscience would not allow him to implicate others. Miller (who is doubly famous as the husband of Marilyn Monroe) was indicted on two counts. If convicted, he would face a possible maximum penalty of two years in prison and a 2-thousand-dollar fine.

The same grand jury indicted Dr. Otto Nathan of New York on four counts of contempt of Congress. Dr. Nathan is executor of the Albert Einstein estate. Last year, he refused to tell the House Un-American Activities Committee whether he was ever a member of the Communist Party... or whether an affidavit he filed in connection with a passport application in 1953 was true or false. He swore in the affidavit he had never been a Communist. Nathan said today that he would regard it "an honor and a duty" to fight the indictment.

The president of the National Guard Association... Major General Ellard Walsh... testified today against the Administration program that calls for six months basic training for enlistees in the National Guard. Walsh told a House armed services subcommittee that if the plan goes through as scheduled on April first, the guard will lose a hundred thousand men in twp years. "If our alleged friends in the Pentagon have their way," he said, "then in truth we shall have had the kiss of death placed upon us." Walsh again attacked Secretary Wilson's recent statement that the National Guard was used by some during the Korean War as a draft-dodging device. General Wash called it an "extremely serious, slanderous and irresponsible remark", for which no evidence has been produced.

The House Veterans Committee has rejected the Administration proposal for raising interest rates on GI home loans. An amendment to increase the interest rate from four and a half to five percent was defeated by a vote of 11 to 5. The amendment was proposed by Republican Representative Adair of Indiana, in line with Administration policy for making more loans available in the "tight money" market.

~~Over in the Senate, the constitutional rights subcommittee (which has~~ ~~been hearing testimony on the Administration civil rights program) voted today to wind up its hearings on March 5th.~~

The East Coast dock strike is due to continue at least another day, even though the International Longshoremen's Association and the shippers reached agreement last night on a three-year contract. Dock workers and shippers in Philadelphia are deadlocked on local issues, and the union says it will stay out until the Philadelphia snarl is settled.

Governor Blair of Missouri has ordered an extensive investigation of the fire which claimed 70 lives in the nursing home in Warrenton, Missouri, last night. A spokesman for the Health Service in Washington says the tragedy would never have occurred if the building had been fire-proofed under the standards set by federal law. Twenty-six bodies have now been recovered.

think 18 February 1957

Its a characteristic of human psychology that one's own troubles always seem worse than the other fellows. That's the point of the old proverb that "The grass always looks greener on the other side of the fence." ~~Of course, it isn't always, but from our side of the fence, where we get to know every blade of grass and bare spot, the pasture across the way tends to look singularly trouble free and vigorous. This defect of vision applies to nations as well as grazing land.~~

Lately, we in this country have been much pre-occupied with our difficulties and deficiencies. The recent weakness of the stock market and the rash of statements, both reassuring and forebpding, from Washington have focussed attention on our economic situation. In foreign affairs we're up to our ears in trouble in the Middle East, the Atlantic Alliance is straining at the seams, and problems multiply in ~~may~~ another place around the world. ~~Our domestic politics are not as smooth as they were for awhile either. The Democrats -- the opposition party -- are opposing more vigorously than they did in Eisenhower's first term, and now that the President is in his final term, the Republicans are less cohesive than they used to be.~~

In contrast to this, various well-informed persons have been pointing out elements of the Soviet picture which seem lush and green in comparison... Russian science is progressing by leaps and bounds. The Russian educational system is turning out masses of technically trained personel. Soviet diplomacy has been frighteningly successful in the Middle East. And Russian industrial production continues to make strides.

But, as often happens when you take a really good look at the grass on the other side of the fence, the Russians are having their troubles, too.... The Soviet Communist Party's Central Committee had an important meeting last week and from even the public announcements which have come in its wake its obvious that the Russians are having difficulty coping with their problems on a number of fronts. The most spectacular dvelopment,of course, was the replacement of Foreign Minister Shepilov by Andrei Gromyko. Now Kruschev said today that this won't make any difference to Russian foreign policy, and he's probably right -- Russian foreign policy, like American foreign policy tends to follow the same general pattern, no matter who is running the shop -- but a change in high level personel is usually a sign that something isn't going as it should. Some experts say that Shepilov is going to take over the party line department, others suggest he may be charged with straightening out bureaucratic tangles. Certainly both areas must be of rather desperate concern to the Soviet chieftains. Ideologically, Communism has not yet recovered from the de-Stalinisation campaign, let alone the revolt in Hungary. And Bureaucratically there are plenty of signs that Russian economic and governmental affairs are being hamstrung by administrative duplication and inefficiency. One of the main results of the recently completed Central Committee session in Moscow is a streamlining of the whole economic structure.

On the broad economic front, the Russians are having their problems, too -- and, by every indication, much graver ones than we. Its officially announced that Russian industrial production will grow by only 7 percent this year. According to Harry Schwartz, the Russian expert of the New York Times, that probably means 5 percent, making allowances for Soviet statistical exagerration. This compares with an increase in the United States gross national product last year of 5½%, and Russia, still comparatively undeveloped industrially, figures to increase at a greater rate than our own economy. The current Russian five year plan has had to be drastically revised. There are a number of reasons for this. One is the tremendous burden Russia has had to assume in propping up the economies of her restive satellites. Another is the growing popular demand for better housing and more consumer goods. Another is just plain economic miscalculation. In any event, there are plenty of signs that the Soviet economic planners are having their difficulties.

None of this adds up to a crisis in Russian affairs, or forecasts a disaster, or anything like that.... It just shows that they are having their troubles, too... and that, if you look over the fence closely enough, the grass on the other side may turn out to have no more chlorophyl in it than your own.

I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOT NOTE TO THE NEWS

BUT FIRST, HERE IS Stuart Metz.

FOOTNOTE

The Queen of England got a rousing reception in Portugal today. A million people turned out to cheer. ten thousand white doves were released as she approached and every honor was paid. But one thing puzzled the Queen. Everywhere she looked there was a bed spread hanging from the window... B~~edspreads by the thousa~~nd. "Does everyone in Lisbon wash their bedspreads on Monday?" she asked, like a good housewife. The answer was that the display of bedspreads is a mark of respect in Portugal.

THIS IS C.C.

SEE YOU TOMORROW

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Eveving:

President Eisenhower will cut short his Georgia vacation and fly back to Washington tomorrow because of the troubled Middle East situation. News Secretary Hagerty says the President wants to be in Washington when the United Nations General Assembly resumes debate on Israel's failure to withdraw from the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Reports that Mr. Eisenhower plans to address the General Assembly, he says, are "definitely not correct." The President is due to arrive in Washington around 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, Eastern Standard Time. And almost immediately he will go into a conference with Secretary of State Dulles. Mr. Eisenhower has asked Republican and Democratic leaders of Congress to meet with him at the White House on Wednesday.

The Israeli Ambassador to the United States, Abba Eban, will fly home tomorrow for consultations. Israeli officials say Eban will make a full report on his talks over the week - end with Secretary Dulles and that he will be away about a week. Last monday, Mr. Dulles assured Israel that if it would first withdraw its forces in compliance with United Nations resolutions, the United States would then support the principles of free navigation in the Gulf of Aqaba and seek through the use of U.N. troops or observers to keep Egypt from using Gaza as a military base. In his talks with Dulles, Eban asked for a more definite commitment. This was refused, and President Eisenhower again called on Israel yesterday to pull back its forces. The United States, he said, has provided Israel with the "maximum assurance" it can reasonably expect at this time.

The United States ambassador to Israel, Edward Lawson, conferred in Jerusalem today with Prime Minister Ben Gurion. The meeting was held at the request of Ben Gurion. And the Israeli prime minister is said to have raised "several points for a new approach to the problem." The "points" were not announced.

Meantime, in the United Nations, there were mounting Arab demands for sanctions against Israel. The General Assembly is due to meet tomorrow forenoon.

The debate on the President's Middle East resolution, due to get underway today, was postponed until tomorrow when the Senate got tied up in an appropriations bill. When it does start, Chairman Green of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee indicated that more amendments will be offered. The Senate is no mere "rubber stamp." Democratic Leader Johnson thinks that Senate debate on the resolution will run about two weeks. Both he and Republican Leader Knowland predict that it will be approved by a substantial majority. Knowland guesses that it will pass by a margin of better than 2 to 1.

In Moscow tonight, there was another of those Kremlin receptions -- this time for a visiting delegation from Bulgaria. And again Communist Party Boss Khrushchev had words of praise for Stalin. Stalin, he said, was " a great Communist, a great defender of the Marxist line." Khrushchev also said that the new Soviet foreign minister, Andrei Gromyko, will follow the policies laid down by Dimitri Shepilov, whom he succeeded last week. Khrushchev put it this way -- "Mr. Gromyko will tanslate into reality Mr. Shepilov's policy, because the policy does not depend on the man but on the government."

Here in New York today..Jack Soble, one of the three alleged Russian spies, collapsed in his jail cell and was transferred to Bellvue Hospital for pshychiatric examination. It was reported that he had been acting "peculiarly" for several days. He and his wife, Myra Soble, and Jacob Albam were indicted on espionage charges on February fourth.

A federal grand jury in Washington today indicted playwright Arthur Miller on charges of contempt of Congress. The charges stem from Miller's refusal last June to give the House Un-American Activities Committee the names of Communist writers with whom he attended meetings in 1947. He denied ever having been a Communist himself and said his conscience would not allow him to implicate others. Miller (who is doubly famous as the husband of Marilyn Monroe) was indicted on two counts. If convicted, he would face a possible maximum penalty of two years in prison and a two thousand - dollar fine.

The same grand jury indicted Dr. Otto Nathan of New York on four counts of contempt of Congress. Dr. Nathan is executor of the Albert Einstein estate. Last year, he refused to tell the House Un-American Activities Committee whether he was ever a member of the Communist Party...or whether an affidavit he filed in connection with a passport application in 1953 was true or false. He swore in the affidavit he had never been a Communist. Nathan said today that he would regard it "an honor and a duty" to fight the indictment.

The President of the National Guard Association..Major General Ellard Walsh..testified today against the Administration program that calls for six months basic training for enlistees in the National Guard. Walsh told a House armed services subcommittee that if the plan goes through as scheduled on April first, the guard will lose a hundred thousand men in two years. "If our alleged friends in the Pentagon have their way, " he said, "then in truth we shall have had the kiss of death placed upon us." Walsh again attacked Secretary Wilson's recent statement that the National Guard was used by some during the Korean War as a draft-dodging device. General Walsh called it an "extremly serious , slanderous and irresponsible remark", for which no evidence has been produced.

The House Veterans Committee has rejected the Administration proposal for raising interest rates on GI home loans. An amendment to increase the interest rate from four and a half to five percent was defeated by the vote of 11 to 5.

The amendment was proposed by Republican Representative Adair of Indiana, in line with Administration policy for making more loans available in the "tight money" market.

The East Coast dock strike is due to continue at least another day, even though the International Longshoremen's Association and the shippers reached agreement last night on a three - year contract. Dock workers and shippers in Philadelphia are deadlocked on local issues and the union says it will stay out until the Philadelplia snarl is settled.

Governor Blair of Missouri has ordered an extensive investigation of the fire which claimed 70 lives in the nursing home in Warrenton, Missouri, last night. A spokesman for the Health Service in Washington says the tragedy would never have occurred if the buildings had been fire-proofed under the standards set by federal law. Twenty-six bodies have now been recovered.

Its a characteristic of human psychology that one's own troubles always seem worse than the other fellows. That's the point of the old proverb that "The grass always looks greener on the other side of the fence."

Lately, we in this country have been much pre-occupied with our difficulties and deficiencies. The recent weakness of the stock market and the rash of statements, both reassuring and foreboding, from Washington have focussed attention on our economic situation. In foreign affairs we're up to our ears in trouble in the Middle East, the Atlantic Alliance is straining at the seams, and problems multiply in many another place around the world.

In contrast to this, various well - informed persons have been pointing out elements of the Soviet picture which seem lush and green in comparison. Russian science is progressing by leaps and bounds. The Russian educational system is turning out masses of technically trained personel. Soviet diplomacy has been frighteningly successful in the Middle East. And Russian industrial production continues to make strides.

But as often happens when you take a really good look at the grass on the other side of the fence, the Russians are having their troubles, too. The Soviet Communist Party's Central Committee had an important meeting last week and from even the public announcements which have come in its wake its obvious that the Russians are having difficulty coping with their problems on a number of fronts. The most spectacular development, of course, was the replacement of Foreign Minister Shepilov by Andrei Gromyko. Now Khrushchev said today that this won't make any difference to Russian foreign policy, and he's probably right. Russian foreign policy, like American foreign policy tends to follow the same general pattern, no matter who is running the shop -- but a change in high level personel is usually a sign that something isn't going as it should. Some experts say that Shepilov is going to take over the party line department, others suggest he may be charged with straightening out bureaucratic tangles. Certainly both areas must be of rather desperate concern to the Soviet chieftains. Ideologically, Communism has not yet recovered from the de-Stalinisation campaign, let alone the revolt in Hungary. And bureaucratically there are plenty of signs that Russian economic and governmental affairs are being hamstrung by the administrative duplication and inefficiency. One of the main results of the recently completed Central Committee session in Moscow is a streamlining of whe whole economic structure.

On the broad economic front, the Russians are having their problems too -- and, by every indication, much graver ones than we. Its officially announced that Russian industrial production will grow by only 7 percent this year. According to Harry Schwartz, the Russian expert of the New York Times, that probably means 5 percent, making allowances for Soviet statictical exagarration. This compares with an increase in the United States gross national produc last year of 5½%, and Russia, still comparatively undeveloped industrially, figures to increase at a greater rate than our own economy. The current Russian five year plan has had to be drastically revised. There are a number of reasons for this. One is the tremendous burden Russia has had to assume in propping up the economies of her restive satellites. Another is the growing popular demand for better housing and more consumer goods. Another is just plain economic miscalculation. In any event, there are plenty of signs that the Soviet economic planners are having their difficulties.

None of this adds up to a crisis in Russian affairs, or forecasts a disaster, or anything like that. It just shows that they are having their troubles too and that, if you look over the fence closely enough, the grass on the other side may turn out to have no more chlorophyl in it than your own.

Ill be back in a moment with a foot note to the news. But first, here is Stuart Metz.

METZ:

COLLINGWOOD: The Queen of England got a rousing reception in Portugal today. A million people turned out to cheer. Ten thousand white doves were released as she approached and every honor was paid. But one thing puzzled the Queen. Everywhere whe looked there was a bed spread hanging from the window. "Does everyone in Lisbon wash their bedspreads on Monday?" she asked like a good housewife. The answer was that the display of bedspreads is a mark of respect in Portugal.

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Collingwood for Murrow Tues., Feb. 19, 1957

Good evening:

President Eisenhower flew back to Washington today from his Georgia vacation and immediately went into conference with Secretary of State Dulles on the tense Middle East situation. Their talk lasted about an hour and no details were divulged. Tomorrow morning, Mr. Eisenhower will meet at the White House with the congressional leaders of both parties. Mr. Dulles told his news conference today that after this meeting the United States may have new proposals to make in the U.N. He said the question of sanctions against Israel... for its refusal to withdraw without security guarantees from the Gulf of Aqaba region and the Gaza Strip... will be taken up at tomorrow's White House session. Both Senate Democratic Leader Johnson and Republican Leader Knowland have declared their opposition to sanctions against Israel. And this afternoon the Democratic policy committee in the Senate took the same stand.

→

At his news conference, Mr. Dulles refused to say whether he favors sanctions against Israel, should it persist in its refusal to withdraw unconditionally. He did say that if the United States sent a ship through the Gulf of Aqaba, he would not expect Egypt to try to stop it. And Israel, he said, would have the same right of innocent passage through the gulf, once it withdrew its forces. Dulles conceded he has no definite assurance that Egypt shares this view. Nor, he said, can he give Israel a firm guarantee of free passage. To do that, Congress would first have to give President Eisenhower authority to defend ships flying a foreign flag.

At the behest of the United States, the U.N. General Assembly has postponed its debate of the Israeli issue until Thursday. The debate had been scheduled to get underway today. The foreign minister of Lebanon, Charles Malik, said today that the Afro-Asian bloc in the United Nations will formally demand sanctions on Thursday, unless Israel completes its withdrawal from Egypt by that date. Malik made the statement to reporters in Washington, after calling at the State Department.

Russia has cancelled an 18-million-dollar trade agreement with Israel, because of what Moscow called "Israel's aggressive actions against Egypt."

The cancellation was announced in Tel Aviv tonight by the Israeli foreign office. Under the agreement, Israel would have exchanged oranges for Russian oil.

The Israeli cabinet will meet tomorrow to discuss possible next steps IN THE MIDDLE EAST CRISIS. And the Israeli ambassador to the United States, Abba Eban, is flying home tonight for consultations with his government.

Reports from the United Nations say that Secretary General Hammarskjold is sending one of his top aides to Egypt, to check on whether President Nasser is deliberately delaying clearance of the Suez Canal. Secretary Dulles told his news conference today that he would "deplore very much" any Egyptian non-compliance with the U.N. resolution of November 2nd, calling for reopening of the canal as soon as possible after the cessation of hostilities. Egypt has been reported holding up clearance of the canal as a means of forcing an Israeli troop withdrawal.

~~According to London sources~~ The majority of countries using the Suez Canal have agreed on an interim plan for operating it until a full international arrangement is reached. The money collected from canal tolls would go to the World Bank. Half the mpney would be credited to Egypt; the rest would be disposed of in a final settlement. Russia is not a party to this plan. And there is no indication that it will be acceptable to Egypt.

Today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon, a political refugee from Syria was assassinated. The victim was Ghassan Jedid, a former army officer accused of plotting the overthrow of the pro-Soviet Syrian government. Police killed the assassin on the spot. It's an incident not likely to improve relations between Syria and Lebanon, which already are strained.

In Congress today, the Senate opened what is expected to be a two-week debate on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. Democratic Leader Johnson urged the Senate to adopt the resolution as "a clear warning to Communist aggressors to keep out of the Middle East." Democratic Senator Douglas of Illinois offered an amendment. Under it, any Middle East country receiving American aid would have to pledge itself not to undertake any aggression of its own. "A number" of these states, Douglas said, have declared their "belligerent intent."

Soviet Premier Bulganin made a speech today accusing the United States of what he called "insane plans for world domination." The Eisenhower doctrine, Bulganin said, is "a colonial trap prepared by the American oil monopolies". And he warned that all this might lead to a hydrogen war."

The British defense ministry announced today that for the first time it will have a guided missiles regiment... an army unit made up entirely of officers and men trained in the use of modern weapons capable of mounting atomic warheads. At the same time, it was announced that the Conservative government is cutting down on the amount of money spent for social services, including public health.

Still another important announcement was made today in Paris. A Dutch spokesman said that the prime ministers of six West European countries... meeting in Paris... have agreed on conditions for a common market. It is not clear whether they have agreed on all the conditions---probably not. But the spokesman said they did agree today on the crucial question of how to include African territories in the common market area.

In Washington today, the Senate cited four officials of the International Teamsters Union for contempt of Congress. Citations were voted unanimously against Einar Mohn and Frank Brewster, both vice presidents, and two lesser officials---Nugent La Poma of Seattle and Harry Reiss of New York. The citations now go to the Justice Department for further investigation and possible prosecution. Last month, all four officers refused to answer questions put to them by the Senate investigations subcommittee on grounds it lacked jurisdiction to look into internal union matters. The inquiry has since been taken over by a special committee with specific jurisdiction in the field of organized labor and industry.

Collingwood for Murrow

think collingwood 19 February 1957

No one who works in the news business should be surprised at the fleeting interest the public displays in any situation. Most reporters aren't, which is one reason they have a reputation for being cynical. To most people the news is made up of one day sensations and a reporter soon learns that what seem to be the most violent passions and deepest-felt emotions attaching to [redacted] an event seldom last very long. [redacted]

Nevertheless, the speed with which the fires of concern die down sometimes amazes even a reporter who has seen it happen so many times before. A case in point is the plight of the Hungarian refugees who fled their country to what they thought was a bright new life of freedom. Few things so mobilized the sympathies of the world as the gallant, hopeless struggle of the Hungarians against their communist government. And when 200 thousand of them [redacted] crossed the border and came out, they were met with a great wave of sympathy and a fervid and frequently stated resolve that a place would be found for them and that life indeed would be better than what they left. Th[redacted]ion red ta[redacted] the

(return to H. Calden - ER Murrow office)

[redacted]

The exodus from Hungary began in November. It is now February. Of the 170 thousand who escaped to Austria [redacted] 60 thousand are still there... in camps ... trying to get out... an increasingly heavy burden on little Austria which is still harboring 114 thousand refugees left over from World War II. But the Hungarians who fled to Austria are the luckiest. Two thirds of them have been settled. The United States has taken 26 thousand, Britain has taken 16 thousand, and smaller countries smaller numbers. At least the 60thousand remaining have hope that they will find a home.

17 thousand Hungarians escaped to Yugoslavia and they don't even have hope. The only place any of them have got to from Yugoslavia is back to Hungary. They are going back across the border to the land they left at the rate of 700 a week. This is not because the Yugoslavs have changed their attitude, they are taking care of them as well as they can, but there is nowhere for them to go. No country has taken any of the refugees from Yugoslavia. There's only one camp in Yugoslavia that the refugees could be put in. It holds a thousand people. The other 16 thousand are in hotel rooms with the government paying the bill, the government would like to have its hotel rooms back for the hoped-for tourist influx this spring, but the United Nations refugee authorities say the Hungarians aren't being pressed to leave, its just that after awhile they get the idea that no one wants them and so they start the dreary trek back home. Its not a pretty picture and its a gloomy contrast not only to all the hopes they had, but to the great outpouring of world sympathy and support which greeted the Hungarians when they sought freedom.

But it must be an old story to the United Nations High Commission for refugees. Besides the Hungarians they are looking after 250 thousand refugees from World War II, and several thousand more who have fled Egypt have been added to the rolls. It makes a total of 455 thound, most of whom have been homeless for more than 10 years. The U.N. Refugee Commission tries to take care of them on a yearly budget of 3 million dollars. A separate U.N. organisation cares for 900 thousand Arab refugees from the Palestine War of 1948. In India and Pakistan there are millions more who have been uprooted from their homes, but they don't meet the U.N.'s technical requirements for refugeeship.

It all adds up to a terrible burden of human suffering... This happens to be Brotherhood Week and those who mark it might reflect on a remark of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees who said " It would be wonderful if there were no more refugees in the world."

~~XTMISXISXGXGX~~

I'~~LL BE~~ BACK IN A MOMENT WITH A FOOT~~NOTE TO~~ THE NEWS

BUT FIRST, ~~HERE IS GEORGE BRYAN~~

FOOTNOTE

The inexorable march of the machine is removing man's four-footed friends from the military scene. First the Army dispensed with the mule, only the other day they wanted to do away with the horses who draw the hearse in military funerals, and now it is the dog. The Army maintains 950 dogs, on scout and sentry duty, at home and overseas. Now, as an economy move, it is proposed to replace them with men or machines. They say it costs 8 thousand dollars to train an army dog.

THIS IS C.C

SEE YOU TOMORROW.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good evening:

President Eisenhower flew back to Washington today from his Georgia vacation and immediately went into conference with Secretary of State Dulles on the tense Middle East situation. Their talk lasted about an hour and no details were divulged. Tomorrow morning, Mr. Eisenhower will meet at the White House with the congressional leaders of both parties. Mr. Dulles told his news conference today that after this meeting the United States may have new proposals to make in the U.N. He said the question of sanctions against Israel..for its refusal to withdraw without security guarantees from the Gulf of Aqaba region and the Gaza Strip..will be taken up at tomorrow's White House session. Both Senate Democratic Leader Johnson and Republican Leader Knowland have declared their opposition to sanctions against Israel. And this afternoon the Democratic policy committee in the Senate took the same stand. At his news conference, Mr. Dulles refused to say whether he favors sanctions against Israel, should it persist in its refusal to withdraw unconditionally. He did say that if the United States sent a ship through the Gulf of Aqaba, he would not expect Egypt to try to stop it. And Israel, he said, would have the same right of innocent passage through the gulf, once it withdrew its forces. Dulles conceded he has no definite assurance that Eyypt shares this view. Nor, he said, can he give Israel a firm guarantee of free passage. To do that, Congress would first have to give President Eisenhower authority to defend ships flying a foreign flag.

At the behest of the United States, the U.N. General Assembly has postponed its debate of the Israeli issue until Thursday. The debate had been scheduled to get underway today. The foreign minister of Lebanon, Charles Malik, said today that the Afro-Asian bloc in the United Nations will formally demand sanctions on Thursday, unless Israel completes its withdrawal from Egypt by that date. Malik made the statement to reporters in Washington, after calling at the State Department.

Russia has cancelled an 18-million - dollar trade agreement with Israel, because of what Moscow called "Israel's aggressive actions against Egypt." The cancellation was announced in Tel Aviv tonight by the Israeli foreign office. Under the agreement, Israel would have exchanged oranges for Russian oil.

The Israel cabinet will meet tomorrow to discuss possible next steps in the Middle East crisis. And the Israeli ambassador to the United States, Abba Eban, is flying home tonight for consultations with his government.

Reports from the United Nations say that Secretary General Hammarskjold is sending one of his top aides to Egypt, to check on whether President Nasser is deliberately delaying clearance of the Suez Canal. Secretary Dulles told his news conference today that he would "deplore very much " any Egyptian non-compliance with the U.N. resolution of November 2nd, calling for reopening of the canal as soon as possible after the cessation of hostilities. Egypt has been reported holding up clearance of the canal as a means of forcing an Israeli troop withdrawal.

The majority of countries using the Suez Canal have agreed on an interim plan for operating it until a full international arrangement is reached. The money collected from canal tolls would go to the World Bank. Half the money would be credited to Egypt; the rest woudd be disposed of in a final settlement. Russia is not a party to this plan. And there is no indication that it will be acceptable to Egypt.

Today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon, a political refugee from Syria was assassinated. The victim was Ghassan Jedid, a former army officer accused of plotting the overthrow of the pro-Soviet Syrian government. Police killed the assassin on the spot. It's an incident not likely to improve relations between Syrian and Lebanon, which already are strained.

In Congress today, The Senate opened what is expected to be a two-week debate on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. Democratic Leader Johnson urged the Senate to adopt the resolution as "a clear warning to Communist aggressors to keep out of the Middle East." Democratic Senator Douglas of Illinois offered an amendment. Under it, any Middle East country receiving American aid would have to pledge itself not to undertake any aggression of its own. "A number" of these states, Douglas said, have declared their "belligerant intent."

Soviet Premier Bulganin made a speech today accusing the United States of what he called "insane plans for world domination." The Eisenhower doctrine, Bulganin said, is "a colonial trap prepared by the American oil monopolies." And he warned that all this might lead to a hydrogen war."

The British defense ministry announced today that for the first time it will have a guided missiles regiment,an army unit made up entirely of officers and men trained in the use of modern weapons capable of mounting atomic warheads. At the same time, it was announced that the Conservative government is cutting down on the amount of money spen . for social services, including public health.

Still another important announcement was made today in Paris. A Dutch spokesman said that the prime ministers of six West European countries..meeting in Paris..have agreed on condiditions for a common market. It is not clear whether they have agreed on all the conditions -- probably not. But the spokesman man said they did agree today on all the crudial . question of how to include African territories in the common market.

In Washington today, the Senate cited four officials of the International Teamsters Union for contempt of Congress. Citations were voted unanimously against Einar Mohn and Frank Brewster, both vice presidents, and two lesser officials -- Nugent La Poma of Seattle and Harry Reiss of New York. The citations now go to the Justice Department for further investigation and possible prosecution. Last month, all four officers refused to answer questions put to them by the Senate investigations subcommittee on grounds it lacked jurisdiction to look into internal union matters. The inquiry has since been taken over by a special committee with specific jurisdiction in the field of organized labor and industry.

No one who works in the news business should be surprised at the fleeting interest the public displays in any situation. Most reporters aren't, which is one reason they have a reputation for being cynical. To most people the news is made up of one day sensations and a reporter soon learns that what seem to be the most violent passions and deepest-felt emotions attaching to an event seldom last very long.

Nevertheless, the speed with which the fires of concern die down sometimes amazes even a reporter who has seen it happen so many times before. A case in point is the plight of the Hungarian refugees who fled their country to what they thought was a bright new life of freedom. Few things so mobilized the sympathies of the world as the gallant, hopeless struggle of the Hungarians against their communist government. And when 200-thousand of them crossed the border and came out, they were met with a great wave of sympathy and a fervid and frequently stated resolve that a place would be found for them and that life indeed would be better than what they left.

The exodus from Hungary began in November. It is now February. Of the 170 thousand who escaped to Austria, 60 thousand are still there..in camps... trying to get out..an increasingly heavy burden on little Austria which is still harboring 114 thousand refugees left over from World War II. But the Hungarians who fled to Austria are the luckiest. Two thirds of them have been settled. The United States has taken 26 thousand, Britain has taken 16 thousand, and smaller countries smaller numbers. At least the 60 thousand remaining have hope that they will find a home.

17 thousand Hungarians escaped to Yugoslavia and they don't even have hope. The only place any of them have got to from Yugoslavia is back to Hungary. They are going back across the border to the land they left at the rate of 700 a week. This is not because the Yugoslavs have changed their attitude, they are taking care of them as well as they can, but there is no where for them to go. No country has taken any of the refugees from Yugoslavia. There's only one camp in Yugoslavia that the refugees could be put in. It holds a thousand people The other 16 theusand are in hotel rooms with the government paying the bill; the government would like to have its hotel rooms back for the hoped - for tourist influx this spring, but the United Nations refugee authorities say the Hungarians aren't being pressed to leave, its just that after awhile they get the idea that no one wants them and so they start the dreary trek back home. Its not a pretty picture and its a gloomy contrast not only to all the hopes they had, but to the great outpouring of world sympathy and support which greeted the Hungarians when they sought freedom.

But it must be an old story to the United Nations High Commission for refugees. Besides the Hungarians, they are looking after 250 thousand refugees from World War II, and several thousand more who have fled Egypt have been added to the rolls. It makes a total of 455 thousand, most of whom have been homeless for more than 10 years. The U.N. Refugee Commission tries to take care of them on a yearly budget of 3 million dollars. A separate U.N. organisation cares for 900 thousand Arab refugees from the Palestine War of 1948. In India and Pakistan there are millions more who have been uprooted from their homes, but they don't meet the U.N.'s technical requirements for refugeeship.

It all adds up to a terrible burden of human suffering. This happens to be Brotherhood Week, and those who mark it might reflect on a remark of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees who said "It would be wonderful if there were no more refugees in the world."

I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the News. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: The inexorable march of the machine is removing man's four-footed friends from the military scene. First the Army dispensed with the mule. Only the other day they wanted to do away with the horses who draw the hearse in military funerals, and now it is the dog. The army maintains 950 dogs on scout and sentry duty, at home and oversees. Now, as an economy move, it is proposed to replace them with men or machines. They say it costs 8 thousand dollars to train an army dog.

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Collingwood for Murrow Wed., Feb. 20, 1957

Good evening:

In a little more than an hour from now, President Eisenhower will address the nation on the present situation in the Middle East. CBS Radio is carrying the speech at 9 p.m., Eastern Standard Time. News Secretary Hagerty announced the broadcast after a White House conference this morning with Democratic and Republican congressional leaders. The meeting with Mr. Eisenhower lasted nearly two and a half hours and was attended, in addition to the leaders of Congress, by Secretary of State Dulles and the American ambassador to the United Nations, Henry Cabot Lodge. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson described ~~[illegible]~~ it afterward as a constructive meeting. He said, "The president and the secretary of state discussed the facts. I do not presume to quote either, but certainly it is no secret that the situation is grave." Inevitably one of the subjects discussed was the question of sanctions against Israel, if Israel refuses to withdraw from the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba area without firm guarantees for its future security. Nearly every member of Congress who attended the White House meeting has gone on record as opposed to sanctions against Israel without invoking them against other countries like Russia, which ignored the United Nations resolution on Hungary. Senator Johnson says neither Secretary Dulles, nor the President, made any specific proposal on the subject of sanctions. Senate Republican Leader Knowland said the Administration stand regarding sanctions "is not formalized as of the moment." But House Speaker Rayburn said it was "pretty clear" the Administration doesn't think it could stop a United Nations vote for sanctions against Israel if it tried. Both Knowland and Rayburn said no final conclusions were reached. It was suggested that President Eisenhower is waiting for a possible compromise offer from Israel, before deciding on a definite course. An unconfirmed report says Mr. Eisenhower has sent Prime Minister Ben Gurion an urgent request to order the withdrawal of Israeli forces by tomorrow.

(more) //

In Jerusalem, a meeting of the Israeli cabinet scheduled for today has been postponed. The Israeli ambassador to the United States, Abba Eban, was expected to report to the cabinet today, but he has been delayed. The latest word was that his plane would not arrive before midnight, Jerusalem time. Prime Minister Ben Gurion is reported preparing a new policy statement, to be delivered to parliament tomorrow or Monday.

(more) 28

(more) 32

In Cairo today, President Nasser called an extraordinary meeting of his cabinet. An Egyptian spokesman said Israel, by refusing to withdraw from Gaza and the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba, had---in his words--"thwarted United Nations efforts and promoted aggression." World peace, he claimed, is threatened by certain imperialist countries trying to provide Israel with guarantees, in return for a withdrawal of its troops from Egyptian soil.

General assembly debate on the Israeli deadlock has been postponed again until Friday.

~~The United Nations general assembly will meet tomorrow to debate the Israeli deadlock.~~ Arab sources say Lebanon will present a resolution demanding sanctions against Israel. Senator Knowland, who is a member of the American delegation, proposed today that sanctions be imposed on all countries that defy United Nations resolutions. The United Press says that if the Administration accepts this proposal, it will be offered as a substitute for the one expected to be introduced ~~tomorrow~~ Friday against Israel alone, ~~demanding sanctions against Israel.~~

(more)

71

In the United Nations political committee today, the United States urged Britain and Greece to make "every effort" to resume negotiations looking toward a peaceful solution of the Cyprus dispute. ~~[illegible]~~ In the Security Council, India's Krishna Menon accused Pakistan of ~~[illegible]~~ making warlike preparations. If Kashmir is invaded, he warned, India will resist. Menon was answering Pakistani charges that India "grabbed" the state of Kashmir, in defiance of a Security Council order for a plebiscite. He spoke for two hours, then collapsed. ~~[illegible]~~ Later, Menon returned to ~~[illegible]~~ the council chamber, looking pale but determined to go on with the debate. Russia vetoed a western resolution that would have authorized the council president to try to mediate the dispute on the scene.

The White House announced today that President Eisenhower's assistant news secretary, Murray Snyder, has been nominated to be assistant secretary of defense for public affairs. He succeeds Robert Tripp Ross, who resigned last week under fire. A Senate committee had been questioning him about military contracts awarded firms in which his wife and brother-in-law had a financial interest. The President has also nominated former Representative Dewey Short of Missouri to be an assistant secretary of the Army. For many years, Short was the senior Republican member of the House Armed Services Committee. ~~-More~~

(more)

~~-Ditz~~

69

Today in Congress the House approved an 80-million-dollar cut in the appropriations requested by President Eisenhower for running the Post Office and Treasury Departments in the next fiscal year. The slash in the Post Office budget was 58-million dollars, despite the warning of department officials that any such reduction would necessitate the laying off of 10-thousand postal employes.

The Federal Mediation Service announces that the East Coast dock strike will end tomorrow. Agreement was reached several days ago on a new three-year contract, but the International Longshoremen's Association ordered the walkout continued until local issues were settled in a number of ports, including Philadelphia, Baltimore and Norfolk. A settlement has still to be reached in Baltimore.

(more)

80

The Defense Department disclosed today that jet fighters... based in the United States... are now being equipped with nuclear rockets. These are the interceptor-type aircraft operating under the Air Defense Command.

In Moscow today, the Soviet news agency Tass announced the death of Vyacheslav Malyshev, one of Russia's top production experts. Malyshev is the "mystery patient" who was treated early this month by a West German specialist. The Moscow announcement says he died of a heart ailment.

An historic announcement today from Paris... that the prime ministers of six West European countries have agreed to merge their economies in a common market. The six countries are West Germany, Italy, Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg and France. They also agreed... in broad outline... to pool their atomic power for industrial purposes. Treaties will now be drafted for signature, probably around the middle of March.

~~Note---The script now totals ninety-four lines. This means we are overset by about eight lines. Will call you on phone. Regards~~

~~Bias~~

Tonight, Ed Murrow is in London. He wanted to see at first-hand the political and economic repercussions of Suez. And so last week-end, as Ed Murrow is frequently wont to do, he flew to Britain to find out. For his report, we switch now to London. / ~~Note--tape runs four minutes forty seconds and ends on the "goodnight and good luck." Switch to tape should come at seven thirty-two ten/~~ That was Ed Murrow's report from London on how Britain has reacted to the events of the past few months. In another day or two, he'll be coming home. This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. ~~/Pause/~~ Now here is George Bryan.

70

Footnote---When George Bernard Shaw died, he directed that the income from his estate be used to carry out his pet project---the simplification of the English alphabet. Today in London a British court found the project "impractical and invalid" and decreed that the fortune go instead to such august upholders of tradition as the National Gallery of Ireland and the British Museum. But true Shavians are undaunted. They're going to publish Shaw's plays in the simplified alphabet anyway, to demonstrate it can be done. This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

COLLINGWOOD: Tonight Ed Murrow is in London. He wanted to see, at first-hand, the political and economic repercussions of Suez; and, so, last weekend, as Ed Murrow is frequently wont to do, he flew to Britain to find out. For his report, we switch now to London.

MURROW: This is London. If the judgment of a three-day visitor has any validity, the mood of this country combines disillusionment and cynicism. There is a very considerable disposition on the part of government officials to admit, privately, that the Suez affair was not well-handled. But there is also a feeling that the durability of the Anglo-American Alliance has been called into question. Britain is prepared to play second fiddle to the United States, but still desires to play an occasional solo. There is recognition that the British lion has lost some of its teeth; that it can no longer afford to patrol vast areas of the world; and that its diet may have to be reduced. This state of affairs has produced a certain, rather hard-to-define sense of relief; a feeling that Britain tried a certain course in the Middle East; that the United States blew the whistle and, thereby, Uncle Sam inherited the chaos in that area.

The cynicism comes in the widespread belief that we don't know what to do about it. There is very little belief here that a workable relationship can be worked out with Col. Nasser, regarding the use of the Canal. When you ask people here what they think should be done in the Middle East, they're disposed to reply, in effect, by saying, "We had a try, you called us off, now you figure out what should be done." And they don't think we can find the answer.

Certainly they do not see the answer in the Eisenhower Doctrine, because they don't understand what it is. The best the British hope for from the Bermuda conference between President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan is some kind of restoration of personal confidence. Or, to put it another way, the British want to be heard in this alliance. They rather have the feeling that they have been doing a lot of listening recently, and much of what they have heard, they don't like. They recognize the power of the United States. They have fresh memories of their own power. And they're inclined to wish that we would use ours, which is another way of saying, that this government is troubled by Washington's disposition to turn everything over to the UN General Assembly.

As one official put it, "It isn't quite fair to equate Britain and Outer Mongolia, even if our power has been reduced." British reluctance to accept the judgments of the Assembly stems, not so much from that body's action over Suez; it is rather a belief that efforts to resolve issues of major importance in that fashion just won't work. Events are driving Britain into ever-closer relations with the continent of Europe. But this should not be regarded as an attempt to create a, so-called, "third force".

The majority of both Parties appear willing to base British policy upon the Anglo-American Alliance, at least for the time being. But it would be a mistake to assume that people in this country are primarily or exclusively concerned with world affairs, or a post-mortem on Suez. There are troubles ahead on the domestic front. More and more people of ability, wanting to go out to the Commonwealth countries; arguments about rent controls. For the first time since the end of the war, the concept of the Welfare Estate, fair shares for all, is coming under attack. This government is what would be called a businessman's government at home. It wants to create more incentives for business; wants to reduce taxes; also reduce the cost of the social services.

This will mean a series of moves that will be unpopular with the trade unions; and it will mean a sharpening of domestic, political controversy. Any retreat from the Welfare Estate will divide this country as sharply as did the handling of Suez. As one who spent nine years in this country, it is pleasing to report that personal and social relations have not been severely damaged by the controversy over Suez. The tolerance and the good manners remain. But the cynicism has increased. There is evident, in official and unofficial circles, some satisfaction that the United States is preparing to take an active part in Middle East affairs. But I can discover no opinion which holds that we will make a good job of it.

COLLINGWOOD: That was Ed Murrow's report from London on how Britain has reacted to the events of the last few months. In another day or two, he'll be coming home.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

COLLINGWOOD: Tonight Ed Murrow is in London. He wanted to see, at first-hand, the political and economic repercussions of Suez; and, so, last weekend, as Ed Murrow is frequently wont to do, he flew to Britain to find out. For his report, we switch now to London.

MURROW: This is London. If the judgment of a three-day visitor has any validity, the mood of this country combines disillusionment and cynicism. There is a very considerable disposition on the part of government officials to admit, privately, that the Suez affair was not well-handled. But there is also a feeling that the durability of the Anglo-American Alliance has been called into question. Britain is prepared to play second fiddle to the United States, but still desires to play an occasional solo. There is recognition that the British lion has lost some of its teeth; that it can no longer afford to patrol vast areas of the world; and that its diet may have to be reduced. This state of affairs has produced a certain, rather hard-to-define sense of relief; a feeling that Britain tried a certain course in the Middle East; that the United States blew the whistle and, thereby, Uncle Sam inherited the chaos in that area.

The cynicism comes in the widespread belief that we don't know what to do about it. There is very little belief here that a workable relationship can be worked out with Col. Nasser, regarding the use of the Canal. When you ask people here what they think should be done in the Middle East, they're disposed to reply, in effect, by saying, "We had a try, you called us off, now you figure out what should be done." And they don't think we can find the answer.

Certainly they do not see the answer in the Eisenhower Doctrine, because they don't understand what it is. The best the British hope for from the Bermuda conference between President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan is some kind of restoration of personal confidence. Or, to put it another way, the British want to be heard in this alliance. They rather have the feeling that they have been doing a lot of listening recently, and much of what they have heard, they don't like. They recognize the power of the United States. They have fresh memories of their own power. And they're inclined to wish that we would use ours, which is another way of saying, that this government is troubled by Washington's disposition to turn everything over to the UN General Assembly.

As one official put it, "It isn't quite fair to equate Britain and Outer Mongolia, even if our power has been reduced." British reluctance to accept the judgments of the Assembly stems, not so much from that body's action over Suez; it is rather a belief that efforts to resolve issues of major importance in that fashion just won't work. Events are driving Britain into ever-closer relations with the continent of Europe. But this should not be regarded as an attempt to create a, so-called, "third force".

The majority of both Parties appear willing to base British policy upon the Anglo-American Alliance, at least for the time being. But it would be a mistake to assume that people in this country are primarily or exclusively concerned with world affairs, or a post-mortem on Suez. There are troubles ahead on the domestic front. More and more people of ability, wanting to go out to the Commonwealth countries; arguments about rent controls. For the first time since the end of the war, the concept of the Welfare Estate, fair shares for all, is coming under attack. This government is what would be called a businessman's government at home. It wants to create more incentives for business; wants to reduce taxes; also reduce the cost of the social services.

This will mean a series of moves that will be unpopular with the trade unions; and it will mean a sharpening of domestic, political controversy. Any retreat from the Welfare Estate will divide this country as sharply as did the handling of Suez. As one who spent nine years in this country, it is pleasing to report that personal and social relations have not been severely damaged by the controversy over Suez. The tolerance and the good manners remain. But the cynicism has increased. There is evident, in official and unofficial circles, some satisfaction that the United States is preparing to take an active part in Middle East affairs. But I can discover no opinion which holds that we will make a good job of it.

COLLINGWOOD: That was Ed Murrow's report from London on how Britain has reacted to the events of the last few months. In another day or two, he'll be coming home.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Evening:

In a little more than an hour from now, President Eisenhower will address the nation on the present situation in the Middle East. CBS Radio is carrying the speech at 9 p.m. Eastern Standard Time. News Secretary Hagerty announced the broadcast after a White House conference this morning with Democratic and Republican congressional leaders. The meeting with Mr. Eisenhower lasted nearly two and a half hours and was attended, in addition to the leaders of Congress, by Secretary of State Dulles and the American ambassador to the United Nations, Henry Cabot Lodge. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson described it afterward as a constructive meeting. He said, "The President and the Secretary of State discussed the facts. I do not presume to quote either, but certainly it is no secret that the situation is grave." Inevitably one of the subjects discussed was the question of sanctions against Israel, if Israel refuses to withdraw from the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba area without firm guarantees for its future security. Nearly every member of Congress who attended the White House meeting has gone on record as opposed to sanctions against Israel without invoking them against other countries like Russia, which ignored the United Nations resolution on Hungary. Senator Johnson says neither Secretary Dulles nor the President, made any specific proposal on the subject of sanctions. Senate Republican Leader Knowland said the Administration stand regarding sanctions "is not formalized as of the moment." But House Speaker Rayburn said it was "pretty clear" the Administration doenn't think it could stop a United Nations vote for sanctions against Israel if it tried. Both Knowland and Rayburn said no final conclusions were reached. It was suggested that President Eisenhower is waiting for a possible compromise offer from Israel, before deciding on a definite course. An unconfirmed report says Mr. Eisenhower has sent Prime Minister Ben Gurion an urgent request to order the withdrawal of Israeli forces by tomorrow.

In Jerusalem, a meeting of the Israeli cabinet scheduled for today has been postponed. The Israeli ambassador to the United States, Abba Eban, was expected to report to the cabinet today, but he has been delayed. The latest word was that his plane would not arrive before midnight, Jerusalem time. Prime Minister Ben Gurion is reported preparing a new policy statement, to be delivered to parliament tomorrow or Monday.

In Cairo today, President Nasser called an extraordinary meeting of his cabinet. An Egyptian spokesman said Israel, by refusing to withdraw from Gaza and the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba, had -- in his words -- "thwarted United Nations efforts and promoted aggression." World peace, he claimed, is threatened by certain imperialist countries trying to provide Israel with guarantees, in return for a withdrawal of its troops from Egyptian soil.

General Assembly debate on the Israeli deadlock has been postponed again until Friday. Arab sources say Lebanon will present a resolution demanding sanctions against Israel. Senator Knowland, who is a member of the American delegation, proposed today that sanctions be imposed on all countries that defy United Nations resolutions. The United Press says that if the Administration accepts this proposal, it will be offered as a substitute for the one expected to be introduced Friday against Israel alone.

In the United Nations political committee today, the United States urged Britain and Greece to make "every effort" to resume negotiations looking toward a peaceful solution of the Cyprus dispute.

In the Security Council, India's Krishna Menon accused Pakistan of making warlike preparations. If Kashmir is invaded, he warned, India will resist. Menon was answering Pakistani charges that India "grabbed" the state of Kashmir, in defiance of a Security Council order for a plebiscite. He spoke for two hours, then collapsed. Later, Menon returned to the council chamber, looking pale but determined to go on with the debate. Russia vetoed a western resolution that would have authorized the council president to try to mediate the dispute on the scene.

The White House announced today that President Eisenhower's assistant news secretary, Murray Snyder, has been nominated to be assistant secretary of defense for public affairs. He succeeds Robert Tripp Ross, who resigned last week under fire. A Senate committee had been questioning his about military contracts awarded firms in which his wife and brother-in-law had a financial interest. The President has also nominated former Representative Dewey Short of Missouri to be an assistant secretary of the Army. For many years, Short was the senior Republican member of the House Armed Services Committee.

Today in Congress the House approved an 80-million dollar cut in the appropriations requested by President Eisenhower for running the Post Office and Treasury Department in the next fiscal year. The slash in the Post Office Budget was 58-million dollars, despite the warning of department officials that any such reduction would necessitate the laying off of 10-thousand postal employees.

The Federal Mediation Service announces that the East Coast dock strike will end tomorrow. Agreement was reached seceral days ago on a new three-year contract, but the International Longshoremen'sAssociation ordered the walkout continued until local issues were settled in a number of ports, including Philadelphia, Baltimore and Norfolk. A settlement is still to be reached in Baltimore.

The Defense Department disclosed today that jet fighters .. based in the United States..are now being equipped with nuclear rockets. These are the interceptor - type aircraft operating under the Air Defense Command.

In Moscow today, the Soviet news agency Tass announced the death of Vyacheslav Malyshev, one of Russia's top production expetts. Malyschev is the "mystery patient" who was treated early this month by a West German specialist. The Moscow announcement says he died of a heart ailment.

An historic announcement today from Paris..that the prime ministers of six West European countries have agreed to merge their economies in a common market. The six countries are West Germany, Italy, Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg and France. They also agreed..in broad outline..to pool their atomic power for industrial purposes. Treaties will now be drafted for signature, probably around the middle of March.

Tonight, Ed Murrww is in London. He wanted to see at first - hand the political and economic repercussions of Suez. And so last week-end, as Ed Murrow is frequently wont to do, he flew to Britain to find out. For his report, we switch now to London.

MURROW: This is London: If the judgement of a three day visitor has any validity, the mood of this country combines disillusionment and cynicism. There is a very considerable disposition on the part of government officials to admit, privately, that the Suez affair was not well- handled. But there is also a feeling that the durability of the Anglo-American Alliance has been called into question. Britain is prepared to play second fiddle to the United States, but still desires to play an occisional solo. There is recognition that the British lion has lost some of its teeth; that it can no longer afford to patrol vast areas of the world ; and that its diet may have to be reduced. This state of affairs has produced a certain, rather hard-to-define sense of relief; a feeling that Britain tried a certain course in the Middle East; that the United States blew the whistle and, thereby, Uncle Sam inherited the chaos of that area.

The cynicism comes in the widespread beiief that we con't know what to do about it. There is very little belief here that a workable relationship can be worked out with Colonel Nasser, regarding the use of the Canal. When you ask people here what they think should be done in the Middle East, they're disposed to reply, in effect by saying, "We had a try, you called us off, now you figure out what should be done." And they don't think we can find the answer.

Certainly they do not see the answer in the Eisenhower Doctrine, because they don't understand what it is. The best the British hope for from the Bermuda conference between President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan is some kind of restoration of personal confidence. Or, to put it another way, the British want to be heard in this alliance. They rather have the feeling that they have been doing a lot of listening recently, and much of what they have heard, they don't like. They recognize the power of the United States. They have fresh memories of their own power. And they're inclined to wish that we would use ours, which is another way of saying, that this government is troubled by Washington's disposition to turn everything over to the UN General Assembly.

As one official put it, "It isn't quite fair to equate Britain and Outer Mongolia, even if our power has been reduced." British reluctance to accept the judgements of the Assembly stems, not so much from that body's action over Suez; it is rather a belief that efforts to resolve issues of importance in that fashion just won't work. Events are driving Britain into ever closer relations with the continent of Europe. But this should not be regarded as an attempt to create a, so - called, "third force."

The majority of both Parties appear willing to base British policy upon the Anglo-American Alliance, at least for the time being. But it would be a mistake to assume that people in this country are primarily or exclusively concerned with world affairs, or a post-mortem on Suez. There are troubles ahead on the domestic front. More amd more people of ability, wanting to go out to the Commonwealth countries; arguments about rent controls. For the first time since the end of the war, the concept of the Welfare Estate, fair shares for all, is coming under attack. This government is what would be called a businessman's govenment at home. It wants to create more incentives for business; wants to reduce taxes; also reduce the cost of the social services.

This will mean a series of moves that will be unpopular with the trade unions; and it will mean a sharpening of domestic . political controversy. Any retreat from the Welfare Estate will divide this country as aharply as did the handling of Suez. As one who spent nine years in this country, it is pleasing to report that personal and social relations have not been severely damaged by the controversy over Suez. The tolerance and the good manners remain. But the cynicism has increased. There is evident, in official and unofficial circles, some satisfaction that the United States is preparing to take an active part in Middle East affairs. But I can discover no opinion which holds that we will make a good job of it.

COLLINGWOOD: That was Ed Murrow's report from London on how Britain has reacted to the events of the last few months. In another day or two, he'll be coming home.

This is Charles Collingwood. I"ll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: When George Bernard Shaw died, he directed that the income from his estate be used to carry out his pet project -- the simplification of the English alphabet. Today in London a British court found the project "impractical and invalid", and decreed that the fortune go instead to such august upholders of tradition as the National Gallery of Ireland and the British Museum. But true Shavians are undaunted. They're going to publish Shaw's plays in the simplified alpahbet anyway, to demonstrate it can be done. This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Collingwood for Murrow Thurs., Feb. 21, 1957

Good evening:

Prime Minister Ben Gurion of Israel called today for further talks on the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Egyptian territory. In a dramatic speech, Ben Gurion told the Israeli parliament that his government had decided to make a further effort to reach an understanding with the United States. He announced that the Israeli ambassador to the United States, Abba Eban, is returning to Washington tomorrow to set forth Israel's position. "We hope," Ben Gurion said, "that the door will not be closed to further discussion." His statement was prompted by President Eisenhower's warning last night that the United Nations has no choice but to put pressure on Israel, if Israel refuses to withdraw unconditionally from the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Israel, as you know, has been insisting on guarantees that Egypt will allow her free passage through the Gulf of Aqaba and not again use Gaza as a base for commando attacks. Ben Gurion said today that no matter what happens, Israel will not submit to restoration of the status quo in the Gaza Strip. As for sanctions, he called on the United Nations to apply the same standard for all members who fail to comply with U.N. resolutions. "If the United Nations does not apply the same standard," he said, "it will be undermining its own moral foundation." The General Assembly takes up the sanctions question tomorrow.

(more)

10

President Eisenhower's stand on Israel received support today in the Egyptian press. Cairo newspapers cited the Eisenhower speech as "proof" of the success of Egyptian policy. They said the President had no real choice but to threaten United Nations pressure on Israel.

In London, the British Foreign Office issued a statement recommending an overall settlement in the Middle East. It agreed that Israel should withdraw from Egyptian territory, but said there should be another United Nations resolution to safeguard Israel's rights. The foreign office emphasized that there should be coordination in this respect---not just a flat demand for withdrawal without planning the next step.

The Israeli issue was also the subject of debate in the House of Commons. The debate was impromtu and for thright. Aneurin Bevan, who is the foreign policy spokesman for the Labour Party, said, "It is a very undesirable pattern that the United States should be issuing statements about policy without consulting her allies." Emanuel Shinwell, former defense minister, was equally bitter. "The fact Britain is alleged to have made mistakes in the past," he said, "is no reason why this house should condone any mistake made by President Eisenhower." Conservative members of Parliament were silent.

~~(more)~~

In Congress, Senate Republican Leader Knowland says he still opposes reprisals against Israel unless the United Nations also applies sanctions against other countries that ignore its demands. Knowland told reporters, "Nothing the President said last night changes my position." Nor did the President's speech cause Senate Democratic Leader Johnson to alter his vigorous stand against sanctions for Israel. "I regret," he said, "the Administration view that there is no choice but to bring pressure on one side of a two-sided dispute."

Former President Truman told a news conference in Florida today that he sympathizes with Mr. Eisenhower in the current Middle East crisis. The job of President, he said, is the toughest on earth. But, at the same time, Mr. Truman said the crisis could have been averted if we had kept Russia out of the Mediterranean area and prevented it from sending arms to Egypt. He also opposed sanctions against Israel. He said the President seemed to be holding to the theory: "You don't interfere with the big nations, but you must make the little ones obey."

A group of twelve American Jewish leaders called at the State Department today and were asked to use their influence to achieve the total withdrawal of Israeli forces from Egypt. The appeal came from President Eisenhower and was transmitted by a special White House assistant, Maxwell Raab, who is also secretary of the cabinet. The conference lasted an hour and a half. A spokesman for the group said afterward, "We came here at the request of the secretary of state. We listened and we have no comment."

President Eisenhower met today with the National Security Council. This was a regular weekly meeting, but naturally it took on added significance because of the tense Middle East situation.

64

(more)

Mr. Eisenhower has had a persistent cough ever since inauguration day, and today he went to Walter Reed Hospital for X-rays of his sinuses and chest. News Secretary Hagerty says the X-rays were what the doctors call negative--- both the lungs and sinuses are clear.

The Senate continued debate today on the so-called "Eisenhower doctrine" for blocking Soviet penetration of the Middle East. Republican Senator Flanders proposed an amendment to restore the resolution to its original form... by saying the President is authorized to send troops to the area if necessary. In committee, you remember, the word "authorized" was taken out. In its present form, the resolution says the United States is "prepared" if necessary to take such action. Other amendments were proposed today by Democratic Senator Mansfield. One of them calls for international control of arms shipments to the Middle East.

76

The Senate today confirmed the nomination of former Governor Herter of Massachusetts as undersecretary of state. Confirmation came on a voice vote and without debate.

The House Ways and Means Committee heard testimony on the country's economic condition. The undersecretary of the treasury, Randolph Burgess, said the United States is not on the brink of either ruinous inflation or depression. "But," he added, "I think it's fairly consistent to say that we'll have a depression if we keep on violating economic laws." Almost as he spoke, the House Appropriations Committee voted to cut the budget requested for the Department of the Interior by 12 percent. Yesterday, the full House voted to cut the Post Office and Treasury Department budgets by 2 percent.

The Labor Department announces that the cost-of-living went up two-tenths of one percent in January, to set a new all-time record for the fifth consecutive month. The rise means an automatic pay increase of at least a cent an hour for more than a million workers in the auto, aircraft and farm equipment industries. Living costs last month were three and one-tenths percent higher than in January a year ago. And the government expects the upward trend to continue for at least another month.

(more)

The United Nations Security Council voted unanimously today to send its president to India and Pakistan... as a mediator in the dispute over Kashmir. The council president is Gunnar Jarring of Sweden. A similar proposal was vetoed yesterday by Russia. This time Russia went along because the resolution... as reworded... made no reference to a plebiscite in Kashmir.

An Air Force rocket roared out of control while it was being tested in New Mexico today... and is presumed down somewhere in the mountains of Western Colorado or Eastern Utah. The runaway guided missile is identified as the Matador. It did not carry an explosive charge---only instruments used in research.

Local disputes in Baltimore and Hampton Roads stalled the back-to-work movement today among striking longshoremen on the East Coast. Only in Brooklyn did any longshoremen show up for work---and there only a handful. ~~/End of script/~~

~~Bliss~~

105

~~902~~

In Ireland today, the nominations closed for next month's general elections. My colleague, Alex Kendrick, has been in Dublin the past few days... scouting out the situation... and so let's switch now to Dublin for his report. / Note---tape runs five minutes fifteen seconds and ends on cue "And now back to Charles Collingwood." Switch to tape should come at seven fifty-one thirty-five/. You have been listening to Alexander Kendrick, reporting on the always intriguing subject of Irish politics. This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. /pause/ Now here is George Bryan.

108

110

Footnote---St. Patrick is credited with ridding Ireland of snakes. And the pied piper, of course, did a creditable job of rat-removal in Hamlin. Now comes the suburban community of Pompton Lakes, New Jersey, which recently passed an ordinance licensing cats. Alley cats without licenses get hustled off to the cat pound, and the rats reportedly are taking over. One woman says the rats are getting so bold they eat out of her dog's food dish. Snakes, rats, cats, dogs. Anyone want to bell a rat? This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Bliss

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, February 21, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... In Ireland today, the nominations closed for next month's general elections. My colleague, Alexander Kendrick, has been in Dublin the past few days. So let's switch now to Dublin for his report.

KENDRICK: Around the corner from Dublin's famous Post Offce, where the citizen-soldiers of the Easter Rebellion of 1916 held out against the British Army, a long line of men stood this morning with papers in their hands. At noon, the last one reached his turn. The nominations were officially declared closed and the general election campaign was officially opened. Polling is on March 5th, when a new Dail or House of Deputies will be elected. And either John Costello, the outgoing Prime Minister, will undertake a third term, or he will be succeeded by the grand old man of Irish politics, Eamon de Valera, now 74, who has been prime minister seven times already and wants to make it eight.

There are six political parties in the field and numerous independents. And since 174 seats are vacant, the race resembles the Irish Sweepstakes.

Even before the official opening gun tonight, the campaign has been in full swing since the Dail was dissolved two weeks ago, Mr. de Valera is vigorously stumping the twenty-six counties, attacking coalition government in general, and Mr. Costello's coalition in particular. The Prime Minister, also a vigorous campaigner, replies that his government had more than two years to go when it was abruptly brought down by the withdrawal of the coalition's smallest party; and he wants another term to prove that coalition governments can work even when, like his, they are composed of the strange mixture of business men, labor and farmers.

The men of Sean Fine? are also making a brave display, with their tight trench coats and rakish caps, looking like the actors in a Sean O'Casey play, living the days of 1916, demanding unification of the 26 Southern and the 6 Northern counties, and "up - the rebels" and "down with the Queen."

Meanwhile, Sean Fine's activist element, the outlawed Irish Republican Army, carries the election campaign on across the border in Northern Ireland. It can win no votes there, but blown up railway bridges and damaged police stations signify that "Kilroy" was there and left his mark.

Now, despite the fiery politics being bandied about in this campaign - and the Irish are great speechifiers - the two major parties, Mr. Costello's Fine Gael, and Mr. de Valera's Fianna Fail, have no great differences of principle between them. They are merely the ins and the outs, described here as O'Tweedle-dum and O'Tweedle-de. After all, they have been rotating in office for more than a decade, and neither one has come to grips with the basic problems of this country, which are economic.

Ireland's population today, less than three million, is the lowest in its history. Despite a high birth rate, the population is steadily decreasing because of the continuing tide of emigration. 50,000 Irish men and women leave this country every year for other parts.

The Emerald Isle's trade balance is also in a woeful state. Much more is imported than can be exported. The deficit has been running at a quarter of a billion dollars a year. To plug it up, the Government has had to institute heavy import duties on practically all commodities; slapping a 60% levy on goods from the United States; 37½ on those from the UK and Canada.

This means high prices in a country of low wages. Unlike the British, who try to balance their trade by increasing their exports, the Irish have tried to do it by decreasing their imports. The result has been a tightening of the economy. And now, unemployment has set in; 100,000 are jobless, more than 3%, and the number is increasing.

Whichever government is in office, Ireland's national income doesn't change. But perhaps the most telling economic fact has to do with American aid under the Marshall Plan. This is the only country that has been unable to spend Marshall Plan funds, for the simple reason that it has been unable to find anything to spend them on. Of the $18-million given to Ireland, nine million is still untouched. This is probably the only country, too, where a Government seeking re-election, makes a major campaign promise of converting from straight peat as a fuel to peat briquettes. Across the Irish Sea lies Caulder Hall, the biggest atomic power plant in the world.

Today despite all the campaign promises, Ireland's economic problems seem as far from solution as ever. Irishmen may joke and say that the old slogan, "Erin go braugh" - Ireland be blessed - is now being pronounced, Erin go broke. But beneath the political jokes and the Gaelic gaiety, there are layers of sadness here. For the brave young men of 1916 are now the old men of 1957. And the brave young men of 1957, they've gone elsewhere.

This is Alexander Kendrick in Dublin - and now back to Charles Collingwood.

COLLINGWOOD: That was Alex. Kendrick, reporting on the always intriguing subject of Irish politics.

Ed. trans. P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, February 21, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... In Ireland today, the nominations closed for next month's general elections. My colleague, Alexander Kendrick, has been in Dublin the past few days. So let's switch now to Dublin for his report.

KENDRICK: Around the corner from Dublin's famous Post Offce, where the citizen-soldiers of the Easter Rebellion of 1916 held out against the British Army, a long line of men stood this morning with papers in their hands. At noon, the last one reached his turn. The nominations were officially declared closed and the general election campaign was officially opened. Polling is on March 5th, when a new Dail or House of Deputies will be elected. And either John Costello, the outgoing Prime Minister, will undertake a third term, or he will be succeeded by the grand old man of Irish politics, Eamon de Valera, now 74, who has been prime minister seven times already and wants to make it eight.

There are six political parties in the field and numerous independents. And since 174 seats are vacant, the race resembles the Irish Sweepstakes.

Even before the official opening gun tonight, the campaign has been in full swing since the Dail was dissolved two weeks ago, Mr. de Valera is vigorously stumping the twenty-six counties, attacking coalition government in general, and Mr. Costello's coalition in particular. The Prime Minister, also a vigorous campaigner, replies that his government had more than two years to go when it was abruptly brought down by the withdrawal of the coalition's smallest party; and he wants another term to prove that coalition governments can work even when, like his, they are composed of the strange mixture of business men, labor and farmers.

The men of Sean Fine? are also making a brave display, with their tight trench coats and rakish caps, looking like the actors in a Sean O'Casey play, living the days of 1916, demanding unification of the 26 Southern and the 6 Northern counties, and "up - the rebels" and "down with the Queen."

Meanwhile, Sean Fine's activist element, the outlawed Irish Republican Army, carries the election campaign on across the border in Northern Ireland. It can win no votes there, but blown up railway bridges and damaged police stations signify that "Kilroy" was there and left his mark.

Now, despite the fiery politics being bandied about in this campaign - and the Irish are great speechifiers - the two major parties, Mr. Costello's Fine Gael, and Mr. de Valera's Fianna Fail, have no great differences of principle between them. They are merely the ins and the outs, described here as O'Tweedle-dum and O'Tweedle-de. After all, they have been rotating in office for more than a decade, and neither one has come to grips with the basic problems of this country, which are economic.

Ireland's population today, less than three million, is the lowest in its history. Despite a high birth rate, the population is steadily decreasing because of the continuing tide of emigration. 50,000 Irish men and women leave this country every year for other parts.

The Emerald Isle's trade balance is also in a woeful state. Much more is imported than can be exported. The deficit has been running at a quarter of a billion dollars a year. To plug it up, the Government has had to institute heavy import duties on practically all commodities; slapping a 60% levy on goods from the United States; 37½ on those from the UK and Canada.

This means high prices in a country of low wages. Unlike the British, who try to balance their trade by increasing their exports, the Irish have tried to do it by decreasing their imports. The result has been a tightening of the economy. And now, unemployment has set in; 100,000 are jobless, more than 3%, and the number is increasing.

Whichever government is in office, Ireland's national income doesn't change. But perhaps the most telling economic fact has to do with American aid under the Marshall Plan. This is the only country that has been unable to spend Marshall Plan funds, for the simple reason that it has been unable to find anything to spend them on. Of the $18-million given to Ireland, nine million is still untouched. This is probably the only country, too, where a Government seeking re-election, makes a major campaign promise of converting from straight peat as a fuel to peat briquettes. Across the Irish Sea lies Caulder Hall, the biggest atomic power plant in the world.

Today despite all the campaign promises, Ireland's economic problems seem as far from solution as ever. Irishmen may joke and say that the old slogan, "Erin go braugh" - Ireland be blessed - is now being pronounced, Erin go broke. But beneath the political jokes and the Gaelic gaiety, there are layers of sadness here. For the brave young men of 1916 are now the old men of 1957. And the brave young men of 1957, they've gone elsewhere.

This is Alexander Kendrick in Dublin - and now back to Charles Collingwood.

COLLINGWOOD: That was Alex. Kendrick, reporting on the always intriguing subject of Irish politics.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Evening:

Prime Minister Ben Gurion of Israel called today for further talks on the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Egyptian territory. In a dramatic speech, Ben Gurion told the Israeli parliament that his government had decided to make a further effort to reach an understanding with the United States. He announced that Israeli ambassador to the United States, Abba Eban, is returning to Washington tomorrow to set forth Israel's position. "We hope," Ben Gurion said, "that the door will not be closed to further discussion." His statement was prompted by President Eisenhower's warning last night that the United Nations has no choice but to put pressure on Israel, if Israel refuses to withdraw unconditionally from the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Israel, as you know, has been insisting on guarantees that Egypt will allow her free passage through the Gulf of Aqaba and not again use Gaza as a base for commando attacks. Ben Gurion said today that no matter what happens, Israel will not submit to restoration of the status quo in the Gaza Strip. As for sanctions, he called on the United Nations to apply the same standard for all members who fail to comply with U.N. resolutions. "If the United Nations does not apply the same standard, " he said, "it will be undermining its own moral foundation." The General Assembly takes up the sanctions question tomorrow.

President Eisenhower's stand on Israel receives support today in the Egyptian press. Cairo newspapers cited the Eisenhower speech as "proof" of the success of Egyptian policy. They said the President had no real choice but to threaten United Nations pressure on Israel.

In London, the British Foreign Office issued a statement recommending an overall settlement in the Middle East. It agreed that Israel should withdraw from Egyptian territory but said there should be another United Natons resolution to safeguard Israel"s rights. The foreign office emphasized that there should be coordination in this respect -- not just a flat demand for withdrawal without planning the next step.

The Israeli issue was also the subject of debate in the House of Commons. The debate was impromptu and forthright. Aneurin Bevan, who is the foreign policy spokesman for the Labour Party, said, "It is a very undesirable pattern that the United States should be issuing statements about policy without consulting her allies." Emanuel Shinwell, former defense minister, was equally bitter. "The fact Britain is alleged to have made mistakes in the past," he said, "is no reason why this house should condone any mistake made by President Eisenhower." Conservative members of Parliament were silent.

In Congress, Senate Republican Leader Knowland says he still opposes reprisals against Israel unless the United Nations also applies sanctions against other countries that ignore its demands. Knowland told reporters, "Nothing the President said last night changes my position." Nor did the President's speech cause Senate Democratic Leader Johnson to alter his vigorous stand against sanctions for Israel. "I regret", he said, " the Administrationview that there is no choice but to bring pressure on one side of a two-sided dispute."

Former President Truman told a news conference in Florida today that he sympathizes with Mr. Eisenhower in the current Middle East crisis. The job of President, he said, is the toughest in earth. But, at the same time, Mr. Truman said the crisis could have been averted if we had kept Russia out of the Mediterranean area and prevented it from sending arms to Egypt. He also opposed sanctions against Israel. He said the President seemed to be holding to the theory : "You don't interfere with the big nations, but you must make the little ones obey."

A group of twelve American Jewish leaders called at the State Department today and were asked to use their influence to achieve the total withdrawal of Israeli forces from Egypt. The appeal came from President Eisenhower and was transmitted by special White House assistant, Maxwell Raab, who is also secretary of the cabinet. The conference lasted an hour and a half. A spokesman for the group said afterward, "We came here at the request of the secretary of state. We listened and we have no comment."

President Eisenhower met today with the Nationsl Security Council. This was a regular weekly meeting, but naturally it took on added significance because of the tense Middle East situation.

Mr. Eisenhower has had a persistent cough since inauguration day, and today he went to Walter Reed Hospital for X-rays of his sinuses and chest. News sec - retary Hagerty says the X-rays were what the doctors call negative -- both the lungs and sinuses are clear.

The Senate continued debate today on the so-called "Eisenhwwer doctrine" for blocking Soviet penetration of the Middle East. Republican Senator Flanders propssed an amendment to restore the resolution to its original form...by saying the President is authorized to send troops to the area if necessary. In committee, you remember, the word "authorized" was taken out. In its present form, the resolution says the United States is "prepared" if necessary to take such action. Other amendments were proposed today by Democratic Senator Mansfield. One of them calls for international control of arms shipments to the Middle East.

The House Ways and Means Committee heard testimony on the country's economic condition. The undersecretary of the treasury, Randolph Burgess, said the United States is not on the brink of either ruinous inflation or depression."But", he added, "I think it's fairly consistent to say that we'll have a depression if we keep on violating economic laws." Almost as he spoke, the House Appropriations Committee voted to cut the budget requested for the Department of the Interior by 12 percent. Yesterday, the full House voted to cut the Post Office and Treasury Department budgets by 2 percent.

The Labor Department announces that the cost-of-living went up two-tenths of one percent in January, to set a new all-time record for the fifth consecutive month. The rise means an automatic pay increase of at least a cent an hour for more than a million workers in the auto, aircraft and farm equipment industries. Living costs last month were three and one tenths percent higher than in January a year ago. And the government expects the upward trent to continue for at least another month.

The United Nations Security Council voted unanimously today to send its president to Indian and Pakistan..as a mediator in the dispute over Kashmir.

The council president is Gunnar Jarring of Sweden. A similar proposal was vetoed yesterday by Russia. This time Russia went along because the resolution ..as reworded..made no reference to a plebiscite in Kashmir.

An Air Force rocket roased out of control while it was being tested in New Mexico today..and is presumed down somewhere in the mountains of Western Colorado or Eastern Utah. The runaway guided missile is identified as the Matador. It did not carry an explosive charge--only instruments used in research.

Local disputes in Baltimore and Hampton Roads stalled the back-to-work movement today among striking longshoremen on the East Coast. Only in Brooklyn did any longshoremen show up for work -- and there only a handful.

In Ireland today, the nominations closed for next month's general elections. My colleague, Alexander Kendrick, has been in DUblin for the past few days. So let's switch now to Dublin for his report.

KENDRICK; Around the corner from Dublin's famous Post Office, where the citizen-soldiers of the Easter Rebellion of 1916 held out against the British Army, a long line of men stood this morning with papers in their hands.

At noon, the last one reached his turn. The nominations were officially declared closed and the general election campaign was officially opened. Polling is on March 5th, when the new Dail or House of Deputies will be elected. And either John Costello, the outgoing Prime Minister, will undertake a third term, or he will be succeeded by the grand old man of Irish politics, Eamon de Valera, now 74, who has been prime minister seven times already and wants to make it eight.

There are six political parties in the field and numerous independents. And since 174 seats are vacant, the race resembles the Irish Sweepstakes.

Even before the official opening gun tonight, the campaign has been in full swing since the Dail was dissolved two weeks ago. Mr. de Valera is vigorously stumping the twenty-six counties, attacking coalition government in general, and Mr. Costello's coalition in particular. The Prime Minister, also a vigorous campaigner, replies that his government had more than two years to go when it was abruptly brought down by the withdrawal of the coalition's smallest party; and he wants another term to prove that coalition governments can work even when, like his, they are composed of the strange mixture of business men, labor and farmers.

The men of Sinn Fein are also making a brave display, with their tight trench coats and rakish caps, looking like the actors in a Sean O'Casey play, living the days of 1916, demanding unification of the 26 Southern and the 6 Northern counties and "up - the rebels" and "down the queen."

Meanwhile, Sinn Fein's activist element, the outlawed Irish Republican Army, carries the election campaign on across the border in Northern Ireland. It can win no votes there, but blown up railway bridges and damaged police stations signify that "Kilroy" was there and left his mark.

Now, despite the firey politics being bandied about in this campaign - and the Irish are great speechifiers - the two major parties, Mr. Costello's Fine Gael, and Mr. de Valera's Fianna Fail, have no great differences of principle between them. They are merely the ins and the outs, described here as O'Tweedle-dum and O'Tweedle-de. After all, they have been rotating in office for more than a decade, and neither one has come to grips with the basic problems of this country which are economic.

Ireland's population today, less than three million, is the lowest in history. Despite a high birth rate, the population is steadily decreasing because of the continuing tide of emigration. 50,000 Irish men and women leave this country every year for other parts.

The Emerald Isle's trade balance is also in a woeful state. Much more is imported than can be exported. The deficit has been running at a quarter of a billion dollars a year. To plug it up, the Government has had to institute heavy duties on practically all commodities; slapping a 60% levy on goods from the United States; 37½ on those from the UK and Canada.

Whichever government is in office, Ireland's national income doesn't change. But perhaps the most telling economic fact has to do with American aid under the Marshall Plan. This is the only country that has been unable to spend Marshall Plan funds, for the simple reason that it has been unable to find any - thing to spend them on. Of the $18 - million given to Ireland, nine million is still untouched. This is probably the only country, too, where a Government seeking re-election, makes a major campaign promise of converting from straight peat as a fuel to peat briquettes. Across the Irish Sea lies Caulder Hall, the biggest atomic power plant in the world.

Today despite all the campaign promises, Ireland's economic problems seem as far from solution as ever. Irishmen may joke and say the old slogan, "Erin go braugh" - Ireland be blessed - is now being pronounced, Erin go broke. But beneath the political jokes and the Gaelic gaiety, there are layers of sadness here. For the brave young men of 1916 are now the old men of 1957. And the brave young men of 1957, they've gone elsewhere.

This is Alexander Kendrick in Dublin - and now back to Charles Collingwood.

COLLINGWOOD: You have been listening to Alexander Kendrick, reporting on the always intriguing subject of Irish politics. This is Charles Collingoood. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. Now here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: St. Patrick is credited with ridding Ireland of snakes. And the pied piper, of course, did a creditable job of rat-removal in Hamlin. Now comes the suburban community of Pompton Lakes, New Jersey, which recently passed an ordinance licensing cats. Alley cats without licenses got hustled off to the cat pound, and the rats reportedly are taking over. One woman says the rats are getting so bold they eat out of her dog's food dish. Snakes, rats, cats, dogs. Anyone want to bell a rat? This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Collingwood for Murrow Fri., Feb. 22, 1957

Good evening:

A resolution demanding sanctions against Israel was introduced today in the United Nations General Assembly. For that story, we switch now direct to the United Nations and my colleague, Larry Lesueur.

(Live spot to run between three and a half and four minutes, returns on cue: "--and now back to Charles Collingwood.")

Thank you, Larry, etc.

In Washington this morning, President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles issued a joint statement on the speech Prime Minister Ben Gurion made yesterday before the Israeli parliament. The statement expressed regret that Israel had not yet "found it possible" to withdraw its forces from the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip... but added, "The door certainly is not closed to further discussion of the situation." "The president and the secretary," it went on, "welcome such further discussion because they believe that a full understanding of the United States position, and the United Nations resolutions of February second, should make it possible for Israel to proceed with the withdrawal." The statement said the United States will not present its position in the United Nations until the Israeli ambassador, Abba Eban, has had an opportunity to talk to Secretary Dulles.— Eban is due back in Washington SUNDAY after being called home for consultations with his government. (HE IS at present in London, between planes on his way to this country.) Ben Gurion said yesterday that Eban was returning to set forth Israel's position... and that he hoped the door to further discussion would not be closed.

Today... in the Israeli parliament... the leaders of two minority parties demanded that Israel hold onto her positions at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and in the Gaza Strip, come what may. They denounced Ben Gurion's suggestion that Israeli troops might pull out of those areas ~~under certain conditions.~~ even after guarantees And the leader of one of the parties... the Socialist Party, which is the third largest in Ben Gurion's coalition government... threatened to quit the government if any further withdrawal is made.

In Paris today, the French Foreign Ministry said ~~that~~ France opposes the further withdrawal of Israeli forces, until Israel has received adequate guarantees for its future security. An Associated Press dispatch from Paris says that Israel has asked Premier Mollet to plead Israel's case, when he sees President Eisenhower on Monday. Mollet and his foreign minister, Christian Pineau, are flying to Washington this week-end for a series of top-level talks. The premier said in answer to a reporter's question today that France will continue to give Israel all the aid it can.

Democratic Senator Humphrey got up in Congress today... and proposed that four steps be taken toward solving the Middle East problem. First of all, Humphrey said, we should demand that Egypt renounce its claim of "belligerent rights" against Israel... and we should press for the stationing of United Nations forces in the Gaza Strip and on the Gulf of Aqaba. When these two conditions have been met, he said, Israeli troops should then complete their withdrawal from Egyptian territory. The fourth step Humphrey proposed would be the setting up of a United Nations "good offices" commission that would try to get Israel and Egypt together to negotiate an overall peace settlement.

Democratic Senator O'Mahoney said today that major American oil companies have "an important effect" on this country's Middle East policy. O'Mahoney is chairman of a Senate group investigating the recent increase in oil prices and the program of oil shipments to Europe due to the Suez crisis. He asserts that papers subpoenaed from the files of the oil companies show---in his words---that they have "more information than the Congress about our policies in the Middle East." One of the subpoenaed papers, O'Mahoney said, reveals that last summer... just before going to a London conference on Suez... Secretary of State Dulles had a secret meeting with representives of some of the big international oil companies. He said the papers show these companies have the "inside track" in knowing what the Administration is going to do. He declared, "You cannot separate oil from Middle East policy."

The United Nations political committee took action tonight on the Cyprus question. By a vote of 76 to nothing---with two abstentions---it approved a mildly worded resolution calling for a peaceful, democratic and just solution of the Cyprus dispute. The resolution, introduced by India, also urges the General Assembly to go on record as favoring a resumption of negotiations [redacted] to determine the future of the British crown colony.

Queen Elizabeth has made her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, a prince of the realm. Henceforth, his title is "Prince Philip", and the action is taken as a sign of the queen's confidence and affection. In the history of the British monarchy, no man born outside the royal family has been so honored. The [redacted] nearest thing to it occurred in 1857---just a hundred years ago---when Queen Victoria bestowed the title of prince consort on her German-born husband Albert. Actually, the Duke of Edinburgh was born Prince Philip of Greece, but he renounced the title before his marriage to become [redacted] a naturalized British subject---Lieutenant Philip Mountbatten.

The prime minister of Japan... Tanzan Ishibashi... resigned today because of ill health. The resignation will be formally accepted tomorrow at a special meeting of the cabinet. And the cabinet itself will then resign to pave the way for the forming of a new government. Speculation is that Foreign Minister Kishi will be the next premier.

A giant Air Force Globemaster crash-landed in Korea today, injuring more than a hundred of the 159 servicemen on board. The huge plane was headed for Japan when it developed engine trouble. And when the pilot, in desperation, brought the plane down on the frozen tidal bed of the Han River estuary, northwest of Seoul, it burst into flames. Dispatches from Seoul say the pilot... by his expertness... averted what could have have been the worst single military air disaster in history. None of the servicemen was killed in the crash-landing, although some are reported seriously hurt.

The East Coast dock strike is due to end tomorrow. William Bradley, president of the International Longshoremen's Association, has ordered the 45-thousand striking dockworkers back to work at 8 a.m. tomorrow, Eastern Time. New York longshoremen, he said, have approved the new three-year contract negotiated last week. The dispute over local issues in Baltimore and Norfolk was settled overnight.

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day news

But first, here is George Byan

Well, they still haven't found that runaway rocket that took off yesterday from the White Sands Proving Ground in New Mexico and which presumably came down somewhere in the Rocky Mountains, about 700 miles to the northwest. The search for it has been called off. But today a spokesman for the Air Force... Major General L. I. Davis... held a news conference and blamed "our sister service, the Army" for the fact that the Matadore rocket went out of control. He said the control system for the rocket was the Army's responsibility. The control system, he reported, was checked "at least fifteen times."

FOOTNOTE

Every year on Washington's Birthday the Senate and the House of Representatives interrupt their business to listen to a reading of the First President's Farewell Address. Among others things, Washington advised: " Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all." After listening this year, Senator O'Mahoney of Wyoming rose to observe that there has never been a period when those admonitions were more needed than today.

THIS IS C.C

ED MURROW WILL SEE YOU MONDAY

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, February 22, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... In the United Nations General Assembly today, a resolution demanding sanctions against Israel was introduced. For that story we switch now direct to the United Nations and my colleague, Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: A sudden-Arab-Asian demand for sanctions against Israel came as a dramatic surprise to a tense United Nations Assembly session today. The United States and the Western powers thought that the Asian-Arab bloc with withhold their call for Israel's punishment until Secretary of State Dulles had a chance to talk with the Israeli Ambassador, Abba Eban, who is now in the air between Jerusalem and New York. But after an Arab-Asian huddle, thirty minutes before today's Assembly session began, Lebanon's Foreign Minister, Charles Malik, loaded the sanctions gun and demanded that the 80-nation Assembly condemn Israel, deny her military, economic and financial assistance and make progress reports on how they are complying with such punishing sanctions, in order to keep the pressure up on Israel.

As for Israel's demands for guarantees before she withdraws from the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba, the Lebanese Foreign Minister said "The Arab States could demand back all the land acquired by Israel after the first Palestine war in 1947, and demand such iron-clad guarantees themselves." Thus, the Lebanese Foreign Minister underscored the Arab suspicion that Israel is using the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip as bargaining counters to secure permanent Egyptian and Arab recognition of Israel's present frontiers. And Mr. Malik implied a stern Arab effort to resist such a major political settlement.

There was considerable surprise too, when the Lebanese Foreign Minister announced that only six nations have lent their names as sponsors to the Israeli sanction demand. He said it would get much greater support. But Western European diplomats predict that such a sanctions demand will have great difficulty getting the necessary two-thirds majority from the UN Assembly. Many of the British Commonwealth nations have signified their intention to vote no against it. But the Arabs say its passage depends on America's attitude, since this country influences twenty Latin American votes. And this country's attitude remains in doubt, until after the Israeli Ambassador Abba Eban holds his conference with Secretary of State Dulles in Washington. Mr. Eban is en route from New York ... toNew York from Jerusalem, and he will first report to his Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir in New York, before emplaning for Washington.

Dag Hammarskjold also spraing a surprise on the Assembly by announcing a concession in advance by Egypt. The Secretary General said that Egypt had agreed to work with the UN in controlling the refugee-packed Gaza Strip after the Israelis withdraw. And that Egypt has agreed to permit the UN Emergency force to be deployed along the Gaza Strip between themselves and the Israeli forces as a buffer between the two armies. This is a situation much desired by the United States and the Western powers. They want Israel to agree to the stationing of a UN force on its own soil. But Israel has so far resisted such containment.

But Dag Hammarskjold assured the Assembly that the UN Emergency Force, if so deployed, could put a definite end to a long series of Egyptian Fedayeen commando raids and the massive Israeli reprisals. Since the 6,000 men of the UN force could control the entire frontier, in fact, he thinks with the help of aerial observation.

The Assembly has now adjourned until next Monday,

E.R. Murrow

on this Israeli question, with American and Western diplomats saying that the Asian-Arabs were acting in a political vacuum today until the results of the negotiations in Washington between the Israelis and the Secretary of State, Dulles, are finally completed. So the next act in this life-and-death drama for the UN-created State of Israel may unfold in the week-end in Washington.

This is Larry Lesueur at UN headquarters. Now, back to Charles Collingwood.

COLLINGWOOD: Thank you, Larry. In Washington this morning, President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles issued a joint statement on the speech which Prime Minister Ben Gurion made yesterday before the Israeli Parliament.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, February 22, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... In the United Nations General Assembly today, a resolution demanding sanctions against Israel was introduced. For that story we switch now direct to the United Nations and my colleague, Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: A sudden-Arab-Asian demand for sanctions against Israel came as a dramatic surprise to a tense United Nations Assembly session today. The United States and the Western powers thought that the Asian-Arab bloc with withhold their call for Israel's punishment until Secretary of State Dulles had a chance to talk with the Israeli Ambassador, Abba Eban, who is now in the air between Jerusalem and New York. But after an Arab-Asian huddle, thirty minutes before today's Assembly session began, Lebanon's Foreign Minister, Charles Malik, loaded the sanctions gun and demanded that the 80-nation Assembly condemn Israel, deny her military, economic and financial assistance and make progress reports on how they are complying with such punishing sanctions, in order to keep the pressure up on Israel.

As for Israel's demands for guarantees before she withdraws from the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba, the Lebanese Foreign Minister said "The Arab States could demand back all the land acquired by Israel after the first Palestine war in 1947, and demand such iron-clad guarantees themselves." Thus, the Lebanese Foreign Minister underscored the Arab suspicion that Israel is using the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip as bargaining counters to secure permanent Egyptian and Arab recognition of Israel's present frontiers. And Mr. Malik implied a stern Arab effort to resist such a major political settlement.

There was considerable surprise too, when the

Lebanese Foreign Minister announced that only six nations have lent their names as sponsors to the Israeli sanction demand. He said it would get much greater support. But Western European diplomats predict that such a sanctions demand will have great difficulty getting the necessary two-thirds majority from the UN Assembly. Many of the British Commonwealth nations have signified their intention to vote no against it. But the Arabs say its passage depends on America's attitude, since this country influences twenty Latin American votes. And this country's attitude remains in doubt, until after the Israeli Ambassador Abba Eban holds his conference with Secretary of State Dulles in Washington. Mr. Eban is en route from New York ... toNew York from Jerusalem, and he will first report to his Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir in New York, before emplaning for Washington.

Dag Hammarskjold also spraing a surprise on the Assembly by announcing a concession in advance by Egypt. The Secretary General said that Egypt had agreed to work with the UN in controlling the refugee-packed Gaza Strip after the Israelis withdraw. And that Egypt has agreed to permit the UN Emergency force to be deployed along the Gaza Strip between themselves and the Israeli forces as a buffer between the two armies. This is a situation much desired by the United States and the Western powers. They want Israel to agree to the stationing of a UN force on its own soil. But Israel has so far resisted such containment.

But Dag Hammarskjold assured the Assembly that the UN Emergency Force, if so deployed, could put a definite end to a long series of Egyptian Fedayeen commando raids and the massive Israeli reprisals. Since the 6,000 men of the UN force could control the entire frontier, in fact, he thinks with the help of aerial observation.

The Assembly has now adjourned until next Monday, on this Israeli question, with American and Western diplomats saying that the Asian-Arabs were acting in a political vacuum today until the results of the negotiations in Washington between the Israelis and the Secretary of State, Dulles, are finally completed. So the next act in this life-and-death drama for the UN-created State of Israel may unfold in the week-end in Washington.

This is Larry Lesueur at UN headquarters. Now, back to Charles Collingwood.

COLLINGWOOD: Thank you, Larry. In Washington this morning, President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles issued a joint statement on the speech which Prime Minister Ben Gurion made yesterday before the Israeli Parliament.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1957
7:45-8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Evening:

In the United Nations General Assembly today, a resolution demanding sanctions against Israel was introduced. For that story we switch now direct to the United Nations and my colleague, Larry LeSueur.

LESUEUR: A sudden Arab-Asian demand for sanctions against Israel came as a dramatic surprise to a tense United Nations Assembly session today. The United States and Western powers thought that the Asian-Arab bloc would withhold their call for Israel's punishment until Secretary of State Dulles had a chance to talk with the Israeli Ambassador, Abba Eban, who is now in the air between Jerusalem and New York. But after an Arab-Asian huddle, thirty minutes before today's Assembly session began, Lebanon's Foreign Minister, Charles Malik, loaded the sanctions gun and demanded that the 80-nation Assembly condemn Israel, deny her military, economic and financial assistance and make progress reports on how they are complying with such punishing sanctions, in order to keep the pressure up on Israel.

As for Israel's demands for guarantees before she withdraws from the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba, the Lebanese Foreign Minister said " The Arab States could demand back all the land acquired by Israel after the first Palestine war in 1947, and demand such iron-clad guarantees themselves." Thus, the Lebanese Foreign Minister underscored the Arab suspicion that Israel is using the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip as bargaining counters to secure permanent Egyptian and Arab recognition of Israel's present frontiers. And Mr. Malik implied a stern Arab effort to resist such a major political settlement.

There was a considerable surprise too, when the Lebanese Foreign Minister announced that only six nations have lent their names as sponsors to the Israeli sanction demand. He said it would get much greater support. But Western European diplomats predict that such a sanctions demand will have great difficulty getting the necessary two-thirds majority from the UN Assembly. Many of the British Commonwealth nations have signified their intention to vote no against it. But the Arabs say its passage depends on America's attitude, since this country influences twenty Latin American votes. And this country's attitude remains in doubt, until after the Israeli Ambassador Abba Eban holds his conference with Secretary of State Dulles in Washington. Mr. Eban is en route from New York....to New York from Jerusalem, and he will first report to his Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir in New York, before emplaning for Washington.

Dag Hammarskjold also sprang a surprise on the Assembly by announcing a concession in advance by Egypt. The Secretary General said that Egypt had agreed to work with the UN in controlling the refugee-packed Gaza Strip after the Israelis withdraw. And that Egypt has agreed to permit the UN Emergency forces as a buffer between the two armies. This is a situation much desired by the United States and the Western powers. They want Israel to agree to the stationing of a UN force on its own soil. But Israel has so far resisted such containment.

But Dag Hammarskjold assured the Asembly that the UN Emergency Force, if so deployed, could put a definite end to a long series of Egyptian Fedayeen commando raids and the massive Israeli reprisals. Since the 6,000 men of the UN force could control the entire frontier, in fact, he thinks with the help of aerial observation.

The Assembly has now adjourned until next Monday, on this Israeli question, with American and Western diplomats saying that the Asian - Arabs were acting in a political vacuum today until the results of the negotiations in Washington between the Israelis and the Secretary of State, Dulles, are finally completed.

So the next act in this lif-and-death drama for the UN - created State of Israel may unfold in the week-end in Washington.

This is Larry Lesueur at UN headquarters. Now, back to Charles Collingwood.

In Washington this morning, President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles issued a joint statement on the speech of Prime Minister Ben Gurion made yesterday before the Israeli parliament. The statement expressed regret that Israel had not yet "found it possible" to withdraw its forces from the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip...but added, "The door certainly is not closed to further discussion of the situation.""The president and the secretary", it went on, "welcome such further discussion because they believe that a full understanding of the United States position, and the United Nations resolutions of February second, should make it possible for Israel to proceed with the withdrawal." The statement said the United States will not present its position in the United Nations until the Israeli ambassador, Abba Eban, has had an opportunity to talk to Secretary Dulles. Eban is due back in Washington Sunday after being called home for consultations with his government. He is at present in London between planes on his way to this country. Ben Gurion said yesterday that Eban was returning to set forth Israel's position...and that he hoped the door to further discussion would not be closed.

Today in the Israeli parliament, the leaders of two minority parties demanded that Israel hold onto her position at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and in the Gaza Strip, come what may. They denounced Ben Gurion's suggestion that Israeli troops might pull out of those areas even after guarantees. And the leader of one of the parties...the Socialist Party, which is the third largest in Ben Gurion's coalition government...threatened to quit the government if any further withdrawal is made.

In Paris today, the French Foreign Ministry said France opposes the further withdrawal of Israeli forces until Israel has received adequate guarantees for its future security. An Associated Press dispatch from Paris says that Israel has asked Premier Mollet to plead Israel's case, when he sees President Eisenhower on Monday. Mollet and his foreign minister, Christian Pineau, are flying to Washington this week-end for a series of top-level talks. The premier said in answer to a reporter's question today that France will continue to give Israel all the aid it can.

Democratic Senator Humphrey got up in Congress today...and proposed that four steps be taken toward solving the Middle East problem. First of all, Humphrey said, we should demand that Egypt renounce its claim of "beligerant rights" against Israel and we should press for the stationing of United Nations forces in the Gaza Strip and on the Gulf of Aqaba. When these two conditions have been met, he said, Israeli troops should then complete their withdrawal from Egyptian territory. The fourth step Humphrey proposed would be setting up of a United Nations "good offices" commission that would try to get Israel and Egypt together to negotiate an overall peace settlement.

Democratic Senator O'Mahoney said today that major American oil companies have "an important effect" on this country's Middle East policy. O'Mahoney is chairman of a Senate group investigating the recent increase in oil prices and the program of oil shipments to Europe due to the Suez crisis. He asserts that papers subpoenaed from the files of the oil companies show -- in his words -- that they have "more information than the Congress about our policies in the Middle East." One of the subpoenaed papers, O'Mahoney said, reveals that last summer...just before going to a London conference on Suez...Secretary of State Dulles had a secret meeting with representatives of some of the big international oil companies. He said the papers show these companies have the "inside track" in knowing what the Administration is going to do. He declared, "You cannot separate oil from Middle East policy."

The United Nations political committee took action tonight on the Cyprus question. By a vote of 76 to nothing -- with two abstentions -- it approved a mildly worded resolution calling for a peaceful, democratic and just solution of the Cyprus dispute. The resolution, introduced by India, also urges the General Assembly to go on record as favoring a resumption of negotiations to determine the future of the British crown colony.

Queen Elizabeth has made her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, a prince of the realm. Henceforth, his title is "Prince Philip", and the action is taken as a sign of the queen's confidence and affection. In the history of the British monarchy, no man born outside the royal family has been so honored. The nearest thing to it occurred in 1857 -- just a hundred years ago -- when Queen Victoria bestowed the title of prince consort on her German - born husband Albert. Actually the Duke of Edinburgh was born Prince Philip of Greece, but he renounced the title before his marriage to become a naturalized British subject -- Lieutenant Philip Mountbatten.

The prime minister of Japan...Tanzan Ishibashi...resigned today because of ill health. The resignation will be formally accepted tomorrow at a special meeting of the cabinet. And the cabinet itself will then resign to pave the way for the forming of a new government. Speculation is that Foreign Minister Kishi will be the next premier.

A giant Air Force Globemaster crash-landed in Korea today, injuring more than a hundred of the 159 servicemen on board. The huge plane was headed for Japan when it developed engine trouble. And when the pilot, in desperation, brought the plane down on the frozen tidal bed of the Han River estuary, northwest of Seoul, it burst into flames. Dispatches from Seoul say the pilot...by his expertness...averted what could have been the worst single military air disaster in history. None of the servicemen was killed in the crash-landing, although some are reported seriously hurt.

The East Coast dock strike is due to end tomorrow. William Bradley, president of the International Longshoremen's Association, has ordered the 45 - thousand striking dockworkers back to work at 8 a.m. tomorrow, Eastern Time. New York longshoremen, he said, have approved the new three-year contract negotiated last week. The dispute over local issues in Baltimore and Norfolk was settled overnight.

I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the Day's News. But first, her is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: Every year on Washington's Birthday the Senate and the House of Representatives interrupt their business to listen to a reading of the First President's Farewell Address. Among other things, Washington advised: "Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all." After listening this year, Senator O'Mahoney of Wyoming rose to observe that there has never been a period when those admonistions were more needed than today.

This is Charles Collingwood. Ed Murrow will see you Monday.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Feb. 25, 1957

This is the news:

Prime Minister Ben Gurion won a vote of confidence tonight in the Israeli parliament. The vote was 72 to 29. Ben Gurion said in a policy speech before the vote that the Israeli Army stands at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba only as a means of guaranteeing navigation. "It is not our purpose to hold the coastline," he said, "but we must have a free outlet to the Red Sea. The moment we have security for freedom of navigation, our forces will withdraw from the straits." With regard to Gaza, Ben Gurion said, "We want, if possible, to solve the problem in cooperation with the United Nations." Israel, he said, does not want to close the door to an agreed solution. But he noted that "our first requirement"---that Egypt will not be allowed to return to Gaza---"has not yet been accepted." Ben Gurion declined to discuss the talks which the Israeli ambassador to Washington, Abba Eban, has been carrying on in Washington with Secretary of State Dulles. Eban conferred at ~~[illegible]~~ length yesterday with Dulles. And today he met for more than an hour with Secretary General Hammarskjold at United Nations headquarters, here in New York. After conferring with Eban this afternoon, Hammarskjold called a meeting of his advisory committee on the United Nations emergency force. He also met with Foreign Secretary Pearson of Canada, who has advocated sending U.N. troops into the disputed areas, following an evacuation by Israeli forces. Because of these conferences, the General Assembly did not meet to take up an Arab-Asian resolution demanding sanctions against Israel. The assembly was to have met this afternoon.

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson had a talk today with Secretary Dulles. Johnson told reporters after the meeting that the situation appears to be "somewhat more hopeful." ~~"So long as the parties to the dispute keep talking," he said, "there is a possibility of settlement."~~

Johnson told the Senate today that he hopes it will agree to limit debate on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution and start voting this week. The Administration, he said, wants the resolution passed as soon as possible. Democratic Senator Morse immediately opposed the move to ~~[illegible]~~ limit debate.

The Senate ought not to vote, he said, "until a foreign policy for the Middle East has been developed. And, Morse said, he is "not interested in a policy just to protect oil."

President Eisenhower warned the Middle East countries today... in a Voice of America broadcast... that International Communism "could smash all their hard-won accomplishments overnight." The President said his resolution is designed to provide assurance that "if the United Nations machinery cannot deal with the danger, and a threatened country asks for our help, it can count on our help." Mr. Eisenhower reminded the Middle East countries that International Communism has a record for swallowing up small nations. "And if these nations attempt to assert their tradition of freedom," he said, "their people are shot down by the thousands---witness Hungary." In contrast to this, he said, "the history of the United States is that of a struggle for the right of self-determination and human dignity." Mr. Eisenhower's broadcast marked the 15th anniversary of the Voice of America, and it was relayed by short-wave around the world.

British Prime Minister Macmillan told the House of Commons today that Israel should withdraw from the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. But, at the same time, he said United Nations forces should be stationed in the strip. "It should be a United Nations responsibility," he said. And he emphasized that all nations, including Israel, should have free access to the Gulf of Aqaba. In answer to a question about the proposed use of sanctions against Israel, Macmillan said: "We do not want to think in terms of sanctions but in terms of a settlement."

A meeting of "Big Four" Arab leaders opened today in Cairo. The first session lasted two and a half hours. According to well-informed sources, King Saud of Saudi Arabia gave an account of his recent talks with President Eisenhower in Washington. In addition to Saud, the conference is being attended by King Hussein of Jordan and Presidents Kuwalty of Syria and Nasser of Egypt.

Tonight, Generalissimo Franco of Spain announced a reorganization of his government "to meet the country's modern needs." The new cabinet (Franco dismissed the old cabinet on Friday) has many new faces. My colleague, David Schoenbrun, reports by telephone from Madrid that the role of the Falange Party in the new government is reduced. There are now only three Falangists in the cabinet instead of six.

Also, the new foreign minister, Fernando Maria Castiella (Kas-tee-aye-yah), is a monarchist. Schoenbrun says he has a reputation for being anti-British. All the new members of the cabinet, he says, are completely loyal to Franco---it is a completely loyal Franco government.

Premier Mollet of France arrived in Washington today for two-days of talks with President Eisenhower, starting tomorrow. When he arrived at the airport, Mollet was greeted with a 19-gun salute.

Today, Mr. Eisenhower nominated Amory Houghton (Hō-tun), chairman of the board of the Corning Glass Works, to succeed Douglas Dillon as ambassador to France. Dillon recently was named deputy undersecretary of state for foreign affairs. The President also fornally nominated David Bruce... who served as ambassador to France under the Truman Administration... to be ambassador to West Germany. Bruce will succeed Dr. James Conant, who resigned.

Edward R. Murrow: February 25, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

~~Secretary Dulles reminded newsmen in his last news conference that the word sanctions does not have any precise meaning, and that sanctions can be moral as well as material. The newsmen gathered that he was hinting that when the United States thought of sanctions against Israel it did not necessarily mean economic or financial sanctions, but might have the moral kind in mind.~~ Been much talk of sanctions.

Actually the whole idea of sanctions is confused in many minds, particularly as used in connection with the United Nations. For the United Nations cannot impose sanctions. At best, the Assembly can pass a resolution recommending them. And only once in its history has it done as much as this. That was on May 18, 1951, when it recommended an embargo on strategic goods against Communist China and North Korea.

That particular embargo did get applied. But if anyone thinks the United Nations did it he is wrong. It was done by individual states, largely because the Battle Act and the Mutual Security Act, measures passed by our Congress, required this country to withhold aid from any country supplying strategic materials to the Communist countries. And if the U.N. should vote a recommendation for punitive sanctions against Israel, their application again would depend on individual nations, most of all on the United States.

It is this fact that has made the role of the United States in the present crisis so vital. If the United Nations were to recommend material sanctions against Israel, and we were committed to a policy of carrying ~~xxxx~~ out United Nations recommendations, we could ruin Israel all by ourselves. Israel could not remain financially alive without dollars from this country. We could shut off these dollars by the twist of a wrist, and Israel would perish just as surely as though wiped out by military action. We might prefer to think such action as being done by the United Nations, but it is something the United Nations could not do without us.

One reason there is confusion about sanctions is because the word itself has taken on a new meaning in late years. Legally it now means a measure for securing obedience to a law or an obligation. That is, it is a punishment or it is a form of compulsion. This is almost the opposite of the first meaning the word used to have. A sanction used to be something permitted - something sanctioned. It was a word of approval. Now it is a word of strong condemnation.

But even as such it has many gradations. Mr. Dulles called attention to there being moral sanctions. Let me list what some of these are. One of them is diplomatic pressure, exercised through diplomatic channels. This can be expressed in many ways. If public opinion in one country disapproves of the actions of another country, it can forbid tourist travel into that country. Or its citizens can voluntarily stop buying the products of that country. Or the government can withdraw the ambassador from the country disapproved of, or it can go further and break off diplomatic relations. Or it can refuse to recognize a new government set up by revolutionary action.

~~These are instances of moral sanctions listed in a study of international law in the early 1930's.~~ Anyone can see that the United States makes a steady use of moral sanctions, and does so quite outside the United Nations. In fact, we have financial sanctions in effect at this moment against Egypt due to the seizure of the Suez Canal: we have frozen Egyptian assets in banks in this country.

Material sanctions voted by the United Nations against Israel as a punishment would be the first it ever asked against a small nation standing alone. The only precedent would be the recommendations of the embargo against Communist China and NORTH Korea in 1951. For any other precedent one would have to go back to the League of Nations. The League did try to apply an arms embargo against China in 1919, which failed, and against Bolivia and Paraguay in 1934, which worked after a fashion. But its major experience was with Mussolini after the invasion of Ethiopia. Forty-eight countries voted to apply collective sanctions against Italy, commencing with an arms embargo. Forty-seven then voted for financial sanctions, forty-seven later voted an embargo on imports from Italy, forty-seven finally voted an embargo on certain deliveries to Italy, but significantly not oil — which might have brought Mussolini to his knees. The United States went along as a non-member, and illogically voted an embargo on both Italy and Ethiopia. Mussolini was not deterred, the Ethiopian armies surrendered, and in 1936 the sanctions were lifted. It is an inglorious chapter in collective action against a great power.

It has convinced many people that collective action short of war against a great power is impossible, (one reason sanctions were not asked against the Soviet Union after the rape of Hungary.) Israel, however, is not a great power. And when one talks of acting against a small nation standing alone, it means that either the United States would become the chief executant — or executioner — or the sanctions would be the "moral ones" to which Mr. Dulles referred. It is a huge difference, and no one in the Administration has yet made it quite clear which it is that the government is after.

Stewart Alsop

Word for Today

It would appear that the word "sanctions" does not have any precise meaning... and that it meant one thing yesterday and that it means---not one---but several things today. In diplomacy, this may be an advantage. For [redacted]ly diplomats, in the preliminaries, are loathe to be pinned down. They would agree with Erasmus who said more than 400 years ago, "Every definition is dangerous."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Prime Minister Ben Gurion won a vote of confidence tonight in the Israeli parliament. The vote was 72 to 29. Ben Gurion said in a policy speech before the vote that the Israeli Army stands at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba only as a means of guaranteeing navigation. "It is not our purpose to hold the coastline," he said, "but we must have a free outlet to the Red Sea. The moment we have security for freedom of navigation, our forces will withdraw from the straits." With regard to Gaza, Ben Gurion said, "we want, if possible, to solve the problem in cooperation with the United Nations." Israel, he said, does not want to close the door to an agreed solution. But he noted that "our first requirement" - that Egypt will not be allowed to return to Gaza - "has not yet been accepted." Ben Gurion declined to discuss the talks which the Israeli Ambassador to Washington, Abba Eban, has been carrying on in Washington with Secretary of State Dulles. Eban conferred at length yesterday with Dulles. And today he met for more than an hour with Secretary General Hammarskjold at United Nations headquarters, here in New York. After conferring with Eban this afternoon, Hammarskjold called a meeting of his advisory committee on the United Nations emergency force. He also met with Foreign Secretary Pearson of Canada, who has advocated sending U.N. troops into the disputed areas, following an evacuation by Israeli forces. Because of these conferences, the General Assembly did not meet to take up an Arab-Asian resolution demanding sanctions against Israel. The assembly was to have met this afternoon.

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson had a talk today with Secretary Dulles. Johnson told reporters after the meeting that the situation appears to be "somewhat more hopeful."

Johnson told the Senate today that he hopes it will agree to limit debate on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution and start voting this week. The Administration, he said, wants the resolution passed as soon as possible. Democratic Senator Morse immediately opposed the move to limit debate. The Senate ought not to vote, he said, "until a foreign policy for the Middle East has been developed. And, Morse said, he is "not interested in a policy just to protect oil."

President Eisenhower warned the Middle East countries today...in a Voice of America broadcast...that International Communism "could smash all their hard-won accomplishments overnight." The President said his resolution is designed to provide assurance that "if the United Nations machinery cannot deal with the danger and a threatened country asks for our help, it can count on our help." Mr. Eisenhower reminded the Middle East countries that International Communism has a record for swallowing up small nations. "And if these nations attempt to assert their tradition of freedom," he said, "their people are shot down by the thousands - witness Hungary," In contrast to this, he said, "the history of the United States is that of a struggle for the right of self-determination and human dignity." Mr. Eisenhower's broadcast marked the 15th anniversary of the Voice of America, and it was relayed by short-wave around the world.

British Prime Minister MacMillan told the House of Commons today that Israel should withdraw from the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. But at the same time, he said United Nations forces should be stationed in the strip. "It should be a United Nations responsibility," he said. And he emphasized that all nations, including Israel, should have free access to the Gulf of Aqaba. In answer to a question about the proposed use of sanctions against Israel, Macmillan said: "We do not want to think in terms of sanctions but in terms of a settlemtnt."

A meeting of "Big Four" Arab leaders opened today in Cairo. The first session lasted two and a half hours. According to well-informed sources, King Saud of Saudi Arabia gave an account of his recent talks with President Eisenhower in Washington. In addition to Saud, the conference is being attended by King Hussein of Jordan and Presidents Kuwalty of Syria and Nasser of Egypt.

Tonight, Generalissimo Franco of Spain announced a reorganization of his government "to meet the country's modern needs." The new cabinet (Franco dismissed the old cabinet on Friday) has many new faces. My colleague, David Schoenbrun, reports by telephone from Madrid that the role of the Falange Party in the new government is reduced. There are now only three Falangists in the cabinet instead of six.

Also, the new foreign minister, Fernando Maria Castiella, is a monarchist. Schoenbrun says he has a reputation for being anti-British. All the new members of the cabinet, he says, are completely loyal to Franco - it is a completely loyal Franco government.

Premier Mollet of France arrived in Washington today for two days of talks with President Eisenhower, starting tomorrow. When he arrived at the airport, Mollet was greeted with a 19-gun salute.

Today, Mr. Eisenhower nominated Amory Houghton, chairman of the board of the Corning Glass Works, to succeed Douglas Dillon as ambassador to France. The President also formally nominated David Bruce...who served as ambassador to France under the Truman Administration...to be ambassador to West Germany. Bruce will succeed Dr. James Conant, who resigned.

There has been much talk of sanctions:
Acutally the whole idea of sanctions is confused in many minds, particularly as used in connection with the United Nations. For the United Nations cannot impose sanctions. At best, the Assembly can pass a resolution recommending them. And only once in its history has it done as much as this. That was on May 18, 1951, when it recommended an embargo on strategic goods against Communist China and North Korea.

That particular embargo did get applied. But if anyone thinks the United Nations did it he is wrong. It was done by individual states, largely because the Battle Act and the Mutual Security Act, measures passed by our Congress, required this country to withhold aid from any country supplying strategic materials to the Communist countries. And if the U.N. should vote a recommendation for punitive sanctions against Israel, their application again would depend on individual nations. most of all on the United States.

It is this fact that has made the role of the United States in the present crisis so vital. If the United Nations were to recommend material sanctions against Israel, and we were committed to a policy of carrying out United Nations recommendations, we could ruin Israel all by ourselves. Israel could not remain financially alive without dollars from this country. We could shut off these dollars by the twist of a wrist, and Israel would perish just as surely as though wiped out by military action. We might prefer to think such action as being done by the United Nations, but it is something the United Nations could not do without us.

One reason there is confusion about sanctions is because the word itself has taken on a new meaning in late years. Legally it now means a measure for securing obedience to a law or an obligation. That is, it is a punishment or it is a form of compulsion. This is almost the opposite of the first meaning the word used to have. A sanction used to be something permitted - something sanctioned. It was a word of approval. Now it is a word of strong condemnation.

But even as such it has many gradations. Mr. Dulles called attention to there being moral sanctions. Let me list what some of these are. One of them is diplomatic pressure, exercised through diplomatic channels. This can be expressed in many ways. If public opinion in one country disapproves of the actions of another country, it can forbid tourist travel into that country. Or its citizens can voluntarily stop buying the products of that country. Or the government can withdraw the ambassador from the country disapproved of, or it can go further and break off diplomatic relations. Or it can refuse to recognize a new government set up by revolutionary action.

Anyone can see that the United States makes a steady use of moral sanctions, and does so quite outside the United Nations. In fact, we have financial sanctions in effect at this moment against Egypt due to the seizure of the Suez Canal: we have frozen Egyptian assets in banks in this country.

Material sanctions voted by the United Nations against Israel as a punishment would be the first it ever asked against a small nation standing alone. The only precedent would be the recommendations of the embargo against Communist China and North Korea in 1951. For any other precedent one would have to go back to the League of Nations. The League did try to apply an arms embargo against China in 1919, which failed, and against Bolivia and Paraguay in 1934, which worked after a fashion. But its major experience was with Mussolini after the invasion of Ethiopia. Forty-eight countries voted to apply collective sanctions against Italy, commencing with an arms embargo. Mussolini was not deterred, the Ethiopian armies surrendered, and in 1936 the sanctions were lifted. It is an inglorious chapter in collective action against a great power.

It has convinced many people that collective action short of war against a great power is impossible, one reason sanctions were not asked against the Soviet Union after the rape of Hungary. Israel, however, is not a great power. And when one talks of acting against a small nation standing alone, it means that either the United States would become the chief executant - or executioner - or the sanctions would be the "moral ones" to which Mr. Dulles referred. It is a huge difference, and no one in the Administration has yet made it quite clear which it is that the government is after.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is Stewart Metz.

STEWART METZ: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would appear that the word "sanctions" does not have any precise meaning...and that it meant one thing yesterday and that it means - not one - but several things today. In diplomacy. this may be an advantage. For diplomats, in the preliminaries, are loathe to be pinned down. They would agree with Erasmus who said more than 400 years ago, "Every definition is dangerous."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Feb. 26, 1957

This is the news:

The United States is drafting a compromise resolution, aimed at breaking the deadlock over the withdrawal of Israeli troops. / The American resolution may be introduced in the United Nations General Assembly tomorrow. / According to sources in the United States delegation, the resolution will seek to achieve the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip, without the use of sanctions. It is expected to follow the lines of the four-point proposal outlined before the General Assembly today by Canada. These four points are as follows: Israel and Egypt would pledge themselves formally, to abide by all provisions of the armistice agreement of 1949, including a promise to refrain from all belligerent acts. / The United Nations emergency force would be deployed along [redacted] the armistice line to prevent raids by either side. Israeli forces at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba would be replaced by United Nations forces, as a guarantee against interference with "innocent passage" in the gulf. /United Nations troops would also be stationed in the Gaza Strip. /Israeli Army forces would be withdrawn immediately. And the Israeli civil administration in the strip would gradually be replaced by a United Nations administration.

→

This Canadian proposal was promptly denounced in the assembly by Soviet Delegate Sobolev as "pro-Israel". He made it clear that [redacted] the entire Soviet bloc of eight votes are behind the Afro-Asian resolution calling for economic and military sanctions against Israel. /The Syrian delegate accused Canada of supporting "Zionist policy".

The Israeli ambassador, Abba Eban, flew to Washington today [redacted] from New York to resume his talks with Secretary of State Dulles. /Eban said after seeing Dulles that they had discussed the new Canadian proposal, as well as the two meetings [redacted]---Eban---had yesterday with Secretary General Hammarskjold. He said he still hopes for a constructive solution, but would not say that he [redacted] is optimistic. /He told reporters that of the two problems involved---the Gulf of Aqaba and Gaza---the most work has to be done on the Gaza problem "before we see a solution in sight."

Democratic Leader Johnson said today that the Senate will be kept in night session, until it votes on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. ~~If necessary, he said, the Senate will also meet on Saturday,~~ Johnson issued ~~the statement after~~ several Democratic ~~senators blocked an agreement to limit debate.~~

Talks between French Premier Mollet and President Eisenhower opened today in Washington. News Secretary Hagerty said after the morning session, "of course" the Middle East question was discussed. He also announced that President Coty of France will visit the United States in June.

Talks began in Washington today on the subject of economic aid to Poland. The negotiations between a Polish delegation and representatives of the State Department are expected to last about three weeks. The ~~independent~~ Communist government of Poland is expected to ask for dollar aid, as well as for surplus corn and wheat.

The leaders of Saudi Arabia, Syria and Jordan... meeting with President Nasser in Cairo... have put over their final discussions until tomorrow. Their policy talks had been expected to end tonight.

A crowd of Palestinian Arabs rioted in a suburb of Cairo today. Witnesses say at least five were killed by Egyptian police. The crowd reportedly stormed a police headquarters to obtain arms for fighting Israel.

Today... in Damascus... 11 Syrians and one Lebanese were sentenced to death on charges of trying to overthrow the government of Syria. Thirty other defendants drew prison terms ranging up to life. More than half of the accused were tried in absentia.

The foreign ministers of seven NATO countries met today in London. At the top of the agenda was Britain's proposal for cutting its armed forces in West Germany from 80-thousand to 50-thousand men. The talks between Britain and West Germany, Italy, France, Holland, Belgium and Luxembourg were TO have lasted two days. Instead, they ended abruptly tonight with the brief announcement that no decisions were reached... and that another conference will be held later. It was no secret that the six continental countries objected to the British plan to cut down its troop commitments. And there are reports that Britain promised to study these protests and perhaps modify its proposal.

In Congress today, the Senate Judiciary Committee conducted a hearing on the nomination of William J. Brennan, Jr., as associate justice of the Supreme Court. Senator McCarthy accused Brennan of demonstrating "an underlying hostility to congressional attempts to expose the Communist conspiracy." He said Brennan once referred... in a speech... to the congressional investigations as "Salem witch hunts". Brennan denied that he was referring to any congressional committee. His reference, he said, was to the "general notion" that hysteria was dominating the internal fight against Communism at that time. McCarthy is the only senator who has opposed the Brennan appointment. And it is expected to be approved.

A special Senate committee opened public hearings today in its investigation of alleged racketeering in labor and industry. A teamsters union official... Albert Ruhl of Spokane... testified that he loaned union money to gamblers. ~~One loan of 20 thousand dollars, he said, went to a college classmate, Dave Beck, Jr., son of the teamsters union president, to open a bar.~~ Two reporters for the Portland Oregonian, William Lambert and Wallace Turner, told the committee there had been a "conspiracy" between Portland city officials and officers of the teamsters union to establish organized gambling in Portland.

The dispute over National Guard training was settled today. The Army agreed to postpone its six-month basic training program for enlistees between the ages of 17 and 18 and a half. ~~The program was to have gone into effect in April. The Army agreement with the National Guard Association now exempts enlistees in this age bracket until next January. Recruits over 18 and a half will still have to take the six-month basic training course, starting in April.~~

Edward R. Murrow: February 26, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

It doesn't take any special knowledge of foreign affairs to know that the United States is going through a tremendous crisis over the Middle East. The White House, theState Department, the Senate -- and here in New York the United Nations - are working around the clock on that crisis. The newspapers are full of it, radio and television talk mostly of that in handling world news. Anyone might think the Middle East is the most important region in the world for this country, and our security is going to be determined by the solutions found for the Gaza Strip and the Aqaba Gulf. of Aqaba —

Fundamentally the Middle East plays only a secondary role in our future. Of course it is important, for we are testing our leadership. Also, another war might break out which we would not be able to stop and which might involve our forces. But the security of the United States really lies elsewhere and in other considerations. Let me suggest some that are more important.

We don't know how long we shall keep our superiority in the air and in nuclear weapons, that is, if we have it. This might be called the most acute question before this country. The Eisenhower Doctrine is vital, but the Symington report on air power, which has hardly been discussed at all, is certainly no less vital.

Next to weapons and air power ranks the problem of Europe. Our safety does rest with Europe. It depends on our ability to hold Western Europe together, and to keep NATO effective and powerful. If we are not going to lose the power conflict by default we cannot relax our efforts until Germany is unified in freedom, and the Soviet Union consents to live as a peaceful neighbor whose satellites have been granted the right to run their own affairs.

We face this long-term and hazardous complex of problems with our Western alliances shaken if not shattered, and with the tide in Europe ebbing away from our leadership. A new era is dawning. All is not black by any means. But all is not well, either.

It is in perspectives like these that the visit of Premier Mollet of France to Washington becomes highly newsworthy. Mr. Mollet is not here to negotiate any new agreements with this country. He is not even asking for money. He is here simply because it has become unthinkable that our western alliances should suffer any longer from the postponement of personal contacts at the highest level. ~~He has not come at the same time as Prime Minister MacMillan of Britain solely because a meeting of three heads would look conspiratorial to the Arabs. Mr. MacMillan's visit with Mr. Eisenhower in Bermuda next month, is however, part of the same repair job in our foreign~~ ~~relations that has to be rushed through before we can even begin to tackle the real problems.~~

I have said that Premier Mollet is not asking for money. That is not because he does not need it. France is not yet floundering in a sea of inflation, but it is rocking badly and financial aid will be sought later in the year. He is not seeking it now because the restoration of cordial relations with President Eisenhower had better not be tied in with a begging mission. And French public opinion wants a visit that does not start off hat-in-hand.

Both France and Britain believe we need them as certainly as they need us, and they want acknowledgement of it in other ways than credits and loans. They do not see how the creation of a new era in Europe can be furthered without the highest sense of partnership.

So Premier Mollet is sure to be telling President Eisenhower about striking gains in the last days in unifying Europe economically, with a unified market at last begun, and with a new surrender of sovereignties in the common development of peaceful atomic power. Mr. MacMillan will be adding to the narrative at Bermuda, by telling that Britain is at last preparing to join a free European market of industrial goods.

This is the optimistic side of the picture. But more immediate and material things don't look so well. One is the fate of NATO. The French have undermined it by sending their troops to Algeria. The British now propose to weaken it by reducing their garrison in Germany by thirty thousand men. NATO itself is undergoing change because nuclear weapons are revolutionizing the nature of warfare. Guided missiles now are a big issue; so is a supply by the United States of atomic warheads for the use of our allies.

And beyond the weapon question looms a divided Germany, and how to negotiate its unification with the Russians, if it can be negotiated at all. These are the considerations that will determine the future of the United States more than the Middle East.

Geo. Bryan

The Mollet visit was not planned to coincide with the Israeli crisis which has eclipsed it so completely. And its importance, as I have suggested, is social rather than political. A friendship has to be re-moulded. That in itself should not be hard to do. But it is a confession that our foreign relations are shaky indeed that it has to be done at all. And it is not much comfort to realize that when the friendship with Britain and France is in working order again, we shall not be ahead, but only be beginning to catch up, on ~~the work [illegible] Europe.~~

~~Stewart Mott~~

George Bryan

It is easy... in the light of the Middle East crisis... to overlook the even more serious problems that confront us in Europe and in the realm of weapons research. Leonardo da Vinci wrote in his famous Notebook, "Perspective is the bridle and rudder of painting." And certainly the same can be said of perspective in the conduct of foreign policy.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The United States is drafting a compromise resolution aimed at breaking the deadlock over the withdrawal of Israeli troops. The American resolution may be introduced in the United Nations General Assembly tomorrow. According to sources in the United States delegation, the resolution will seek to achieve the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip without the use of sanctions. It is expected to follow the lines of the four-point proposal outlined before the General Assembly today by Canada. These four points are as follows: Israel and Egypt would pledge themselves formally to abide by all provisions of the armistice agreement of 1949, including a promise to refrain from all belligerant acts. The United Nations emergency force would be deployed along the armistice line to prevent raids by either side. Israeli forces at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba would be replaced by United Nations forces, as a guarantee against interference with "innocent passage" in the gulf. United Nations troops would also be stationed in the Gaza Strip. Israeli Army forces would be withdrawn immediately. And the Israeli civil administration in the strip would gradually be replaced by a United Nations administration.

This Canadian proposal was promptly denounced in the assembly by the Soviet Delegate Sobolev as "pro-Israel". He made it clear that the entire Soviet bloc of eight votes are behind the Afro-Asian resolution calling for economic and military sanctonns against Israel. The Syrian delegate accused Canada of supporting "Zionist policy."

The Israeli ambassador, Abba Eban, flew to Washington today from New York to resume his talks with Secratary of State Dulles. Eban said after seeing Dulles that they had discussed the new Canadian proposal, as well as the two meetings

Eban had yesterday with Secretary General Hammarskjold. He said he still hopes for a constructive solution, but would not say that he is optimistic. He told reporters that of the two problems involved -- The Gulf of Aqaba and Gaza -- the most work has to be done on the Gaza problem, "before we see a solution in sight."

Democratic Leader Johnson said today that the Senate will be kept in night session, until it votes on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution.

Talks between French Premier Mollet and President Eisenhower opened today in Washington. News Secretary Hagerty said after the morning session, "of course" the Middle East question was discussed. He also announced that President Coty of France will visit the United States in June.

Talks began in Washington today on the subject of economic aid to Poland. The negotiations between a Polish delegation and representatives of the State Department are expected to last about three weeks. Communist government of Poland is expected to ask for dollar aid, as well as for surplus corn and wheat.

The leaders of Saudi Arabia, Syria and Jordan .. meeting with President Nasser in Cairo..have put over their final discussions until tomoroow. Their policy talks had been expected to end tonight.

A crowd of Palestinian Arabs rioted in a suburb of Cairo today. Witnesses say at least five were killed by Egyptian police. The crowd reportedly stormed a police headquarters to obtain arms for fighting Israel.

Today .. in Damascus..11 Syrians and one Lebanese were sentenced to death on charges of trying to overthrow the government of Syria. Thirty other defendants drew prison terms ranging up to life. More than half of the accused were tried in absentia.

The foreign ministers of seven NATO countries met today in London. At the top of the agenda was Britain's proposal for cutting its armed forces in West Germany from 80-thousand to 50-thousand men. The talks between Britain and West Germany, Italy, France, Holland, Belgium and Luxembourg were to have lasted two days. Instead, they ended abruptly tonight with the brief announcement that no decisions were reached and that another conference will be held later. It was no secret that six continental countries objected to the British plan to cut down its troop commitments. Ant there are reports that Britain promised to study these protests and perhaps modify its proposal.

In Congress today, the Senate Judiciary Committee conducted a hearing on the nomination of William J. Brennan, Jr. as associate justice of the Supreme Court. Senator McCarthy accused Brennan of demonstrating "an underlying hostility to congressional attempts to expose the Communist conspiracy." He said Brennan once referred in a speech to the congressional investigations as "Salem withc hunts." Brennan denied that he was referring to any congressional committee. His reference, he said, was to the "general notion" that hysteria was dominating the internal fight against Communism at that time. McCarthy is the only senator who has opposed the Brennan appointment. And it is expected to be approved.

A special Senate committee opened public hearings today in its investigation of alleged racketeering in labor and industry. A teamsters union official..Albert Ruhl of Spokane..testified that he loaned union money to gamblers. Two reporters for the Portland Oregonian, William Lambert and Wallace Turner, told the committee there had been a "conspiracy" between Portland city officials and officers of the teamsters union to establish organized gambling in Portland.

The dispute over National Guard training wass settled today. The Army agreed to postpone its six-month basic training program for enlistees between the ages of 17 and 18 and a half.

Anyone might think the Middle East is the most important region in the world for this country, and our security is going to be determined by the solutions found for the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba.

Fundamentally the Middle East plays only a secondary role in our future. Of course it is important, for we are testing our leadership. Also, another war might break out which we would not be able to stop and which might involve our forces. But the security of the United States really lies elsewhere and in other considerations. Let me suggest some that are more important.

We don't know how long we shall keep our superiority in the air and in nuclear weapons, that is if we have it. This might be called the most acute question before this country. The Eisenhower Doctrine is vital, but the Symington report on air power, which has hardly been discussed at all, is certainly no less vital.

Next to weapons and air power ranks the problem of Europe. Our safety does rest with Europe. It depends on our ability to hold Western Europe together, and to keep NATO effective and powerful. If we are not going to lose the power conflict by default we cannot relax our efforts until Germany is unified in freedom, and the Soviet Union consents to live as a peaceful neighbor whose satellites have been granted the right to run their own affairs.

We face this long-term and hazardous complex of problems with our Western alliances shaken if not shattered, and with the tide in Europe ebbing away from our leadership. A new era is dawning. All is not black by any means. But all is not well, either.

It is in perspectives like these that the visit of Premier Mollet of France to Washington becomes highly newsworthy. Mr. Mollet is not here to negotiate any new agreements with this country. He is not here for money. He is here simply because it has become unthinkable that our western alliances should suffer any longer from the postponement of personal contacts at the highest level.

I have said that Premier Mollet is not asking for money. That is not because he does not need it. France is not yet floundering in a sea of inflation, but it is rocking badly and financial aid will be sought later in the year. He is not seeking it now because the restoration of cordial relations with President Eisenhower had better not be tied in with a begging mission. And French public opinion wants a visit that does not start off hat-in-hand.

Both France and Britain believe we need them as certainly as they need us, and they want acknowledgement of it in other ways than credits and loans. They do not see how the creation of a new era in Europe can be furthered without the highest sense of partnership.

So Premier Mollet is sure to be telling President Eisenhower about striking gains in the last days in unifying Europe economically, with a unified market at last begun, and with a new surrender of sovereignties in the common development of peaceful atomic power. Mr. MacMillan will be adding to the narrative at Bermuda, by telling that Britain is at last preparing to join a free European market of industrial goods.

This is the optimistic side of the picture. But more immediate and material things don't look so well. One is the fate of NATO. The French have undermined it by sending their troops to Algeria. The British now propose to weaken it by reducing their garrison in Germany by thirty thousand men. NATO itself is undergoing change because nuclear weapons are revolutionizing the nature of warfare. Guided missiles now are a big issue; so is a supply by the United States of atomic warheads for the use of our allies.

And beyond the weapon question looms a divided Germany, and how to negotiate its unification with the Russians, it if can be negotiated at all. These are the considerations that will determine the future of the United States more than the Middle East.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: It is easy .. in the light of the Middle East crisis..to overlook the even more serious problems that confront us in Europe and in the realm of weapons research. Leonardo da Vinci wrote in his famous Notebook, "Perspective is the bridle and rudder of painting." And certainly the same can be said of perspective in the conduct of foreign policy.

Goodnight and good luck"

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Feb. 27, 1957

This is the news:

The Middle East deadlock continues. The American plan to submit a compromise resolution to the United Nations General Assembly today failed to materialize. The General Assembly cancelled its afternoon meeting.

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles conferred with Israeli Ambassador Eban... and with the foreign minister of Israel, Mrs. Golda Meir. A State Department spokesman said, "The United States has not altered in any respect the position as set forth by the President on February 20." On that date, Mr. Eisenhower said the United Nations has "no choice" but to exert pressure on Israel, if it does not withdraw from Egyptian territory. (In a few minutes we will have a report on these developments, direct from United Nations headquarters).

President Eisenhower and French Premier Mollet have decided to continue their talks a third day. /They will hold a final meeting tomorrow morning, and then issue a joint communique. /In a speech today before the National Press Club, Mollet said that both he and the President acknowledged past disagreements over the Middle East but now recognize a common purpose---the restoration of lasting peace. Settlement of the Middle East problem, he said, "requires that the free world engage in a joint long-range policy." Mollet said Israel is entitled to have its "territorial integrity" guaranteed.

The heads of four Arab states said tonight that they will work for the immediate... and unconditional... withdrawal of Israeli forces to the lines laid down in the 1949 armistice. /The four Arab leaders---President Kuwatly of Syria, King Hussein of Jordan, President Nasser of Egypt, and King Saud of Saudi Arabia---have been meeting the past three days in Cairo. The final communique said they rejected all attempts to reduce Egypt's "sovereignty and rights" over the Suez Canal... and supported Egypt's demand for compensation from Britain, France and Israel for damage incurred by their attacks. The Arab leaders also declared their support of the independence movement in Algeria. /The Arab countries, they said, should depend on their own defenses "outside the sphere of foreign pacts." This would appear, on the basis of early reports, to be the closest the Arab leaders came to criticizing American Middle East policy.

Israel charges that Egyptian raiders last night kidnapped the mayor of Raffa, a small town in the Gaza Strip, and wounded his wife. The mayor himself is Egyptian, but had cooperated with the Israeli authorities. A few hours after his capture, he managed to escape.

An unusual incident took place today in the Polish parliament. A non-Communist member stood up and denounced the Premier as the man "responsible for all the abuse of power during the Stalinist period." The statement was greeted by angry shouts and some applause. And the presiding officer called a recess. The Premier submitted his resignation to parliament early this month, after the Polish elections. But he was promptly returned to office.

The United Nations Political Committee today rejected Russian charges that the United States had tried to subvert Communist governments. The Soviet motion was defeated by a vote of 53 to 8, with 11 abstentions.

The United States today called home its minister to Hungary, Edward T. Wailes. On instructions from Washington, Wailes has refused to present his credentials to the Kádar government. He arrived in Budapest on November 2nd, when Premier Nagy was still in power. In announcing the recall, the State Department rejected Hungarian charges, that Wailes engaged in activities "irreconciliable with international practice." It disclosed that the Kádar government asked the United States last month to recall Wailes, unless the credentials were presented. The legation will continue to function under the direction of Spencer Barnes, the chargé d'affaires.

Samuel Hawkins, of Oklahoma City, today became the seventh American turncoat to leave Red China since the end of the Korean War. Twenty-one Americans captured in Korea, chose to live in Red China. One reportedly died of tuberculosis; thirteen are still there. Hawkins told reporters in Hong Kong today, that he wanted to come home for some time... but that the final straw was the Russian intervention in Hungary. He said, "It seemed to me like wanton killing." Hawkins blamed his original decision to stay with the Communists on "youthful ignorance." He was 18 at the time.

In Congress today, Democratic Senator Russell proposed that the President's Middle East resolution be stripped of the provision authorizing economic aid. The Administration, he said, has failed to tell Congress how a single dollar of the aid money would be spent. He said, "I refuse to abandon my congressional responsibility to buy a pig in a poke."

A House judiciary subcommittee today approved President Eisenhower's civil rights program, and the full committee will act on it next week. Minority Leader Joseph Martin predicted yesterday that the House will approve the program around March 15th. But the big test will come in the Senate.

A special Senate committee continued its hearings on alleged racketeering in the international teamsters union. Committee Chairman McClellan said the brother of one of the witnesses, James Elkins, was threatened last night in a telephone call. (He said the F.B.I. is investigating.) Elkins, a Portland, Oregon gambler, testified further today. Elkins said that, in 1955, he was a front man for a combination of teamster union officials and racketeers who, he said, were trying to take over vice operations in Portland. Elkins testified that the union helped defeat Mayor Fred Peterson of Portland. The mayor, he said, had refused to fire a police chief who was interferring with the vice operations.

Now, for that report direct from United Nations headquarters, here is my colleague, Larry Lesueur.

(LL to run 4:30
returns on cue: "And now back to Ed Murrow."

That was the report of my colleague, Larry Lesueur, on the outlook on the Middle East crisis, as viewed from the United Nations.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) Now here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

It has been argued that if Israel withdrew now without conditions it would thereby "put itself on the side of the angels." No doubt there is truth in this. But James Thurber once made an observation on the subject of "fools rushing in where angels fear to tread." The angels are all in heaven," Thurber said, "but few of the fools are dead."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

Or 4-7160

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, February 27, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Now, for that report direct from United Nations headquarters, here's my colleague Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: Prospects for a settlement of the Palestine crisis are growing dimmer tonight here at the UN. But there's still some hopes that the crisis can be resolved in Washington within the next 48-hrs. Here at the UN, American Ambassador Lodge has worked long, strenuously but fruitlessly with India's Krishna Menon, to try to find a middle-of-the-road formula that would be acceptable to the Arab-Asian States. The Americans had envisaged a call to Israel to withdraw from the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba within 72-hrs. or face undefined measures. In the meantime, it was hoped, that in the 48-hrs. it would take to pass such a resolution and the 72-hr. deadline Israel might be able to work out with Dag Hammarskjold or with Washington the assurances she demands in order to be able to withdraw voluntarily and gracefully. But the Arabs refuse to buy anything short of a resolution incorporating their own demand for stiff economic and military penalties against Israel if she fails to withdraw.

This could still be a bargaining point on the part of the Arabs. But they haven't given in thus far, although they now realize that their own demand for punishing sanctions against Israel cannot summon enough votes at the UN to gain the necessary two-thirds majority. But if the American resolution can't get the support of the Arab-Asians, it won't be able to pass either. And neither will the Canadian proposal to turn the Gaza Strip over to the UN. So the Arabs are being told tonight that if they don't agree to the American formula avoiding sanctions, they probably won't get any UN action at all and they'll have to rest their case on the ambiguous resolutions of three weeks ago to which Israel has declined to comply. So the deadlock on trying to get a two-thirds majority on any resolution to force Israel out of the Gaza and Aqaba areas seems to be complete at the moment. There's always a chance for a break if the Arabs give in to the American desire to bypass sanctions. But it's possible that no resolution at all can be agreed upon here at the UN. That is - no resolution which could command a two-thirds majority. And remember - all member states are carefully canvassed before a resolution is actually introduced, in order to preserve the prestige of a big power introducing it.

If this is the case, then Israel will continue trying to get its assurances against attack elsewhere than from the UN Assembly.

After spending hours with Dag Hammarskjold, the Israel delegates found themselves in disagreement with the UN Secretary General over his interpreations of Egypt's legal rights in the Gaza Strip under the old armistice agreements. So Ambassador Abba Eban and Foreign Minister Golda Meir broke their appointment with Dag Hammarskjold and went to Washington to see if they couldn't work out some practical arrangement with Secretary of State Dulles.

The latest word reaching us here is that the Israelis are hopeful that American assurances about freedom of passage through the Gulf of Aqaba can be formalized, to use a diplomatic expression. And then, they say, they'd be willing to withdraw from the Strait. But as for the Gaza Strip, whether Egypt has any legal rights there or not under the armistice agreement, the Israeli diplomats say they refuse to permit a nation, which says she's still at war with them, to take it over. And that's the crux of the matter. Israel's main objective appears to be a peace settlement with Egypt. And while this reporter is informed that Egypt doesn't feel too strongly about possessing the Gaza Strip, like therest of the Arab States they are strongly against a peace settlement with Israel. Egyptians know that the Gaza Strip cannot be defended, and that its refugees could be turned into a source of trouble for them, too, from Israel or from rival Iraq.

But there's one thing on which all the Arab States agree, and that is that Israel should not be recognized with a peace settlement. Not at least along her present frontiers, which have been expanded of course since the Arab defeat in 1948.

Now, the Arabs still maintain that any UN settlement of the Gaza Strip, without Egypt in control, would constitute a reward to Israel for its invasion. And further, that such a settlement would touch upon the entire Palestine question. And before that can be settled, they say, they want some iron-clad guarantees of their own. Presumably, they want to go back to the original UN Palestine map, which divided the British mandate into separate Jewish and Arab States.

So the rest of the Arab States seem to be stiffening Egypt's back against giving the Gaza Strip over to UN control. But it's rumored here at the UN that Egypt is wavering because her own domestic economy is getting shaky.

This is Larry Lesueur. Now, back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, February 27, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Now, for that report direct from United Nations headquarters, here's my colleague Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: Prospects for a settlement of the Palestine crisis are growing dimmer tonight here at the UN. But there's still some hopes that the crisis can be resolved in Washington within the next 48-hrs. Here at the UN, American Ambassador Lodge has worked long, strenuously but fruitlessly with India's Krishna Menon, to try to find a middle-of-the-road formula that would be acceptable to the Arab-Asian States. The Americans had envisaged a call to Israel to withdraw from the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba within 72-hrs. or face undefined measures. In the meantime, it was hoped, that in the 48-hrs. it would take to pass such a resolution and the 72-hr. deadline Israel might be able to work out with Dag Hammarskjold or with Washington the assurances she demands in order to be able to withdraw voluntarily and gracefully. But the Arabs refuse to buy anything short of a resolution incorporating their own demand for stiff economic and military penalties against Israel if she fails to withdraw.

This could still be a bargaining point on the part of the Arabs. But they haven't given in thus far, although they now realize that their own demand for punishing sanctions against Israel cannot summon enough votes at the UN to gain the necessary two-thirds majority. But if the American resolution can't get the support of the Arab-Asians, it won't be able to pass either. And neither will the Canadian proposal to turn the Gaza Strip over to the UN. So the Arabs are being told tonight that if they don't agree to the American formula avoiding sanctions, they probably won't get any UN action at all and they'll have to rest their case on the ambiguous resolutions of three weeks ago to which Israel has declined to comply. So the deadlock on trying to get a two-thirds majority on any resolution to force Israel out of the Gaza and Aqaba areas seems to be complete at the moment. There's always a chance for a break if the Arabs give in to the American desire to bypass sanctions. But it's possible that no resolution at all can be agreed upon here at the UN. That is - no resolution which could command a two-thirds majority. And remember - all member states are carefully canvassed before a resolution is actually introduced, in order to preserve the prestige of a big power introducing it.

If this is the case, then Israel will continue trying to get its assurances against attack elsewhere than from the UN Assembly.

After spending hours with Dag Hammarskjold, the Israel delegates found themselves in disagreement with the UN Secretary General over his interpreations of Egypt's legal rights in the Gaza Strip under the old armistice agreements. So Ambassador Abba Eban and Foreign Minister Golda Meir broke their appointment with Dag Hammarskjold and went to Washington to see if they couldn't work out some practical arrangement with Secretary of State Dulles.

The latest word reaching us here is that the Israelis are hopeful that American assurances about freedom of passage through the Gulf of Aqaba can be formalized, to use a diplomatic expression. And then, they say, they'd be willing to withdraw from the Strait. But as for the Gaza Strip, whether Egypt has any legal rights there or not under the armistice agreement, the Israeli diplomats say they refuse to permit a nation, which says she's still at war with them, to take it over. And that's the crux of the matter. Israel's main objective appears to be a peace settlement with Egypt. And while this reporter is informed that Egypt doesn't feel too strongly about possessing the Gaza Strip, like therest of the Arab States they are strongly against a peace settlement with Israel. Egyptians know that the Gaza Strip cannot be defended, and that its refugees could be turned into a source of trouble for them, too, from Israel or from rival Iraq.

But there's one thing on which all the Arab States agree, and that is that Israel should not be recognized with a peace settlement. Not at least along her present frontiers, which have been expanded of course since the Arab defeat in 1948.

Now, the Arabs still maintain that any UN settlement of the Gaza Strip, without Egypt in control, would constitute a reward to Israel for its invasion. And further, that such a settlement would touch upon the entire Palestine question. And before that can be settled, they say, they want some iron-clad guarantees of their own. Presumably, they want to go back to the original UN Palestine map, which divided the British mandate into separate Jewish and Arab States.

So the rest of the Arab States seem to be stiffening Egypt's back against giving the Gaza Strip over to UN control. But it's rumored here at the UN that Egypt is wavering because her own domestic economy is getting shaky.

This is Larry Lesueur. Now, back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Middle East deadlock continues. The American plan to submit a compromise resolution to the United Nations General Assembly today failed to materialize. The General Assembly cancelled its afternoon meeting.

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles conferred with Israeli Ambassador Eban and with the foreign minister of Israel, Mrs. Golda Meir. A State Department spokesman said, "The United States has not altered in any respect the position as set forth by the President on February 20. On that date, Mr. Eisenhower said the United Nations has "no choice" but to exert pressure on Israel, if it does not withdraw from Egyptian territory. (In a few minutes we will have a report on these developments, direct from United Nations headquarters.)

President Eisenhower and French Premier Mollet decided to continue their talks a third day. They will hold a final meeting tomorrow morning, and then issue a joint communique. In a speech today before the National Press Club, Mollet said that both he and the President acknowledged past disagreements over the Middle East but now recognize a common purpose --the restoration of lasting peace. Settlement of the Middle East problem, he said, "requires that the free world engage in a joint long-range policy." Mollet said Israel is entitled to have its "territorial integrity" guaranteed.

The heads of four Arab states said tonight that they will work for the immediate...and unconditional...withdrawal of Israeli forces to the lines laid down in the 1949 armistice. The four Arab leaders -- President Kuwatly of Syria, King Hussein of Jordan, President Nasser of Egypt, and King Saud of Saudi Arabia -- have been meeting in the past three days in Cairo. The final communique said they rejected all attempts to reduce Egypt's "sovereignty and rights" over the Suez Canal..and supported Egypt's demand for compensation from Britain, France and Israel for damage incurred by their attacks. The Arab leaders also declared their support of the independence movement in Algeria. The Arab countries, they said, should depend on their own defenses "outside the sphere of foreign pacts." This would appear, on the basis of early reports, to be the closest the Arab leaders came to criticizing American Middle East policy.

Israel charges that Egyptian raiders last night kidnapped the mayor of Raffa, a small town in the Gaza Strip, and wounded his wife. The mayor himself is Egyptian, but had cooperated with the Israeli authorities. A few hours after his capture, he managed to escape.

An unusual incident took place today in the Polish parliament. A non-Communist member stood up and denounced the Premier as the man"responsible for all the abuse of power during the Stalinist period." The statement was greeted by angry shouts and some applause. And the presiding officer called a recess. The Premier submitted his resignation to parliament early this month, after the Polish elections. But he was promptly returned to office.

The United Nations Political Committee today rejected Russian charges that the United States had tried to subvert Communist governments. The Soviet motion was defeated by a vote of 53 to 8, with 11 abstentions.

The United States today called home its minister to Hungary, Edward T. Wailes. On instructions from Washington, Wailes has refused to present his credentials to the Kadar government. He arrived in Budapest on November 2nd, when Premier Nagy was still in power. In announcing the recall, the State Department rejected Hungarian charges that Wailes engaged in activities "irreconcilable with interantional practice." It disclosed that the Kadar government asked the United States last month to recall Wailes, unless the credentials were presented. The legation will continue to function under the direction of Spencer Barnes, the charge d'affaires.

Samuel Hawkins, of Oklahoma City, today became the seventh American turncoat to leave Red China since the end of the Korean War. Twenty-one Americans captured in Korea chose to live in Red China. One reportedly died of tuberculosis; thirteen are still there. Hawkins told reporters in Hong Kong today that he wanted to come home for some time..but that the final straw was the Russian intervention in Hungary. He said, "It seemed to me like wanton killing." Hawkins blamed his original decision to stay with the Communists on "youthful ignorance." He was 18 at the time.

In Congress today, Democratic Senator Russell proposed that the President's Middle East resolution be stripped of the provision authorizing economic aid. The Administration, he said, has failed to tell Congress how a single dollar of the aid money would be spent. He said, "I refuse to abandon my congressional responsibility to buy a pig in a poke."

A House judiciary subcommittee today approved President Eisenhower's civil rights program, and the full committee will act on its next week. Minority Leader Joseph Martin predicted yesterday that the House will approve the program around March 15th. But the big test will come in the Senate.

A special Senate committee continued its hearings on alleged racketeering in the international teamsters union. Committee Chairman McClellan said the brother on one of the witnesses, James Elkins, was threatened last night in a telephone call. He said the F.B.I. is investigating. Elkins a Portland Oregon gambler, testified further today. Elkins said that, in 1955, he was a front man for a combination of teamster union officials and racketeers who, he said, were trying to take over vice operations in Portland. Elkins testified that the union helped defeat Mayor Fred Peterson of Portland. The mayor, he said, had refused for fire a police chief who was interfering with the vice operations.

Now, for that report direct from United Nations headquarters, here is my colleague, Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: Prospects for a settlement of the Palestine crisis are growing dimmer tonight here at the UN. But there's still some hopes that the crisis can be resolved in Washington within the next 48-hours. Here at the UN, American Ambassador Lodge has worked long, strenuously but fruitlessly with India's Krishna Menon, to try to find a middle-of-the-road formula that would be acceptable to the Arab-Asian States. The Americans had envisaged a call to Israel to withdraw from the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba within 72-hours or face undefined measures. In the meantime, it was hoped, that in the 48-hours it would take to pass such a resolution and the 72 hour deadline Israel might be able to work out with Dag Hammarskjold or with Washington the assurances she demands in order to be able to withdraw voluntarily and gracefully. But the Arabs refuse to buy anything short of a resolution incorporating their own demand for stiff economic and military penalties against Israel if she fails to withdraw.

This could still be a bargaining point on the part of the Arabs. But they haven't given in thus far, although they now realize that their own demand for punishing sanctions against Israel cannot summon enough votes at the UN to gain the necessary two-thirds majority. But if the American resolution can't get the support of the Arab-Asians, it won't be able to pass either. And neither will the Canadian proposal to turn the Gaza Strip over to the UN. So the Arabs are being told tonight that if they don't agree to the American formula avoiding sanctions, they probably won't get any UN actions at all and they'll have to rest their case on the ambiguous resolutions of three weeks ago to which Israel has declined to comply. So the deadlock on trying to get a two-thirds majority on any resolution to force Israel out of the Gaza and Aqaba areas seems to be complete at the moment. There's always a chance for a break if the Arabs give in to the American desire to bypass sanctions. BUt it's possible that no resolution at all can be agreed upon here at the UN. That is - no resolution which could command a two-thirds majority. And remember - all member states are carefully canvassed before a resolution is actually introduced, in order to preserve the prestige of a big power introducing it.

If this is the case, then Israel will continue trying to get its assurances against attack elsewhere than from the UN Assembly.

After spending hours with Dag Hammarskjold, the Israel delegates found themselves in disagreement with the U N Secretary General over his interpretations of Egypt's legal rights in the Gaza Strip under the old armistice agreements. So Ambassador Abba Eban and Foreign Minister Golda Meir broke their appointment with Dag Hammarskjold and went to Washington to see if they couldn't work out some practical arrangement with Secretary of State Dulles.

The latest word reaching us here is that the Israelis are hopeful that American assurances about freedom of passage through the Gulf of Aqaba can be formalized, to use a diplomatic expression. And then, they say, they'd be willing to withdraw from the Strait. But as for the Gaza Strip, whether Egypt has any legal rights there or not under the armistice agreement, the Israeli diplomats say they refuse to permit a nation, which says she's still at war with them, to take it over. And that's the crux of the matter. Israel's main objective appears to be a peace settlement with Egypt. And while this reporter is informed that Egypt doesn't feel too strongly about possessing the Gaza Strip, like the rest of the Arab States they are strongly against a peace settlement with Israel. Egyptians know that the Gaza Strip cannot be defended, and that its refugees could be turned into a source of trouble for them, too, from Israel or from rival Iraq.

But there's one thing on which all the Arab States agree, and that is that Israel should not be recognized with a peace settlement. Not at least along her present frontiers, which have been expended of course since the Arab defeat in 1948.

Now, the Arabs still maintain that any UN settlement of the Gaza Strip, without Egypt in control, would constitute a reward to Israel for its invasion. And further, that such a settlement would touch upon the entire Palestine question. And before that can be settled, they say, they want some iron-clad guarantees of their own. Presumably, they want to go back to the original UN Palestine map, which divided the British mandate se arate and Arab States .

So the rest of the Arab States seem to be stiffening Egypt's back against giving the Gaza Strip over to UN control. But it's rumored here at the UN that Egypt is wavering because her own domestic economy is getting shaky.

This is Larry Lesueur. Now, back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I"ll be back in a momemt with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: It has been argued that if Israel withdrew now without conditions it would thereby "put itself on the side of the angels." No doubt there is truth in this. But James Thurber once made an observation on the subject of "fools rushing in where an els fear to tread." The angels are all in heaven ", Thurber said, "but few of the fools are dead."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Feb. 28, 1957

This is the news:

Israel says it will announce its plans for withdrawing from the Gaza Strip, and the Gulf of Aqaba, in the United Nations General Assembly tomorrow. The Israeli ambassador, Abba Eban, gave this assurance in Washington this afternoon after another talk with Secretary of State Dulles. He did not give details. ~~He predicted, however, that tomorrow's announcement "will cause widespread satisfaction among those people interested in bringing peace and security and non-belligerency to the Middle East." The agreement reportedly~~ But, reportedly, the agreement calls for replacement of Israeli forces in the two disputed areas by United Nations troops. In the case of Gaza, the U.N. force would undertake the task of administration, as well as security. ~~There are reports circulating in the United Nations that~~ It is also expected that the Israeli announcement tomorrow will be followed by declarations by other countries, including the United States and France, supporting the principle of free passage through the Gulf of Aqaba.

In the General Assembly this afternoon, Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi complained that Egypt was barely consulted during the negotiations in Washington. Anything less that a pledge of "immediate, complete and unconditional withdrawal," Fawzi said, would be "a mockery."

In Congress today, Senate Leader Johnson said he hopes for a showdown vote tomorrow on a proposal to drop the economic aid provision from President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. Secretary Dulles reassured the Senate today, by letter, that the Administration has no intention of undertaking a vast new spending program in the Middle East.

President Eisenhower and French Premier Mollet today expressed their "common conviction" that Middle East problems can be solved "by peaceful means in conformity with the principles of justice and international law." The expression was contained in a joint communique ending three days of top-level talks. The communique stated... with regard to the Suez Canal... that the president and prime minister "reaffirmed their adherence to the six requirements unanimously adopted by the Security Council and accepted by Egypt last October. These requirements included "free transit through the canal without discrimination and insulation of the operation of the canal from the politics of any country." The communique said Mr. Mollet explained the "marked progress" made toward the creation of a European atomic community and toward a common European market. And it spoke of "the vital importance of the North Atlantic Pact as a basic element of free world defense." ~~The two leaders agreed that "a common approach" must be made with regard to the Communist threat in Europe and in other parts of the world.~~

After his [redacted] meeting with the President this morning, Mollet flew to New York. In a New York speech, he again advocated a community of European and African states. [redacted]

Vice President Nixon left Washington today on an 18-thousand-mile tour that will take him to eight African countries. Nixon said at the airport that if Africa "goes on the side of the free nations, it could be decisive in the struggle between freedom and slavery." [redacted]

The religious parties of Indonesia today rejected President Sukarno's plan to abandon the western democratic system. At the same time, [redacted] thousands of Communists and Communist sympathizers demonstrated outside the presidential palace in favor of the proposal. Sukarno [redacted] wants to turn the reins of government over to a national council, with veto power over parliament. [redacted]

West German Chancellor Adenauer has agreed to discuss expansion of trade with Russia. Adenauer voiced his agreement in a reply to Premier Bulganin's letter of February 8. The chancellor also agreed to negotiate the opening of consulates to facilitate the repatriation of Germans held in Russia since World War Two. He rejected Bulganin's proposal for direct talks between East and West Germany on unification. Adenauer said again unification must come through free, all-German elections.

~~And he defended the alliance of his government with the West. Russia, he said, has no [illegible] "[illegible]."~~

The puppet premier of Hungary... Janos Kádar... today reorganized his government. Ferenc Muennich (FEH-RENTS), who has been serving as both interior minister and minister of defense, becomes first deputy prime minister. ~~His two old jobs... which he combined... have not been filled separately.~~ There are also new ministers of culture and health. Kadar himself becomes head of a new five-man party secretariat. The Budapest radio says this was done to provide "strict, central leadership."

The House Ways and Means Committee voted today to authorize the Treasury Department to raise the interest rate on U.S. Savings Bonds to three and a half percent. The Treasury does not plan, at this time, to pay more than three and a quarter percent interest---an increase of one-quarter percent over the present rate. If finally approved, the new rate would be retroactive to February first.

~~Postmaster General Summerfield told the House Post Office Committee today that the postal savings system has outlived its usefulness and should be scrapped. "Today," he said, "funds are invested with confidence in U.S. bonds, and in government guaranteed banks, savings and loans deposits."~~

The Agriculture Department reports a 2 percent drop in farm prices in the month ending February 15th. In the same period, prices farmers have to pay went up nearly one percent.

The special Senate committee investigating labor practices today ordered contempt proceedings against a teamsters union official who refused to answer questions. The official was Frank Malloy, business agent for Teamsters Local 223 in Portland, Oregon. Malloy had been named by James Elkins, a Portland gambler, as a member of a ring that tried to take over the city's gambling operations. El~~kins testified today that~~ racketeers supported by the teamsters union used picket lines, in an effort to monopolize pinball operations throughout Oregon.

Edward R. Murrow: February 28, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

It would be helpful if someone would invent a device - a kind of political steam gauge - that would register the precise status at any moment of the conflict between the totalitarian communists and what we call the free world. This struggle gets into the news chiefly through detached events, and it is not easy to know ~~how much the communists are gaining and~~ who is winning or loosing what we ~~are losing~~.

A number of events now in the news point to very considerable communist gains. An instance came in the conference of Arab leaders in Cairo, where King Saud, fresh from his talks in Washington, tried to line up his colleagues behind a strong anti-communist declaration. He did not get it. President Shukri of Syria resisted, saying it would give offense to the Soviet Union. President Nasser was reported to have been on the fence, King Hussein of Jordan on the side of Saud.

Shukri's stand was not unexpected. The Soviet Union has made perceptible gains in Syria. It has supplied arms, and aspires to be allowed a military base in another year or two. If it gets it, the Russians would at last have the foothold on the Mediterranean which has been their objective for more than a century. That would be an enormous communist victory. The victory is still not won. But it is significant that Nasser, who already has Communist arms, should have been on the fence on a strong anti-Soviet declaration, and that the Syrian president should speak out on the Kremlin's side. The Soviet Union is making headway.

In another area of news reactionary communists can be seen regaining the ground they lost in the brief hiatus of anti-Stalinism in Soviet policy. It will be remembered that the first beneficiary of the anti-Stalinist twist was Yugoslavia. Tito, the man who had defied Stalin, was brought back garlanded to Moscow, feasted as a prodigal son and overwhelmed with gifts. He was promised 250 million dollars' worth of Soviet credits.

Now all of that has gone like the bloom ~~on the leaf.~~ withone by Frost x Tito is out again, out of favor and out of money. His foreign minister reported to the Yugoslav parliament this week that the Kremlin had cancelled the 175 million-dollar hydro-electric and aluminum project promised in August, and all Yugoslavia is getting is 18 million dollars' worth of credits and 7 millions' worth of machinery.

Another victory for reactionary communism comes from Poland. The man who fought Gomulka on behalf of the Stalinists in Warsaw last October has now been made deputy premier in the first ministry of the Gomulka regime. He is Zenon Nowak. Gomulka himself insisted on Nowak's retention and told his coalition colleagues they had to accept him. Two other notable Stalinists were dropped, and it had been confidently expected that Nowak also would be out. But Gomulka made him deputy premier instead.

This does not mean that Gomulka is turning Stalinist. It means simply that he is trying his utmost to save his revolution from the rising reaction in the Kremlin. He is in a delicate position. He must hope that patience and tact may do his regime more good at this stage than revolutionary abruptness. But in terms of the power of the communist reaction the event is revealing.

There is news of another part of the world that may be even more significant as an indication of rising communist strength. Indonesia so far has been listed among the world's democracies. With its population of 82 million, it ranked as the third largest democracy, behind India and the United States and ahead of Japan. Now Indonesia is moving out of the democratic column. It is preparing to end party rule and set up a central authority in which communists will have representation.

President Sukarno calls it "guided" democracy, which of course is semantic nonsense. He finds that the democratic processes so far tried have been "imported" and are the wrong system. This is despite the fact that he toured this country recently and saw what democracy could do. Subsequently he visited Red China and saw how convenient it was to have a strong central authority. In the meantime the inexperienced Indonesians were not doing too well in their first attempts at self-government, and were failing notably to establish the authority of the state in all parts of the vast island republic. That made the Chinese system particularly alluring.

So today Indonesia is in transition. The central authority is still to be worked out. It is promised that the communists - who were the fourth strongest party in the last election - will not be allowed to dominate it. But they would be on the inside, and once they are given this foothold, they know how to seize the rest of the power. At any rate it is likelier that they will do that than that the democratic parties ever will regain full control.

The old hymn advises us to "count our blessings"..it may be usefull occasionally to also count the gains being made by our enemies

George Ryan

Word for Today

There is [redacted] no end to the Cold War. On many fronts... in Europe, and in Asia.... [redacted] the political, economic and ideological contest continues. A political barometer is needed to give us our status as of this moment. This is good to know. But Oliver Wendell Holmes said, "The great thing is not where we stand, but in what direction we are moving."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 1, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Israel today announced its readiness to withdraw from the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. The announcement was made by the Israeli foreign minister Mrs. Golda Meir. For that story, we switch to United Nations headquarters, and my collegaue, Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: The question before the world tonight is whether the Palestine crisis is really over or whether the Afro-Asians and Russia will make a last ditch attempt to torpedo the arrangements. According to the plan, presented to the UN today by the Foreign Minister of Israel and endorsed warmly by the United States and France and by the UN Secretary General, indirectly - the Israely withdrawal will automatically bring tranquility into the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba when the UN force deploys itself there, to remain until peace is assured. But the Arab states have underscored their stand that the UN force can only supervise an Israeli withdrawal and cannot be used to impose a peace setllement. And India's Krishna - Menon warned earlier today, that if the UN force were required to remain in the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba until a peace settlement is reached, then India would withdraw its troops from that UN Emergency Force. And if India withdraws its large contingent from the force, it would probably be followed out by Indonesia and Yugoslavia, thus reducing the UN Emergency Force by a full third and leaving the remaining Canadians and Scandanavians in a weakened, if not exposed situation.

Israel's Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, said explicitly that it was Israel's expectation that it was a UN responsibility to administer the Gaza Strip after taking over from Israel, and to remain there until there is a peace settlement or definitive agreement on the Gaza Strip's future. Mrs. Meir said Israel not only reserved the right of self-defense but was placing her alliance on the vigilance of the world community to enjoy its basic rights of freedom from attack and freedom to said international waterways in peace. And then she added to her carefully prepared statement a few words that wrung applause from everyone in the packed UN Assembly Hall.

MEIR: Now, Mr. President, may I add these few words to the states in the Middle East area and, more specifically, to the neighbors of Israel. We all come from one area, a very ancient one, the hills and valleys of the regions have been witnesses to many wars and many conflicts. But that is not the only thing that characterizes that part of the world, from which we came. That is also that part of the world that has given a code of ethics to all humanity. In our countries in the entire regions, all our peoples are anxious and in need of a higher standard of living, of great programs of development and of progress. Can we, from now on, all of us turn a new leaf and instead of fighting among each other, can we all, united, fight poverty, disease, illiteracy? Can we, is it possible for us, to put all our efforts, all our energy, for one single purpose, the betterment and progress and development of all our lands and all our peoples?

I can here pledge the government and the people of Israel. In this united effort, there is no limit to what we are prepared to contribute so that we can all together live to see a day of hapiness for our peoples, and again from that region, a great contribution to peace and hapiness for all humanity. I thank you, Mr. President.

LESUEUR: If I said that everyone in that emotion charged UN Assembly hall applauded Mrs. Meir's concluding words, I must now point out that the Russian delegation and the Arabs did not. The Arabs sat with glum faces throughout today's historic UN session. One of their worst fears was apparently realized when the UN Secretary General, his voice quivering with emotion, apparently endorced the Israeli stand and announced that he was urgently instructing the UN Commander in Chief to meet with the Israeli Commander and to arrange to deploy the UN Force in the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba, following the Israeli withdrawal. The Arabs could only gather from this that Dag Hammarskjold foresaw no legal obstructions in the previous Assembly resolutions to the Israeli interpretation that the UN Force can remain in these two vital points until peace is sasured.

But following Krishna-Menon's ferewell admonition to the Arab-Asian states, to place their trust in God but keep your powder dry, the Arab states desisted from commenting on today's events. Except for Egypt's Mahmoud Fawzi's statement that Egypt had not changed its stand, that Israel's withdrawal must be unconditional. There's no doubt that the Arabs believe that Israel's assurance that the UN Force will occupy the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba until peace is assured is a political condition.

But just how the Arab states or Egypt can resist the UN Force's continued deployment in Gaza or Aqaba is not easy to see. It seems unlikely that they would attack the UN Force to drive it out, or risk going to war with France and the maritime states over freedom of passage through the Gulf of Aqaba. Their last reliance on blocking what appears to be a complete psychological victory for Israel will have to be on India's warning that it might leave the UN Force, if it's used as a political army. But, as many observers pointed out, when the UN Army was first formed, it was really a political force from its first day of creation and acceptance by Egypt.

But one of the bitterest pills that Egypt must swallow is that while the UN Force will be deployed on Egyptian soil in the Gulf of Aqaba and on Egyptian-claimed territory in the Gaza Strip, there has been no mention of it being deployed on Israeli soil, except on the armistice line, which would make the Israeli victory in the field and over the conference table, just about complete. Here now is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles told the representatives of nine Arab countries that the Israeli agreement involves "no promises or concessions whatsoever to Israel by the United States." Dulles also denied the existence of any "secret understanding" with Israel.

In Tel Aviv, the right-wing Freedom Party has called for nationwide demonstrations tomorrow against the decision taken by the Israeli government. The Freedom Party is the second largest party in Israel. It has demanded all along that Israel maintain its control of Gaza and the Gulf of Aqaba. The Freedom Party is not represented in the Ben Gurion cabinet, but other parties which are, are threatening to quit the government.

The International News Service says the Arab League has been able by means of a blacklist to keep major oil companies from trading with Israel. The Arab blacklist is reported to have affected oil interests, not only in the United States, but in at least 16 other countries.

According to I.N.S. the Arab League has blacklisted at least 150 tankers which ingored an Arab warning not to trade with Israel. THe blacklist bars these ships from Arab ports and, hence, from all Arab oil. The Israeli economics minister reports that, as a consequence, 95 persent of the American oil companies will not sell to his government.

In this country..in Congress.. Democratic Leader Johnson says the Senate now plans to vote tomorrow on the amendment that would drop the economic provision from President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. That amendment..introduced by Democratic Senator Russell..has run into increasing opposition from his fellow Democrats.

Vice President Nixon arrived in Morocco today..the first stop on his three-week African tour. The vice President and Mrs. Nixon were warmly greeted by the crown prince and a crowd estimated at 200-thousand. In the afternoon, they had tea with the Sultan -- Mohammed the Fifth.

The French reported hard fighting today in the mountains, a hundred miles west of Algiers. The action began last night, when a French column was ambushed by Algerian rebel forces. At least 20 French soldiers were killed.

The Soviet government today accused the late Andrei Vishinsky of violating the "basic concepts of Soviet justice" during the days of Stalin. Twenty years ago, Vishinsky was prosecutor in the Moscow purge trials. The government newspaper Izvestia now says he made "many serious mistakes", including too much reliance on confessions. Vishinsky became foreign minister under Stalin, and served as Russia's permanent representative at the United Nations. He died in 1954.

President Eisenhower today asked Harold Stassen, his special assistant on disarmament, to report..from now on..directly to Secretary of State Dulles. Stassen has been reporting directly to the President. Dulles told reporters the change was made "in view of the fact that the disarmement program now is primarily in the phase of negotiations with foreign governments." Stassen keeps the title of special assistant to the President. He said today he is "pleased" with the new arrangement..and that he has no plans to resign.

Secretary of the Navy Thomas did resign today. President Eisenhower accepted the resignation with "very real regret." Thomas gave no specific reason for his action. He is being succeeded by the undersecretary of the Navy, Thomas Gates.

The President..who has been troubled with a cough since Inauguration Day... told John L. Lewis today that he would like to get away for awhile to a warm, dry climate. Mr. Eisenhower mentioned Tuscon, Arizona. Lewis had called at the White House with other members of the President's advisory committee on foreign aid. The committee recently completed an on-the-spot survey in 18 countries. And the report on its findings will be made public on Tuesday. White House aides say there are no definite plans for the President to go to Arizona. (Mr. Eisenhower is suffering from inflamation of the trachea, or windpipe. His personal physician, General Snyder, says that in the past week his condition has improved.)

Playwright Arthur Miller pleaded innocent today to charges of contempt of Congress. Last summer, Miller refused..on grounds of conscience..to give the House Un-American Activities Committee the names of Communist writers with whom he attended several meetings in 1947. He testified that he, himself, had never been under Communist discipline. Trial has been set for May 13th.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans today declared the school segregation laws of Louisiana unconstitutional. The court ordered New Orleans to desegregate its public schools "with all deliberate speed."

This is Ed Murrow. I"ll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The agreement with Israel was the fruit of secret diplomacy, conducted patiently over a period of weeks. Benjamin Franklin said, "Energy and persistence conquer all things." However, to be effective, the agreement must still have Arab approval. And this recalls another Franklin proverb. "Applause", he said, "waits on success."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., March 1, 1957

This is the news:

Israel today announced its readiness to withdraw from the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. The announcement was made by the Israeli foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meir. For that story, we switch to United Nations headquarters, and my colleague, Larry Lesueur.

(Lesueur runs, including Meir tape,
(for approx 5:30. Returns on cue:
("And now back to Ed Murrow."

In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles told the representatives of nine Arab countries, that the Israeli agreement involves "no promises or concessions whatsoever to Israel by the United States." Dulles also denied the existence of any "secret understanding" with Israel.

—)

In Tel Aviv, the right-wing Freedom Party has called for nationwide demonstrations tomorrow against the decision taken by the Israeli government. The Freedom Party is the second largest party in Israel. It has demanded all along that Israel maintain its control of Gaza and the Gulf of Aqaba. The Freedom Party is not represented in the Ben Gurion cabinet, but other parties which are are threatening to quit the government.

The International News Service says the Arab League has been able... by means of a blacklist... to keep major oil companies from trading with Israel. The Arab blacklist is reported to have affected oil interests, not only in the United States, but in at least 16 other countries. According to I.N.S., the Arab League has blacklisted at least 150 tankers which ignored an Arab warning not to trade with Israel. The blacklist bars these ships from Arab ports and, hence, from all Arab oil. The Israeli economics minister reports that, as a consequence, 95 percent of the American oil companies will not sell to his government.

In this country... in Congress... Democratic Leader Johnson says the Senate now plans to vote tomorrow on an amendment that would drop the economic aid provision from President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. That amendment... introduced by Democratic Senator Russell... has run into increasing opposition from his fellow Democrats.

Vice President Nixon arrived in Morocco today... the first stop on his three-week African tour. The vice president and Mrs. Nixon were warmly greeted by the crown prince and a crowd estimated at 200-thousand. In the afternoon, they had tea with the sultan---Mohammed the Fifth.

The French reported hard fighting today in the mountains, a hundred miles west of Algiers. The action began last night, when a French column was ambushed by Algerian rebel forces. At least 20 French soldiers were killed.

The Soviet government today accused the late Andrei Vishinsky of violating the "basic concepts of Soviet justice" during the days of Stalin. Twenty years ago, Vishinsky was prosecutor in the Moscow purge trials. The government newspaper Izvestia now says he made "many serious mistakes", including too much reliance on confessions. Vishinsky became foreign minister under Stalin, and served as Russia's permanent representative at the United Nations. He died in 1954.

President Eisenhower today asked Harold Stassen, his special assistant on disarmament, to report... from now on... directly to Secretary of State Dulles. Stassen has been reporting directly to the President. Dulles told reporters the change was made "in view of the fact that the disarmament program now is primarily in the phase of negotiations with foreign governments." Stassen keeps the title of special assistant to the President. He said today he is "pleased" with the new arrangement... and that he has no plans to resign.

Secretary of the Navy Thomas did resign today. President Eisenhower accepted the resignation with "very real regret." Thomas gave no specific reason for his action. He is being succeeded by the undersecretary of the Navy, Thomas Gates.

The President... who has been troubled with a cough since Inauguration Day... told John L. Lewis today that he would like to get away for awhile to a warm, dry climate. Mr. Eisenhower mentioned Tuscon, Arizona. Lewis had called at the White House with other members of the President's advisory committee on foreign aid. The committee recently completed an on-the-spot survey in 18 countries. And the report on its findings will be made public on Tuesday. White House aides say there are no definite plans for the President to go to Arizona. (Mr. Eisenhower is suffering from inflammation of the trachea, or windpipe. His personal physician, General Snyder, says that in the past week his condition has improved).

Playwright Arthur Miller pleaded innocent today to charges of contempt of Congress. Last summer, Miller refused... on grounds of conscience... to give the House Un-American Activities Committee the names of Communist writers with whom he attended several meetings in 1947. He testified that he, himself, had never been under Communist discipline. Trial has been set for May 13th.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans today declared the school segregation laws of Louisiana unconstitutional. The court ordered New Orleans to desegregate its public schools "with all deliberate speed."

Gene Bryan

Word for Today

The agreement with Israel was the fruit of secret diplomacy, conducted patiently over a period of weeks. Benjamin Franklin said, "Energy and persistence conquer all things." However, to be effective, the agreement must still have Arab approval. And this recalls another Franklin proverb. "Applause," he said, "waits on success."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

FRIDAY, MARCH 1, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: The announcement was made by the Israeli Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir. For that story, we switch to United Nations headquarters and my colleague, Larry LeSeueur.

LE SEUEUR: The question before the world tonight is whether the Palestine crisis is really over or whether the Afro-Asians and Russia will make a last ditch attempt to torpedo the arrangements. According to the plan, presented to the UN today by the Foreign Minister of Israel and endorsed warmly by the United States and France and by the UN Sec. Gen., indirectly - the Israeli withdrawal will automatically bring tranquility into the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba when the UN force deploys itself there, to remain until peace is assured. But the Arab states have underscored their stand that the UN force can only supervise an Israeli withdrawal and cannot be used to impose a peace settlement. And India's Krishna-Menon warned earlier today, that if the UN force were required to remain in the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba until a peace settlement is reached, then India would withdraw its troops from that UN Emergency Force. And if India withdraws its large contingent from the Force, it would probably followed out by Indonesia and Yugoslavia, thus reducing the UN Emergency Force by a full third and leaving the remaining Canadians and Scandanavians in a weakened, if not exposed, situation.

Israel's Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, said explicitly that it was Israel's expectation that it was a UN responsibility to administer the Gaza Strip after taking over from Israel, and to remain there until there is a peace settlement or definitive agreement on the Gaza Strip's future. Mrs. Meir said Israel not only reserved the right of self-defense but was placing her alliance on the vigilance of the world community to enjoy its basic rights of freedom from attack and freedom to sail international waterways in peace. And then she added to her carefully prepared statement a few words that wrung applause from everyone in the packed UN Assembly hall.

MEIR: Now, Mr. President, may I add these few words to the states in the Middle East area and, more specifically, to the neighbors of Israel. We all come from an area, a very ancient one, the hills and the valleys of the regions have been witnesses to many wars and many conflicts. But that is not the only thing that characterizes that part of the world, from which we can. That is also that part of the world of ancient cultures. That is that part of the world that has given to humanity three great religions. That is also that part of the world that has given a code of ethics to all humanity. In our countries in the entire regions, all our peoples are anxious and in need of a higher standard of living, of great programs of development and of progress. Can we, from now on, all of us turn a new leaf and instead of fighting among each other, can we all, united, fight poverty, disease, illiteracy? Can we, is it possible for us, to put all our efforts, all our energy, for one single purpose - the betterment and progress and development of all our lands and all our peoples?

I can here pledge the government and the people of Israel. In this united effort, there is no limit to what we are prepared to contribute so that we can all together live to see a day of happiness for our peoples, and again from that region, a great contribution to peace and happiness for all humanity. I thank you, Mr. President.

LE SEUEUR: If I said that everyone in that emotion-charged UN Assembly hall applauded Mrs. Meir's concluding words, I must now point out that the Russian delegation and the Arabs did not. The Arabs sat with glum faces throughout today's historic UN session. One of their worst fears was apparently realized when the UN Sec. Gen., his voice quivering with emotion, apparently endorsed the Israeli stand and announced that he was urgently instructing the UN Commander in Chief to meet with the Israeli Commander and to arrange to deploy the UN Force in the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba, following the Israeli withdrawal. The Arabs could only gather from this that Dag Hammarksjold foresaw no legal obstructions in the previous Assembly resolutions to the Israeli interpretation that the UN Force can remain in these two vital points until peace is assured.

But following Krishna-Menon's farewell admonition to the Arab-Asian states, to place their trust in God but keep your powder dry, the Arab states desisted from commenting on today's events. Except for Egypt's Mahmoud Fawzi's statement that Egypt had not changed its stand, that Israel's withdrawal must be unconditional. There's no doubt that the Arabs believe that Israel's assurance that the UN Force will occupy the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba until peace is assured is a political condition.

But just how the Arab states or Egypt can resist the UN Force's continued deployment in Gaza or Aqaba is not easy to see. It seems unlikely that they would attack the UN Force to drive it out, or risk going to war with France and the maritime states over freedom of passage through the Gulf of Aqaba. Their last reliance on blocking what appears to be a complete psychological victory for Israel will have to be on India's warning that it might leave the UN Force, if it's used as a political army. But, as many observers pointed out, when the UN army was first formed, it was really a political force from its first day of creation and acceptance by Egypt.

But one of the bitterest pills that Egypt must swallow is that while the UN Force will be deployed on Egyptian soil in the Gulf of Aqaba and on Egyptian-claimed territory in the Gaza Strip, there has been no mention of it being deployed on Israeli soil, except on the armistice line, which would make the Israeli victory in the field and over the conference table, just about complete. Here now is Edward R. Murrow.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

FRIDAY, MARCH 1, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: The announcement was made by the Israeli Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir. For that story, we switch to United Nations headquarters and my colleague, Larry LeSueur.

LE SUEUR: The question before the world tonight is whether the Palestine crisis is really over or whether the Afro-Asians and Russia will make a last ditch attempt to torpedo the arrangements. According to the plan, presented to the UN today by the Foreign Minister of Israel and endorsed warmly by the United States and France and by the UN Sec. Gen., indirectly - the Israeli withdrawal will automatically bring tranquility into the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba when the UN force deploys itself there, to remain until peace is assured. But the Arab states have underscored their stand that the UN force can only supervise an Israeli withdrawal and cannot be used to impose a peace settlement. And India's Krishna-Menon warned earlier today, that if the UN force were required to remain in the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba until a peace settlement is reached, then India would withdraw its troops from that UN Emergency Force. And if India withdraws its large contingent from the Force, it would probably followed out by Indonesia and Yugoslavia, thus reducing the UN Emergency Force by a full third and leaving the remaining Canadians and Scandanavians in a weakened, if not exposed, situation.

Israel's Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, said explicitly that it was Israel's expectation that it was a UN responsibility to administer the Gaza Strip after taking over from Israel, and to remain there until there is a peace settlement or definitive agreement on the Gaza Strip's future. Mrs. Meir said Israel not only reserved the right of self-defense but was placing her alliance on the vigilance of the world community to enjoy its basic rights of freedom from attack and freedom to sail international waterways in peace. And then she added to her carefully prepared statement a few words that wrung applause from everyone in the packed UN Assembly hall.

MEIR: Now, Mr. President, may I add these few words to the states in the Middle East area and, more specifically, to the neighbors of Israel. We all come from an area, a very ancient one, the hills and the valleys of the regions have been witnesses to many wars and many conflicts. But that is not the only thing that characterizes that part of the world, from which we can. That is also that part of the world of ancient cultures. That is that part of the world that has given to humanity three great religions. That is also that part of the world that has given a code of ethics to all humanity. In our countries in the entire regions, all our peoples are anxious and in need of a higher standard of living, of great programs of development and of progress. Can we, from now on, all of us turn a new leaf and instead of fighting among each other, can we all, united, fight poverty, disease, illiteracy? Can we, is it possible for us, to put all our efforts, all our energy, for one single purpose - the betterment and progress and development of all our lands and all our peoples?

I can here pledge the government and the people of Israel. In this united effort, there is no limit to what we are prepared to contribute so that we can all together live to see a day of happiness for our peoples, and again from that region, a great contribution to peace and happiness for all humanity. I thank you, Mr. President.

LE SEUEUR: If I said that everyone in that emotion-charged UN Assembly hall applauded Mrs. Meir's concluding words, I must now point out that the Russian delegation and the Arabs did not. The Arabs sat with glum faces throughout today's historic UN session. One of their worst fears was apparently realized when the UN Sec. Gen., his voice quivering with emotion, apparently endorsed the Israeli stand and announced that he was urgently instructing the UN Commander in Chief to meet with the Israeli Commander and to arrange to deploy the UN Force in the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba, following the Israeli withdrawal. The Arabs could only gather from this that Dag Hammarksjold foresaw no legal obstructions in the previous Assembly resolutions to the Israeli interpretation that the UN Force can remain in these two vital points until peace is assured.

But following Krishna-Menon's farewell admonition to the Arab-Asian states, to place their trust in God but keep your powder dry, the Arab states desisted from commenting on today's events. Except for Egypt's Mahmoud Fawzi's statement that Egypt had not changed its stand, that Israel's withdrawal must be unconditional. There's no doubt that the Arabs believe that Israel's assurance that the UN Force will occupy the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba until peace is assured is a political condition.

But just how the Arab states or Egypt can resist the UN Force's continued deployment in Gaza or Aqaba is not easy to see. It seems unlikely that they would attack the UN Force to drive it out, or risk going to war with France and the maritime states over freedom of passage through the Gulf of Aqaba. Their last reliance on blocking what appears to be a complete psychological victory for Israel will have to be on India's warning that it might leave the UN Force, if it's used as a political army. But, as many observers pointed out, when the UN army was first formed, it was really a political force from its first day of creation and acceptance by Egypt.

But one of the bitterest pills that Egypt must swallow is that while the UN Force will be deployed on Egyptian soil in the Gulf of Aqaba and on Egyptian-claimed territory in the Gaza Strip, there has been no mention of it being deployed on Israeli soil, except on the armistice line, which would make the Israeli victory in the field and over the conference table, just about complete. Here now is Edward R. Murrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 1., 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Israel today announced its readiness to withdraw from the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. The announcement was made by the Israeli foreign minister Mrs, Golda Meir. For that story, we switch to United Nations headquarters, and my collegaue, Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: The question before the world tonight is whether the Palestine crisis is really over or whether the Afro-Asians and Russia will make a last ditch attempt to torpedo the arrangements. According to the plan, presented to the UN today by the Foreign Minister of Israel and endorsed warmly by the United States and France and by the UN Secretary General, indirectly - the Israely withdrawal will automatically bring tranquility into the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba when the UN force deploys itself there, to remain until peace is assured. But the Arab states have underscored their stand that the UN force can only supervise an Israeli withdrawal and cannot be used to impose a peace setllement. And India's Krishna - Menon warned earlier today, that if the UN force were required to remain in the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba until a peace settlement is reached, then India would withdraw its troops from that UN Emergency Force. And if India withdraws its large contingent from the force, it would probably be followed out by Indonesia and Yugoslavia, thus reducing the UN Emergency Force by a full third and leaving the remaining Canadians and Scandanavians in a weakened, if not exposed situation.

Israel's Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, said explicitly that it was Israel's expectation that it was a UN responsibility to administer the Gaza Strip after taking over from Israel, and to remain there until there is a peace settlement or definitive agreement on the Gaza Strip's future. Mrs. Meir said Israel not only reserved the right of self-defense but was placing her alliance on the vigilance of the world community to enjoy its basic rights of freedom from attack and freedom to said international waterways in peace. And then she added to her carefully prepared statement a few words that wrung applause from everyone in the packed UN Assembly Hall.

MEIR: Now, Mr. President, may I add these few words to the states in the Middle East area and, more specifically, to the neighbors of Israel. We all come from one area, a very ancient one, the hills and valleys of the regions have been witnesses to many wars and many conflicts. But that is not the only thing that characterizes that part of the world, from which we came. That is also that part of the world that has given a code of ethics to all humanity. In our countries in the entire regions, all our peoples are anxious and in need of a higher standard of living, of great programs of development and of progress. Can we, from now on, all of us turn a new leaf and instead of fighting among each other, can we all, united, fight poverty, disease, illiteracy? Can we, is it possible for us, to put all our efforts, all our energy, for one single purpose, the betterment and progress and development of all our lands and all our peoples?

I can here pledge the government and the people of Israel. In this united effort, there is no limit to what we are prepared to contribute so that we can all together live to see a day of hapiness for our peoples, and again from that region, a great contribution to peace and hapiness for all humanity. I thank you, Mr. President.

LESUEUR: If I said that everyone in that emotion charged UN Assembly hall applauded Mrs. Meir's concluding words, I must now point out that the Russian delegation and the Arabs did not. The Arabs sat with glum faces throughout today's historic UN session. One of their worst fears was apparently realized when the UN Secretary General, his voice quivering with emotion, apparently endorced the Israeli stand and announced that he was urgently instructing the UN Commander in Chief to meet with the Israeli Commander and to arrange to deploy the UN Force in the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba, following the Israeli withdrawal. The Arabs could only gather from this that Dag Hammarskjold foresaw no legal obstructions in the previous Assembly resolutions to the Israeli interpretation that the UN Force can remain in these two vital points until peace is sasured.

But following Krishna-Menon's ferewell admonition to the Arab-Asian states, to place their trust in God but keep your powder dry, the Arab states desisted from commenting on today's events. Except for Egypt's Mahmoud Fawzi's statement that Egypt had not changed its stand, that Israel's withdrawal must be unconditional. There's no doubt that the Arabs believe that Israel's assurance that the UN Force will occupy the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aqaba until peace is assured is a political condition.

But just how the Arab states or Egypt can resist the UN Force's continued deployment in Gaza or Aqaba is not easy to see. It seems unlikely that they would attack the UN Force to drive it out, or risk going to war with France and the maritime states over freedom of passage through the Gulf of Aqaba. Their last reliance on blocking what appears to be a complete psychological victory for Israel will have to be on India's warning that it might leave the UN Force, if it's used as a political army. But, as many observers pointed out, when the UN Army was first formed, it was really a political force from its first day of creation and acceptance by Egypt.

But one of the bitterest pills that Egypt must swallow is that while the UN Force will be deployed on Egyptian soil in the Gulf of Aqaba and on Egyptian-claimed territory in the Gaza Strip, there has been no mention of it being deployed on Israeli soil, except on the armistice line, which would make the Israeli victory in the field and over the conference table, just about complete. Here now is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles told the representatives of nine Arab countries that the Israeli agreement involves "no promises or concessions whatsoever to Israel by the United States." Dulles also denied the existence of any "secret understanding" with Israel.

In Tel Aviv, the right-wing Freedom Party has called for nationwide demonstrations tomorrow against the decision taken by the Israeli government. The Freedom Party is the second largest party in Israel. It has demanded all along that Israel maintain its control of Gaza and the Gulf of Aqaba. The Freedom Party is not represented in the Ben Gurion cabinet, but other parties which are, are threatening to quit the government.

The International News Service says the Arab League has been able by means of a blacklist to keep major oil companies from trading with Israel. The Arab blacklist is reported to have affected oil interests, not only in the United States, but in at least 16 other countries.

According to I.N.S. the Arab League has blacklisted at least 150 tankers which ingored an Arab warning not to trade with Israel. THe blacklist bars these ships from Arab ports and, hence, from all Arab oil. The Israeli economics minister reports that, as a consequence, 95 persent of the American oil companies will not sell to his government.

In this country..in Congress.. Democratic Leader Johnson says the Senate now plans to vote tomorrow on the amendment that would drop the economic provision from President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. That amendment..introduced by Democratic Senator Russell..has run into increasing opposition from his fellow Democrats.

Vice President Nixon arrived in Morocco today..the first stop on his three-week African tour. The vice President and Mrs. Nixon were warmly greeted by the crown prince and a crowd estimated at 200-thousand. In the afternoon, they had tea with the Sultan -- Mohammed the Fifth.

The French reported hard fighting today in the mountains, a hundred miles west of Algiers. The action began last night, when a French column was ambushed by Algerian rebel forces. At least 20 French soldiers were killed.

The Soviet government today accused the late Andrei Vishinsky of violating the "basic concepts of Soviet justice" during the days of Stalin. Twenty years ago, Vishinsky was prosecutor in the Moscow purge trials. The government newspaper Izvestia now says he made "many serious mistakes", including too much reliance on confessions. Vishinsky became foreign minister under Stalin, and served as Russia's permanent representative at the United Nations. He died in 1954.

President Eisenhower today asked Harold Stassen, his special assistant on disarmament, to report..from now on..directly to Secretary of State Dulles. Stassen has been reporting directly to the President. Dulles told reporters the change was made "in view of the fact that the disarmement program now is primarily in the phase of negotiations with foreign governments." Stassen keeps the title of special assistant to the President. He said today he is "pleased" with the new arrangement..and that he has no plans to resign.

Secretary of the Navy Thomas did resign today. President Eisenhower accepted the resignation with "very real regret." Thomas gave no specific reason for his action. He is being succeeded by the undersecretary of the Navy, Thomas Gates.

The President..who has been troubled with a cough since Inauguration Day... told John L. Lewis today that he would like to get away for awhile to a warm, dry climate. Mr. Eisenhower mentioned Tuscon, Arizona. Lewis had called at the White House with other members of the President's advisory committee on foreign aid. The committee recently completed an on-the-spot survey in 18 countries. And the report on its findings will be made public on Tuesday. White House aides say there are no definite plans for the President to go to Arizona. (Mr. Eisenhower is suffering from inflamation of the trachea, or windpipe. His personal physician, General Snyder, says that in the past week his condition has improved.)

Playwright Arthur Miller pleaded innocent today to charges of contempt of Congress. Last summer, Miller refused..on grounds of conscience..to give the House Un-American Activities Committee the names of Communist writers with whom he attended several meetings in 1947. He testified that he, himself, had never been under Communist discipline. Trial has been set for May 13th.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans today declared the school segregation laws of Louisiana unconstitutional. The court ordered New Orleans to desegregate its public schools "with all deliberate speed."

This is Ed Murrow. I"ll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The agreement with Israel was the fruit of secret diplomacy, conducted patiently over a period of weeks. Benjamin Franklin said, "Energy and persistence conquer all things." However, to be effective, the agreement must still have Arab approval. And this recalls another Franklin proverb. "Applause", he said, "waits on success."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., March 4, 1957

This is the news:

Prime Minister Ben Gurion today ordered the first step toward the "prompt withdrawal" of Israeli troops from the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Ben Gurion instructed his chief of staff, General Moshe Dayan, to confer at once with United Nations Commander Burns, on arrangements for carrying out the withdrawal. Burns met Dayan at the Lydda Airport, near Tel Aviv, for about an hour. It was then announced by General Burns that they had reached "full agreement in principle" on plans for the Israeli evacuation, and replacement by U.N. troops. He gave no details as to timetable or procedure.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion will make a statement tomorrow to the Israeli parliament, where he must undergo a vote of confidence because of the opposition of a number of parties. Today, a crowd of demonstrators... shouting slogans against the withdrawal... tried to stage a march on parliament, but was stopped by police. About 10 of the demonstrators were placed under arrest.

The agreement between General Burns and General Dayan was also announced in the United Nations General Assembly by the Israeli foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meir. "I am happy to state," she said, "that they have come to full agreement on the technical details." / The British minister of state, Allan Noble, formally welcomed the announcement. And then... in obvious support of Israel... he told the Assembly the British government will assert its right to freedom of passage in the Gulf of Aqaba, and will join other nations "to secure general recognition of this right." Both the United States and France have made similar statements on the mm issue of free passage through the gulf. The British minister also supported the Israeli position / that Gaza must be kept under international control, pending a final settlement. Britain, he said, expects no further hostilities.

In Moscow today, the Communist newspaper Pravda said the United States is "playing with fire" in pressing for internationalization of the Gulf of Aqaba. "The United States," it said, "is out to use U.N. troops to get a foothold on Egyptian territory."

In Congress, the Ben Gurion decision was warmly applauded. Republican Senator Javits of New York said, "The whole free world may now breathe more freely." Democratic Senator Johnson said Ben Gurion was to be congratulated. But, he added, Russia is still "fomenting trouble" in the hope of preventing the solution of other Middle East problems.

The Senate today began winding up debate on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. And a final vote appears likely late tomorrow or Wednesday. Democratic Senator Monroney of Oklahoma warned the Senate today that it might be "very dangerous" not to give the President the standby military and economic authority he wants for blocking Soviet penetration of the area.

The Senate Judiciary Committee today approved President Eisenhower's nomination of William J. Brennan, Jr., as a justice of the Supreme Court. The vote among the 11 members present was unanimous. Chairman Eastland said public hearings on the nomination of Charles Evans Whittaker to the Supreme Court---announced over the week-end---will be held on March 18th. Judge Whittaker was named to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement last week of Justice Stanley Reed.

The West German foreign minister... Heinrich von Brentano... conferred in Washington today with Secretary of State Dulles on various problems, including the Middle East. Von Brentano told reporters, after the two-hour meeting, that West Germany and the United States are in "complete agreement on all questions." The West German foreign minister will confer with Dulles again tomorrow and he will see President Eisenhower on Thursday. The question of German reunification is figuring prominently in these talks.

In Accra today, Vice President Nixon conferred with the prime minister of the Gold Coast. The Gold Coast... which has been a colony of Britain... will become an independent member of the British Commonwealth on Wednesday. Its name will then be Ghana. And the prime minister told Mr. Nixon today that the new state will follow a "national" policy... and never submit to foreign domination.

~~Tonight the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization issued its second annual report. The report says the main Communist threat to Free Asia has now taken the form of political and economic subversion... a form "as dangerous and more insidious than armed aggression." The report says that subversive tactics."~~

The Army today ordered a general court martial for Colonel John Nickerson, Jr. Nickerson is charged with "leaking" secret information on the Defense Department decision to split up the guided-missile program between the Army and Air Force. The officer is an expert on missiles... and has been stationed at the Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville, Alabama. The proceedings, it was announced, will be in open court.

Edward R. Murrow: March 4, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

One phase of the crisis in the Middle East is ending; another is about to begin. Israel's Prime Minister Ben-Gurion has decided to gamble; his troops are coming back from Gaza and the Gulf of Aqaba without conditions. Ben-Gurion risks a political storm at home, which he will probably survive; and he gambles on assurances he has received from this country regarding the Gulf of Aqaba and Gaza. We do not know what those assurances were, but at the end of last week Mr. Dulles told representatives of nine Arab countries that "no promises or concessions whatsoever had been made to Israel by the United States." He also denied any "secret understanding" with Israel.

There is, of course, a difference between conditions and assumptions. Certainly the Israelis have received from us certain assurances upon which they rely. But aside from these assurances, and the presence of the U.N. emergency force, we are back where we started. There is no peace in the Middle East; Israel's Arab neighbors remain publicly and solemnly committed to the wiping of Israel from the map. Nasser has agreed to nothing; not the free passage of ships through the Gulf of Aqaba; not U.N. control of Gaza; not passage of Israeli ships through the Suez Canal. His intentions in these areas must now soon be revealed. The portents are not promising. A spokesman for the nine-nation Arab League today protested to our government against any plans to enforce freedom of Israeli navigation in the Gulf, or for international control of Gaza.

The Israelis have said in effect that they will shoot their way through the Gulf of Aqaba, if Egypt tries to re-impose the blockade. In breaking such a blockade, if it should be imposed, Israel would certainly have the support of the United States, Britain and France. And this may count as one tangible gain for Israel.

In theory we have saved the friendship of the Arab countries by pressuring the Israelis to withdraw unconditionally. The time is now approaching where some hard questions must be put to Egypt's President Nasser - questions about the Gulf, Gaza and the Suez Canal. Nasser is a calm, shrewd gambling man, fully conscious of the power geography has conferred upon him. He may be counted upon to claim the Israeli withdrawal as a great personal victory, and he is certain to be a hard bargainer. He has already told his Arab colleagues that he no longer feels bound by the six ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ principles agreed to in the U.N. for the administration of the Suez Canal.

It is not realistic to expect the U.N. emergency force to see that justice and fair play occur in any of the disputed areas. When that U.N. force went into Egypt, it was agreed that it could stay there only so long as Egypt agreed. Another condition was that the terms of the '49 armistice were again to be imposed - that is, that Egypt would again occupy the Gaza Strip. President Nasser is in a position to order the U.N. troops out of his country at any time. / Secretary-General Hammarskjold has made it clear that he has no choice but to obey what Nasser orders in this matter. True, he has recommended that there be no return to the conditions that produced the crisis. But he has no power - he can only ask. / If he should ask the emergency force to stay on, and Nasser orders it to leave, it will be for the nations who supply the forces to choose whom to obey.

India has already said that if the U.N. forces are used for "political purposes," the Indian contingent will withdraw. If that happened, Yugoslavia and Indonesia would probably follow suit. And in any event, U.N. forces will not long remain after Nasser tells them to get out.

The Israelis, in withdrawing, have "assumed" on the basis of their conversations in Washington, that the blockade will not be re-imposed, and that the murderous raids from Sinai will not be resumed. So they withdrew, not on "conditions" but on "assumptions." Whether their assumptions are correct remains to be seen. It also remains to be seen whether the United Nations, and particularly the United States, will apply as much pressure to Colonel Nasser as they did to Israel. For the basic crisis in the Middle East remains what it was. It is now Colonel Nasser's turn to help resolve it. Many members of the British and French Governments contend that he respects only force, and that history will prove that their method - that is the use of force - is the only way to deal with him.

Opinion in Washington appears to be divided. One school of thought holds that he must be so grateful to the United States for having saved his face after a most humiliating defeat at the hands of the Israeli Army, that he will now act like a changed man. The other is that he doesn't reform so easily, that he will go on gambling, risking everything on the chance of becoming the accepted leader of the Arab world - still determined to destroy Israel.

It is now up to Colonel Nasser to show which theory is right.

Stewart Metz.

Word for Today

Prime Minister Ben Gurion says he is ordering the Israeli withdrawal as "an act of faith in the international community." The Bible observes, on the subject of faith, that "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." And the Bible also says, "Faith without works is dead." This would seem to be the occasion for works.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

MONDAY, MARCH 4, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

ANNOUNCER: EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS is brought to you by Charles Feizer and Company, makers of wonder-working Teromycin Egg Formula, guaranteed to give you more eggs, or your money back. Laying flock owners, how'd you like to get up to one fourth more eggs? There's a new antibiotic vitamin formulation in powder form that helps you do just that. It's Feizer's Teromycin Egg Formula. All you do is put a teaspoonful into each ten gallons of drinking water daily. And here's what you can expect: up to 37 percent more eggs - 53 more eggs per hen per year - up to thirty more eggs from every one hundred pounds of feed. Your pullets reach their highest rate of production sooner; your older hens keep laying longer - and goodbye to laying slumps. Get one of the special new extra production laying feeds containing Teromycin in your favorite brand. Or use Teromycin Egg Formula, along with your regular feeds. That's Teromycin Egg Formula, guaranteed by Feizer to give you more eggs or your money back.

And now, here's Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news. Prime Minister Ben-Gurion today ordered the first step toward the prompt withdrawal of Israeli troops from the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Ben-Gurion instructed his Chief of Staff, Gen. Moshe Dayan, to confer at once with United Nations Commander, Burns, on arrangements for carrying out the withdrawal. Burns met Dayan at the Lydda Airport near Tel Aviv for about an hour. It was then announced by Gen. Burns that they had reached "full agreement in principle on plans for the Israeli evacuation and replacement by UN troops." He gave no details as to time-table or procedure.

Prime Minister Ben-Gurion will make a statement tomorrow to the Israeli Parliament, where he must undergo a vote of confidence because of the opposition of a number of parties. Today, a crowd of demonstrators, shouting slogans against the withdrawal, tried to stage a march on Parliament, but were stopped by police. About ten of the demonstrators were placed under arrest.

The agreement between Gen. Burns and Gen. Dayan was also announced in the United Nations General Assembly by the Israeli Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir. "I am happy to state," she said, "that they have come to full agreement on the technical details."

The British Minister of State, Alan Noble, formally welcomed the announcement and then, in obvious support of Israel, he told the Assembly the British government will assert its right to freedom of passage in the Gulf of Aqaba and will join other nations to "secure general recognition of this right." Both the United States and France have made similar statements on the issue of free passage through the Gulf. The British Minister also supported the Israeli position that Gaza must be kept under international control, pending a final settlement. "Britain", he said, "expects no further hostilities."

In Moscow today, the Communist newspaper, Pravda, said the United States is "playing with fire" in pressing for internationalization of the Gulf of Aqaba. "The United States," it said, "is out to use UN troops to get a foothold on Egyptian territory."

In Congress, the Ben-Gurion decision was warmly applauded. Republican Senator Javits of New York said, "The whole free world may now breathe more freely." Democratic Senator Johnson said Ben-Gurion was to be congratulated, "but", he added, "Russia is still fomenting trouble in the hope of preventing the solution of other Middle East problems."

The Senate today began winding up debate on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution, and a final vote appears likely late tomorrow or Wednesday. Democratic Senator Monroney of Oklahoma warned the Senate today that it might be very dangerous not to give the President the standby military and economic authority he wants for blocking Soviet penetration of the area.

The Senate Judiciary Committee today approved President Eisenhower's nomination of William J. Brennan, Jr. as a Justice of the Supreme Court. The vote among the eleven members present was unanimous.

Chairman Eastman said public hearings on the nomination of Charles Evans Whittaker to the Supreme Court, announced over the weekend, will be held on March 18th. Judge Whittaker was named to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement last week of Mr. Justice Stanley Reed.

The West German Foreign Minister, Heinrich Von Brentano, conferred in Washington today with Sec. of State Dulles on various problems, including the Middle East. Von Brentano told reporters, after the two hour meeting, that West Germany and the United States are in "complete agreement on all questions." The West German Foreign Minister will confer with Mr. Dulles again tomorrow and he will see President Eisenhower on Thursday. The question of German reunification is figuring prominently in these talks.

In Accra today, Vice-President Nixon conferred with the Prime Minister of the Gold Coast. The Gold Coast, which has been a colony of Britain, will become an independent member of the British Commonwealth on Wednesday. Its name will then be Ghana; and the Prime Minister told Mr. Nixon today that the new state will follow a national policy and never submit to foreign domination.

The Army today ordered a general court martial for Col. John Nickerson, Jr. Nickerson is charged with "leaking" secret information on the Defense Department decision to split up the guided missile program between the Army and the Air Force. The officer is an expert on missiles and has been stationed at the Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville, Alabama. The proceedings, it was announced, will be in open court.

One phase of the crisis in the Middle East is ending and another is about to begin. Israel's Prime Minister Ben-Gurion has decided to gamble. His troops are coming back from Gaza and the Gulf of Aqaba without conditions. Ben-Gurion risked a political storm at home, which he will probably survive; and he gambles on assurances he has received from this country regarding the Gulf of Aqaba and Gaza. We do not know what those assurances were, but at the end of last week, Mr. Dulles told representatives of nine Arab countries that "no promises or concessions whatsoever had been made to Israel by the United States." He also denied any "secret understanding" with Israel.

There is, of course, a difference between conditions and assumptions. Certainly, the Israelis have received from us certain assurances upon which they rely. But aside from these assurances and the presence of the UN Emergency Force, we are now back where we started. There is no peace in the Middle East.

Israel's Arab neighbors remain publicly and solemnly committed to the wiping of Israel from the map. Nasser has agreed to nothing - not the free passage of ships through the Gulf of Aqaba; not UN control of Gaza; not passage of Israeli ships through the Suez Canal; not even diplomatic recognition of the existence of Israel. His intentions in these areas must now soon be revealed. The portents are not promising.

A spokesman for the nine-nation Arab League today protested to our government against any plan to enforce freedom of Israeli navigation in the Gulf or for international control of Gaza. The Israelis have said, in effect, that they will shoot their way through the Gulf of Aqaba if Egypt tries to reimpose the blockade. In breaking such a blockade, if it should be imposed, Israel would certainly have the support of the United States, Britain and France. And this may count as one tangible gain for Israel.

In theory, we have saved the friendship of the Arab countries by pressuring the Israelis to withdraw unconditionally. The time is now approaching where some hard questions must be put to Egypt's President Nasser - questions about the Gulf, Gaza and the Suez Canal.

Col. Nasser is a calm, shrewd, gambling man, fully conscious of the power geography has conferred upon him. He may be counted upon to claim the Israeli withdrawal as a great personal victory; and he is certain to be a hard bargainer. He has already told his Arab colleagues that he no longer feels bound by the six principles agreed to in the United Nations for the administration of the Suez Canal. It is not realistic to expect the UN Emergency Force to see that justice and fair play occur in any of the disputed areas.

When the UN Force went into Egypt, it was agreed that it could stay there only so long as Egypt agreed. Another condition was that the terms of the '49 Armistice were again to be imposed - that is, that Egypt would again occupy the Gaza Strip. President Nasser is in a position to order the UN troops out of his country at any time. Sec. Gen. Hammarksjold has made it clear that he has no choice but to obey what Nasser orders in this matter. True, he has recommended that there be no return to the conditions that produced the crisis, but he has no power. He can only ask.

If he should ask the Emergency Force to stay on and Nasser orders it to leave, it will be for the nations who supply the forces to choose whom to obey. The Israelis, in withdrawing, have assumed, on the basis of their conversations in Washington, that the blockade will not be reimposed and that the murderous raids from Sinai will not be resumed. So they withdrew, not on conditions, but on assumptions. Whether their assumptions are correct remains to be seen. It also remains to be seen whether the United Nations and, particularly, the United States will apply as much pressure to Col. Nasser as they did to Israel.

For the basic crisis in the Middle East remains what it was. It is now Col. Nasser's turn to help resolve it. Many members of the British and French governments contend that he respects only force and that history will prove that their method, that is the use of force, is the only way to deal with him. Opinion in Washington appears to be divided. One school of thought holds that he must be so grateful to the United States for having saved his face, after a most humiliating defeat at the hands of the Israeli army, that he will now act like a changed man. The other is that he doesn't reform so easily; that he will go on gambling, risking everything on the chance of becoming the accepted leader of the Arab world. It is now up to Col. Nasser to show which theory is right.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with The Word For Today. Now, here is George Metz.

ANNOUNCER: COMMERCIAL

Now, here's Mr. Murrow with his Word For Today.

MURROW: I was speaking a minute ago about the withdrawal of Israeli troops from the Gulf of Aqaba and from Gaza. The Israelis, in this withdrawal, have assumed that in due course they will receive the support, not only of the United States, but also of Great Britain and France. This is an act of faith which will, of course, produce a considerable argument in the Knesset, or the Israeli Parliament, tomorrow; because Prime Minister Ben-Gurion, in announcing his decision today, did so without consultation with his Cabinet and without consulting with his Parliament. This means of course, that there may be a split in the coalition in the Knesset and this will place Prime Minister Ben-Gurion under very considerable pressure and strain.

It is quite clear that the Israelis took this decision reluctantly. It is equally clear that the final decision was made, not as a result of action taken in the UN General Assembly, but as a result of old-fashioned diplomacy between the Israelis and ourselves in Washington. Prime Minister Ben-Gurion says he is ordering the Israeli withdrawal as an act of faith in the international community. The Bible observes, on the subject of faith, that "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." And the Bible also says, "Faith without works, is dead." This would seem to be the occasion for works. Goodnight and good luck.

ANNOUNCER: COMMERCIAL

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS has been brought to you by Charles Feizer and Company, makers of wonder-working Teromycin Egg Formula, guaranteed to give you more eggs or your money back. Listen to Murrow- tomorrow. This is the CBS . RADIO Network.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

MONDAY, MARCH 4, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

ANNOUNCER: EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS is brought to you by Charles Feizer and Company, makers of wonder-working Teromycin Egg Formula, guaranteed to give you more eggs, or your money back. Laying flock owners, how'd you like to get up to one fourth more eggs? There's a new antibiotic vitamin formulation in powder form that helps you do just that. It's Feizer's Teromycin Egg Formula. All you do is put a teaspoonful into each ten gallons of drinking water daily. And here's what you can expect: up to 37 percent more eggs - 53 more eggs per hen per year - up to thirty more eggs from every one hundred pounds of feed. Your pullets reach their highest rate of production sooner; your older hens keep laying longer - and goodbye to laying slumps. Get one of the special new extra production laying feeds containing Teromycin in your favorite brand. Or use Teromycin Egg Formula, along with your regular feeds. That's Teromycin Egg Formula, guaranteed by Feizer to give you more eggs or your money back.

And now, here's Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news. Prime Minister Ben-Gurion today ordered the first step toward the prompt withdrawal of Israeli troops from the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Ben-Gurion instructed his Chief of Staff, Gen. Moshe Dayan, to confer at once with United Nations Commander, Burns, on arrangements for carrying out the withdrawal. Burns met Dayan at the Lydda Airport near Tel Aviv for about an hour. It was then announced by Gen. Burns that they had reached "full agreement in principle on plans for the Israeli evacuation and replacement by UN troops." He gave no details as to time-table or procedure.

Prime Minister Ben-Gurion will make a statement tomorrow to the Israeli Parliament, where he must undergo a vote of confidence because of the opposition of a number of parties. Today, a crowd of demonstrators, shouting slogans against the withdrawal, tried to stage a march on Parliament, but were stopped by police. About ten of the demonstrators were placed under arrest.

The agreement between Gen. Burns and Gen. Dayan was also announced in the United Nations General Assembly by the Israeli Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir. "I am happy to state," she said, "that they have come to full agreement on the technical details."

The British Minister of State, Alan Noble, formally welcomed the announcement and then, in obvious support of Israel, he told the Assembly the British government will assert its right to freedom of passage in the Gulf of Aqaba and will join other nations to "secure general recognition of this right." Both the United States and France have made similar statements on the issue of free passage through the Gulf. The British Minister also supported the Israeli position that Gaza must be kept under international control, pending a final settlement. "Britain", he said, "expects no further hostilities."

In Moscow today, the Communist newspaper, Pravda, said the United States is "playing with fire" in pressing for internationalization of the Gulf of Aqaba. "The United States," it said, "is out to use UN troops to get a foothold on Egyptian territory."

In Congress, the Ben-Gurion decision was warmly applauded. Republican Senator Javits of New York said, "The whole free world may now breathe more freely." Democratic Senator Johnson said Ben-Gurion was to be congratulated, "but", he added, "Russia is still fomenting trouble in the hope of preventing the solution of other Middle East problems."

The Senate today began winding up debate on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution, and a final vote appears likely late tomorrow or Wednesday. Democratic Senator Monroney of Oklahoma warned the Senate today that it might be very dangerous not to give the President the standby military and economic authority he wants for blocking Soviet penetration of the area.

The Senate Judiciary Committee today approved President Eisenhower's nomination of William J. Brennan, Jr. as a Justice of the Supreme Court. The vote among the eleven members present was unanimous.

Chairman Eastman said public hearings on the nomination of Charles Evans Whittaker to the Supreme Court, announced over the weekend, will be held on March 18th. Judge Whittaker was named to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement last week of Mr. Justice Stanley Reed.

The West German Foreign Minister, Heinrich Von Brentano, conferred in Washington today with Sec. of State Dulles on various problems, including the Middle East. Von Brentano told reporters, after the two hour meeting, that West Germany and the United States are in "complete agreement on all questions." The West German Foreign Minister will confer with Mr. Dulles again tomorrow and he will see President Eisenhower on Thursday. The question of German reunification is figuring prominently in these talks.

In Accra today, Vice-President Nixon conferred with the Prime Minister of the Gold Coast. The Gold Coast, which has been a colony of Britain, will become an independent member of the British Commonwealth on Wednesday. Its name will then be Ghana; and the Prime Minister told Mr. Nixon today that the new state will follow a national policy and never submit to foreign domination.

The Army today ordered a general court martial for Col. John Nickerson, Jr. Nickerson is charged with "leaking" secret information on the Defense Department decision to split up the guided missile program between the Army and the Air Force. The officer is an expert on missiles and has been stationed at the Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville, Alabama. The proceedings, it was announced, will be in open court.

One phase of the crisis in the Middle East is ending and another is about to begin. Israel's Prime Minister Ben-Gurion has decided to gamble. His troops are coming back from Gaza and the Gulf of Aqaba without conditions. Ben-Gurion risked a political storm at home, which he will probably survive; and he gambles on assurances he has received from this country regarding the Gulf of Aqaba and Gaza. We do not know what those assurances were, but at the end of last week, Mr. Dulles told representatives of nine Arab countries that "no promises or concessions whatsoever had been made to Israel by the United States." He also denied any "secret understanding" with Israel.

There is, of course, a difference between conditions and assumptions. Certainly, the Israelis have received from us certain assurances upon which they rely. But aside from these assurances and the presence of the UN Emergency Force, we are now back where we started. There is no peace in the Middle East.

Israel's Arab neighbors remain publicly and solemnly committed to the wiping of Israel from the map. Nasser has agreed to nothing - not the free passage of ships through the Gulf of Aqaba; not UN control of Gaza; not passage of Israeli ships through the Suez Canal; not even diplomatic recognition of the existence of Israel. His intentions in these areas must now soon be revealed. The portents are not promising.

A spokesman for the nine-nation Arab League today protested to our government against any plan to enforce freedom of Israeli navigation in the Gulf or for international control of Gaza. The Israelis have said, in effect, that they will shoot their way through the Gulf of Aqaba if Egypt tries to reimpose the blockade. In breaking such a blockade, if it should be imposed, Israel would certainly have the support of the United States, Britain and France. And this may count as one tangible gain for Israel.

In theory, we have saved the friendship of the Arab countries by pressuring the Israelis to withdraw unconditionally. The time is now approaching where some hard questions must be put to Egypt's President Nasser - questions about the Gulf, Gaza and the Suez Canal.

Col. Nasser is a calm, shrewd, gambling man, fully conscious of the power geography has conferred upon him. He may be counted upon to claim the Israeli withdrawal as a great personal victory; and he is certain to be a hard bargainer. He has already told his Arab colleagues that he no longer feels bound by the six principles agreed to in the United Nations for the administration of the Suez Canal. It is not realistic to expect the UN Emergency Force to see that justice and fair play occur in any of the disputed areas.

When the UN Force went into Egypt, it was agreed that it could stay there only so long as Egypt agreed. Another condition was that the terms of the '49 Armistice were again to be imposed - that is, that Egypt would again occupy the Gaza Strip. President Nasser is in a position to order the UN troops out of his country at any time. Sec. Gen. Hammarksjold has made it clear that he has no choice but to obey what Nasser orders in this matter. True, he has recommended that there be no return to the conditions that produced the crisis, but he has no power. He can only ask.

If he should ask the Emergency Force to stay on and Nasser orders it to leave, it will be for the nations who supply the forces to choose whom to obey. The Israelis, in withdrawing, have assumed, on the basis of their conversations in Washington, that the blockade will not be reimposed and that the murderous raids from Sinai will not be resumed. So they withdrew, not on conditions, but on assumptions. Whether their assumptions are correct remains to be seen. It also remains to be seen whether the United Nations and, particularly, the United States will apply as much pressure to Col. Nasser as they did to Israel.

For the basic crisis in the Middle East remains what it was. It is now Col. Nasser's turn to help resolve it. Many members of the British and French governments contend that he respects only force and that history will prove that their method, that is the use of force, is the only way to deal with him. Opinion in Washington appears to be divided. One school of thought holds that he must be so grateful to the United States for having saved his face, after a most humiliating defeat at the hands of the Israeli army, that he will now act like a changed man. The other is that he doesn't reform so easily; that he will go on gambling, risking everything on the chance of becoming the accepted leader of the Arab world. It is now up to Col. Nasser to show which theory is right.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with The Word For Today. Now, here is George Metz.

ANNOUNCER: COMMERCIAL

Now, here's Mr. Murrow with his Word For Today.

MURROW: I was speaking a minute ago about the withdrawal of Israeli troops from the Gulf of Aqaba and from Gaza. The Israelis, in this withdrawal, have assumed that in due course they will receive the support, not only of the United States, but also of Great Britain and France. This is an act of faith which will, of course, produce a considerable argument in the Knesset, or the Israeli Parliament, tomorrow; because Prime Minister Ben-Gurion, in announcing his decision today, did so without consultation with his Cabinet and without consulting with his Parliament. This means of course, that there may be a split in the coalition in the Knesset and this will place Prime Minister Ben-Gurion under very considerable pressure and strain.

It is quite clear that the Israelis took this decision reluctantly. It is equally clear that the final decision was made, not as a result of action taken in the UN General Assembly, but as a result of old-fashioned diplomacy between the Israelis and ourselves in Washington. Prime Minister Ben-Gurion says he is ordering the Israeli withdrawal as an act of faith in the international community. The Bible observes, on the subject of faith, that "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." And the Bible also says, "Faith without works, is dead." This would seem to be the occasion for works. Goodnight and good luck.

ANNOUNCER: COMMERCIAL

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS has been brought to you by Charles Feizer and Company, makers of wonder-working Teromycin Egg Formula, guaranteed to give you more eggs or your money back. Listen to Murrow- tomorrow. This is the CBS . RADIO Network.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 4, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Prime Minister Ben Gurion today ordered the first step toward the "prompt withdrawal" of Israeli troops from the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Ben Gurion instructed his chief of staff, General Moshe Dayan, to confer at once with United Nations Commander Burns on arrangements for carrying out the withdrawal. Burns met Dayan at the Lydda Airport, near Tel Aviv, for about an hour. It was then announced by General Burns that they had reached "full agreement in principle" on plans for the Israeli evacuation and replacement by U.N. troops. He gave no details as to timetable or procedure.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion will make a statement tomorrow to the Israeli parliament, where he must undergo a vote of confidence because of the opposition of a number of parties. Today, a crowd of demonstrators..shouting slogans against the withdrawal..tried to stage a march on parliament, wut was stopped by police. About 10 of the demonstrators were placed under arrest.

The agreement between General Burns and General Dayan was also announced in the United Nations General Assembly by the Israeli foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meir. "I am happy to state," she said," that they have come to full agreement on the technical details." The British minister of state, Allan Noble, formally welcomed the announcement. And then..in obvious support of Israel..he told the Assembly the British government will assert its right to freedom of passage in the Gulf of Aqaba, and will join other nations "so secure general recognition of this right." Both the United States and France have made similar statements on the issue of free passage through the gulf. The British minister also supported the Israeli position that Gaza must be kept under international control, pending a final settlement. Britain, he said, expects no further hostilities.

In Moscow today, the Communists newspaper Pravda said the United States is "playing with fire" in pressing for internationalization of the Gulf of Aqaba. "The United States," is said, "is out to use U.N. troops to get a foothold on Egyptian territory."

In Congress, the Ben Gurion decision was warmly applauded. Republican Senator Javits of New York said, "The whole free world may now breathe more freely." Democratic Senator Johnson said Ben Gurion was to be congratulated. But, he added, Russia is still "fomenting trouble" in the hope of preventing the solution of other Middle East problems.

The Senate today began winding up debate on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. And a final vote appears likely late tomorrow or Wednesday. Democratic Senator Monroney of Oklahoma warned the Senate today that it might be "very dangerous" not to give the President the standby military aud economic authority he wants for blocking Soviet penetration of the area.

The Senate Judiciary Committee today approved President Eisenhower's nomination of William J Brennan, Jr. as a justice of the Supreme Court. The vote among the 11 members present was unanimous. Chairman Eastland said public hearings on the nomination of Charles Evans Whittaker to the Supreme Court -- announced over the week-end--will be held on March 18th. Judge Whittaker was named to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement last week of Justice Stanley Reed.

The West German foreign minister.. Heinrich von Brentano..conferred in Washington today with Secretary of State Dulles on various problems, including the Middle East. Von Brentano told reporters, after the two-hour meeting, that West Germany and the United States are in "complete agreement on all questions." The West German foreign minister will confer will Dulles again tomorrow and he will see President Eisenhower on Thursday. The question of German reunification is figuring prominently in these talks.

In Accra today, Vice President Nixon conferred with the prime minister of the Gold Coast. The Gold Coast..which has been a colony of Britain will become an independent member of the British Commonwealth on Wednesday. Its name will then be Ghana. And the prime minister told Mr. Nixon today that the new state will follow a "national"policy..and never submit to foreign domination.

The Army today ordered a general court martial for Colonel John Nickerson, Jr. Nickerson is charged with "leaking" secret information on the Defense Department decision to split up the guided - missile program between the Army and Air Force. The officer is an expert on missiles..and has been stationed at the Redstone Arsenel in Huntsville, Alabama. The proceedings, it was announced, will be on open court.

One phase of the crisis in the Middle East is ending and another is about to begin. Israel's Prime Minister Ben-Gurion has decided to gamble. His troops are coming back from Gaza and the Gulf of Aqaba without conditions. Ben-Gurion risked a political storm at home, which he will probably survive; and he gambles on assuranced he has received from this country regarding the Gulf of Aqaba and Gaza. We do not know what those assurances were, but at the end of last week, Mr. Dulles told representatives of nine Arab countries that "no promises or concessions whatsoever had been made to Israel by the United States." He also denied any "secret understanding" with Israel.

There is, of course, a difference between conditions and assumptions. Certainly, the Israelis have received from us certain assurances upon which they rely. But aside from these assurances and the presence of the UN Emergency Force, we are now back where we started. There is no peace in the Middle East.

Israel's Arab neighbors remain publicly and solemnly committed to the wiping of Israel from the map. Nasser has agreed to nothing - not the free passage of ships through the Gulf of Aqaba; not UN control of Gaza; not passage of Israeli ships through the Suez Canal; not even diplomatic recognition of the existence of Israel. His intentions in these areas must now soon be revealed. The portents are not promising.

A spokesman for the nine-nation Arab League today protested to our government against any plan to enforce freedom of Israeli navigation in the Gulf or for international control of Gaza. The Israelis have said, in effect, that they will shoot their way through the Gulf of Aqaba if Egypt tries to reimpose the blockade. In breaking such a blockade, if it should be imposed, Israel would certainly have the support of the United States, Britain and France. And this may count as one tangible gain for Israel.

In theory, we have saved the friendship of the Arab countries by pressuring the Israelis to withdraw unconditionally. The time is now approaching where some hard questions must be put to Egypt's President Nasser -- questions about the Gulf, Gaza and the Suez Canal.

Colonel Nasser is a calm, shrewd, gambling man, fully conscious of the power geography has conferred upon him. He may be counted upon to claim the Israeli withdrawal as a great personal victory; and he is certain to be a hard bargainer. He has already told his Arab colleagues that he no longer feels bound by the six principles agreed to in the United Nations for the administration of the Suez Canal. It is not realistic to expect the UN Emergency Force to see that justice and fair play occur in any of the disputed areas.

When the UN Force went into Egypt, it was agreed that it could stay there only so long as Egypt agreed. Another condition was that the terms of the '49 Armistice were again to be imposed - that is, that Egypt would again occupy the Gaza Strip. President Nasser is in a position to order the UN troops out of his country at any time. Secretary General Hammarskjold has made it clear that he has no choice but to obey what Nasser orders in this matter. True, he has recommended that there be no return to the conditions that produced the crisis, but he has now power. He can only ask.

If he should ask the Emergency force to stay on and Nasser orders it to leave, it will be for the nations who supply the forces to choose whom to obey. The Israelis, in withdrawing, have assumed, on the basis of their conversations in Washington, that the blockade will not be reimposed and that the murderous raids from Sinai will not be resumed. So they withdraw, not on conditions, but on assumptions. Whether their assumptions are correct remains to be seen. It also remains to be seen whether the United Nations and, particularly, the United States Will apply as much pressure to Colonel Nasser as to Israel.

For the basic crisis in the Middle East remains what it is. It is now Colonel Nasser's turn to help resolve it. Many members of the British and French governments contend that th respects only force and that history will prove that their method, that is the use of force, is the only way to deal with him. Opinion in Washington appears to be divided. One school of thought holds that he must be so grateful to the United states for having saved his face, after a must humiliating defeat at the hands of the Israeli army, htat he will now act like a changed man. The other is that he doesn't reform so easily; that he will go on gambling, risking everything on the chance of becoming the accepted leader of the Arab World. It is now up to Colonel Nasser to show which theory is right.

This is Ed Murrow. I"ll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Metz.

METZ: I was

MURROW: I was speaking a minute ago about the withdrawal of Israeli troops from the Gulf of Aqaba and from Gaza. The Israelis, in this withdrawal, have assumed that in due course they will receive the support, not only of the United States, but also of Great Britain and France. This is an act of faith which will, of course, produce a considerable arguement in the Knesset, or the Israeli Parliament, tomorrow; because Prime Minister Ben Gurion, in announcing his decision today, did so without consulting with his Cabinet and without consulting with his Parliament. This means of course, that there may be a split in the coalition in the Knesset and this will place Prime Minister Ben-Gurion under very considerable pressure and strain.

It is quite clear that the Israelis took this decision reluctantly. It is equally clear that the final decision was made, not as a result of action taken in the UN General Assembly, but as a result of old-fashioned diplomacy between the Israelis and ourselves in Washington. Prime Minister Ben Gurion says he is ordering the Israeli withdrawal as an act of faith in the international community. The Bible observes, on the subject of faith, that "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." And the Bible also says, "Faith without works, is dead." This would seem to be the occasion for works. Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., March 5, 1957

This is the news:

The Senate tonight approved President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. The vote was 72 to 19. The resolution serves notice on Russia that the United States is prepared to use its armed forces, if necessary, to repel Communist aggression in the Middle East. It also authorizes the President to spend up to 200-million dollars in the area in military and economic aid. This afternoon the Senate approved two amendments. One... introduced by Democratic Senator Mansfield... pledges American support for the United Nations emergency force. The other amendment... introduced by Democratic Senator Douglas... in effect reaffirms the ban on military aid for any purpose other than self-defense. The resolution now goes back to the House, which can accept the modified Senate language, or send the proposal to a conference committee.

~~This is the news.~~

The United Nations commander... General Burns... says the Israeli withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and the west coast of the Gulf of Aqaba, will be completed by this week-end. The operation is expected to get underway tomorrow or ~~Wednesday.~~ Thursday. And it includes the replacement of Israeli forces with United Nations troops.

The decision to withdraw has created dissention in the Israeli government. For a direct report, we switch to Jerusalem and my colleague, Winston Burdett.

(Tape rune 1:57
Ends on cue: "--to Edward R.
Murrow in N.Y.")

Secretary of State Dulles said today that the Israeli decision to withdraw "is a matter of great gratification to the United States." Mr. Dulles told his weekly news conference that it was not an "easy" decision. But it is one, he said, which should make it possible to bring about more stable conditions in the area. Dulles said Egypt appears to have been "dragging its feet" in reopening the Suez Canal. And he expressed hope that now that Israel has agreed to withdraw its forces, Egypt will get the canal cleared and open to traffic in short order. He indicated that economic aid to Egypt will be withheld until the canal is back in operation. Dulles reiterated that the United States regards the Gulf of Aqaba as an international waterway. ~~He said an American ship should be going into the gulf soon... although he called that a matter for the shipping companies to decide.~~

→

Mr. Dulles spoke at some length on the question of admitting American reporters to Red China. He said there are no plans to take legal action against the three newsmen who went into China recently despite the State Department ban. But the question of whether to renew their passports, he said, has not been settled. Mr. Dulles said the problem is how to satisfy the demands of the American press for coverage from Red China without lowering the barriers and permitting the cultural exchanges demanded by the Peiping government. He suggested that SETTING would be a dangerous example for the free nations bordering on Communist China.

~~The Senate hopes to reach a final vote tonight on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. Right now, they are voting on a flurry of last-minute amendments. One amendment... introduced this afternoon by Democratic Senator Mansfield of Montana (and approved 48 to 43.).. pledges American support for the United Nations emergency force in the Middle East. Another amendment was approved by a voice vote. It was introduced by Democratic Senator Douglas of Illinois... and, in effect, reaffirms the prohibition on military aid for any purpose other than self-defense.~~

Southern members of the House Judiciary Committee today won further postponement of action on President Eisenhower's civil-rights program. Committee discussion of the measure was put over until next Tuesday. ~~The senior Republican on the committee---Keating of New York---called the decision "part and parcel of a strategy of delay."~~

The President proposed today that states be required to pay a larger share of the cost of drought relief. Mr. Eisenhower said, in a special message to Congress, that state and local governments should assume a greater role, "calling on the Federal Government only to supplement their own resources."

In St. Louis, a federal judge today sentenced T. Lamar Caudle and Matthew J. Connelly to serve two years in prison for conspiring to defraud the government. Each defendant was also fined 25-hundred dollars. They were charged... specifically... with trying to "fix" an income tax case. Connelly was once appointments secretary to former President Truman. Caudle was head of the Justice Department's tax division. And he was discharged by Mr. Truman for having outside interests conflicting with his official duties. Both defendants are free on 5-thousand dollars bond, pending an appeal.

A parliamentary election was held today in Ireland. At stake... besides 146 seats in the lower house... is the leadership of the next government. Eamon de ~~Kam~~ Valera (KAHS-TELLO) is trying a comeback, to succeed Premier John Costello. ~~First returns will not be in until late tonight or tomorrow.~~ ~~And~~ Final results will not be known for several days.

Edward R. Murrow: March 5, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

A new nation came into existence tonight, the state of Ghana, formerly the African Gold Coast. This not only is a rare event, it is happening in a rare way. Ghana is not raising its national flag amid the graves of a prolonged and bitter guerilla war. One might almost say it is graduating with honors after a collegiate course in law and self-government. It has fulfilled the conditions set for membership in the British Commonwealth, and now has achieved that status, including the full right of secession. This is true independence.

But it must not be made to sound too easy. Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah, the first head of the new state, was sitting in a prison cell when his party won a sweeping majority in the election of 1951. He had been sentenced to two years for calling an illegal general strike. The British Governor General wisely pardoned him so that he could take his place as Prime Minister. Then he went on working for full independence, ~~having the enthusiastic co-operation of the governor general, Sir Charles Arden-Clarke, and the British Colonial Office.~~ in the British Empire, ranking next to Malaya. It produces half the world's supply of cocoa, and has vast resources of bauxite, which may make it a big producer of aluminum once the great Volta dam is built. It also has gold and diamonds. It may be small, but one day it may be very rich. Certainly it is no colony the British found troublesome and were glad to be rid of. They trained it for freedom and then recognized that the time for freedom had arrived.

Ghana is a small territory, not much larger than England, and has a population just under five million. But it is second largest earner of dollars

So it becomes the first all-negro colony of Africa to win independence, the eighth member of the British Commonwealth, its first all-negro member and the ninth sovereign state in Africa.

All the remaining negro colonies in Africa are now tingling with excitement. If Ghana makes a go of democratic independence, the other colonies may in time blossom in the same way. On the other hand, if Ghana does not live up to ~~its~~ promise, the future of Africa may be different. The present empires are sure to pass, but the nations shaped from their colonies would hardly be democracies. They would be dictatorships and would gravitate to the center of dictatorships in Moscow.

Ghana ~~already is well aware that its role in a world of rival~~ powers is significant. ~~Its independence ceremonies are being attended by~~ notables from all corners of the earth. Vice President Nixon is there representing President Eisenhower. The Soviet Union and Communist China have ambassadors, and the Kremlin's alert propaganda mill already has produced an invitation to the Ghana Assembly to send a delegation on a free trip to Moscow. A notable absentee is any distinguished representative of President Nasser of Egypt. It seems that in Nasser's book, Ghana is too British to be annexed to his African ambitions.

Ghana has two particular identifications with the United States. Most of the negroes sold into slavery in this country came from the Gold Coast. The people of Ghana are aware that they have blood ties with American negroes, and they watch the development of racial equality in this country with close interest. To some extent what Ghana thinks about this country, all African negroes in time are likely to think, which gives Ghana importance to us, policy-wise, beyond its size.

The other tie is educational. Prime Minister Nkrumah had his college education in Lincoln University, Pennsylvania. However, he went from there to the London School of Economics, and derived most of his social philosophy from Labor Party intellectuals. Certainly he is no British stooge. He fought bitterly for independence and he wants passionately to see the British Empire, and all empires, liquidated.

All the same, the training of the Gold Coast for independence came from the British. If Ghana now succeeds, it will be due in part to the fact that the British endowed it with a body of laws and a functioning civil service. It is the same kind of preparation that has worked so far in keeping India, Pakistan, Ceylon and Burma in good political health.

Ghana's immediate dangers are not insuperable. It may have a too easy-going attitude toward petty corruption in government. It also needs a broader economic base. It depends too much on cocoa, which now is suffering from a serious plant disease. But its main challenge is where it stands as a free nation. Mr. Nkrumah told Mr. Nixon that in a cold war Ghana cannot be a neutral, but that its own nationalism must be its chief concern. If he can hold to this course, and other African negroes follow it, Africa should end by enlarging and enriching the free world.

Word for Today

As a new independent country, Ghana will be setting an important example for all African peoples who seek freedom. Other colonies will also seek independence. For as the English philosopher, Thomas Hobbes, observed more than three hundred years ago, "There are very few so foolish that they would not rather govern themselves than be governed by others."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, March 5, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The United Nations Commander, General Burns, says the Israeli withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and the west coast of the Gulf of Aqaba will be completed by this week-end. The operation is expected to get underway tomorrow or Thursday, and it includes the replacement of Israeli forces with United Nations troops.

The decision to withdraw has created dissention in the Israeli government. For a direct report, we switch to Jerusalem and my colleague, Winston Burdett.

BURDETT: For the first time since the Arab-Israeli war eight years ago, the Israeli Parliament tonight met behind barbed wire barricades, with an unprecedented concentration of police standing by, to hear Prime Minister Ben-Gurion defend and explain his reasons for ordering the Israeli withdrawal. The feared violence in the streets did not take place. The demonstrators who had gathered outside carrying placards that said "Sell Out" and waving Israeli flags that were draped in black crepe in mourning for the loss of Gaza, the demonstrators dispersed quietly at nightfall. Inside the Parliament there was uproar as Ben-Gurion spoke. There were continual interruptions, cat-calls, shouts, whistles, disturbances organized by the Right-Wing opposition that ~~is~~ violently opposed to the withdrawal decision. Twice Ben-Gurion appealed to the Speaker to restore order. Each time he stood with arms folded until the storm died down. He looked pale and tired. He spoke calmly and quietly throughout.

Ben-Gurion admitted frankly that Israel had failed to get in Gaza the minimum guarantees that she had wanted. He said that there was no certainty, no clear undertaking that the Egyptins would not return to Gaza. In a poignant passage, he said "My heart is with the border settlements who heard with anxiety of the decision to withdraw." Ben-Gurion took his decision, he said, because he was conscious of the needs of Israel's Army, conscious that this army depends for its arms and equipment on Israel's relations with other countries. What was decisive, he said, was the needs of security and the hope for a free outlet through the Gulf of Aqaba to the Red Sea.

Eight hours have been allotted to debating Ben-Gurion's statement. The Right-Wing opposition is presenting a motion of no confidence. There seems no doubt tonight that this motion will be voted down when the debate ends tomorrow and Ben-Gurion's decision will be upheld.

And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Secretary of State Dulles said today that the Israeli decision to withdraw is a matter of great gratification to the United States.

Ed. trans. P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, March 5, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The United Nations Commander, General Burns, says the Israeli withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and the west coast of the Gulf of Aqaba will be completed by this week-end. The operation is expected to get underway tomorrow or Thursday, and it includes the replacement of Israeli forces with United Nations troops.

The decision to withdraw has created dissention in the Israeli government. For a direct report, we switch to Jerusalem and my colleague, Winston Burdett.

BURDETT: For the first time since the Arab-Israeli war eight years ago, the Israeli Parliament tonight met behind barbed wire barricades, with an unprecedented concentration of police standing by, to hear Prime Minister Ben-Gurion defend and explain his reasons for ordering the Israeli withdrawal. The feared violence in the streets did not take place. The demonstrators who had gathered outside carrying placards that said "Sell Out" and waving Israeli flags that were draped in black crepe in mourning for the loss of Gaza, the demonstrators dispersed quietly at nightfall. Inside the Parliament there was uproar as Ben-Gurion spoke. There were continual interruptions, cat-calls, shouts, whistles, disturbances organized by the Right-Wing opposition that is violently opposed to the withdrawal decision. Twice Ben-Gurion appealed to the Speaker to restore order. Each time he stood with arms folded until the storm died down. He looked pale and tired. He spoke calmly and quietly throughout.

Ben-Gurion admitted frankly that Israel had failed to get in Gaza the minimum guarantees that she had wanted. He said that there was no certainty, no clear undertaking that the Egyptins would not return to Gaza. In a poignant passage, he said "My heart is with the border settlements who heard with anxiety of the decision to withdraw." Ben-Gurion took his decision, he said, because he was conscious of the needs of Israel's Army, conscious that this army depends for its arms and equipment on Israel's relations with other countries. What was decisive, he said, was the needs of security and the hope for a free outlet through the Gulf of Aqaba to the Red Sea.

Eight hours have been allotted to debating Ben-Gurion's statement. The Right-Wing opposition is presenting a motion of no confidence. There seems no doubt tonight that this motion will be voted down when the debate ends tomorrow and Ben-Gurion's decision will be upheld.

And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Secretary of State Dulles said today that the Israeli decision to withdraw is a matter of great gratification to the United States.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK
TUESDAY, March 5, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

The Senate tonight approved President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. The vote was 72 to 19. The resolution serves notice on Russia that the United States is prepared to use its armed forces, if necessary, to repel Communist aggression in the Middle East. It also authorizes the President to spend up to 200-million dollars in the area in military and economic aid. This afternoon the Senate approved two amendments. One..introduced by Democratic Senator Douglas..in effect reaffirms the han on military aid for any purpose other than self-defense. The resolution now goes back to the House, which can accept the modified Senate language, or send the proposal to a conference committee.

The United Nations commander..General Burns..says the Israeli withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and the west coast of the Gulf of Aqaba will be completed this week-end. The operation is expected to get underway tomorrow or Thursday. And it includes the replacement of Israeli forces with United Nations troops.

The decision to withdraw has created dissention in the Israeli government. For a direct report, we switch to Jerusalem and my colleague, Winston Burdett.

BURDETT: For the first time since the Arab-Israeli war eight years ago, the Israeli Parliament tonight met behind barbed wire barricades, with an unprecedented concentration of police standing by, to hear Prime Minister Ben-Gurion defend and explain his reasons for ordering the Israeli withdrawal. The feared violence in his streets did not take place. The demonstrators who had gathered outside carrying placards that said "Sell Out" and waving Israeli flags that were draped in black crepe in mourning for the loss of Gaza, the demonstrators dispersed quietly at nightfall. Inside the Parliament there was uproar as Ben-Gurion spoke. There were continual interruptions, cat-calls, shouts whistles, disturbances organized by the Right-Wing-opposition that is violently opposed to the withdrawal decision. Twice Ben-Gurion appealed to the Speaker to restore order. Each time he stood with arms folded until the storm died down. He looked pale and tired. He spoke calmly and quietly throughout.

Ben-Gurion admitted frankly that Israel had failed to get in Gaza the minimum guarantees that she had wanted. He said thet there was no certainty, no clear undertaking that the Egyptians would not return to Gaza. In a poignant passage, he said "My heart is with the border settlements who hoard with anxiety of the decision to withdraw." Ben-Gurion took his decision, he said, because he was conscious of the needs of Israel's Army, conscious that this army depends for its arms and equipemnt on Israel's relations with other countries. What was decisive, he said, was the needs of security and the hope for a free outlet through the Gulf of Aqaba to the Red Sea.

Eight hours have been allotted to debating Ben-Gurion's statement. The Right-Wing opposition is presenting a motion of no confidence . There seems no doubt tonight that this motion will be voted down when the debate ends tomorrow and Ben-Gurion's decision will be upheld.

And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Secretary of State Dulles said today that the Israeli decision to withdraw is a matter of great gratification to the United States. Mr. Dulles told his weekly news conference that it was not an "easy" decision. But it is one, he said, which should make it possible to bring about more stable conditions in the area. Dulles said Egypt appears to have been "dragging its feet" in reOpening the Suez Canal. And he expressed hope that now that Israel has agreed to withdraw its forces, Egypt will get the canal cleared and open to traffic in short order. He indicated that economic aid to Egypt will be withheld until the canal is back in operation. Dulles reiterated that the United States regards the Gulf of Aqaba as an international waterway.

Dulles spoke at some length on the question of admitting American reporters in Red China. He said there are no plans to take legal action against the three newsmen who went into China recently despite the State Department ban. But the question of whether to renew their passports, he said, has not been settled. Mr. Dulles said the problem is how to satisfy the demands of the American press for coverage from Red China without lowering the barriers and permitting the cultural exchange demanded by the Peiping government. He suggested that would be setting a dangerous example for the free nations bordering on Communist China.

Southern members of the House Judiciary Committee today won further postponment of action on President Eisenhower's civil-rights program. Committee discussion of the measure was put over until next Tuesday.

The President proposed today that states be required to pay a larger share of the cost of drought relief. Mr. Eisenhower said, in a special message to Congress, that state and local governments should assume a greater role, "calling on the Federal Government only to supplement their own resources."

In St. Louis, a federal judge today sentenced T. Lamar Caudle and Matthew J. Connelly to serve two years in prison for conspiring to defraud the government. Each defendant was also fined 25-hundred dollars. They were charged... specifically...with trying to "fix" an income tax case. Connelly was once appointments secretary to former President Truman. Caudle was head of the Justice Department's tax division. And he was discharged by Mr. Truman for having outside interests conflicting with his official duties. Bothe defendants are free on 5-thousand dollars bond, pending an appeal.

A parliamentary election was held today in Ireland. At stake..besides 146 seats in the lower house..is the leadership of the next government. Eamon de Valera is trying a comeback, to succeed Premier John Costello. Final results will not be known for several days.

A new nation came into existence tonight, the state of Ghana, formerly the African Gold Coast. This not only is a rare event, it is happening in a rare way. Ghana is not raising its national flag amid the graves of a prolonged and bitter guerilla war. One might almost say it is graduating with honors after a collegiate course in law and self-government. It has fulfilled the conditions set for membership in the British Commonwealth, and now has achieved that status, including the full right of secession. This is true independence.

But it must not be made to sound too easy. Prime Minister Kwame Kkrumah, the first head of the new state, was sitting in a prison cell when his party won a sweeping majority in the election of 1951. He had been sentenced to two years for calling an illegal general strike. The British Governor General wisely pardoned him so that he could take his place as Prime Minister. Then he went on working for full independence.

Ghana is a small territory, not much larger than England, and has a population just under five million. But it is second largest earner of dollars in the British Empire, ranking next to Malaya. It produces half the world's supply of cocoa, and has vast resources of bauxite, which may make it a big producer of aluminium once the great Volta dam is built. It also has gold and diamonds. It may be small, but one day it may be very rich. Certainly it is no colony the British found troublesome and were glad to be rid of. They trained it for freedom and then recognized that the time for freedom had arrived.

So it becomes the first all-negro colony of Africa to win its independence, the eighth member of the British Commonwealth, its first all-negro member and ninth sovereign state in Africa.

All the remaining negro colonies in Africa are now tingling with excitement. If Ghana makes a go of democratic independence, the other colonies may in time blossom in the same way. On the other hand, if Ghana does not live up to its promise, the future of Africa may be different. The present empires are sure to pass, but the nations shaped from their colonies would hardly be democracies. They would be dictatorships and would gravitate to the center of dictatorships in Moscow.

Ghana has two particular identifications with the United States. Most of the negroes sold into slavery in this country came from the Gold Coast. The people of Ghana are aware that they have blood ties with American negroes, and they watch the development of racial equality in this country with close interest To some extent what Ghana thinks about this country, all African negroes in time are likely to think, which gives Ghana importance to us, policy-wise beyond its size.

The other tie is educational. Prime Minister Nkrumah had his college education in Lincoln University, Pennsylvania. However, he went from there to the London School of Economics, and derived most of his social philosophy from Labor Party intellectuals. Certainly he is no British stooge. He fought bitterly for independence and he wants passionately to see the British empire, and all empires, liquidated.

All the same, the training of the Gold Coast for independence came from the British. If Ghana now succeeds, it will be due in part to the fact that the British endowed it with a body of laws and a functioning civil service. It is the same kind of preparation that has worked so far in keeping India, Pakistan, Ceylon and Burma in good political health.

Ghana's immediate dangers are not insuperable. It may have a too easy-going attitude toward petty corruption in government. It also needs a broader economic base. It depends too much on coaoa, which now is suffering from serious plant disease. But its main challange is where it stands as a free nation. Mr. Nkrumah told Mr. Nixon that in a cold war, Ghana cannot be a neautral, but that its own nationalism must be its chief concern. If he can hold to this course, and other African negroes follow it, Africa should end by enlarging and enriching the free world.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is our announcer.

ANNOUNCER:

MURROW: As a new and independent country, Ghana will be setting an important example for all African peoples who seek freedom. Other colonies will also seek independence. For as the English philosopher, Thomas Hobbes, observed more than three hundred years ago, "There are very few so foolish that they would not rather govern themselves than be governed by others."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., March 6, 1957

This is the news:

Israeli troops began evacuating the Gaza Strip at noon today, New York time. United Nations forces moved in after them and Israel said the change-over should be completed in 24 hours. Israeli ships have docked at Sharm el Sheikh... at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba... and already are taking on equipment---vehicles, field kitchens and guns. An Israeli army spokesman said, "The administration of the Sharm el Sheikh area will be transferred to the United Nations Emergency Force on Friday."

There was an outbreak of Arab sniping and looting last night in the Gaza Strip. An Arab civilian was killed, so was an Israeli soldier. Two Israelis were wounded. There were reports that the civilian administration of Gaza is to be turned over to the Egyptians. A United Nations spokesman in Cairo said tonight that he knew nothing of such a plan.

In the Israeli parliament today, three motions of non-confidence in Prime Minister Ben Gurion were defeated... in each instance by a margin of better than three-to-one. Ben Gurion told the parliament, "If the United States and other powers will keep their word to us, there will be peace. But," he said, "if they will not keep their promise, and if they shrink before the Egyptian dictator's threats that he will not allow Israeli shipping in the Gulf of Aqaba, there will be no peace." Ben Gurion ~~said Egypt has no right to return to the Gaza Strip. He~~ warned that if Egypt ever resumes "belligerent operations" in Gaza, Israel reserves the right to take action.

Here in New York, there's word that United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold will report to the General Assembly on the Israeli withdrawal on Friday.

Congress may complete action tomorrow on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. The measure approved by the Senate last night is worded differently than the House version passed a month ago, but Speaker Rayburn says, "I don't think there's enough difference to fuss about." Mr. Eisenhower has let it be known that he is satisfied with the resolution in its present form. And tomorrow the House will meet an hour earlier than usual in the hope of securing final passage without further delay.

A few minutes ago I was talking with my colleague, Winston Burdett, in the [redacted]. And this is his report of what happened today in the Gaza Strip.

/TAPE/

Syria today gave the Iraq Petroleum Company "preliminary permission" to repair its oil pipeline. The pipeline normally carries millions of tons of oil a year from Iraq to the Mediterranean. It crosses Syria, and some of its pumping stations were blown up by the Syrian Army at the time British, France and Israeli forces went into Egypt. Company officials believe emergency repairs to put the line back in operation will take about a week. By this, they do not mean full operation. Syria says it gave the go-ahead for the repairs on ~~the~~ assumption that the Israeli withdrawal will continue.

~~In another move today, the Syrian government commuted to life imprisonment the death sentences imposed last month on five Syrian leaders charged with treason. The prison sentences given 20 other alleged plotters still stand.~~

The new African state of Ghana applied today for membership in the United Nations. The Security Council will meet tomorrow to act on the application. And swift approval is expected.

President Eisenhower today asked Congress to approve an agreement aimed at helping Britain through its present economic difficulties. The agreement would enable Britain to postpone ~~the payments~~ paying as many as seven annual installments on loans from the United States. (These would be payments on both principal and interest). Mr. Eisenhower pointed out that... up to last year... Britain had made every principal and interest payment agreed on in 1945.

The West German foreign minister... Heinrich von Brentano... said in Washington today, that a neutral Germany would become "a pawn in world politics." / Von Brentano told the National Press Club his government will maintain its alliance with the West. He denounced Russia's control of East Germany as "a permanent, unjustified intervention in the rights of a free people." And Russian action blocking reunification, he said, is "a constant and incessant aggression by the Soviet Union." / Von Brentano has been conferring with Secretary of State Dulles. Tomorrow, he will see President Eisenhower... and then make a tour of the United States. At the same time, the United States, West Germany, Britain and France will be making a new study of the reunification problem.

Secretary Dulles took off from Washington today for Australia, where he will attend a meeting of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization. Mr. Dulles said at the airport that SEATO... in its two and a half years of existence... has made "a positive contribution to peace and stability in Asia." Such pacts are necessary, he said, "to make clear the united and determined will of the member nations to preserve their independence."

Reports from Indonesia say that President Sukarno may declare martial law. Last Sunday, rebel forces seized control of four provinces of Eastern Indonesia and demanded that Sukarno form a new government. This, so far, he has refused to do. There is also strong political opposition to Sukarno, because of his proposal to abandon Indonesia's western-style parliamentary government. Another Moslem party threatened today to quit the cabinet.

Incomplete returns in the Irish parliamentary election show Eamon de Valera's Fianna Fail Party leading the party headed by Prime Minister Costello. It is still too early to know whether de Valera has returned to power. So far, his party has won 42 seats. Costello's party has won only 19.

Jane Rogers

Both Egypt and Israel are wary of each other. There is much distrust, born of long experience. Frank Crane once observed... very wisely... "You may be deceived if you trust too much, but you will live in torment if you do not trust enough." F. P. Dunne spoke tersely on this subject. "Trust everybody," he said, "but cut the cards."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: A few minutes ago, I was talking with my colleague, Winston Burdett in Israel, and this is his report of what happened today in the Gaza Strip.

BURDETT: During a cold and rainy night, while the Arab population of Gaza slept, four battalions of the United Nations Emergency Force crossed the border from the Sinai Desert, drove northward in their trucks and jeeps, nearly the entire length of the coastal Strip, occupied the four main towns and posted their guards along the thirty-five mile frontier between Gaza and Israel. I have just come back from Gaza. The operation is still going on. It will be completed by dawn today, that is, in three to four hours from now. The area is being transferred from Israel to United Nations hands in a single stroke, overnight. By dawn, or very shortly thereafter, according to plan, the last Israeli troops and police and civilian administrators in Gaza will be back on this side of the border and the entire disputed region will be under United Nations control. On the last day before their withdrawal, the Israelis clamped a curfew on the Gaza Strip. The 90,000 Arab natives were confined to their homes; the 210,000 Arab refugees were ordered to stay inside their camps. When they get up and come out tomorrow morning, they will see, instead of Israelis, an occupying army of Danes, Norwegians, Indians, Colombians and Swedes. We drove down to Gaza tonight in a special convoy, two bus loads and a carful of correspondents and cameramen, escorted by three Israeli army jeeps and a couple of half-tracks. The countryside was deserted, the road empty and untraveled. Gaza itself, under the curfew, was a ghost town. The Israeli army, last night and the night before, had already pulled away most of its heavy equipment. We drove southward, past Gaza, for several miles, and then, at a turn in the road, we saw the bouncing lights of a long convoy heading toward us, the beams of the headlights illuminating the driving rain. The first vehicle in the convoy, as it passed, was a white jeep with two big letters in black, U. N., and the fair-haired soldier who was driving it wore the U.N.'s bright blue helmet and carried a shoulder-patch that said "Denmark". Then came trucks, backed with canvas, trucks with a yellow cross on a blue shield, the shield of Norway. This was the Danish-Norwegian battalion, about 600 men, and it was the spearhead of the U.N. Force that was coming into Gaza tonight. Behind it, an Indian battalion came in to occupy Rafah, a little Arab village with a big and important army camp built many years ago by the British. After the Indians, came a Colombian battalion, and then a battalion of Swedes. South of the border in Sinai, a Yugoslav battalion is being held in reserve. The Danes and Norwegians crossed the border at seven this evening and arrived in Gaza, at the north end of the Strip, promptly at nine. This was a well-planned operation, neatly executed, as far as we could see. The Israeli military Commander in Gaza and Gen. Burns' Chief of Staff met yesterday to map out the exact timing and details. In the rain and mud, in Gaza's main square, I talked to the Commander of the Danish-Norwegian battalion. I had last seen him just before Christmas in Port Said where he was then in charge of running the civil affairs of the city, between the time the British got out and the Egyptians went back in. I asked him if he was now going to run Gaza. "No," he said, his troops would line up along the eastern border, facing Israel. "Gaza", he said, "would be run by a special U. N. staff of civilian administrators." They also would be coming in during the night, and they would be on the job tomorrow. The 2400 or so U. N. soldiers who had come into the Gaza Strip have no billets for the night. They have brought their own tents and they are sleeping under canvas at camp sites that were chosen for them during the day by advance parties of U. N. liaison officers. Each U. N. convoy tonight was guided into the Strip by an Israeli army escort and shown where the key places were that would have to be guarded - places like the U. N. food depots for the refugees, often a target for looting in times of change-over. Israeli civilian experts this afternoon went down to meet the U. N. experts who will succeed them to brief them on their new job. In the square at Gaza there is a continuous throng of reporters, cameramen, U. N. officers and Israeli soldiers. At one moment, an Israeli army car pulled up and out stepped a General, wearing a black patch on his left eye. He walked casually and light-heartedly through the crowd, asking how the hand-over was going. He was Gen. Moshe Dayan, Israel's forty-two year old Chief of Staff, who had come to see for himself. As far as we know, at this hour, the hand-over has been going without a hitch. The trick was for the U. N. to come in while the Israelis were still there, and then for the Israelis to get out as fast as possible, to avoid that interim of tension when Arab feelings might explode into demonstrations or even acts of terrorism against the withdrawing Israelis. When we left Gaza, around ten o'clock, no such incidents had been reported. We drove back with an Israeli officer who had been in Gaza for all the four months and four days of the Israeli occupation. We asked him how he felt about it. He was despondent and bitter. He said, "I don't see how these troops from Denmark and Norway, who don't know the language and don't know the people, can ever manage it." Unquote. The Israelis are convinced that the U. N. troops will be unable to police the area effectively or to keep the border under control. Before too long, we should know whether the Israelis are right or wrong. And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: A few minutes ago, I was talking with my colleague, Winston Burdett in Israel, and this is his report of what happened today in the Gaza Strip.

BURDETT: During a cold and rainy night, while the Arab population of Gaza slept, four battalions of the United Nations Emergency Force crossed the border from the Sinai Desert, drove northward in their trucks and jeeps, nearly the entire length of the coastal Strip, occupied the four main towns and posted their guards along the thirty-five mile frontier between Gaza and Israel. I have just come back from Gaza. The operation is still going on. It will be completed by dawn today, that is, in three to four hours from now. The area is being transferred from Israel to United Nations hands in a single stroke, overnight. By dawn, or very shortly thereafter, according to plan, the last Israeli troops and police and civilian administraters in Gaza will be back on this side of the border and the entire disputed region will be under United Nations control. On the last day before their withdrawal, the Israelis clamped a curfew on the Gaza Strip. The 90,000 Arab natives were confined to their homes; the 210,000 Arab refugees were ordered to stay inside their camps. When they get up and come out tomorrow morning, they will see, instead of Israelis, an occupying army of Danes, Norwegians, Indians, Colombians and Swedes. We drove down to Gaza tonight in a special convoy, two bus loads and a carful of correspondents and cameramen, escorted by three Israeli army jeeps and a couple of half-tracks. The countryside was deserted, the road empty and untraveled. Gaza itself, under the curfew, was a ghost town. The Israeli army, last night and the night before, had already pulled away most of its heavy equipment. We drove southward, past Gaza, for several miles, and then, at a turn in the road, we saw the bouncing lights of a long convoy heading toward us, the beams of the headlights illuminating the driving rain. The first vehicle in the convoy, as it passed, was a white jeep with two big letters in black, U. N., and the fair-haired soldier who was driving it wore the U.N.'s bright blue helmet and carried a shoulder-patch that said "Denmark". Then came trucks, backed with canvas, trucks with a yellow cross on a blue shield, the shield of Norway. This was the Danish-Norwegian battalion, about 600 men, and it was the spearhead of the U.N. Force that was coming into Gaza tonight. Behind it, an Indian battalion came in to occupy Rafah, a little Arab village with a big and important army camp built many years ago by the British. After the Indians, came a Colombian battalion, and then a battalion of Swedes. South of the border in Sinai, a Yugoslav battalion is being held in reserve. The Danes and Norwegians crossed the border at seven this evening and arrived in Gaza, at the north end of the Strip, promptly at nine. This was a well-planned operation, neatly executed, as far as we could see. The Israeli military Commander in Gaza and Gen. Burns' Chief of Staff met yesterday to map out the exact timing and details. In the rain and mud, in Gaza's main square, I talked to the Commander of the Danish-Norwegian battalion. I had last seen him just before Christmas in Port Said where he was then in charge of running the civil affairs of the city, between the time the British got out and the Egyptians went back in. I asked him if he was now going to run Gaza. "No," he said, his troops would line up along the eastern border, facing Israel. "Gaza", he said, "would be run by a special U. N. staff of civilian administrators." They also would be coming in during the night, and they would be on the job tomorrow. The 2400 or so U. N. soldiers who had come into the Gaza Strip have no billets for the night. They have brought their own tents and they are sleeping under canvas at camp sites that were chosen for them during the day by advance parties of U. N. liaison officers. Each U. N. convoy tonight was guided into the Strip by an Israeli army escort and shown where the key places were that would have to be guarded - places like the U. N. food depots for the refugees, often a target for looting in times of change-over. Israeli civilian experts this afternoon went down to meet the U. N. experts who will succeed them to brief them on their new job. In the square at Gaza there is a continuous throng of reporters, cameramen, U. N. officers and Israeli soldiers. At one moment, an Israeli army car pulled up and out stepped a General, wearing a black patch on his left eye. He walked casually and light-heartedly through the crowd, asking how the hand-over was going. He was Gen. Moshe Dayan, Israel's forty-two year old Chief of Staff, who had come to see for himself. As far as we know, at this hour, the hand-over has been going without a hitch. The trick was for the U. N. to come in while the Israelis were still there, and then for the Israelis to get out as fast as possible, to avoid that interim of tension when Arab feelings might explode into demonstrations or even acts of terrorism against the withdrawing Israelis. When we left Gaza, around ten o'clock, no such incidents had been reported. We drove back with an Israeli officer who had been in Gaza for all the four months and four days of the Israeli occupation. We asked him how he felt about it. He was despondent and bitter. He said, "I don't see how these troops from Denmark and Norway, who don't know the language and don't know the people, can ever manage it." Unquote. The Israelis are convinced that the U. N. troops will be unable to police the area effectively or to keep the border under control. Before too long, we should know whether the Israelis are right or wrong. And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Israeli troops began evacuating the Gaza Strip at noon today, New York time. United Nations forces moved in after them and Israel said the change-over should be completed in 24 hours. Israeli ships have docked at Sharm el Sheikh...at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba...and already are taking on equipemnt -- vehicles, field kitchens and guns. An Israeli army spokesman said, "The administratinn of the Sharm el Sheikh area will be transferred to the United Nations Emergency force on Friday."

There was an outbreak of Arab sniping and looting last night in the Gaza Strip. An Arab civilian was killed, so was an Israeli soldier. Two Israelis were wounded. There were reports that the civilian administration of Gaza is to be turned over to the Egyptians. A United Nations spokesman in Cairo said tonight that he knew nothing of such a plan.

In the Israeli parliament today, three motions of non-confidence in Prime Minister Ben Gurion were defeated...in each instance by a margin of better than three to one. Ben Gurion told the parliament, "if the United States and other powers will keep their word to us, there will be peace. But", he said, "if they will not keep their promise, and if they shrink before the Egyptian dictator's threats that he will not allow Israeli shipping in the Gulf of Aqaba, there will be no peace." Ben Gurion warned that if Egypt ever resumes "belligerant operations" in Gaza, Israel reserves the rightto take action.

Here in New York, there's word that United Nations Secretary Gentral Hammarskjold will report to the General Assembly on the Israeli withdrawal on Friday.

Congress may complete action tomorrow on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. The measure approved by the Senate last night is worded differentl than the House version passed a month ago, but Speaker Rayburn says, "I don't think there's enough difference to fuss about." Mr. Eisenhower has let it be known that he is satisfied with the resolution in its present form. And tomorrow the House will meet an hour earlier than usual in the hope of securing final passage without further delay.

A few minutes ago I was talking with my colleague, Winston Burdett, in Israel and this is his report of what happened today in the Gaza Strip.

BURDETT: During a cold and rainy night, while the Arab population of Gaza slept, four battalions of the United Nations Emergency Force crossed the border from the Sinai Desert, drove northward in their trucks and jeeps, nearly the entire length of the coastal Strip, occupied the four main towns and posted their guards along the thirty - five mile frontier between Gaza and Israel. I have just come back from Gaza. The operation is still going on. It will be completed by dawn today, that is, in three to four hours from now. The area is being transferred from Israel to United Nations hands in a single stroke, overnight. By dawn, or very shortly thereafter, according to plan, the last Israeli troops and police and civilian administrators in Gaza will be back on this side of the border and the entire disputed region will be under United Nations control. On the last day before their withdrawal, the Israelis clamped a curfew on the Gaza Strip. The 90,000 Arab natives were confined to their homes; the 210,000 Arab refugees were ordered to stay inside thir camps. When they get up and come out tomorrow morning, they will see, instedd of Israelis, an occupying army of Danes, Norwegians, Indians, Colombians and Swedes. We drove down to Gaza tonight in a special convoy, two bus loads and a carful of correspondents and cameramen, escorted by three Israeli army jeeps and a couple of half-tracks. The counryside was deserted, the road empty and untraveled. Gaza itself, under the curfew was a ghost town. The Israeli army, last night and the night before, had already pulled away most of its heavy equipment.

We drove southward, past Gaza, for several miles, and then, at a turn in the road, we saw the bouncing lights of a long convoy heading toward us, the beams of the headlights illuminating the driving rain. The first vehicles in the convoy, as it passed, was a white jeep with two big letters in black, U.N., and the fair-haired soldier who was driving it wore the U.N.'s bright blue helmet and carried a shoulder - patch that said "Denmark". Then came trucks, backed with canvas, trucks with a yellow cross on a blue shield, the shield of Norway. This was the Danish-Norwegian battalion, about 600 men, and it was the spearhead of the U.N. Force that was coming into Gaza tonight. Behind it, an Indian battalion came in to occupy Rafah, a little Arab village with a big and important army camp build many years ago by the British. After the Indians, came a Colombian battalion, and then a battalion of Swedes. South of the border in Sinai, a Yugoslav battalion is being held in reserve. The Danes and Norwegians crossed the border at seven this evening and arrived in Gaza, at the north end of the Strip, promptly at nine. This was a well-planned operation, neatly executed, as far as we could see. The Israeli military Commander in Gaza and General Burns' Chief of Staff met yesterday to map out the exact time. and details. In the rain and mud, in Gaza's main square, I talked to the Commander of the Danish - Norwegian battalion. I had last seen him just before Chrsstmas in Port Said where he was then in charge of running the civil affairs of the city, between the time the British got out and the Egyptians went back in. I asked him if he was not going to run Gaza. " NO", he said, his troops would line up along the eastern border, facing Israel. "Gaza", he said, "would be run by a special U.N. staff of civilian administrators." They also would be coming in during the night, and they would be on the job tomorrow. The 2400 or so U.N. soldiers who had come into the Gaza Strip have no billets for the night. They have brought ther own tents and they are sleeping under canvas at camp sites that were chosed for them during the day by advance parties of U.N. liasison officers. Each U.N. convoy tonight was guided into the Strip by an Israeli army escort and shown where the key places were that would have to be guarded -- places like the U.N. food depots for the refugees, often a target for looting in the times of change-over. Israeli civilian experts this afternoon went down to meet the U.N. experts who will succeed them to brief them on their new job. In the square at Gaza there is a continuous throng of reporters, cameramen, U.N. officers and Israeli soldiers. At one moment, an Israeli army car pulled up and out stepped a General, wearing a blask patch on his left eye. He walked casually and light-heartedly through the crowd, asking how the hand-over was going. He was General Moshe Dayan, Israel's forty-two year old Chief of Staff, who had come to see for himself. As far as we know, at this hour, the hand-over has been going without a hitch. The trick was for the U.N. to come in while the Israelis were still there, and then for the Israelis to get out as fast as possible, to avoid the interim of tension when Arab feelings might explode into demonstrations or even acts of terrorism against the withdrawing Israelis. When we left Gaza, around ten o'clock, no such incidents had been reported. We drove back with an Israeli officer who had been in Gaza for all the four months and four days of the Israeli occupation. We asked him how he felt about it. He was despondent and bitter. He said, "I don't see how these troops from Denmark and Norway, who don't know the language and dont know the people, can ever manage it." Unquote. The Israelis are convinced that the U.N. troops will be unable to police the area effectively or keep the border under control. Before too long, we should know whether the Israelis are right or wrong. And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Syria today gave the Iraq Petroleum Company "preliminary permission" to repair its oil pipeline. The pipeline normally carries millions of tons of oil a year from Iraq to the Mediterranean. It crosses Syria, and some of its pumping stations were blown up by the Syrian Army at the time British, French and Israeli forces went into Egypt. Company officials believe emergency repairs to put the line back in operation will take about a week. By this, they do not mean full operation. Syria says it gave the go-ahead for repairs on assumption that the Israeli withdrawal will continue.

The new African State of Ghana applied today for membership in the United Nations. The Security Council will meet tomorrow to act on the application. And swift approval is expected.

President Eisenhower today asked Congress to approve an agreement aimed at helping Britain through its present economic difficulties. The agreement would enable Britain to postpone paying as many as seven annual installments on loans from the United States. (These would be payments on both principal and interest.) Mr. Eisenhower pointed out that..up to last year..Britain had made every principal and interest payment agreed on in 1945.

The West German foreign minister..Heinrich von Brentano..said in Washington today that a neutral Germany would become "a pawn in the world of polltics." Von Brentano told the National Press Club his government will maintain its alliance with the West.

Secretary Dulles took off from Washington today for Australia, where we will attend a meeting of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization. Mr. Dulles said at the airport that SEATO..in its two and a half years of existence..has made "a positive contribution to peace and stability in Asia." Such pacts are necessary, he said, "to make clear the United and determined will of the member nations to preserve their independence."

Reports from Indonesia say that President Sukarno may declare martial law. Last Sunday, rebel forces seized control of four provinces of Eastern Indonesia and demand that Sukarno form a new government. This, so far, he has refused to do. There is also strong political opposition to Sukarno, because of his proposal to abandon Indonesia's western - style parliamentary government. Another Moslem party threatened today to quit the cabinet.

Incomplete returns in the Irish parliamentary election show Eamon de Valera's Party leading the party headed by Prime Minister Costello. It is still too early to know whether de Valera has returned to power. So far, tis party has won 42 seats. Costello's party has won only 19.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in amo moment wtih the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: Both Egypt and Israel are wary of each other. There is much distrust, born of long experience. Frank Crane once observed... very wisely...:"You may be deceived if you trust too much, but you will live in torment if you do not trust enough." F. P. Dunne spoke tersely on this subject. "Trust everybody", he said, "but cut the cards."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., March 7, 1957

This is the news:

An Egyptian official said today that "all ships that pay tolls to Egypt" will be allowed transit through the Suez Canal. The statement was made by the chief public relations officer of the Egyptian canal authority. The disagreement over tolls is one of the root causes of the Suez crisis. The United States, Britain and France have proposed that half the revenue be paid to Egypt, and the other half to the World Bank, pending a final settlement.

Egypt says the canal will be open to ships of 500 tons or less, starting tomorrow. And reports from Cairo say that work toward final clearance of the canal ~~may~~ WILL get underway ~~by the week-end.~~ TOMORROW. The Egyptian government has been holding up removal of the sunken tug Edgar Bonnet, pending the ~~[illegible]~~ withdrawal of Israeli ~~[illegible]~~ forces from the west coast of the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Israel today completed its evacuation of Gaza without incident. The United Nations has taken over military and civilian administration of the strip. In Cairo, the U.N. commander... General Burns... announced that this was done with Egyptian consent. Tonight, for the first time in four months, Israeli farmers are manning the watchtowers in their collective settlements along the Gaza frontier.

→

To the southeast... at Sharm el Sheikh... the Israelis are preparing to pull out of their positions at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba. Today they blew up a munitions depot and the two Egyptian gun emplacements commanding the strait. Most of the Israeli equipment already has been loaded aboard ship. Tents are being dismantled, and tomorrow the evacuation will be complete.

Today... in Tel Aviv... a crowd of 10-thousand demonstrators protested the withdrawal and demanded that Prime Minister Ben Gurion RESIGN. The demonstration was sponsored by the right-wing Herut Party. There was no violence.

Here in New York, the United Nations General Assembly will meet tomorrow afternoon to hear a report by Secretary General Hammarskjold on the Israeli withdrawal. The assembly may then take an indefinite recess.

Congress completed action today on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. The House approved the Senate version... by a vote of 350 to 60... and sent it to the White House for the President's signature. House Democratic Leader McCormack said it is now up to Mr. Eisenhower to carry out a "positive" Middle East program. ~~The resolution says the United States is prepared to use armed force, if necessary, to block Communist aggression in the Middle East. It also authorizes the President to spend up to 200-million dollars in the area, in the form of military and economic aid.~~

Mr. Eisenhower told his news conference today that the outlook in the Middle East is "brighter"... but many problems remain. He said, "Congress approves of what we are trying to do in this area, and that is the important thing." He expressed the view that it is up to the United Nations to deal with the underlying causes. A reporter asked whether this country might not be relying too much on the U.N. Mr. Eisenhower said... in reply... "I would doubt that there is anyone here that really feels the United States ought to try to stand up above the world, flex its muscles, say 'I am the policeman'... and go everywhere and try to compel people to follow its dictates."

He reiterated the American position that the Gulf of Aqaba is an international waterway. He was not prepared to say whether an American ship... passing through the gulf... can assume that it will be protected.

The President said the Administration is reviewing its entire budget for possible economies to hold down the cost of living. But he does not anticipate any substantial cut. He said the Administration is "still studying" the question of letting American newsmen visit Red China.

Mr. Eisenhower was handicapped at his news conference by a cold. He had cotton in his left ear, and asked the reporters to speak distinctly because, he said, "I am having a little temporary difficulty with my hearing." He was also still troubled with the cough he has had since Inauguration Day, although he said that is somewhat improved. News Secretary Hagerty said after the conference that the President had the cotton in his ear because of a slight inflamation of the Eustachian tube.

Red China today announced the release of the Reverend Paul Mackensen, a Lutheran missionary imprisoned since 1952 on charges of "committing acts threatening the security of the Chinese Peoples Republic." The Peiping radio said Mackensen was released in Shanghai, following the expiration of his five-year sentence. There was no immediate word as to his future plans.

In Eire, the party of Eamon de Valera has won Tuesday's general election. De Valera's party will have 78 seats in the new parliament. The party of Prime Minister Costello got only 38 seats. This gives de Valera's party a clear majority. And it is expected he will become premier when the new parliament meets in two weeks.

The United States today asked Hungary to stop the "harassment" of Hungarians who visit the American legation in Budapest. The Hungarian government recently arrested a number of persons as they left the legation. The American note calls this "an unusual violation of the customary treatment accorded diplomatic missions."

The United Nations Security Council voted unanimously today to admit the new African state of Ghana to the world organization. The application now goes to the General Assembly, where approval is assured.

The Senate committee investigating labor racketeering in Portland, Oregon, heard testimony today that Mayor Schrunk of Portland had taken a 500-dollar bribe from the operator of a ~~gambling~~ gambling club (TWO YEARS AGO, WHEN HE WAS A SHERIFF). Schrunk denied the charge... called it "fantastic".

Edward R. Murrow: March 7, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The President said today that any substantial cut in our foreign aid spending would damage American security.

In recent days he has received two reports on the subject of foreign aid: one from a committee headed by Ben Fairless of U.S. Steel; the other by Eric Johnston, former president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. There are some interesting points of agreement and disagreement in these two reports. The Fairless committee puts its main emphasis on collective security. It comes up with an eight billion dollar figure as the maximum cost of the foreign aid program. But only one billion, seven hundred million should go for non-military aid. It recommends a high priority for those countries that have joined us in a collective security system. The Fairless committee believes that collective security should dominate our thinking in the whole field of economic aid to foreign countries. This committee feels that we must go on spending at about the present rate; but it wants everything possible done to replace government aid by trade and private financing. It wants lowered tariffs and the removal of trade restrictions. It wants our government to adopt tax measures that would encourage American private capital to invest in the foreign countries. In general it favors loans rather than outright gifts. And it would like government loans to be linked with private loans wherever possible. Instead of the old slogan of trade following the flag, the committee thinks that private money should follow government money when it comes to investing in foreign countries. And that the government money should go where it is likely to increase the strength and stability of mutual security arrangements.

The Fairless committee recommends long-term economic assistance to foreign countries; wants the whole matter placed under the State Department.

The Johnston committee takes a somewhat different view. It recommends that aid to under-developed countries be substantially increased. And it wants that aid divorced from military assistance. The committee thinks "a dollar spent for economic development may produce more permanent security for our nation than a dollar spent on military assistance." This committee doesn't suggest any reduction in military aid, but it wants a separate international development fund to handle non-military affairs. The Johnston committee is more impressed than is the Fairless committee with the need to help those neutral countries not allied with us militarily.

Both committees point out that our non-military aid to foreign countries is considerably less than is generally supposed . Of the total mutual security money appropriated in the current year, only ten percent goes for the economic development of countries with which the United States does not have military agreements. ~~About two-thirds of all our non-military aid goes to six countries - South Korea, Nationalist China, Viet Nam, Pakistan, Turkey and Iran. That leaves only one-third for the nine hundred million people in the other under-developed countries of the free world.~~

Both committees encourage private investment abroad, more loans rather than outright grants; and both want longer range economic assistance. That is something the Congress has not yet shown any disposition to grant.

The basic difference between the two reports is one of emphasis. Neither advocates a reduction in our military expenditures abroad. But on the non-military side the Fairless committee believes that our economic aid should be tied as tightly as possible to our far-ranging system of collective security. The Johnston committee is more concerned about those nations that are not identified with any collective security system - in other words the neutrals. It believes that our non-military economic assistance is a form of preventive medicine against future expenditures and loss of life. And it says there has been ample evidence of the vulnerability of weak societies to subversion, manipulation, or attack by the Soviet bloc, Indo-China, Greece, Korea, and more recently the Middle East. And the committee adds: "Once an international crisis develops, it may be too late to save the situation with money alone. Meeting the cause of crisis beforehand is always far less costly to U.S. resources and at times U.S. lives.

There is a considerable area of agreement in these two reports, but they tend to distil an old argument; and that is whether non-military economic aid should be confined, more or less, to those nations with which we have military alliances. Is it, for example in our national self-interest to aid countries such as India, Poland, Yugoslavia and Saudi-Arabia? The two reports distil the argument, they do not resolve it.

Word for Today

The United States would seem to have inherited a considerable financial responsibility to the rest of the world. Senator Borah once gave some good advice on this subject. "We cannot stand up before the world," he said, and say we will help to save civilization and then---in the next breath---say, 'We will do so only provided you pay cash."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 7, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

An Egyptian official said today that "all the ships that pay tolls to Egypt" will be allowed transit through the Suez Canal. The statement was made by the chief public relations officer of the Egyptian canal authority. The disagreement over tolls is one of the root causes of the Suez crisis. The United States Britain and France have proposed that half the revenue be paid to Egypt and the other half to the World Bank pending a final settlement.

Egypt says the canal will be open to ships of 500 tons or less, starting tomorrow. And reports from Cairo say that work toward final clearance of the canal will get underway tomorrow. The Egyptian government has been holding up removal of the sunken tug Edgar Bonnet, pending the withdrawal of Israeli forced from the west coast of the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Israel today completed its evacuation of Gaza without incident. The United Nations has taken over military and civilian administration of the strip. In Cairo, the U.N. Commander..General Burns..announced that this was done with Egyptian consent. Tonight, for the first time in four months, Israeli farmers are manning the watchtowers in their collective settlements along the Gaza frontier.

To the southeast ..at Sharm el Sheikh..the Israelis are preparing to pull out of their positions at the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba. Today they blew up a munitions depot and the two Egyptian gun emplacements commanding the strait. Most of the Israeli equipment already has been loaded aboard ship. Tents are being dismantled, and tomorrow the evacuation will be complete.

Today ..in Tel Aviv..a crowd of 10-thousand demonstrators protested the withdrawal and demanded that Prime Minister Ben Gurion resign. The demonstration was sponsored by the right-wing Herut Party. There was no violence.

Here in New York, the United Nations General Assembly will meet tomorrow afternoon to hear a report by Secretary General Hammarskjold on the Israeli withdrawal. The assembly may then take an indefinite recess.

Congress completed action today on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. The House approved the Senate version..by a vote of 350 to 60.. and sent it to the White House for the President's signature.

House Democratic Leader McCormack said it is not up to Mr. Eisenhower to carry out a "positive" Middle East program.

Mr. Eisenhower told his news conference today that the outlook in the Middle East is "brighter"..but many problems remain. He said, "Congress approves of what we are trying to do in this area, and that is the important thing." He expressed the view that it is up to the United Nations to deal with the underlying causes. A reporter asked whether this country might not be relying too much on the U.N.. Mr. Eisenhower said..in reply.."I would doubt that there is anyone here that really feels that the United States ought to try to stand up above the world, flex its muscles, say ' I am the policeman'.. and go everywhere and try to compel people to follow its dictates."

He reiterated the American position that the Gulf of Aqaba is an international waterway. He was not prepared to say whether an American ship...passing through the gulf...can assume that it will be protected.

The President said the Administration is reviewing its entire budget for possible economies to hold town the cost of living. But he does not anticipate any substantial cut. He said the Administration is "still studying" the question of letting American newsmen visit Red China.

Mr. Eisenhower was handicapped at his news conference by a cold. He had cotton in his left ear, and asked the reporters to speak distinctly because, he said, " I am having a little temporary difficulty with my hearing." He was also still troubled with the cough he has had since Inauguration Day, although he said that is somewhat improved. News Secretary Hagerty said after the the conference that the President had the cotton in his ear because of a slight inflamation of the Eustachian tube.

Red China today announced the release of the Reverend Paul Mackensen, a Lutheran missionary imprisoned since 1952 on charges of "committing acts threatening to the security of the Chinese Peoples Republic." The Peiping radio said Macksnsen was released in Shanghai, following the expiration of his five-year sentence. There was no immediate word as to his future plans.

In Eire, the party of Eamon de Valera has won Tuesday's general election. De Valera's party will have 78 seats in the new parliament. The party of Prime Minister Costello got only 38 seats. This gives de Valera's party a clear majority. And it is expected he will become premier when the new parliament meets in two weeks.

The United States today asked Hungary to stop the "harassment" of Hungarians who visit the American legation in Budapest. The Hungarian government recently arrested a number of persons as they left the legation. The Americam note calls this "an unusual violation of the customary treatment accorded diplomatic missions."

The United Nations Security Council voted unanimously today to admit the new African state of Ghana to the world organization. The application now goes to the General Assembly where approval is assured.

The President said today that any substantial cut in our foreign aid spending would damage American security.

In recent days he has received two reports on the subject of foreign aid: one from a committee headed by Ben Fairless of U.S. Steel; the other by Eric Johnston, former president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. There are some interesting points of agreement and disagreement in these two reports. The Fairless committee puts its main emphasis on collective security. It comes up with an eight billion dollar figure as the maximum cost of the foriegn aid program. But only one billion, seven hundred million should go for non-military aid. It recommends a high priority for those countries that have joined us in a collective security system. The Fairless committee believes that collective security should dominate our thinking in the whole field of economic aid to foreign countries. This committee feels that we must go on spending at about the present rate; but it wants everythnng possible done to replace government aid by trade and private financing. It wants lowered tariffs and the removal of trade restrictions. It wants our government to adopt tax measures that would encourage American private capital to invest in the foreign countries. In general it favors loans rather than outright gifts. And it would like government loans to be linked with private loans wherever possible. Instead of the old slogan of trade following the flag, the committee thinks that private money should follow government money when it comes to investing in foreign countries. And that the government money should go where it is likely to increase the strength and stability of mutual security arrangements.

The Fairless committee recommends long-term economic assistance to foreign countries; wants the whole matter placed under the State Department.

The Johnston committee takes a somewhat different view . It recommends that aid to under-developed countries be substantially increased. And it wants that aid divorced from military assistance. The committee thinks "a dollar spent for economic development may produce more permanent security for our nation than a dollar spent on military assistance." This committee doesn't suggest any reduction in military aid, but it wants a separate international development fund to handle non-military affairs. The Johnston committee is more impressed than is the Fairless committee with the need to help those neutral countries not allied with us militarily.

Both committees point out hhat our non-military aid to foreign countries is considerably less than is generally supposed. Of the total mutual security money appropriated in the current year, only ten percent goes for the economic developemnt of countries with which the United States does not have military agreements.

Both committees encourage private investment abroad, more loans rather than outright grants; and both want longer range economic assistance. That is something the Congress has not yet shown any disposition to grant.

The basic difference between the two reports is one of emphasis. Neither advocates a reduction in our military expenditures abroad. But on the non-military side the Fairless committee believes that our economic aid should be tied as tightly as possible to our far - ranging system of collective security. The Johnston committee is more concerned about those nations that are not identified with any collective security system - in other words the neutrals. It believes that our non - military economic assistance is a form of preventive medicine against future expenditures and loss of life." And it says "there has been ample evidence of the vulnerability of weak societies to subversion, manipulation, or attack by the Soviet bloc. Indo China, Greece, Korea, and more recently the Middle East. And the committee adds:"once an international crisis developes, it may be too late to save the situation with money alone. Meeting the cause of crisis beforehand is always far less costly to U.S. resources and at times U.S. lives.

There is a considerable area of agreement in these two reports, but they tend to distil the old argument; and that is whether non-military economic aid should be confined, more or less, to those nations with which we have military alliances. Is it, for example, in our national self-interest to aid countries such as India, Poland, Yugoslavia and Saudi-Arabia ? The two reports distil the argument, they do not resolve it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is our announcer.

ANNOUNCER:

MURROW: The United States would seem to have inherited a considerable financial responsibility to the rest of the world. Senator Borah once gave some good advice on this subject. "We cannot stand up before the world," he said, and say we will help save civilization and then -- in the next breath -- say, 'We will do so only provided you pay cash."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., March 8, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower hopes to go to Florida for a vacation, around the middle of next week. Plans are not complete... but News Secretary Hagerty says the President expects to be in Florida for five or six days. Mr. Eisenhower has been troubled since Inauguration Day with a persistent cough. And now he has a cold, which has caused a slight inflamation of the inner ear. Hagerty said today that the cough seems to be "a little better."

The House Appropriations Committee approved a resolution today, calling on President Eisenhower to recommend "substantial" reductions in the federal budget. The resolution was passed on a straight 22-to-12 party line vote. The committee then proceeded to cut the budget requested for the White House and the executive agencies, by 23 percent. The Budget Bureau is one of these agencies.

Republican Senator Case of New Jersey said today that the United States needs to set up a long-term foreign economic aid program as a bulwark against Communism. He told the Senate, "The time has come, I believe, when those at the highest levels of our government must consider a comprehensive systematic and adequate program of assistance for the underdeveloped countries."

Today... in the United Nations... Secretary General Hammarskjold formally notified the General Assembly that Israel has complied with the U.N. resolutions calling for evacuation of the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Both the disputed areas, he said, are now occupied by United Nations troops. The Israelis abandoned their positions at the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba today, 24 hours after completing their evacuation of the Gaza Strip. Hammarskjold told the assembly that "a small party" of Israeli mechanics and dock personnel will remain at the entrance to the gulf until March 12. He said: "The Israeli withdrawal by sea is proceeding as planned." Mr. Hammarskjold reminded the assembly that the care of Arab refugees in the Gaza Strip will require added expenditures by the United Nations relief agency. He did not spell out plans for posting United Nations forces along the Israeli-Egyptian frontier.

Thousands of Arabs demonstrated in the streets of Gaza today for the return of Egyptian control. The United Press correspondent in Gaza says the demonstrations appeared to be well-organized.

The Suez Canal was opened today to ships of 500 tons or less. [redacted] The Associated Press quotes Egyptian officials as saying [redacted] Israeli vessels are barred from using the waterway, on grounds that a state of belligerency still exists. An official of the Egyptian canal authority said again today that canal tolls must be paid to Egypt. This matter of tolls... and free transit through the canal... will be taken up tomorrow in Paris, where British Prime Minister Macmillan will be meeting with French Premier Mollet. Britain and France... as well as the United States... would like to see some of the toll money held by the World Bank, pending [redacted] final settlement of the Suez problem.

The Associated Press quotes "reliable sources" in Budapest as saying that Communist police there have arrested five leaders of the Calvinist Church. The Hungarian government denies knowledge of the arrests.

Central Greece was struck today by a series of earthquakes. Twenty small villages were destroyed. The ministry of the interior... in Athens... says 30 casualties have been reported so far. There was no immediate distinction as to dead and injured.

On Cyprus, the Greek Cypriot underground has called a general strike tomorrow, to protest the deportation of Archbishop Makarios. Tomorrow will mark the first anniversary of the exiling of Makarios by the British authorities.

Reports from Indonesia say that North Sumatra and Borneo may join the revolt against the central Indonesian government. If this happens, only Java would remain under full government control. The provinces of Indonesia have been demanding more autonomy. There is also opposition to President Sukarno's plan to abandon western-style democracy.

The United Nations General Assembly today admitted the new African state of Ghana as the 81st member of the world organization.

The Senate committee investigating racketeering heard Mayor Schrunk of Portland, Oregon, deny again today that he ever took a 500-dollar bribe. James B. Elkins, a Portland gambler, testified yesterday that Schrunk took the bribe in 1955, when he was a sheriff. The bribe allegedly was paid for "protection" of a gambling club. Schrunk said today that he is willing to take a lie-detector test, but conceded he flunked a similar test on the same subject in Oregon. Chairman McClellan asked the Justice Department to examine the conflicting testimony for possible perjury.

Here in New York, the tugboat workers have voted to end their 36-day-old strike... the longest walkout in the harbor's history. The strikers approved a four-year contract providing an 11 percent increase in pay.

In Alcorn, Mississippi, the students of Alcorn A. & M. (a state-supported all-Negro college) staged a mass walkout today. The students are boycotting their classes because of a series of articles written by Professor Clennon King, a member of the faculty, voicing criticism of integration leaders. They accuse the teacher of placing the school in "a controversial situation." Classes have been suspended.

The Florida Supreme Court today ruled against the admission of Negro students to the University of Florida Law School at this time. The 5-to-2 decision was returned in the case of Virgil Hawkins, of Daytona Beach, who has sought admittance to the university since 1948. Last year, the United States Supreme Court ruled that Hawkins should be admitted without delay. The state Supreme Court said... in its majority decision... that it is "cognizant of its duty" to compel the admission of Hawkins to the university. "But," it said, "we have an equally compelling duty to perform in respect to the public peace."

A New York federal judge ruled today that the International Boxing Club is a monopoly... and promotes boxing contests "in restraint of trade." The ruling grew out of an anti-trust action filed by the government in March, 1952.

Edward R. Murrow: March 8, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

Louis Seltzer is the editor of the Cleveland Press - a Scripps Howard newspaper. His record shows that as reporter and editor he is equipped with courage and tenacity. His paper and three of his employees are in trouble - contempt of court - pictures taken and published without the knowledge or consent of the presiding Judge, during a child custody hearing. This action raises issues of interest outside the Cleveland area. We have asked Mr. Seltzer, who is at our WGAR microphone in Cleveland, to answer a few questions. Are you there, Louis?

1) What exactly happened?

2) Why did you do it?

3) What are you trying to prove?

4) Is it your feeling that access to news is being unduly restricted?

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, March 8, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Louis Selzer is the editor of the Cleveland Press, a Scripps-Howard newspaper. His record shows that - as reporter and editor - he is equipped with courage and tenacity. His paper and three of his employees are in trouble, contempt of court, - pictures taken and published without the knowledge or consent of the presiding judge, during a child custody hearing. This action raises issues of interest outside the Cleveland area. We have asked Mr. Selzer, who is at our WGAR microphone in Cleveland, to answer a few questions.

Are you there, Louis?

SELZER: I am, Ed.

MURROW: What exactly happened?

SELZER: Well, Ed, we carefully chose a routine case, one which did not figure importantly as a news event. The judge did not know the picture was being taken, the attorneys did not know, the principals did not know; the judge says he was in no way distracted; the proceedings were not interrupted, and nobody was aware the picture was being taken, that the dignity of his court was completely unaffected. The demonstration was clear - the issue is sharply drawn simply that under today's circumstances the picture and the pen are inseparable in telling a story and the people, we believe, are entitled to both.

MURROW: Louis, why did you do it?

SELZER: Ed, we are simply attempting to prove three basic things: one, that in this modern, visual world the picture is equally as important in telling a story as a printed word; two, that modern photographic equipment and techniques in no way distract from orderly courtroom procedure; and third, that there is no such thing as a law against taking courtroom pictures. There is, instead, a so-called rule, written by the Bar Associations and known as Canon No. 35. This canon was ordered into effect by the Supreme Court of Ohio, as in other states, without the opportunity for public discussion, demonstration or review. The Cleveland Press has been seeking honorable ways to overcome this defect. It has sought such reviewing interest of what it believes is the public's right to know a principle about which we feel profoundly.

MURROW: Then as I understand it, you deliberately sought a court test in this matter. You sent your photographer into the court, he took the pictures; the judge himself said that he was in no way inconvenienced or disturbed and the decorum of the court was also not disturbed. Is that right?

SELZER: That's correct, Ed. We had ... and this wasn't a mere isolated incident. For the last approximate three years, we have been attempting to get an official judicial decision in this matter. We, for example, persuaded the Bar Association to hold a mock hearing in Cleveland, presided over, by the way, the same Chief Justice who cites us for contempt.

MURROW: Yes.

SELZER: And we took pictures - and nobody in that audience, including the Chief Justice, was aware pictures were being taken. Immediately afterward, the entire Common Police Court of this county, unanimously requested the Supreme Court of Ohio to take another look at this Canon No. 35, with the idea that individual judges should be given the right to decide whether pictures are taken in their courtroom. The Supreme (inter.)

MURROW: Well, now, Louis (inter.)

SELZER: Excuse me ...

MURROW: Excuse me - is it your feeling that access to news in general is being unduly restricted?

SELSER: Ed, that is the basis for the feeling we have which expresses itself in this incident we're now talking about. I have a very profound concern about the steadily shrinking area of information in this democracy. We can expect sources of information to shrink and dry up in authoritarian countries and dictatorships. But in a democracy, the last surviving, true democracy on the face of this earth, at a time when so many political, economic, sociological and international matters are pressing upon this country which exerts such influence on the rest of the world, I just do not believe that we can stand by and permit official sources to shrink away from the people who have the decisions upon which the ultimate destiny of this country and the world really rest.

MURROW: Then you're concerned not just about the taking of pictures in the courtroom, but the whole area of the shrinking of news.

SELSER: Ed, I believe - and I cannot speak for you - but I believe that all of us in the field of communications, whether of television, radio, newspapers, magazines, books or whatever we're in, I think that each of us, and all of us, have a very deep responsibility to the public of the United States of America. This is a great land of freedom and we ought - all of us - to be much more vigilant, fight much more vigorously and draw the issues much more sharply than we've been willing thus far to do. I believe ... (inter.)

MURROW: Louis Selser, you have also spoken for me. Thanks very much, (inter.) ...

SELSER: Right. OK, Ed.

MURROW: ... for sitting there and answering questions. That was Louis Selser, the editor of the Cleveland Press. This is Ed

Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

Word for Today

Archibald MacLeish once said... with regard to radio broadcasting... that the freedom of speech of which this country is so proud is also freedom to hear... that freedom to hear is indeed the whole foundation and reason of freedom to speak. In chatting ~~these few minutes~~ with Louis Seltzer, it occurred to this reporter that freedom to see... ~~though it be second-hand by means of a camera~~... is no less a part of freedom of the press.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, March 8, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Louis Selser is the editor of the Cleveland Press, a Scripps-Howard newspaper. His record shows that - as reporter and editor - he is equipped with courage and tenacity. His paper and three of his employees are in trouble, contempt of court, - pictures taken and published without the knowledge or consent of the presiding judge, during a child custody hearing. This action raises issues of interest outside the Cleveland area. We have asked Mr. Selser, who is at our WGAR microphone in Cleveland, to answer a few questions.

Are you there, Louis?

SELSER: I am, Ed.

MURROW: What exactly happened?

SELSER: Well, Ed, we carefully chose a routine case, one which did not figure importantly as a news event. The judge did not know the picture was being taken, the attorneys did not know, the principals did not know, the judge says he was in no way distracted; the proceedings were not interrupted, and nobody was aware the picture was being taken, that the dignity of his court was completely unaffected. The demonstration was clear - the issue is sharply drawn simply that under today's circumstances the picture and the pen are inseparable in telling a story and the people, we believe, are entitled to both.

MURROW: Louis, why did you do it?

SELSER: Ed, we are simply attempting to prove three basic things: one, that in this modern, visual world the picture is equally as important in telling a story as a printed word; two, that modern photographic equipment and techniques in no way distract from orderly courtroom procedure; and third, that there is no such thing as a law against taking courtroom pictures. There is, instead, a so-called rule, written by the Bar Associations and known as Canon No. 35. This canon was ordered into effect by the Supreme Court of Ohio, as in other states, without the opportunity for public discussion, demonstration or review. The Cleveland Press has been seeking honorable ways to overcome this defect. It has sought such reviewing interest of what it believes is the public's right to know a principle about which we feel profoundly.

MURROW: Then as I understand it, you deliberately sought a court test in this matter. You sent your photographer into the court, he took the pictures; the judge himself said that he was in no way inconvenienced or disturbed and the decorum of the court was also not disturbed. Is that right?

SELSER: That's correct, Ed. We had ... and this wasn't a mere isolated incident. For the last approximate three years, we have been attempting to get an official judicial decision in this matter. We, for example, persuaded the Bar Association to hold a mock hearing in Cleveland, presided over, by the way, the same Chief Justice who cites us for contempt.

MURROW: Yes.

SELSER: And we took pictures - and nobody in that audience, including the Chief Justice, was aware pictures were being taken. Immediately afterward, the entire Common Police Court of this county, unanimously requested the Supreme Court of Ohio to take another look at this Canon No. 35, with the idea that individual judges should be given the right to decide whether pictures are taken in their courtroom. The Supreme (inter.)

MURROW: Well, now, Louis (inter.)

SELSER: Excuse me ...

MURROW: Excuse me - is it your feeling that access to news in general is being unduly restricted?

SELSER: Ed, that is the basis for the feeling we have which expresses itself in this incident we're now talking about. I have a very profound concern about the steadily shrinking area of information in this democracy. We can expect sources of information to shrink and dry up in authoritarian countries and dictatorships. But in a democracy, the last surviving, true democracy on the face of this earth, at a time when so many political, economic, sociological and international matters are pressing upon this country which exerts such influence on the rest of the world, I just do not believe that we can stand by and permit official sources to shrink away from the people who have the decisions upon which the ultimate destiny of this country and the world really rest.

MURROW: Then you're concerned not just about the taking of pictures in the courtroom, but the whole area of the shrinking of news.

SELSER: Ed, I believe - and I cannot speak for you - but I believe that all of us in the field of communications, whether of television, radio, newspapers, magazines, books or whatever we're in, I think that each of us, and all of us, have a very deep responsibility to the public of the United States of America. This is a great land of freedom and we ought - all of us - to be much more vigilant, fight much more vigorously and draw the issues much more sharply than we've been willing thus far to do. I believe ... (inter.)

MURROW: Louis Selser, you have also spoken for me. Thanks very much, (inter.) ...

SELSER: Right. OK, Ed.

MURROW: ... for sitting there and answering questions. That was Louis Selser, the editor of the Cleveland Press. This is Ed

Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 8, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower hopes to go to Florida for a vacation around the middle of next week. Plans are not complete..but News Secretary Hagerty says the President expects to be in Florida for five or six days. Mr. Eisenhower has been troubled since Inauguration Day with a persistent cough. And now he has a cold, which has caused a slight inflamation of the inner ear. Hagerty said today that the cough seems to be "a little better"

The House Appropriations Committee approved a resolution today calling on President Eisenhower to recommend "substantial" reductions in the federal budget. The resolution was passed on a straight 22-to-12 party line vote. The committee then proceeded to cut the budget requested for the White House and the executive agencies by 23 percent. The Budget Bureau is one of these agencies.

Republican Senator Case of New Jersey said today that the United States needs to set up a long - term economic aid program as a bulwark against Communism. He told the Senate, "The time has come, I believe, when those at the highest levels of our government must consider a comprehensive systematic and adequate program of assistance for the underdeveloped countries."

Today..in the United Nations...Secretary General Hammarskjold formally notified the General Assembly that Israel has complied with the U.N. resolutions calling for evacuation of the Gulf of Aqaba and the Gaza Strip. Both the disputed areas, he said, are now occupied by United Nations troops. The Israelis abandoned their positions at the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba today, 24 hours after completing their evacuation of the Gaza Strip. Hammarskjold told the assembly that "a small party" of Israeli mechanics and dock personnel will remain at the entrance to the gulf until March 12. He said: "The Israeli withdrawal by sea is proceeding as planned." Mr. Hammarskjold reminded the assembly that the care of Arab refugees in the Gaza Strip will require added expenditures by the United Nations relief agency. He did not spell out plans for posting United Nations forces along the Israeli - Egyptian frontier.

Thousands of Arabs demonstrated in the streets of Gaza today for the return of Egyptian control. The United Press correspondent in Gaza says the demonstrations appeared to be well- organized.

The Suez Canal was opened today to ships of 500 tons or less. The Associated Press quotes Egyptian officials as saying Israeli vessels are barred from using the waterway, on grounds that a state of belligerency still exists. An official of the Egyptian canal authority said again today that canal tolls must be paid to Egypt, This matter of tolls..and free transit through the canal..will te taken up tomorrow in Paris, where British Prime Minister Macmillan will be meeting with French Premier Mollet. Britain and France...as well as the United States...would like to see some of the toll money held by the World Bank, pending final settlement of the Suez problem.

The Associated Press quoted "reliable sources" in Budapest as saying that Communist police there have arrested five leaders of the Calvinist Church. The Hungarian government denies knowledge of the arrests.

Central Greece was struck today by a series of earthquakes. Twenty small villages were destroyed. The ministry of the interior .. in Athens..says 30 causualties have been reported so far. There was no immediate distinction as to dead and injured.

On Cyprus, the Greek Cypriot underground has called a general strike tomorrow to protest the deportation of Archbishop Makarios. Tomorrow will mark the first anniversary of the exiling of Makarios by the British authorities.

Reports from Indonesia say that North Sumatra and Borneo may join the revolt against the central Indonesian government. If this happens only Java would remain under full government control. The provinces of Indonesia have been demanding more autonomy. There is also opposition to President Sukarno's plan to abandon western - style democracy.

The United Nations General Assembly today admitted the new African state of Ghana as the 81st member of the world organization.

The Senate committee investigating racketeering heard Mayor Schrunk of Portland, Oregon, deny again today that he ever took a 500 - dollar bribe. James B. Elkins , a Portland gambler, testified yesterday that Schrunk took the bribe in 1955, when he was a sheriff. The bribe allegedly was paid for "protection" of a gambling club. Schrunk said today that he is willing to take a lie-detector test, but conceded he flunked a similar test on the same subject in Oregon. Chairman McClellan asked the Justice Department to examine the conflicting testimony for possible perjury.

Here in New York, the tugboat workers have voted to end their 36- day-old strike..the longest walkout in the harbour's history. The strikers approved a four-year contract providing an 11 percent increase in pay.

The Florida Supreme Court today ruled against the admission of Negro students to the University of Florida Law School at this time. The 5 - to - 2 decision was returned in the case of Virgil Hawkins, of Daytona Beach, who has sought admistance to the university since 1948. Last year, the United States Supreme Court ruled that Hawkins whould be admitted without delay. The state Supreme Court said,..in its majority decision..that it is "cognizant of its duty" to compel the admission of Hawkins to the university. "But" it said, "we have an equally compelling duty to perform in respect to the public peace."

MURROW: Louis Selzer is the editor of the Cleveland Press, a Scripps-Howard newspaper. His record shows that - as reporter and editor - he is equipped with courage and tenacity. His paper and three of his employees are in trouble, contempt of court, - pictures taken and published without the knowledge or consent of the presiding judge, during a child custody hearing. This action raised issues of interest outside the Cleveland area. We have asked Mr. Selzer, who is at our WGAR micorphone in Cleaeland, to answer a few questions.

Are you there, Louis?

SELZER: I am, Ed.

MURROW: What exactly happened?

SELZER: Well, Ed, we carefully ohose a routine case, one which did not figure importantly as a news event. The judge did not know the picture was being taken, the attorneys did not know, the principals did not know; the judge says he was in no way distracted; the proceedings were not interrupted, and nobody was aware the picture was being taken, that the dignity of his court was completely unaffected. The demonstration was clear - the issue is sharply drawn simply that under today's circumstances the picture and pen are inseparable in telling a story and the people, we believe are entitled to both.

MURROW: Louis, why did you do it?

SELZER: Ed, we are simply attempting to prove three basic things: one, that in this modern, visual world the picture is equally as important in telling a story as a printed word; too, that modern photographic equipment and techniques in no way distract from orderly courtroom procedure; and third , that there is no such thing as a law against taking courtroom pictures. There is, instead, a so-called rule, written by the Bar Associations and known as Canon Number 35. This canon was ordered into effect by the Supreme Court of Ohio, as in other states, without the opportunity for public discussion, demonstration or review. The Cleveland Press has been seeking honorable ways to overcome this defect. It has sought such reviewing interest of what it believes is the public's right to know a principle about which we feel profoundly.

MURROW: Then as I understand it, you deliberately sought a court test in this matter. You sent your photographer into the court, he took the pictures; the judge himself said that he was in no way inconvenienced or disturbed and the decorum of the court was also not disturbed. Is that right?

SELZER: That's correct, Ed. We had...and this wasn't a mere isolated incident. For the last approximate three years, we have been attemptnng to get an official judicial decision in this matter. We, for example, persuaded the Bar Association to hold a mock hearing in Cleveland, presided over, by the way, by the same Chief Justice who cites us for contempt.

MURROW: Yes.

SELZER: And we took pictures - and nobody in that audience, including the Chief Justice, was aware pictures were being taken. Immediately afterward, the entire Common Police Court of this county, unanimously requested the Supreme Court of Ohio to take another look at this Canon Number 35, with the idea that individual judges should be given the right to decide whether pictures are taken in their court-room. The Supreme (interruption)

MURROW: Well , now, Louis (interruption)

SELZER: Excuse me...

MURROW: Excuse me - is it your feeling that access to news in general is being unduly restricted?

SELZER: Ed, that is the basis for the feeling we have which expresses itself in this incident we're now talking about. I have a very profound concern about the steadily shrinking area of information in this democracy. We can expect sources of information to shrink and dry up in authoritarian countries and dictatorships. But in a democracy, the last surviving, true democracy on the face of this earth, at a time when so many political, economic, sociological and international matters are pressing upon this country which exerts such influence on the rest of the world, I just do not believe that we can stand by and permit official sources to shrink away from the people who have the decisions upon which the ultimate destiny of this country and our world really rest.

MURROW: Then you're concerned not just about the taking of pictures in the courtroom, but the whole area of the shrinking of news.

SELZER: Ed, I believe - and I cannot speak for you - but I believe that all of us in the field of communications, whether of television, radio, newspapers, magazines, books or whatever we're in, I think that each of us, and all of us, have a very deep responsibility to the public of the United States of America. This is a great land of freedom and we ought - all of us - be be much more vigilant, fight much more vigorously and draw the issues much more sharply than we've been willing thus far to do. I believe..(interruption)

MURROW: Louis Selzer, you have also spoken for me. Thanks very much, (interuption)

SELZER: Right. OK, Ed.

MURROW: ....for sitting there and answering questions. That was Louis Selzer, the editor of the Cleveland Press. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the world for today. Now, here is our announcer.

ANNOUNCER:

MURROW: Archibald MacLeish once said..with regard to radio broadcasting..that the freedom of speech of which this country is so proud, is also freedom to hear..that freedom to hear is indeed the whole foundation and reason of freedom to speak. In chatting with Louis Selzer, it occurred to this reporter that freedom to see...is no less a part of freedom of the press.

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., March 11, 1957

This is the news:

Egypt today announced appointment of an Egyptian governor to take over administration of the Gaza Strip. Egypt said the United Nations Emergency Force in Gaza had "overstepped its functions"... and it charged United Nations troops with firing on civilians demonstrating yesterday for return to Egyptian control. It said a protest had been sent to Secretary General Hammarskjold, here in New York.

The charge of firing on civilians was promptly denied by the emergency force headquarters in Gaza. United Nations guards did fire over the heads of demonstrators who tried to storm the U.N. headquarters. It was pointed out that no casualties occurred. The Cairo radio claims that "tens of thousands" of Arabs demonstrated in Gaza again today. But U.N. officials say there were only a few hundred demonstrators... and that the Gaza Strip tonight is calm.

→

Dr. Ralph Bunche, the United Nations undersecretary general, visited the strip today. He told reporters afterwards that the United Nations has never questioned Egypt's legal rights regarding Gaza. He said that when the Egyptian governor arrives in Gaza, General Burns (the United Nations commander) "will shake his hand."

No official statement was issued at United Nations headquarters, here in New York. Secretary General Hammarskjold conferred with American Ambassador Lodge and Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi. Later, Fawzi left for Cairo... as scheduled. A source close to Hammarskjold is reported to have called the Egyptian action "regrettable".

In Jerusalem tonight, an Israeli official expressed "grave concern". Earlier, an Israeli foreign ministry spokesman said, "Responsibility now rests on the U.N.---responsibility for asserting international rule in Gaza and making it impossible for Egypt to return to the area and resume its murderous activities." The spokesman charged that Egypt had resumed its fedayeen raids on Israel. "Israel," he said, "has made it perfectly clear she will not tolerate provocations of this kind."

Syria today declared its "full support" of the stand taken by the Egyptian government.

Oil began flowing across Syria in pipelines today for the first time since the Anglo-French intervention in November. The pipelines... belonging to the Iraq Petroleum Company... had been sabotaged by the Syrian Army. Oil has also started flowing from Saudi Arabia to the refinery on the British-protected island of Bahrein, in the Persian Gulf.

The United States, Britain and France tonight rejected the Soviet proposal of February 11 for a Big Four agreement on the Middle East. The rejection was contained in separate notes delivered in Moscow. The United States note expressed "considerable doubt" as to the seriousness of the Russian bid for American cooperation in the area. It pointed out that even as Russia was proposing cooperation, Kremlin leaders were attacking American Middle East policy. This, the note said, "suggests that the U.S.S.R. neither desires nor expects such cooperation." Russia also proposed an end to arms shipments to the Middle East... and the liquidation of foreign bases in the area. The United States observed that while it has consistently tried to avoid an arms race between Israel and the Arab states, Russia itself has seen fit "to effect massive shipments of arms into the area."/ The State Department said Russia can demonstrate its good faith by respecting the United Nations resolutions addressed to it regarding Hungary. The British and French notes were in a similar vein.

Vice President Nixon arrived in Ethiopia today for a two-day visit.

In London, a delegation from Singapore today submitted proposals for internal self-government. Britain is being asked to surrender all functions in the island colony, except foreign affairs and defense.

[redacted]

Reports from Indonesia say the government may resign on Wednesday. The central government in Jakarta has been beset... for months... by rebellion in the eastern provinces.

In Australia, the annual meeting of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization has gone into its second day. New Zealand's external affairs minister... Thomas MacDonald... said the "heartening" new development in Southeast Asia is the emergence of the strong, anti-Communist regime in Free Vietnam.

In Washington, the Supreme Court today reinstated an indictment charging the United Auto Workers with violating the Corrupt Practices Act in paying for political broadcasts. The charge arises from four broadcasts paid for out of the union's general fund in the 1954 congressional elections. The lower court dismissed the indictment on grounds that the payments were not within the meaning of the word "expenditures" as used in the act. The Supreme Court ruled... in a split 6-to-3 decision... that the lower court made an "erroneous interpretation", and sent the case back for trial. ~~Justice Douglas wrote... in the dissenting opinion... that the majority decision "greatly impairs" such rights as freedom of expression and freedom of assembly, guaranteed under the First Amendment. "Until today," he said, "political speech has never been considered a crime." Douglas called this a "fundamental problem", applicable not only to unions but to other groups.~~

The Boeing 707... a jet prototype designed for the airlines... flew coast-to-coast today at an average speed of 612 miles an hour. The flight from Seattle, Washington to Baltimore, Maryland was made in three hours and 48 minutes---a new record for passenger aircraft. The Boeing 707 is scheduled to go into service next year.

Edward R. Murrow: March 11, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

Nearly eight-and-a-half months have passed since Colonel Nasser seized the Suez Canal and set off a chain reaction that brought the world to the brink of a universal war and gave it a few days of a lively local war.

The aftermath of that war has been devoted to the efforts of the United Nations, and chiefly the United States, to get the British, French and Israelis out of Egypt. To do this, the Western leaders and Secretary General Hammarskjold have promised that there must not be a return to the conditions that brought on the crisis, and committed themselves to work for a new situation in which peace can be made between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

Now the world is to find out whether a new situation is being created. The invaders of Egypt have departed. But the first impression of the present status is that "this is where we came in." Once more Egypt is in the center of the stage saying "No" to the West. It is saying it in sweeping aside the administration of the Gaza strip by the U.N. emergency forces. It also is saying "No" to an offer by the Suez Canal users on the payment of canal dues. They proposed to pay half the canal dues into the World Bank, to be held until a final settlement was reached. Egypt in saying "No", proposed that it would itself set aside half the dues, pending a final settlement. The difference between the two proposals no doubt was meant to sound small, but in fact it is basic. It is the difference between absolute and limited sovereignty.

Nasser by reasserting the right to absolute sovereignty was implying his right to exclude Israeli ships from the Canal. Also he was implying his right to ignore the U.N. Security Council's recommendation that the Canal be insulated from the politics of any nation. Nasser has not said positively that he will exclude Israeli ships. But when he holds out for absolute sovereignty, he naturally conjures up the use he could make of it. For it is use he already has made.

If this has a doleful and familiar ring, so does the news that the offer about dues was haltingly made, and purposely kept in what is called "flexible" terms. That is, Nasser was allowed to feel free to reject the offer and make a counter-offer. So we are back in the bargaining time of last summer. The irony is that Nasser has not been weakened by his defeat on Sinai. He has been given back his full bargaining position.

Today the emphasis is on the Gaza Strip, and Nasser's showdown with the United Nations and a big part of world opinion about Gaza. Here the United States is not in a strong position to influence Nasser. At best as an inducement we can offer aid, or release frozen Egyptian assets in this country. We have tied ourselves uncompromisingly to the thesis that a return had to be made to the armistice conditions, and that these are binding on both sides. The armistice entitles Egypt to occupy and administer Gaza, though not to annex it. If Nasser insists on going back we can only hope to delay him by arguing that danger remains and he had better leave the U.N. emergency forces in charge for a while. ~~But Nasser knows that we support the inviolability of the armistice, and he has only to insist on his rights.~~

Only in the Gulf of Aqaba does it look as though a new situation could be created for Israel. If international oil tankers can pass to the Israeli port of Elath, then new piplines could bring the oil across Israel to reach the West without the use of the Suez Canal. This would be an enormous gain for Israel and a corresponding loss for Egypt.

But these possibilities are clouded under a legal fog. Egypt has been hinting that it would abide by a ruling of the International Court about the Gulf being an international waterway. This sounds as though Egypt felt sure of getting a favorable ruling. Israel has hinted that it would not be bound by a world court ruling, as though it was fairly sure of losing.

But some competent legal authorities are confident that the court would uphold Secretary Dulles, who said that the Gulf of Aqaba "comprehends international waters", and that access to it can only be denied if all the states bordering on the straits leading to the gulf agree to deny it. Israel is one of the four bordering states, which would make it impossible to deny access.

Far from expecting a favorable court ruling, Egypt, according to some observers, talks of going to the court simply as a way to lose its case without losing face.

However, such a dim prospect, seen through a legal fog, does not greatly diminish Nasser's powers for making trouble and getting what he wants. Certainly he is not feeling squelched by anything that has happened, nor does he act afraid of anything likely to happen. In that respect he is the same Nasser who seized the Suez Canal last July.

Christ Unity

Word for Today

The Middle East situation would appear to be almost back where it was last summer. The Red Queen in "Alice Through the Looking Glass" had a ph~~ilosophical~~ Spiral view of this sort of thing. "It takes all the running you ~~[illegible]~~ can do to keep in the same place," she said. "If you want to get somewhere else, you must run at least twice as fast as that."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 11, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Egypt today announced appointment of an Egyptian governor to take over administration of the Gaza Strip. Egypt said the United Nations Emergency Force in Gaza had "overstepped its functions"...and it charged United Nations troops with firing on civilians demonstrating yesterday for return to Egyptian control. It said a protest had been sent to Secretary General Hammarskjold, here in New York.

The charge of firing on civilians was promptly denied by the emergency force headquarters in Gaza. United Nations guards did fire over the heads of demonstrators who tried to storm the U.N. headquarters. It was pointed out that no casualties occurred. The Cairo radio claims that "tens of thousands" of Arabs demonstrated in Gaza again today. But U.N. officials say there were only a few hundred domonstrators..and that the Gaza Strip tonight is calm.

Dr. Ralph Bunche, the United Sations undersecretary general, visited the strip today. He told reporters afterwards that the United Nations has never questioned Egypt's legal rights regarding Gaza. He said that when the Egyptian governor arrives in Gaza, General Burns (the United Nations commander) "will shake his hand."

No official statement was issued at United Nations headquarters, here in New. York. Secretary General Hammarskjold conferred with American Ambassador Lodge and Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi. Later, Fawzi left for Cairo ..as scheduled. A source close to Hammarskjold is reported to have called the Egyptian action "regrettable."

In Jerusalem tonight, an Israeli official expressed "grave concern". Earlier, an Israeli foreign ministry spokesman said, "Responsibility now rests on the U.N.--responsibility for asserting international rule in Gaza and making it impossible for Egypt to return to the area and resume its murderous activ ities." The spokesman charged that Egypt has resumed its fedayeen raids on Israel. "Israel", he said, "has made it perfectly she will not tolerate provocations of this kind."

Syria today declared its "full support" of the stand taken by the Egyptian government.

Oil began flowing across Syria in pipelines today for the first time since the Anglo-French intervention in November. The pipelines...belonging to the Iraq Petroleum Company...had been sabotaged by the Syrian Army. Oil has also started flowing from Saudi Arabia to the refinery on the British protected island of Bahrein, in the Persien Gulf.

The United States, Britain and France tonight rejected the Soviet proposal of February 11 for a Big Four agreement on the Middle East. The rejection was contained in separate notes delivered in Moscow. The United States note expressed "considerable doubt" as to the seriousness of the Russian bid for American cooperation in the area. It pointed out that even as Russia was proposing cooperation, Kremlin leaders were attacking American Middle East policy. This, the note said, "suggests that the U.S.S.R. neither desires nor expects such cooperation." Russia also proposed an end to arms shipments to the Middle East...and the liquidation of foreign bases in the area. The United States observed that while it has consistently tried to avoid an arms race between Israel and the Arab states, Russia itself has seen fit "to effect massive shipments of arms into the area." The State Department said Russia can demonstrate its good faith by respecting the United Nations resolutions addressed to it regarding Hungary. The British and French notes were in a similar vein.

Vice President Nixon arrived in Ethiopia today for a two-day visit.

In London, a delegation from Singapore today submitted proposals for internal self-government. Britain is being asked to surrender all functions in that island colony, except foreign affairs and defense.

Reports from Indonesia say the government may resign on Wednesday. The central government in Jakarta has been beset for months by rebellion in the eastern provinces.

In Australia, the annual meeting of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization has gone into its second day. New Zealand's external affairs minister..Thomas MacDonald...said the "heartening" new development in Southeast Asia is the emergence of the strong, anti-Communist regime in Free Vietnam.

In Washington, the Supreme Court today reinstated an indictment charging the United Auto Workers with violating the Corrupt Practices Act in paying for political broadcasts. The charge arises from four broadcasts paid for out of the union's general fund in 1954 congressional elections. The lower court dismissed the indictment on grounds that the payments were not within the meaning of the"expenditures" as used in the act. The Supreme Court ruled...in a split 6 - to - 3 decision...that the lower court made an "erroneous interpretation", and sent the case back for trial.

The Boeing 707...a jet prototype designed for the airlines..flew coast-to-coast today at an average speed of 612 miles an hour. The flight from Seattle, Washington to Baltimore, Maryland was made in three hours and 48 minutes-- a new record for passenger aircraft. The Boeing 707 is scheduled to go into service next year.

Nearly eight-and-a-half months have passed since Colonel Nasser seized the Suez Canal and set off a chain reaction that brought the world to the brink of a universal war, and gave it a few days of a lively local war.

The aftermath of that war has been devoted to the efforts of the United Nations, and chiefly the United States, to get the British, French and Israelis out of Egypt. To do this, the Western leaders and Secretary General Hammarskjold have promised that there must not be a return to the conditions that brought on the crisis, and committed themselves to work for a new situation in which peace can be made between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

Now the world is to find out whether a new situation is being created. The invaders of Egypt have departed. But the first impression of the present status is that "this is where we came in." Once more Egypt is in the center of the stage saying "No" to the West. It is saying it in sweeping aside the administration of the Gaza Strip by the U.N. emergency forces. It also is saying "No" to an offer by the Suez Canal users on the payment of canal dues. They proposed to pay half the canal dues into the World Bank, to be held until a final settlement was reached. Egypt in saying "No", proposed that it would itself set aside half the dues pending a final settlement. The difference between the two proposals no doubt was meant to sound small, but in fact it is basic. It is the difference between absolute and limited sovereignty.

Nasser by reasserting the right to absolute sovereignty was implying his right to exclude Israeli ships from the Canal. Also he was implying his right to ignore the U.N. Security Council's recommendation that the Canal be insulated from the politics of any nation. Nasser has not said positively that he will exclude Israeli ships. But when he holds out for absolute sovereignty, he naturally conjures up the use he would make of it. For it is use he already has made.

If this has a doleful and familiar ring, so does the news that the offer about dues was haltingly made, and purposely kept in what is called "flexible" terms. That is, Nasser was allowed to feel free to reject the offer and make a counter offer. So we are back in the bargaining time of last summer. The irony is that Nasser has not been weakened by his defeat on Sinai. He has been given back his bargaining position?

Today the emphasis is on the Gaza Strip, and Nasser's showdown with the United Nations and a big part of world opinion about Gaza. Here the United States is not in a strong position to influence Nasser. At best as an inducement we can offer aid, or release frozen Egyptian assets in thss country. We have tied ourselves uncompromisingly to the thesis that a return had to be made to the armistice conditions, and that these are binding on both sides. The armistice entitles Egypt to occupy and administer Gaza, though not to annex it. If Nasser insists on going back, we can only hope to delay him by arguing that danger remains and he had better leave the U.N. emergency forces in charge for a while.

Only in the Gulf of Aqaba does it look as though a new situation could be created for Israel. If international oil tankers can pass to the Israeli port of Elath, then new pipelines could being the oil across Israel to reach the West without the use of the Suez Canal. This would be an enormous gain for Israel and a corresponding loss for Egypt.

But these possibilitees are clouded under a legal fog. Egypt has been hinting that it would abide by a ruling of the International Court about the Gulf being an international waterway. This sounds as though Egypt felt sure of getting a favorable ruling. Israel has hinted that it would not be bound by a world court ruling, as though it was fairly sure of losing. But some competent legal authorities are confident that the court would uphold Secretary Dulles, who said that the Gulf of Aqqba "comprehends international waters", and that access to it can only be denied if all the states bordering on the straits leading to the gulf agree to deny it. Israel is one of the four bordering states, which would make it impossible to deny access.

Far from expecting a favorable court ruling, Egypt, according to some observers, talks of going to the court simply as a way to lose its case without losing face.

However, such a dim prospect, seen through a legal fog, does not greatly diminish Nasser's powers for making trouble and getting what he wants. Certainly he is not feeling squelched by anything that has happened, nor does he act afraid of anything likely to happen. In that respect he is the same Nasser who seized the Suez Canal last July.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Stuart Metz:

METZ:

MURROW: The Middle East situation would appear to be almost back where it was last summer. The Red Queen in "Alice Through the Looking Glass" had a special view of this sort of thing. "It takes all the running you can do, to keep in place," she said. "If you want to get somewhere else, you must run at least twice as fast as that." Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., March 12, 1957

This is the news:

The United States today urged Egypt to cooperate with the United Nations in preserving peace in the Middle East. The American appeal... issued by the State Department in Washington... said the United States is following the situation closely, with respect to both the Gaza Strip and the Suez Canal. "We hope," the statement said, "that all parties concerned will continue to cooperate with the United Nations and its agencies in efforts to maintain peace and tranquility in the area." The statement did not mention Egypt by name. But yesterday the Egyptian government said it had appointed a governor who would take over administration of the Gaza Strip "forthwith". There is still no definite word when the Egyptian governor-designate may go to Gaza.

—7

The White House said today that President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles are keeping in close touch with regard to the Middle East situation. (Mr. Dulles is attending the SEATO conference in Australia).

In Jerusalem today, the Israeli foreign minister...Mrs. Golda Meir... conferred separately with the American and French ambassadors. The Israeli ambassador to the United States... Abba Eban... was instructed to cut off his Flordia vacation and return to Washington. Prime Minister Ben Gurion said tonight that Israel will continue its struggle for free navigation in the Gulf of Aqaba, come what may. During the day, he conferred with members of his cabinet.

In Gaza itself, the situation is reported calm... although an Arab refugee, said to have been shot in the course of the rioting on Sunday, died of his wounds. The United Nations under-secretary... Dr. Ralph Bunche... conferred for two hours today with Egyptian officials, but there was no announcement as to the result of their talks. Secretary General Hammarskjold also held a round of conferences at United Nations headquarters, here in New York. But, again, no announcement as to what took place. ~~There are rumors that Hammarskjold may fly to Cairo on Saturday to see President Nasser.~~

Former Representative Richards took off from Washington today for the Middle East. Mr. Eisenhower recently appointed Richards... who is a Democrat... as his special adviser on Middle East affairs with the rank of ambassador. Richards said... at the airport... that he will try to clear up any misunderstandings which may exist on the part of Middle East countries regarding the Eisenhower doctrine. He "guessed" he would be gone about two months.

President Eisenhower received another check-up today at Walter Reed Hospital. The examination showed that Mr. Eisenhower still has a slight cold and cough... and a slight inflammation of the left ear. But the White House physician, General Snyder, says, "In all cases, the President's condition is improved."

The government reports that employment went up in February, to off-set nearly a third of the January decline. Total employment in February reached 63-million, 190-thousand---a new record for the month.

In Congress today, the House passed a resolution saying that President Eisenhower's 72-billion-dollar budget must be cut "in the public interest." The resolution asks the President to "indicate where he thinks substantial reductions may best be made." It was passed 219 to 178---an almost straight party-line vote/

Secretary of Welfare Folsom testified today on behalf of the Administration school construction program. Folsom told a House committee that while President Eisenhower recognizes the need for economy, he still feels the ~~[illegible]~~ school program should have high priority. "To economize at the expense of the education of children," Folsom said, "is a false economy."

Another cabinet officer... Secretary of the Navy Thomas... testified before the Senate Armed Services Committee on Navy planning. Thomas said the Navy is making the transition to nuclear power "as rapidly as possible." He called the Forrestal class carrier "the most important weapon of the Navy," should global war occur before the atom-powered fleet is in being.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee unanimously approved the nomination of David Bruce as ambassador to West Germany. The committee also approved the appointment of Amory Houghton (hō'-tun) as ambassador to France.

~~The Senate today cited Ludwig Rajchmann, a former Polish delegate at the United Nations, for contempt. Rajchmann was accused of spying for Russia while in Washington during World War Two. He left the United States last month after defying a subpoena issued by the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.~~

Russia today signed a treaty with East Germany... providing for the "temporary stationing" of Russian troops on East German territory. Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, and Defense Minister Zhukov, flew to East Berlin for the signing ceremony. The treaty itself was negotiated three months ago in Moscow.

Vice President Nixon conferred in Ethiopia today with Emperor Haile Selassie. Nixon is said to have asked for rights to set up an Air Force communications base in Ethiopia. Selassie is reported to have sounded out Nixon on the prospects for American military and economic aid.

~~Reports from Indonesia say that army officers have seized control of Southern Borneo in a bloodless revolt. The central Indonesian government already has lost control of the Celebes and most of Sumatra.~~

The actress, Josephine Hull, died here in New York today after a long illness. She was 71 years of age.

President Eisenhower said today that... in the death of Admiral Byrd... the world lost "one of the truly great explorers of all time." Funeral services for Admiral Byrd will be conducted on Thursday, followed by burial... with full military honors... in Arlington National Cemetery.

The United States announced today that it will take part in the Polish Trade Fair to be held in Poznan in June. American products displayed will range from farm equipment to fashions.

At the time of Poland's bloodless revolution, when Gomulka wrested ~~the maneuver~~ a measure of control from the Kremlin, President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles publicly offered our aid as well as our congratulations. Mr. Eisenhower spoke of our "mission" to help "the freedom-loving people who need and want and can profitably use our aid." "We seek", he said, "neither material gain nor military alliance. We merely seek their freedom for their sake and for freedom's sake." Secretary Dulles was even more specific. He assured the captive peoples that they should never have reason to doubt that they have in us a sincere and dedicated friend. "They must know" he declared, "that they can draw on our abundance to tide them over the period of economic adjustment which is inevitable, as they re-dedicate their productive efforts to the service of their own people, rather than the service of their exploiting masters."

No doubt these offers were as sincere as they were spontaneous. But they were made without studying all the problems involved. By the time the Poles sent a delegation to Washington, we had found that the scope for helping Poland was much smaller than had been realized. It became clear that if Poland was to receive all it needed, two separate actions would have to be taken by Congress. It would have to amend the Battle Act, and would have to vote new funds to finance the loan of American farm surpluses abroad.

The Polish delegation came asking for three hundred million dollars. Perhaps the most it can get right away is between thirty and fifty millions. This is not because of sudden niggardliness in Washington, and the Polish negotiators understand the situation. But they have to decide whether it is safe to go back with thirty to fifty millions, and to wait for the ponderous machinery of Congress to move. If they go back with little in hand it will affect Polish relations with Moscow. If Gomulka were to get all that he needs, his regime would be much too strong for Moscow to undermine. But if he gets only a fraction of it the Polish people may have trouble in pinning their faith on Gomulka while Congress takes its time in giving him more.

Poland is asking for farm commodities and farm machinery. It wants two hundred millions in commodities, chiefly cotton and coarse grains for fodder. It has to have cotton because it was shut out of its normal market in Egypt by the Soviet arms deal with Nasser. Unemployment already is heavy in Poland's textile centers. It needs fodder to maintain its beef and pork supply. There is plenty of food for the present, but by autumn, without fodder, farmers will kill their animals to stay alive themselves.

One might think there would be no problem about supplying Poland with agricultural surpluses, after all the talk about our surpluses being too large. But the money to finance the loan of surpluses is about gone. Only about one hundred and fifteen millions remain of a three billion dollar fund, and most of this is spoken for. President Eisenhower has asked for another billion dollars, but Congress must act before June 30, when the program expires, and it has done nothing about it yet.

The Poles want to finance the purchase of farm machinery by an Export Import Bank loan of $100,000,000. But ~~will~~ unless the Battle Act is amended that is out of the question. The Act bars outright aid to a country trading in war materials with the Soviet Union. Nor can a loan for farm machinery be made from the President's emergency fund at this time because that source is nearly exhausted.

Not all the aid the Poles ask is needed right away. They could get along with cotton, but they would have to have the whole three hundred million dollars' worth before fall. So now they have to decide whether to take what they can get and then gamble on Congress acting in time, or go back altogether empty-handed.

An argument still can be raised against any aid on the ground that Poland still has a communist government. But the point can be answered that the aid is for the Polish people, who are overwhelmingly anti-communist, and who have chosen to accept a dissident communist to rule the country as a protective shield against the tyranny of Moscow. It can be said that if Gomulka survives, the Poles will be freer than if he goes down the drain. He probably can hang on without sufficient aid till fall. Then if he doesn't get enough he will have to bow to the Kremlin.

Word for Today

We should drink whatever to grant aid to Poland to encourage it in becoming more independent of Moscow. Paul Hoffman, who helped administer the Marshall Plan, once said we should try to make such countries genuinely independent--independent not only of Russia but of the United States as well. "A program with any narrower goal," he said, "would be bad politics, bad psychology, and bad morals."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 12, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The United States today urged Egypt to cooperate with the United Nations in preserving peace in the Middle East. The American appeal..issued by the State Department in Washington..said the United States is following the situation closely, with respect to both the Gaza Strip and the Suez Canal. "We hope", the statement said, "that all parties concerned will continue to cooperate with the United Nations and its agencies in efforts to maintain peace and tranquility in the area." The statement did not mention Egypt by name. But yesterday the Egyptian government said it had appointed a governor who would take over the administration of the Gaza Strip "forthwith" There is still no definite word when the Egyptian governor-designate may go to Gaza.

The White House said today that President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles are keeping in close touch with regard to the Middle East situation. (Mr. Dulles is attending the SEATO conference in Australia.)

In Jerusalem today, the Israeli foreign minister...Mrs. Golda Meir..conferred separately with the American and French ambassadors. The Israeli ambassador to the United States...Abba Eban..was instructed to cut off his Florida vacation and return to Washington. Prime Minister Ben Gurion said tonight that Israel will continue its struggle for free navigation in the Gulf of Aqaba, come what may. During the day, he conferred with members of his cabinet.

In Gaza itself, the situation is reported calm..although an Arab refugee, said to have been shot in the course of the rioting on Sunday, died of his wounds. The United Nations under-secretary..Dr. Ralph Bunche..conferred for two hours today with Egyptian officials, but there was no announcement as to the result of their talks. Secretary General Hammarskjold also held a round of conferences at United Nations headquarters here in New York. But, again, no announcement as to what took place.

Former Representative Richards took off from Washington today for the Middle East. Mr. Eisenhower recently appointed Richards...who is a Democrat... as his special adviser on the Middle East affairs with the rank of ambassador. Richards said...at the airport...that he will try to clear up any misunderstandings which may exist on the part of Middle East Countries regarding the Eisenhower doctrine. He "guessed" he would be gone about two months.

President Eisenhower received another check-up today at Walter Reed Hospital. The examination showed that Mr. Eisenhower still has a slight cold and cough...and a slight inflammation of the left ear. But the White House physician, General Snyder, says, "In all cases, the President's condition is improved."

The government reports that employment went up in February, to off-set nearly a third of the January decline. Total employment in February reached 63-million, 190-thousand -- a new record. for the month.

In Congress today, the House passed a resolution saying that President Eisenhower's 72-billion dollar budget must be cut "in the public interest". The resolutions asks the President to "indicate where he thinks substantial reductions may best be made." It was passed 219 to 178--an almost straight party-line vote.

Secretary of Welfare Folsom testified today on behalf of the Administration school construction program. Folsom told a House committee that while President Eisenhower recognizes the need for economy, he still feels the school program should have high priority. "To economize at the expense of the education of children," Folsom said, "is a false economy."

Another cabinet officer...Secretary of the Navy Thomas...testified before the Senate Armed Services Committee on Navy planning. Thomas said the Navy is making the transition to nuclear power "as rapidly as possible". He called the Forrestal class carrier "the most important weapon of the Navy," should global war occur before the atom-powered fleet is in being.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee unanimously approved the nomination of David Bruce as ambassador to West Germany. The Committee also approved the appointment of Amory Houghton as ambassador to France.

Russia today signed a treaty with East Germany ..providing for the "temporary stationing" of Russian troops on East German territory. Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko and Defense Minister Zhukov flew to East Berlin for the signing ceremony. The treaty itself was negotiated three months ago. in Moscow.

Vice President Nixon conferred in Ethiopia today with Emperor Haile Selassie. Nixon is said to have asked for rights to set up an Air Force communications base in Ethiopia. Selassie is reported to have sounded out Nixon on the prospects for American military and economic aid.

President Eisenhower said today that..in the death of Admiral Byrd... who died last night...the world lost "one of the truly great explorers of all time." Funeral services for Admiral Byrd will be conducted on Thursday, followed by burial..with full military honors..in Arlington National Cemetery.

At the time of Poland's bloodless revolution, when Gomulka wrested a measure of control from the Kremlin, President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles publicly offered our aid as well as our congratulations. Mr. Eisenhower spoke of our "mission" to help "the freedom-loving people who need and want and can profitably use our aid." "We seek", he said, "neither material gain nor military alliance. We merely seek their freedom for their sake and for freedom's sake." Secretary Dulles was even more specific. He assured the captive peoples that they should never have reason to doubt that they have in us a sincere and dedicated friend. "They must know" he declared, "that they can draw on our abundance to tide them over the period of economic adjustment which is inevitable, as they re-dedicate their productive efforts to the service of their own people, rather than the service of their exploiting masters."

No doubt these offers were as sincere as they were spontaneous. But they were made without studying all the problems involved. By the time the Poles sent a delegation to Washington, we had found that the scope for helping Poland was much smaller than had been realized. It became clear that if Poland was to receive all it needed, two separate actions would have to be taken by Congress. It would have to amend the Battle Act, and would have to vote new funds to finance the loan of American farm surpluses abroad.

The Polish delegation came asking for three hundred million dollars. Perhaps the most it can get right away is between thirty and fifty millions. This is not because of sudden niggardliness in Washington, and the Polish negotiators understand the situation. But they have to decide whether it is safe to go back with thirty to fifty millions, and wait for the ponderous machinery of Congress to move. If they go back with little in hand, it will affect Polish relations with Moscow. If Gomulka were to get all that he needs, his regime would be much too strong for Moscow to undermine. But if he gets only a fraction of it, the Polish people may have trouble in pinning their faith on Gomulka while Congress takes its time in giving him more.

Poland is asking for farm commodities and farm machinery. It wants two hundred millions in commodities, chiefly cotton and coarse grains for fodder. It has to have cotton because it was shut out of its normal market in Egypt by the Soviet arms deal with Nasser. Unemployment already is heavy in Poland's textile centers. It needs fodder to maintain its beef and pork supply. There is plenty of food for the present, but by autumn, without fodder, farmers will kill their animals to stay alive themselves.

One might think there would be no problem about supplying Poland with agricultural surpluses, after all the talk about our surpluses being too large. But the money to finance the loan of surpluses is about gone. Only about one hundred and fifteen millions remain of a three billion dollar fund, and most of this is spoken for. President Eisenhower has asked for another billion dollars, but Congress must act before June 30, when the program expires, and it has done nothing about it yet.

The Poles want to finance the purchase of farm machinery by an Export Import Bank Loan of $100,000,000. But unless the Battle Act is amended that is out of the question. The Act bars outright aid to a country trading in war materials with the Soviet Union. Nor can a loan for farm machinery be made from the President's emergency fund at this time because that source is nearly exhausted.

Not all the aid the Poles ask is needed right away. They could get along with cotton, but they would have to have the whole three hundred million dollars worth before fall. So now they have to decide whether to take what they can get and then gamble on Congress acting in time, or go back altogether empty-handed.

An argument still can be raised against any aid on the ground that Poland still has a Communist government. But the point can be answered that the aid is for the Polish people, who are overwhelmingly anti-communist, and who have chosen to accept a dissident communist to rule the country as a protective shield against the tyranny of Moscow. It can be said that if Gomulka survives, the Poles will be freer than if he goes down the drain. He probably can hang on without sufficient aid till fall. Then if he doesn't get enough, he will have to bow to the Kremlin.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

MURROW: We must decide whether to grant aid to Poland to encourage it in becoming independent of Moscow. Paul Hoffman, who helped administer the Marshall Plan, once said we should try to make such countries genuinely independent--independent not only of Russia but of the United States as well. "A program with any narrower goal," he said, "would be bad politics, bad psychology, and bad morals."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., March 13, 1957

This is the news:

A new attempt was made in Cuba today to overthrow the Batista government by force. The presidential palace in Havana was attacked by perhaps as many as forty rebels, armed with rifles, sub-machine guns and hand grenades. Some of the attackers penetrated the palace... where President Batista REPORTED lunch... and were inside for an hour before they were driven out. Troops guarding the palace summoned reinforcements, and... about two hours ago... the government said order had been restored. Batista is said to have escaped unhurt. 20 of the rebels are reported killed. Four are known to have been captured.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., March 13, 1957

~~This is the news.~~

Egypt said today that it will send its civil administrator to Gaza "very soon". Cairo newspapers say the action will be taken tomorrow.

The United Nations undersecretary, Dr. Ralph Bunche, talked today with President Nasser. Bunche told reporters... after the meeting... that the Egyptian administrator "most certainly" will have the cooperation of the United Nations Emergency Force. "The United Nations," he said, "has no formal administration in Gaza." He added, "It is up to the Egyptian authorities to announce when the take-over will take place."

Gaza was the scene tonight of the biggest demonstration since Sunday. Several thousand Arabs marched through the streets waving Egyptian flags and shouting "Long live Nasser!" Some carried signs reading: "Down with the Eisenhower Doctrine!"

Prime Minister Ben Gurion told the Israeli parliament today that Israel reserves its freedom of action, "should the Egyptians return to the Gaza Strip." "If the time comes when action is appropriate and necessary," he said, "the government of Israel will not, of course, give prior notice of its action." Ben Gurion said that, for the present, Israel is depending on "political measures". Sources close to the prime minister say these are measures aimed at bringing quick action by the United States. The Israeli ambassador... Abba Eban... told the State Department today that Israel regards the situation as "grave".

Israel reported a border incident today to the United Nations Security Council. It said two Israelis were injured Sunday by a mine "planted" in Israeli territory. Israel charged that the mine was laid by "marauders from the Gaza Strip."

President Eisenhower told his news conference today that he favors any U.N. arrangement conducive to "real negotiations" for a Middle East settlement. Mr. Eisenhower said the United States has made known its views to Secretary General Hammarskjold, who leaves for Cairo on Saturday. He did not say what these views are.

President Eisenhower told reporters he will board a Navy cruiser at Norfolk tomorrow for "a very slow trip to Bermuda." The President is due to meet British Prime Minister Macmillan in Bermuda on March 21. And it is hoped that six days of relaxation... aboard ship in the Gulf Stream... will help him get over his persistent cough and cold. Mr. Eisenhower will be on the guided-missile cruiser Canberra, which has a communications set-up that will keep him in touch with world developments.

In Congress today, the House voted to cut the budget request for the President's executive offices by four and a half million dollars---or the equivalent of 26 percent. The so-called "executive offices" include the Bureau of the Budget.

Yesterday, the House called on President Eisenhower... in the form of a resolution... to say where he thought "substantial reductions" in the over-all federal budget could be made. Mr. Eisenhower told his news conference today that he has no objection to re-examining his budget, which calls for expenditure of nearly 72-billion dollars in the next fiscal year. But Congress alone, he said, has the constitutional power to appropriate money. Mr. Eisenhower pointed out that if there are to be any substantial reductions, they will have to be made in the farm and veterans programs and in the programs for national security and defense. "Congress," he said, "will have to say which one they don't want to carry out."

The Senate committee investigating the International Teamsters Union heard testimony today about another alleged bribe. The testimony was given by Reginald Mikesell, treasurer of teamsters council No. 37 in Portland, Oregon. Mikesell said a check for 5-thousand dollars was paid by the union to a lawyer for William Langley, the district attorney of Portland who has been indicted on charges of malfeasance in office. Mikesell told the committee he had "no idea" what the check was for.

Vice President Nixon arrived today in Khartoum, the capital of the Sudan, and received the least enthusiastic reception of his trip so far. There was some Communist agitation.

Britain and Jordan today formally terminated their 1948 treaty. Under the treaty, Britain was allowed to maintain bases in Jordan, in return for an annual subsidy. British forces must now pull out of those bases within six months.

The prime minister of Indonesia resigned tonight with members of his cabinet. President Sukarno is expected to stay in office, to deal with the revolts that have divided the country since December.

The annual meeting of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization ended in Australia today with the issuance of a joint communique. The eight member countries agreed that the military threat of Communism in Southeast Asia is diminishing. But it warned that "the forces of international Communism are still working for the ultimate objective of world domination." It was proposed that the economic resources of the Asian members be developed while, at the same time, maintaining their capacity to deal effectively with armed aggression.

Edward R. Murrow: March 13, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

There seems to be a theory within the Administration that if President Nasser has not informed the United States of his intentions in the Gaza Strip that he has no intentions. Those holding this view argue that in appointing his own governor at this time he is merely trying to save face at home, that the governor is only a dummy figure, and that the authority of the United Nations emergency force will not be prejudiced. Some persons in Washington are convinced that Nasser is reconciled never to return to Gaza. Indeed it may be that part of our enthusiasm in persuading the Israelis to withdraw was based on Nasser having reformed and become reasonable.

So in Washington one detects two reactions to Nasser's challenge to the U.N. One is pained surprise, the other is a refusal to believe that anything serious is happening. As yet no pronouncement has been made as to what we would do if Nasser is determined to resume full control of the Strip.

Of course it is too early to form a final judgment of American policy in the Middle East. If Nasser has disappointed us and let us down, our policy-makers are entitled to take time to make new plans. This is a delicate moment, even a frightening one. Our own good faith toward Israel needs to be established if we are to hold our leadership. And obviously we need to be unmistakably clear about Nasser's intentions, before committing ourselves irretrieveably. Israel is in a strong moral position to move back into Gaza with force. The local war might easily flare up again. The whole point of our Middle East policy since October will be lost if war breaks out again. If it does it will not be aggression like the last time. The fire will be much harder to put out.

But if there is obscurity and doubt about Nasser's purposes, the Russians are doing their best to dispel it. Whether or not they were directly responsible for the Gaza riots, these were not spontaneous. They were staged and organized with the most familiar communist techniques. Only a small number of Arabs took part - a few hundred. They were given banners with appropriate inscriptions. They appear to have been told just what to do, which was to drive the United Nations forces to some kind of violent reaction. Someone had to be killed if the demonstration was to be worth much. It happens that a single Arab did die of a bullet wound. Whether the bullet was one that ricocheted from a wall after the troops fired over the heads of the crowd, or was fired by someone else, cannot be ascertained. It is amply attested that the U.N. forces did not fire into the crowd. But as soon as there was rioting and an Arab was dead Nasser named his governor, and accused the U.N. of exceeding its rights. Nasser needed a riot and a dead Arab.

But not only Nasser. Moscow needed them. Today the Communist newspapers there have launched a poisonous attack on the United States and the United Nations based on the riot and the slain Arab. The talent for distortion has rarely been so shamelessly used. Pravda states that the Gaza riot is the Eisenhower doctrine at work. It says this is part of the United States design to fill the vacuum of power and to establish itself in the Middle East. It loudly upholds Nasser's right to take over the Gaza Strip with administrators and troops.

Thus a riot is made to serve two purposes. Nasser puts his foot in the door of Gaza, and a criminal indictment of the United States rings in the ears of all who can hear Soviet propaganda.

This Soviet propaganda blast dispels any doubt about the nature of the Middle East crisis. The Soviet Union continues to exploit the unrest and friction of the region so as to prevent peace and enable it to establish its own foothold there. If it can control the fuel supply to Europe, it will have a stranglehold on Europe's economy. This was the nature of the conflict when the Kremlin chose to send arms to Egypt. It was the meaning of the intervention at the time of the British and French attack on Suez. Now the Soviet Union is again heralding to all the world that it stands behind Nasser.

In times past, we seem to have tried to counter the Russians by competing with Moscow for Nasser's good will. Maybe we are trying it again, when we decline to be upset by what Nasser is doing. But in the past the policy has not proved very successful.

The Russians are again proving the obvious - they do not want peace and tranquility in the Middle East. And Colonel Nasser is beholden to them - For Military & Economic Support -

George Ruppe

Word for Today

The Middle East is again plunged into crisis... if, indeed, of late it has been in any other state. President Nasser once said, "History is charged with great historic roles for which we do not find actors." But J.B. Priestly observed, "In every country you see them rise, the actors who will not use the theatre. And always they bring down disaster from the gods."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

A new attempt was made in Cuba today to overthrow the Batista government by force. The presidential palase in Havana was attacked by perhaps as many as forty rebels, armed with rifles, sub-machine guns and hand grenades. Some of the attackers penetrated the palace..where President Batista was reported having lunch..and were inside for an hour before they were driven out. Troops guarding the palace summoned reinforcements, and..about two hours ago..the government said order had been restored. Batista is said to have escaped unhurt. Twenty of the rebels are reported killed. Four are known to have been captured.

Egypt said today that it will send its civil administrator to Gaza "very soon". Cairo newspapers say the action will be taken tomorrow.

The United Nations undersecretary, Dr. Ralph Bunche, talked today with President Nasser. Bunche told reporters..after the meeting..that the Egyptian administrator "most certainly" will have the cooperation of the United Nations Emergency Force. "The United Nations", he said, "has no formal administration in Gaza." He added, "It is up to the Egyptian authorities to announce when the take-over will take place."

Gaza was the scene tonight of the biggest demonstration since Sunday. Several thousand Arabs marched through the streets waving Egyptian flags and shouting "Long live Nasser!" Some carried signs reading: "Down with the Eisenhower Doctrine!"

Prime Minister Ben Gurion told the Israeli parliament today that Israel reserves its freedom of action, "should the Egyptians return to the Gaza Strip." "If the time comes when action is appropriate and necessary," he said, "the government of Israel will not, of course, give prior notice of its action."

Ben Gurion said that, for the present, Israel is depending on "political measures". Sources close to the prime minister say these are measures aimed at bringing quick action by the United States. The Israeli ambassador..Abba Eban..told the State Department today that Israel regards the situation as "grave".

Israel reported a border incident today to the United Nations Security Council. It said two Israelis were injured Sunday by a mine "planted" in Israeli territory. Israel charged that the mine was laid by"marauders from the Gaza Strip."

President Eisenhower told his news conference today that he favors any U.N. arrangement conducive to "real negotiations" for a Middle East settlement. Mr. Eisenhower said the United States has made known its views to Secretary General Hammarskjold, who leaves for Cairo on Saturday. He did not say what these views are.

President Eisenhower told his news conference today that he favors any U.N. arrangement conducive to "real negotiations" for a Middle East settlement. Mr. Eisenhower said the United States has made known its views to Secretary General Hammarskjold , who leaves for Cairo on Saturday. He did not say what these views are.

President Eisenhower told reporters he will board a Navy cruiser at Norfolk tomorrow for "a very slow trip to Bermuda." The President is due to meet British Prime Minister MacMillan in Bermuda on March 21. And it is hoped that six days of relaxation..aboard ship in the Gulf Stream..will help him get over his persistent cough and cold. Mr. Eisenhower will be on the guided-missile cruiser Canberra, which has a communications set-up that will keep him in touch with world developments.

In Congress today, the House voted to cut the budget request for the President's executive offices by four and a half million dollars -- or the equivalent of 26 percent. The so-called "executive offices" include the Bureau of the Budget.

Yesterday, the House called on President Eisenhower...in the form of a resolution...to say where he thought "substantial reductions" in the over-all federal budget could be made. Mr. Eisenhower told his news conference today that he has no objection to re-examinnng his budget, which calls for expenditure of nearly 72-billion dollars in the next fiscal year. But Congress alone, he said, has the constitutional power to appropriate money. Mr. Eisenhower pointed out that if there are to be any substantial reductions, they will have to be made in the farm and veterans programs and in the programs for national security and defense. "Congress", he said, "will have to say which one they don't want to carry out."

Vice President Nixon arrived today in Khartoum, the capital of the Sudan, and received the least enthusiastic reception of his trip so far. There was some Communist agitation.

Britain and Jordan today formally terminated their 1948 treaty. Under the treaty, Britain was allowed to maintain bases in Jordan, in return for an annual subsidy. British forces must now pull out of those bases within six months.

The Prime Minister of Indonesia resigned tonight with members of his cabinet. President Sukarno is expected to stay in office, to deal with the revolts that have divided the country since December.

The annual meeting of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization ended in Australia today with the issuance of a joint communique. The eight member countries agreed that the military threat of Communism in Southeast Asia is diminishing. But it warned that "the forces of international Communism are still working for the ultimate objective of world domination." It was proposed that the economic resources of the Asia members be developed while, at the same time, maintaining their capacity to deal effectively with armed aggression.

There seems to be a theory within the Administration that if President Nasser has not informed the United States of his intentions in the Gaza Strip, that he has no intentions. Those holding this view argue that in appointing his own governor at this time he is merely trying to save face at home, that the governor is only a dummy figure, and that the authority of the United Nations emergency force will not be prejudiced. Some persons in Washington are convinced that Nasser is reconciled never to return to Gaza. Indeed it may be that part of our enthusiasm in persuading the Israelis to withdraw was based on Nasser having reformed and become reasonable.

So in Washington one detects two reactions to Nasser's challenge to the U.N. One is pained surprise, the other is a refusal to believe that anything serious is happening. As yet no pronouncement has been made as to what we would do if Nasser is determined to resume full control of the Strip.

Of course it is too early to form a final judgement of American policy in the Middle East. If Nasser has disappointed us and let us down, our policy makers are entitled to take time to make new plans. This is a delicate moment, even a frightening one. Our own good faith toward Israel needs to be established if we are to hold our leadership. And obviously we need to be unmistakably clear about Nasser's intentions, before committing ourselves irretrieveably. Israel is in a strong moral position to move back into Gaza with force. The local war might easily flare up again. The whole point of our Middle East policy since October will be lost if war breaks out again. If it does it will not be aggression like the last time. The fire will be much harder to put out.

But if there is obscurity and doubt about Nasser's purposes, the Russians are doing their best to dispel it. Whether or not they were directly responsible for the Gaza riots, these were not spontaneous. They were staged and organized with the most familiar communist techniques. Only a small number of Arabs took part - a few hundred. They were given banners with appropriate inscriptions. They appear to have been told just what to do, which was to drive the United Nations forces to some kind of violent reaction. Someone had to be killed if the demonstration was to be worth much. It happens that a single Arab did die of a bullet wound. Whether the bullet was one that ricochet from a wall after the troops fired over the heads of the crowd, or was fired by someone else, cannot be ascertained. It is amply attested that the U.N. forces did not fire into the crowd. But as soon as there was rioting and an Arab was dead, Nasser named his governor, and accused the U.N. of exceedint its rights. Nasser needed a riot and a dead Arab.

But not only Nasser. Moscow needed them. Today the Communist newspapers there have launched a poisonous attack on the United States and the United Nations based on the riot and the slain Arab. The talent for distortion has rarely been so shamelessly used. Pravda states that the Gaza riot is the Eisenhower doctrine at work. It says this is part of the United States design to fill the vacuum of power and to establish itself in the Middle East. It loudly upholds Nasser's right to take over the Gaza Strip with administrators and troops.

Thus a riot is made to serve two purposes. Nasser puts his foot in the door of Gaza, and a criminal indictment of the United States rings in the ears of all who can hear Soviet propaganda.

This Soviet propaganda blast dispels any doubt about the nature of the Middle East crisis. The Soviet Union continues to exploit the unrest and friction of the region so as to prevent peace and enable it to establish its own foothold there. If it can control the fuel supply to Europe, it will have a stranglehold on Europe's economy. This was the nature of the conflict when the Kremlin chose to sent arms to Egypt. It was the meaning of the intervention at the time of the British and French attack on Suez. Now the Soviet Union is again heralding to all the world that it stands behind Nasser.

In times past, we seem to have tried to counter the Russians by competing with Moscow for Nasser's good will. Maybe we are trying it again, when we decline to be upset by what Nasser is doing. But in the past the policy has not proved very successful.

The Russians are again proving the obvious - they do not want peace and tranquility in the Middle East. And Colonel Nasser is beholden to them for military and economic aid.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN:

MURROW: The Middle East is again plunged into crisis..if, indeed, of late it has been in any other state. President Nasser once said, "History is charged with great historical roles, for which we do not find actors." But J.B. Priestly observed, "In every country you see them rise, the actors who will not use the theatre. And always they bring down . disaster from the gods."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., March 14, 1957

This is the news:

The Cairo radio says Egyptian General Latif (LA-TEEF) has arrived in Gaza to take over civil administration of the Gaza Strip. The Cairo broadcast says Latif was greeted by cheering crowds. It does not say when the general will take over as civil administrator. But the Egyptian announcement of his appointment... on Monday... said he was to assume his duties "forthwith". The United Nations emergency force presumably would continue to carry out its police functions.

The United Nations undersecretary... Dr. Ralph Bunche... today disavowed statements he was reported to have made yesterday in Cairo regarding the Gaza Strip. Bunche said he had made... or authorized to be made... none of the statements attributed to him. He was quoted among other things as saying that the Egyptian administrator "most certainly" would have the cooperation of the United Nations Emergency Force... and that it was "up to the Egyptian authorities" to announce when the take-over would take place. The correction... released today... said, "Dr. Bunche wishes it to be known that as a member of the United Nations secretariat he has no authority to comment one way or another on the action of any member state."

→

The United States is preparing to resume its economic aid to Israel. (A 20-million-dollar aid program was cut off when Israeli forces invaded Egypt last fall). The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, noted today that Israeli troops "have now been withdrawn behind the armistice lines in accordance with U.N. resolutions." In view of this, he said, the United States plans "to resume consultations with the competent Israeli authorities regarding matters of mutual economic interest." He confirmed that one of these "matters" is the economic aid program. Similar aid programs for Egypt and Jordan were also cut off at the start of hostilities. Mr. White declined to say whether these programs are to be resumed. [redacted]

British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd told the House of Commons today that... in his opinion... the Gaza Strip ought to be placed under international control. Lloyd said the boundaries of Israel must be re-drawn. He emphasized that in advocating what he called "sensible" boundaries for Israel he was not asking for "a sacrifice of territory on one side alone"... but, rather, for a compromise solution by both sides.

President Eisenhower flew to Norfolk, Virginia, this afternoon to board the cruiser Canberra for a leisurely voyage to Bermuda. It is hoped that the trip... and plenty of sunshine... will help his cough. Mr. Eisenhower has a date with British Prime Minister Macmillan in Bermuda on March 21. [redacted] The Canberra is weighing anchor just about now.

Vice President Nixon flew from the Sudan to Libya today after an eight-hour delay due to engine trouble. Mr. Nixon is now past the half-way mark on his African tour.

~~And the special United Nations envoy... Gunnar Jarring... arrived in Karachi today to try to mediate the dispute between India and Pakistan over Kashmir. The Swedish diplomat undertook his mission on orders of the Security Council.~~

On Cyprus today, the Cypriot underground offered a cease-fire... on condition that the British will let Archbishop Makarios come back from exile. The truce proposal was circulated in leaflets throughout the island shortly after British authorities hanged an 18-year-old youth for possessing a gun. The underground said it was making its offer "in the spirit of the recent United Nations resolution expressing the desire to see a peaceful solution of the Cyprus problem." The leaflets called for a resumption of negotiations between the archbishop and the British government.

A federal grand jury today took up bribery charges against James Hoffa, vice president of the international teamsters union. Hoffa was arrested last night in Washington. He is accused of giving John Cheasty (SHAYS-TEE), a New York attorney, 3-thousand dollars on condition that he join the staff of the special Senate investigating committee and slip him the committee's secret files. Shays Tee ~~Cheasty~~ went to work for the committee but immediately informed THE F-B-I AND Chairman McClellan of the alleged plot. McClellan says committee papers were found in Hoffa's possession. The teamsters official said today he had been "unjustly accused."

District Attorney William Langley of Portland, Oregon, invoked the Fifth Amendment today in the Senate rackets investigation. Langley refused to answer questions regarding his reported tie-up with racketeers on grounds of possible self-incrimination. He already has been indicted for malfeasance in office.

The House voted today to keep taxes on corporation income at their present level for another year. Excise taxes on automobiles, cigarettes and alcoholic beverages would also be continued.

The Federal Housing Agency asked Congress today to cut the agency's budget for the next fiscal year by 125-million dollars. It also proposed that another 75-million dollars be slashed from funds that would be allocated in the future. Administrator Cole said the decision to re-examine the housing budget was made by the President.

Edward R. Murrow: March 14, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

There is more than just buck-passing in the exchange going on between President Eisenhower and Congress over the size of the budget. The President submitted the budget - the largest in history - and then agreed with Secretary Humphrey that it was too large, and that Congress ought to cut it. The House passed a resolution asking the President to suggest where cuts could be made. The President at his news conference yesterday passed the issue back to Congress, saying it has to decide the cuts for itself, but that he would go along with any made.

If the government were running according to tradition, the President would have his shirt-sleeves rolled up and would be working to beat down the opposition to his budget. It is for the President to ask, and for Congress to give; that is the law governing the finances of the Republic. Normally a President does not suggest that Congress should tell him what to ask. Normally Congress does not ask that the President point out what he should not be given. This is a reversal of functions. It is happening for the first time since the budget system was adopted under President Harding's regime, with Charles Gates Dawes as first budget director.

Two explanations can be given for this topsy-turvy state of affairs. One has to do with policy, the other with politics. As to the policy of spending, the big and overwhelming item in the budget, of course, is defense. The reason this year's budget breaks all records is because of the high cost of maintaining our present military strength. Congress doesn't dare meddle with that program; that would be almost irresponsible. So it must look elsewhere for economies. The most popular place to look is the foreign aid program. The trouble here is that cuts cannot amount to much, even if it were safe to make them. Non-military foreign aid is such a small part of the budget that to eliminate it altogether would not save the country from inflationary pressure. So Congress must go after the social items in the budget, like roads and schools, and in due course the fight to trim these is pretty sure to develop.

That brings me to the political reasons for the present situation. First to be mentioned is that President Eisenhower is not the fighting-type of chief executive. As has often been said, he is the chairman-of-the-board type. He rarely goes down the line for anything, and he only goes when he knows precisely how strong he is. At this juncture he undoubtedly knows that he does not have the strength to whip the Republican party in line for a record-breaking budget. For one thing, big budgets just aren't good Republicanism. Neither are they essential to the new Republicanism that Mr. Eisenhower would like to leave as his great political bequest. The present budget does not sum up the Eisenhower philosophy; it violates it.

Even so, under normal conditions, a president who found he must take exception to his principles would come out and say so, would explain why the budget has to be the way it is, and above all else would strive to retain his leadership. But right here one comes upon a fact that helps make present conditions abnormal. The President's leadership already is impaired. That is not saying that anyone is trying to take it away from him. It is saying that Republicans in Congress no longer are looking to him to get them re-elected. The Eisenhower coat-tails - which were so useful to so many candidates in the last election - are forever out of business.

The Wall Street Journal has asked two hundred House Republicans what steps they consider most important for their own re-election. Many of them already are mapping out their next campaigns. Their overwhelming reply was: "cuts in federal spending and taxes." Perhaps the most significant answer was from Representative Bruce Alger of Texas. He is an Eisenhower Republican if ever there was one. He replied: "If the Eisenhower administration does not return to conservative principles then it cannot help me. Rather, I must, and shall, go it alone."

The Eisenhower coat-tails were put out of business by the Twenty-second Amendment, which forbids a President to serve a third term. It was not realized, when this was adopted, that slamming the door on a third term would seriously and even dangerously reduce the power of a President in a second term. But that is what is happening. A more pugnacious president might not find himself so much handicapped as does Mr. Eisenhower. It may be one of his claims to greatness that Mr. Eisenhower is not pugnacious. It certainly is one of the reasons for his popularity. But a popular president without coat-tails is far less powerful than one with them. And both Mr. Eisenhower and the Republicans in Congress now are learning it.

Word for Today

President Eisenhower keeps on his desk a paperweight inscribed with these words by Abraham Lincoln: "The legitimate object of government is to do for a community of people whatever they have need to have done, but cannot do at all or cannot so well do for themselves in their separate capacities." Mr. Eisenhower ~~intent~~ appears to regard the budget in these terms.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Cairo radio says Egyptian General Latif has arrived in Gaza to take over civil administration of the Gaza Strip. The Cairo broadcast says Latif was greeted by cheering crowds. It does not say when the general will take over as civil administrator. But the Egyptian announcement of his appointment.. on Monday..said he was to assume his duties "forthwith". The United Nations emergency force presumably would continue to carry out its police functions.

The United Nations undersectetary .. Dr. Ralph Bunche..today disavowed statements he was reported to have made yesterday in Cairo regarding the Gaza Strip. Bunche said he had made .. or authorized, to be made..none of the statements attributed to him. He was quoted among other things, as saying that the Egyptian administrator "most certainly" would have the cooperation of the United Nations Emergency Force..and that it was "up to the Egyptian authorities" to announce when the take-over would take place. The correction..released today..said, "Dr. Bunche wishes it to be known that, as a member of the United Nations secretariat, he has no authority to comment one way or another on the action of any member state."

The United States is preparing to resume its economic aid to Israel. (A 20-million-dollar aid program was cut off when Israeli forces invaded Egypt last fall). The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, noted today that Israeli troops "have now been withdrawn behind the armistice lines, in accordance with U.N. resolutions." In view of this, he said, the United States plans "to resume consultations with the competent Israeli authorities regarding matters of mutual economic interest." He confirmed that one of these "matters" is the economic aid program. Similar aid programs for Egypt and Jordan were also cut off at the start of hostilities. Mr. White declined to say whether these programs are to be resumed.

British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd told the House of Commons today that..in his opinion.. the Gaza Strip ought to be placed under international control. Lloyd said the boundaries of Israel must be re-drawn. He emphasized that in advocating that he called "sensible" boundaries for Israel he was not asking for "a sacrifice of territory on one side alone"...but, rather, for a compromise solution by both sides.

President Eisenhower flew to Norfolk, Virginia, this afternoon to board the curiser Canberra for a leisurely voyage to Bermuda. It is hoped that the trip...and plenty of sunshine..will help his cough. Mr. Eisenhower has a date with British Prime Minister Macmillan in Bermuda on March 21. The Canberra is weighing anchor just about now.

Vice President Nixon flew from the Sudan to Libya today, after an eight-hour delay due to engine trouble. Mr. Nixon is now past the half-way mark on his African tour.

On Cyprus today, the Cypriot underground offered a cease-fire..on condition that the British will let Archbishop Makarios come back from exile. The truce proposal was circulated in leaflets throughout the island shortly after British authorities hanged an 18-year-old youth for possessing a gun. The underground said it was making its offer "in the spirit of the recent United Nations resolution expressing the desire to see a peaceful solution of the Cyprus problem." The leaflets called for a resumption of negotiations between the archbishop and the British government.

A federal grand jury today took up bribery charges against James Hoffa, vice president of the international teamsters union. Hoffa was arrested last night in Washington. He is accused of giving John Cheasty, a New York attorney, 3-thousand dollars, on condition that he join the staff of the special Senate investigating committee and slip his the committee's secret files.

Cheasty went to work for the committee, but immediately informed the F.B.I. and Chairman McClellan of the alleged plot. McClellan says committee papers were found in Hoffa'a possession. The teamsters official said today he had been "unjustly accused."

District Attorney William Langley of Portland, Oregon, invoked the Fifth Amendment today in the Senate rackets investigation. Langley refused to answer questions regarding his reported tie-up with racketeers on grounds of possible self-incrimination. He already has been indicted for malfeasance in office..

The House voted today to keep taxes on corporation income at their present level for another year. Excise taxes on automoiiles, cigarettes and alcoholic beverages would also be continued.

The Federal Housing Agency asked Congress today to cut the agency's budget for the next fiscal year by 125 - million dollars. It also proposed that another 75-million dollars be slashed from funds that would be allocated in the future. Administrator Cole said the decision to re-examine the housing budget was made by the President.

There is more than just buck-passing in the exchange going on between President Eisenhower and Congress over the size of the budget. The President submitted the budget - the largest in history - and then agreed with Secretary Humphrey that it was too large, and that Congress ought to cut it. The House passed a resolution asking the President to suggest where cuts could be made. The President at his news conference yesterday passed the issue back to Congress, saying it has to decide the cuts for itself, but that he would bo along with any made.

If the government were running according to tradition, the President would have his shirt - sleeves rolled up and would be working to beat down the opposition to his budget. It is for the President to ask, and for Congress to give; that is the law governing the finances of the Republic. Normally a President does not suggest that Congress should tell him what to ask. Normally Congress does not ask that the President point out what he should not be given. This is a reversal of functions. It is happening for the first time since the budget system was adopted under President Harding's regime, with Charles Gates Dawes as first budget director.

Two explanations can be given for this topsy-turvy state of affairs. One has to do with policy, the other with politics. As to the policy of spending, the big and overwhelming item in the budget, of course, is defense. The reason this year's budget breaks all records is because of the high cost of maintaining our present military strength. Congress doesn't dare meddle with that program; that would be almost irresponsible. So it must look elsewhere for economies. The most popular place to look is the foreign aid program. The trouble here is that cuts cannot amount to much, even it it were safe to make them. Non-military foreign aid is such a small part of the budget that to eliminate it altogether would not save the country from inflationary pressure. So Congress must go after the social items in the budget , like roads and schools, and in due course the fight to trim these is pretty sure to develop.

That brings me to the political reasons for the present situation. First to be mentioned is that President Eisenhower is not the fighting type of chief executive. As has often been said, he is the chairman-of-the-board type. He rarely goes down the line for anything, and he only goes when he knows precisely how strong he is. At this juncture he undoubtedly knows that he does not have the strength to whip the Republican party in line for a record-breaking budget. For one thing, big budgets just aren't good Republicanism. Neither are they essential to the new Republicanism that Mr. Eisenhower would like to leave as his greatest political bequest. The present budget does not sum up the Eisenhower philosophy; it violates it.

Even so, under normal conditions, a president who found he must take exception to his principles would come out and say so, would explain why the budget has to be the way it is, and above all else would strive to retain his leadership. But right here one comes upon a fact that helps make present conditions abnormal. The President's leadership already is impaired. That is not saying that anyone is trying to take it away from him. It is saying that Republicans in Congress no longer are looking to him to get them re-elected. The Eisenhower coat-tails - which were so useful to so many candidates in the last election - are forever out of business. The Wall Street Journal has asked two hundred House Republicans what steps they consider most important for their own re-election. Many of them already are mapping out their next campaigns. Their overwhelming reply was "cuts in federal spending and taxes." Perhaps the most significant answer was from representative Bruce Alger of Texas. He is an Eisenhower Republican ef ever there was one. He replied: "If the Eisenhower administration does not return to conservative principles then it cannot help me. Rather, I must, and shall, go it alone."

The Eisenhower coat-tails were put out of business by the Twenty-second Amendment, which forbids a President to serve a third term. It was not realized, when it was adopted, that slamming the door on a third term would seriously and even dangerously reduce the power of a President in a second term. But that is what is happening. A more pugnacious president might not find himself so much handicapped as does Mr. Eisenhower. It may be one of his claims to greatness that Mr. Eisenhower is not pugnacious. It certainly is one of the reasons for his popularity. But a popular president without coat-tails is far less powerful than one with them. And both Mr. Eisenhower and the Repubiicans in Congress now are learning it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: President Eisenhower keeps on his desk a paperweight inscribed with these words by Abraham Lincoln: "The legitimate object of government is to do for a community of people whatever they have need to have done, but cannot do at all or cannot so well do for themselves in their separate capacities." Mr. Eisenhower appears to regard the budget in in these terms.

Good night and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., March 15, 1957

This is the news:

The Israeli foreign minister... Mrs. Golda Meir... is flying to the United States for urgent talks regarding the Gaza Strip. The trip was precipitated by Egypt's action yesterday, taking over administration of Gaza from the United Nations Emergency Force. The Egyptian governor of Gaza told the inhabitants of the strip today, to cooperate with the emergency force. But, at the same time, he said everything was going "back to normal, just as it was before the Israeli aggression." "Everything here," he said, "will be taken over by the Egyptian authorities." Mrs. Meir told reporters, as she boarded her plane, that the Israeli government is "extremely disturbed" by the Gaza developments. "It was decided," she said, "that before my government takes any decision, it would be preferable that we do everything we can, diplomatically, in order to try to find a positive solution." The main purpose of her trip, she said, "is to contact the American government." The Israeli ambassador to the United States, Abba Eban, said Mrs. Meir will seek "a very frank exchange of views" with Secretary of State Dulles. "There are certain assumptions and expectations," he said, "which Israel held in common with the United States. We want to find out if they were valid." / Eban said the Israeli foreign minister also wishes to consult Secretary General Hammarskjold. And today Hammarskjold postponed his scheduled trip to Cairo. He was to have left New York tomorrow.

—>

In Washington, a spokesman for the State Department... Lincoln White... said the United States supports the United Nations Emergency Force and "all the functions it has to perform." The department called in the representatives of Britain, Norway, Italy, Holland and France for what was described as "a review of recent developments." Secretary of State Dulles is due back in Washington on Sunday.

The Cairo radio claimed tonight that Saudi Arabia has taken the position Israel does not have the right of free passage through the Gulf of Aqaba. There is no confirmation of this. Saudi Arabia forms the east shore of the gulf.

~~The president of the Yugoslav national assembly... Moshe Pijade... died of a heart attack today in Paris. He was returning home after a goodwill visit in Britain.~~

President Sukarno of Indonesia has called on the chairman of the Nationalist Party to form a new government. During the day, Sukarno conferred with political and military leaders, in an effort to end the rash of revolts which have beset Indonesia since December. The army is said to have reiterated its opposition to Sukarno's plan to include Communists in the new cabinet.

President Eisenhower is about 200 miles off the coast of Florida tonight, aboard the cruiser Canberra, on his slow voyage to Bermuda. Mr. Eisenhower is reported "feeling fine", despite cloudy weather and some rain.

~~The White house today confirmed that President Eisenhower has under consideration a proposal for the transfer of presidential powers when a chief~~ executive is seriously disabled. The White House gave no details. According to the New York Times, the proposal is for a constitutional amendment which would authorize the vice president to take over the "powers and duties" of the President... but not the office... in case of presidential disability. Such a transfer, it said, would be temporary for the duration of the disability.

→

The Atomic Energy Commission says an experimental power reactor "exploded" at Los Alamos, New Mexico, on February 12th. No one was injured... and no atomic explosion was involved. The commission says a chain reaction in a "critical assembly" momentarily went out of control.

And tonight a Navy blimp... the Z.P.G. 2 ... landed at the Key West naval air station, ending 264 hours and 14 minutes of continuous flight. In crossing the Atlantic twice, it also broke the distance record set by the Graf Zepplin in 1929. It flew more than 8-thousand miles, at least a thousand miles farther than the German airship.

The House Appropriations Committee today cut more than half a billion dollars from the 6-billion-dollar budget requested for running 18 government agencies. A cut of 206-million dollars was voted in new funds requested for the Veterans Administration. That's a slash of about 4 percent. And the committee voted to allow the Civil Defense Administration only 40-million of the 130-million dollars requested. The economies were achieved by cutting down on office space, new cars and travel allowances, and on what was called "the gingerbread and waste that often characterizes V.A. hospital construction." No cut was made in the money requested for actual operation of the V.A. hospital program.

A presidential fact-finding board today recommended wage increases totaling 26 and a half cents an hour, for 160-thousand members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. The increases would be spread over a three-year period. The board also recommended an escalator clause, providing raises tied to the government's consumer price index.

This was Independence Day in Hungary... the 109th anniversary of the revolt against the Hapsburgs. The streets of Budapest were patroled by Soviet troops. And, so far as we know, there were no disorders. Polish Communist Leader Gomulka sent a message... appealing to the Hungarian people to reject what he called "counter-revolutionary unrest".

My colleague, Daniel Schorr, has been in Poland this past month. And he has noted what may be a new trend in Polish politics. For that story we switch now to Warsaw.

(Schorr tape runs 5:30
(
(Ends on cue "---tp Edw. R.
(
(Murrow in N.Y."

That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, reporting on the delicate political situation in Poland.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) Now, here is George Bryan.

The leaders of Poland... the so-called independent Communists... must take care not to anger Moscow. In walking the tight-rope between the liberal reformers and the Stalinists, they must exercise discretion. Josh Billings said, "Courage without discretion iz a ram with horns on both ends---he will hav more fites on hand than he kan well attend to."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

FRIDAY, MARCH 15, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: Polish Communist leader, Gomulka, sent a message, appealing to the Hungarian people to reject what he called "counter revolutionary unrest". My colleague, Daniel Schorr, has been in Poland this past month, doing a great deal of travelling, and, he has noted what may be a new trend in Polish politics. For that story, we switch now to Warsaw.

SCHORR: The crusading reformist weekly, "Po Prostu", which means "Plain Speaking", did not come out on schedule today, held up by the censor. The editor, Aledius Glosota ?, agreed to yank some stories that the censor didn't like, and the paper will be out tomorrow. One column of type tossed into the hot-box, was a story about the ferment among students in Cracow, who adopted a resolution protesting against the retention in the new government of Stalinist Vice-Premier Zenon Nowak. Censorship has been tightened up lately, especially on copy that might displease the Russians or indicate controversy within the Communist ranks. Party chief, Gomulka, has not been quick to undertake the clean-up of the diehards that was expected after the January election. Instead, he's trying to pull together the warring reformists and conservative wings of his party, and enforce unity. The liberal editor of the party organ, Trybuna Ludu, has been dismissed and eight staff members have resigned. Orders have gone out for a war against both the dogmatists which means Stalinists and against revisionists which means Liberal Reformers. But, so far, it seems to be directed mainly against the Liberals. An article in the theorectical organ, reprinted for emphasis in Trybuna Ludu, seems to lay down the new line, a line stressing check reins on reform. Democratization must not become a tool of reaction. The attack on Beuracracy must be curbed lest it turn into an attack on Communist authority. There can be no free competition of political forces in Poland. Anti-Soviet feelings must be dispelled. The idea of National Communision is an invention of Secretary Dulles and must be fought. Workers' councils must be restricted. But, evidence came just today that the fight within Gomulka's party is far from over. At a plenary meeting of the Warsaw party, the city party leader, Jarosinski, gave a report which seemed directly to contradict the Trybuna Ludu line. It warned against calling all Poland's troubles, the result of International bougeois plots; demanded a new fight against beuracracy and dogmatism; upheld the workers' councils against Russian criticism and asserted, there is no going back to October, the October anti-Stalin ----- ---------- will be defended against all those who attempt to break it up from within. This is the first time in recent weeks that the voice of reform has been so loudly heard again in Poland. It came shortly before broadcast time when my script was already written, and it frankly took me, like other foreign observers, by surprise. I had been prepared to say in this report, that reform was apparently stemmed in Poland; that Gomulka was moving back into line with the Communist camp. Now, I am not so sure. It remains to be seen whether today's speech signifies another new trend or only a rear-guard action of the October reformers. Still I think I must report on the mood of Poland, as I found it developing and changing during the month I've been travelling in this country, even though that mood may change again. Gomulka, himself, has not spoken in public since the January election, except for a routine speech to an Engineers' Congress. And the reformers who were the intellectual spark plug of last October's national upserge have been privately dismayed, bouyancy slowly giving away to nervousness. Poland is still the freest country in the Communist orbit. The Secret Police structure remains shattered and some dissidents are eased out of positions but not jailed. Warsaw University's students still vent unorthodox opinions on their bulletin boards, but there are questions. One bulletin board displayed clippings about the conservatives reinstated in government and asked, "Does this mean a change in policy?" In Cracow, I attended a meeting where students, sick of having the monolithic youth organization imposed on them, talked about starting their own group; then, decided to defer action, not sure now, how far they could go. In Posnan, the Bunker Hill of Poland's revolution, a man who helped to lead the strike last June admitted he was confused by the reappointment of Nowak as Vice-Premier, then said, uncertainly, "We must have faith in Gomulka." A month ago, Poles were applying in large numbers for passports for immigration or for tourists' trips abroad. Feeling now, that to ask for passports would not mean possible punishment, as it did during Stalin days. But now again the regime has tightened up on issuing passports, and again there's a certain kind of nervousness. Once again, Poles begin to wonder if they can mix freely with foreigners; if they can speak their minds with that sense of intoxicating liberty, that seized them after last October. That sense of freedom was too new, too untried for Poles to feel quite sure of it. And every sign of a slight reversal of trend caused unease. Whether unease was justified or whether Gomulka, as some of his defendents have told me, was only taking a step backward to take two steps forward, the coming month will tell. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, reporting from Warsaw on the very delicate political situation in Poland.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

FRIDAY, MARCH 15, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: Polish Communist leader, Gomulka, sent a message, appealing to the Hungarian people to reject what he called "counter revolutionary unrest". My colleague, Daniel Schorr, has been in Poland this past month, doing a great deal of travelling, and, he has noted what may be a new trend in Polish politics. For that story, we switch now to Warsaw.

SCHORR: The crusading reformist weekly, "Po Prostu", which means "Plain Speaking", did not come out on schedule today, held up by the censor. The editor, Aledius Glosota ?, agreed to yank some stories that the censor didn't like, and the paper will be out tomorrow. One column of type tossed into the hot-box, was a story about the ferment among students in Cracow, who adopted a resolution protesting against the retention in the new government of Stalinist Vice-Premier Zenon Nowak. Censorship has been tightened up lately, especially on copy that might displease the Russians or indicate controversy within the Communist ranks. Party chief, Gomulka, has not been quick to undertake the clean-up of the diehards that was expected after the January election. Instead, he's trying to pull together the warring reformists and conservative wings of his party, and enforce unity. The liberal editor of the party organ, Trybuna Ludu, has been dismissed and eight staff members have resigned. Orders have gone out for a war against both the dogmatists which means Stalinists and against revisionists which means Liberal Reformers. But, so far, it seems to be directed mainly against the Liberals. An article in the theorectical organ, reprinted for emphasis in Trybuna Ludu, seems to lay down the new line, a line stressing check reins on reform. Democratization must not become a tool of reaction. The attack on Beuracracy must be curbed lest it turn into an attack on Communist authority. There can be no free competition of political forces in Poland. Anti-Soviet feelings must be dispelled. The idea of National Communision is an invention of Secretary Dulles and must be fought. Workers' councils must be restricted. But, evidence came just today that the fight within Gomulka's party is far from over. At a plenary meeting of the Warsaw party, the city party leader, Jarosinski, gave a report which seemed directly to contradict the Trybuna Ludu line. It warned against calling all Poland's troubles, the result of International bougeois plots; demanded a new fight against beuracracy and dogmatism; upheld the workers' councils against Russian criticism and asserted, there is no going back to October, the October anti-Stalin ----- ---------- will be defended against all those who attempt to break it up from within. This is the first time in recent weeks that the voice of reform has been so loudly heard again in Poland. It came shortly before broadcast time when my script was already written, and it frankly took me, like other foreign observers, by surprise. I had been prepared to say in this report, that reform was apparently stemmed in Poland; that Gomulka was moving back into line with the Communist camp. Now, I am not so sure. It remains to be seen whether today's speech signifies another new trend or only a rear-guard action of the October reformers. Still I think I must report on the mood of Poland, as I found it developing and changing during the month I've been travelling in this country, even though that mood may change again. Gomulka, himself, has not spoken in public since the January election, except for a routine speech to an Engineers' Congress. And the reformers who were the intellectual spark plug of last October's national upsurge have been privately dismayed, bouyancy slowly giving away to nervousness. Poland is still the freest country in the Communist orbit. The Secret Police structure remains shattered and some dissidents are eased out of positions but not jailed. Warsaw University's students still vent unorthodox opinions on their bulletin boards, but there are questions. One bulletin board displayed clippings about the conservatives reinstated in government and asked, "Does this mean a change in policy?" In Cracow, I attended a meeting where students, sick of having the monolithic youth organization imposed on them, talked about starting their own group; then, decided to defer action, not sure now, how far they could go. In Posnan, the Bunker Hill of Poland's revolution, a man who helped to lead the strike last June admitted he was confused by the reappointment of Nowak as Vice-Premier, then said, uncertainly, "We must have faith in Gomulka." A month ago, Poles were applying in large numbers for passports for immigration or for tourists' trips abroad. Feeling now, that to ask for passports would not mean possible punishment, as it did during Stalin days. But now again the regime has tightened up on issuing passports, and again there's a certain kind of nervousness. Once again, Poles begin to wonder if they can mix freely with foreigners; if they can speak their minds with that sense of intoxicating liberty, that seized them after last October. That sense of freedom was too new, too untried for Poles to feel quite sure of it. And every sign of a slight reversal of trend caused unease. Whether unease was justified or whether Gomulka, as some of his defendents have told me, was only taking a step backward to take two steps forward, the coming month will tell. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, reporting from Warsaw on the very delicate political situation in Poland.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 15, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Israeli foreign minister.. Mrs. Golda Meir..is flying to the United States for urgent talks regarding the Gaza Strip. The trip was precipitated by Egypt's action yesterday, taking over administration of Gaza from the United Nations Emergency Force. The Egyptian governor of Gaza told the inhabitants of the strip today to cooperate with the emergency force. But, at the same time, he said everything was going "back to normal, just as it was before the Israeli aggression." "Everything here," he said, " will te taken over by the Egyptian authorities." Mrs. Meir told reporters as she boarded her plane that the Israeli government is "extremely disturbed" by the Gaza developemnts. "It was decided," she said, "that before my government takes any decision, it would be preferable that we do everything we can, diplomatically, in order to try to find a positive solution." The main purpose of her trip, she said, "is to contact the American government." The Israeli ambassador to the United States, Abba Eban, said Mrs. Meir will seek "a very frank exchange of views" with Secretary of State Dulles. "There are certain assumptions and expectations," he said, "which Israel held in common with the United States. We want to find out if they were valid." Eban said the Israeli foreign minister also wishes to consult Secretary General Hammarskjold. And today Hammarskjold postponed his scheduled trip to Cairo. He was to have left New York tomororw.

In Washington, a spokesman for the State Department...Lincoln White.. said the United States supports the United Nations Emergency Force and "all the functions it has to perform." The department called in the representatives of Britain, Norway, Italy, Holland and France for what was described as "a review of recent developments." Secretary of State Dulles is due back in Washington on Sunday.

The Cairo radio claimed tonight that Saudi Arabia has taken the position Israel does not have the right of free passage through the Gulf of Aqaba. There is no confirmation of this. Saudi Arabia forms the east shore of the gulf.

President Sukarno of Indonesia has called on the chairman of the Nationalist Party to form a new government. During the day, Sukarno conferred with political and military leaders in an effort to end the rash of revolts which have beset Indonesia since December. The army is said to have reiterated its opposition to Sukarno's plan to include Communists in the new cabinet.

President Eisenhower is about 200 miles off the coast of Florida tonight, aboard the cruiser Canberra, on his slow voyage to Bermuda. Mr. Eisenhower is reported "feeling fine", despite cloudy weather and some rain.

The Atomic Energy Commission says an experimental power reactor "exploded" at Los Alamos, New Mexico, on February 12th. No one was injured..and no atomic explosion was involved. The commission says a chain reaction in a "critical assembly" momentarily went out of control.

And tonight an Navy blimp .. the Z.P.G. 2 landed at the Key West naval air station, ending 264 hours and 14 minutes of continuous flight. In crossing the Atlantic twice, it also broke the distance record set by the Graf Zepplin in 1929. It flew more than 8 - thousand miles, at least a thousand miles farther then the German airship.

The House Appropriations Committee today cut more than half a billion dollars from the 6 - billion - dollar budget requested for running 18 government agencies. A cut of 206-million dollars was voted in new funds requested for the Veterans Administration. That's a slash of about 4 percent. And the committee voted to allow the Civil Defense Administration only 40-million of the 130-million dollars requested. The economies were achieved by cutting down of office space, new cars and travel allowances and on what it called "the gingerbread and waste that ofted characterises V.A. hospital construction."

No cut was made in the money requested for actual operation of the V.A. hospital program.

A presidential fact-finding board today recommended wage increases totaling 26 and a half cents an hour for 160-thousand members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. The increases would be spread over a three-year period. The board also recommended an escalator clause providing raises tied to the government's consumer price index.

This was Independence Day in Hungary...the 109th anniversary of the revolt against the Hapsburgs. The streets of Budapest were patroled by Soviet troops. And, so far as we know, there were no disorders. Polish Communist leader Gomulka sent a message..appealing to the Hungarian people to reject what he called "counter - revolutionary unrest".

My colleague, Daniel Schorr, has been in Poland this month. And he has noted what may be a new trend in Polish politics. For that story we switch now to Warsaw.

SCHORR: The crusading reformist weekly, "Po Prostu", which means "Plain Speaking", did not come out on schedule today , held up by the censor. The editor, Aledius Glosota agreed to yank some stories that the censor didn't like, and the paper will be out tomorrow. One column of type tossed into the hot-box, was a story about the ferment among students in Cracow, who adopted a resolution protesting against the retention in the new government of Stalinist Vice-Premier Zenon Nowak. Censorship has been tightened up lately, especially on copy that might displease the Russians or indicate controversy within the Communist ranks. Party chief, Gomulka, has not been quick to undertake the clean-up of the diehards that was expected after the January election. Instead, he's trying to pull together the warring reformists and conservative wings of his party, and enforce unity. The liberal editor of the party organ, Trybuna Ludu, has been dismissed and eight staff members have resigned. Orders have gone out for a war against both the dogmatists which means Stalinists and against revisionists which means Liberal Reformers. But, so far, it seems to be directed mainly against the Liberals. An article in the theoretical organ, reprinted for emphasis in Trybuna Ludu, seems to lay down the new line, a line stressing check reins on reform. Democratization must not become a tool of reaction. The attack on Beurocracy must be curbed lest it turn into an attack on Communist authority. There can be no free competition of political forces in Poland. Anti-Soviet feelings must be dispelled. The idea of National Communism is an invention of Secretary Dulles and must be fought. Workers' councils must be restricted. But, evidence came just today that the fight within Gomulka's party is far from over. At a plenary meeting of the Warsaw party, the city party leader, Jarosinski, gave a report which seemed directly to contradict the Trybuna Ludu line. It warned against calling all Poland's troubles the result of International bourgious plots; demanded a new fight against beurocracy and dogmatism; upheld the worker's councils against Russian criticism and asserted, there is no going back to October, the October anti-Stalin uprising will be defended against all those who attempt to break it up from within. This is the first time in recent weeks that the voice of reform has been so loudly heard again in Poland. It came shortly before broadcast time when my script was already written, and frankly took me, like other foreign observers by surprise. I had been prepared to say in this report, that reform was apparently stemmed in Poland; that Gomulka was moving back into line with the Communist camp. Now, I am not so sure. It ramains to be seen whether today's speech signifies another new trend or only a rear-guard action of the October reformers. Still I think I must report on the mood of Poland, as I found it developing and changing during the month I've been travelling in this country, even though that mood may change again. Gomulka, himself has not spoken in public since the January election, except for a routine speech to an Engineers'Congress. And the reformers who were the intellectual spark plug of last October's national upserge have been privately dismayed, bouyancy slowly giving away to nervousness. Poland is still the freest country in the Communist orbit. The Secret Police structure remains shattered and some dissidents are eased out of positions but not jailed. Warsaw University's students still vent unorthodox opinions on their bulletin boards, but there are questions. One bulletin board displayed clippings about the conservatives reinstated in government and asked, "Does this mean a change in policy?" In Cracow, I attended a meeting where students, sick of having the monolithic youth organization imposed on them, talked about starting their own group; then, decided to defer action, not sure now, how far they could go. In Posnan, the Bunker Hill of Poland's revolution, a man who helped to lead the strike last June admitted uncertainly, " We must have faith in Gomulka." A month ago, Poles were applying in large numbers for passports for immigration or for tourists' trips abroad. Feeling now, that to ask for passports would not mean possible punishment, as it did during Stalin days. But now again the regime has tightened up on issuing passports, and again there's a certain kind of nervousness. Once again, Poles begin to wonder if they can mix freely with foreigners; if they can speak their minds with that sense of intoxicating liberty, that seized them after last October. That sense of freadom was too new, too untried for Poles to feel quite sure of it. And every sign of a slight reversal of trend caused unease. Whether unease was justified or whether Gomulka, as some of his defendents have told me, was only taking a step backwardto take two steps forward, the coming month will tell. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, reporting on the delicate political situation in Poland.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. NOw, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The leaders of Poland..the so-called independent Communists..must take care not to anger Moscow. In walking the tight-rope between the liberal reformers and the Stalinists, they must exercise discretion. Josh Billings said, "Courage without discretion iz a ram with horns on both ends ---he will hav more fites on hand than he kan well attend to."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., March 18, 1957

This is the news:

[redacted]

[redacted]. A joint statement issued today by Secretary of State Dulles and the Israeli foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, said the United States "stands firmly by the hopes and expectations it has expressed with regard to the situation which should prevail in the area." These "hopes and expectations", it said, concern "the exercise of the responsibility of the United Nations in Gaza, the free and innocent passage of the Straits of Tiran by the ships of all nations in accordance with international law, and the settlement of the Suez Canal problem in accordance with the six principles adopted by the Security Council." One of those six principles was that there shall be "free and open transit" through the canal. And the joint statement... issued in Washington... refers pointedly to the fact that Egypt accepted these principles. The statement described Mr. Dulles as "concerned" with what

it called "current developments". As a consequence, it said, he is in close touch with Secretary General Hammarskjold, and other members of the United Nations. It quotes Secretary Dulles as saying the United States will "continue to use its influence", in pursuit of peace in the Middle East. It also quotes Mrs. Meir as expressing "deep concern" over the return of Egypt to the Gaza Strip... and as pointing out the "gravity with which Israel views the situation." The joint statement was issued after Mrs. Meir conferred at the State Department for more than three hours. Late in the afternoon she flew to New York. And she has an appointment to see Secretary General Hammarskjold tonight, at United Nations headquarters. Hammarskjold again postponed his scheduled departure for Cairo. The latest plan is that he will take off tomorrow.

The Cairo radio said tonight that United Nations troops will leave all the towns in the Gaza Strip within 48 hours. The United Nations Emergency Force is being relegated to patroling the perimeter of the strip. And that patrol, we're told, is now being carried out 24 hours a day. My colleague Dan Karasik (who is in Gaza) says he is encountering more and more Egyptian military personnel. Egyptian troops are reported, unofficially, to have advanced to a point within 25 miles of the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba. Israel sent a ship through the gulf today, to the Red Sea, without incident.

Crown Prince Faisal, of Saudi Arabia, said today, "We do not accept internationalization of the Gulf of Aqaba. We will oppose it with every means in our power." Faisal made the statement in Cairo, after a meeting with President Nasser.

President Eisenhower received reports on the Middle East situation on board the guided missile cruiser Canberra. In the morning, he saw a Terrier missile destroy a target aircraft, flying by remote control seven and a half miles from the ship. In the afternoon, the President... in News Secretary Hagerty's phrase... "soaked up more sun." The Canberra is proceeding on a northwest course toward Bermuda, where Mr. Eisenhower will meet British Prime Minister Macmillan on Thursday for top-level talks.

In Congress today, a special committee... headed by Senator Fulbright of Arkansas... opened hearings in its investigation of Middle East policy. Fulbright said the State Department has agreed to furnish the committee documents, concerning withdrawal of the United States offer to help Egypt build the Aswan Dam.

The Senate Judiciary Committee today approved the nomination of Charles Evans Whittaker, of Kansas City, as an associate justice of the Supreme Court. Judge Whittaker succeeds retired Justice Stanley Reed.

The House Judiciary Committee approved a modified version of President Eisenhower's civil rights program... and sent it to the Rules Committee. And the full House voted to authorize a higher interest rate on Savings Bonds purchased after last February first. The Treasury wants to raise the present three percent rate to three and a quarter percent to stimulate sales. The measure... authorizing an interest rate as high as three and a half percent... now goes to the Senate.

A federal grand jury today indicted four officers of the international teamsters union on charges of contempt of Congress. They are Frank Brewster, chairman of the teamsters' western conference; Einar (MOAN) Mohn, an international vice president, and two lesser officials, Nugent La Poma and Harry Reiss. All four had refused to answer questions put to them by the Senate investigations subcommittee, on grounds the subcommittee lacked jurisdiction. The inquiry has since been turned over to a special Senate committee. And today President Eisenhower signed an executive order authorizing the committee to examine the income tax returns of union officials involved. Committee counsel Robert Kennedy says the returns examined will include those of ~~teamsters president Dave Beck. Beck has until Wednesday to submit his personal financial records, or have them subpenaed.~~

In Manila, Carlos Garcia (GAR-SEE-A) was sworn in today as president of the Philippines succeeding Ramon Magsaysay, who died Saturday in an airplane accident. Garcia had held the office of vice president. He says he will continue his predecessor's pro-American, anti-Communist policies.

A new round of disarmament talks opened today in London... attended by representatives of Russia, Britain, Canada, France and the United States. Russia offered... right away... to cut the strength of its forces in the satellite states, on condition NATO forces in Western Europe also are reduced.

Edward R. Murrow: March 18, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

In examining Egypt's moral right to be in the Gaza Strip, as distinguished from its legal right (which no one questions), one need go back only to the statement of Secretary General Hammarskjold to the United Nations February 22nd. This outlined the agreement he had reached with President Nasser. He said Egypt would be willing to have the United Nations Emergency Force act exclusively during the take-over in the Gaza Strip "in the first instance." At the time, the vagueness of this phrase: "in the first instance" was criticized, but it had been hard to get a majority in the United Nations for the use of the emergency force, and the vagueness was held to be useful.

Mr. Hammarskjold went on to fill in details of the understanding. Egypt, he said, would make special and helpful arrangements with the United Nations and its various agencies "during the period of transition." These would cover police protection, assure good civilian administration, give maximum assistance to the refugee program, and foster economic development in the Gaza region. Here again is a vague phrase: "the period of transition". Here again, if its duration were to be spelled out, the formal rights of Nasser in Gaza would be limited. So this, too, was left vague. But the list of the helpful arrangements Nasser agreed to, made it clear that a lengthy stay of the emergency force was foreseen. Colonel Nasser and Mr. Hammarskjold had reached an agreement that did not prejudice Egypt's legal rights in Gaza, but by which Colonel Nasser undertook not to exercise them for an "indefinite" time.

The Secretary-General informed the United States of Colonel Nasser's promise, and the United States thereupon endorsed Israel's "assumption" that the withdrawal of Israeli forces would bring into the Gaza Strip the emergency forces, which alone would occupy and administer it. Colonel Nasser made no promise to us, so he did not break his word to us. But he violated an understanding with Mr. Hammarskjold, and this led to an assurance we gave to Israel being proved worthless.

Nasser's action angered the State Department, but did not altogether surprise it. Its first reaction came promptly; it announced that economic aid to Israel, which had been discontinued at the time of the invasion, would be renewed. And quite pointedly no mention was made of lifting economic sanctions on Egypt. Washington felt that for the first time since the crisis, it was openly taking sides in the conflict, though it was doing so in a subdued way. At the same time it sent strong notes to warn and caution

Nasser, while a note to Ben-Gurion asked only restraint and patience.

Some observers believe that Nasser decided to go back on the understanding with Hammarskjold so as to strengthen his bargaining position in the negotiations with Israel that lie ahead. He does not want the Gaza Strip permanently, but he does want to get something for giving it up. Maybe he has taken it back to be able to sell it later at a price. ~~It is conjectured that he heard that some people in Israel are planning to ask for an enlargement of territory, to give the country the frontiers of the old Palestine mandate. With Jordan's strength on the decline, the possibility may be under consideration of Israel seeking to become a bi-racial state. News of this may even have precipitated Nasser's sudden return to Gaza.~~

His action has left Washington in an unenviable position. We have no legal way to push him out of Gaza. Actually it is technically not our problem. It is a U.N. problem, as today's communique stressed. It was the United Nations, without acquiescence, that dealt Colonel Nasser the trump ace he now holds as to his legal right in Gaza. Even though he assured Dag Hammarskjold that he wouldn't play the ace, it can't be taken away from him.

What Washington wants now is to get over the Gaza hurdle, so as to take up Phase Two of the Middle East crisis. Phase One was getting the invaders out of Egypt. Phase Two was to be devoted to the negotiation of a general settlement. Part of our program for Phase Two was to have the United Nations Emergency Force take over the Gaza-Israel frontier until a final settlement is reached. But legally, Nasser doesn't have to accept the U.N. in Gaza at all. So we have been pressing Israel to allow the emergency force to function on both sides of the armistice line, that is, to be partly in Israeli territory. In that way we hope to persuade Nasser to accept the forces on the Gaza side. In other words we are asking Israel to help us save Nasser's face.

~~To put it mildly, this is an odd time to be making such a request, and it gives American policy toward Israel a touch of unreality. For it comes at a moment when our own morality needs to be established beyond all misunderstanding, and this surely has priority over anything we can ask from Israel.~~

The whole complicated chain of events in the Middle East demonstrates at least two things: results can be achieved in that area through the United Nations when the United States and the Soviet Union want the same thing. We now want tranquility and agreement, and the Russians don't.

So far as Washington is concerned, it would probably be fair to say that the air will soon be thick with birds coming home to roost - birds called "assumptions", "~~presumptions~~ expectations", and "assurances".

Stewart Metz.

Word for Today

Diplomats are experts in language, as illustrated by the agreement last month on administration of the Gaza Strip. Galen, the ancient Greek, said, "The chief virtue language can have is clearness." But George said, "For parlor use, the vague generality is a lifesaver." And diplomats in search of agreement are inclined to go along with this point of view.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 18, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

A joint statement issued today by Secretary of State Dulles and the Israeli foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, said the United States "stands firmly by the hopes and expectations it has expressed with regard to the situation which should prevail in the area." These "hopes and expectations", it said, concern "The exercise of the responsibility of the United Nations in Gaza, the free and innocent passage of the Straits of Tiran by the ships of all nations in accordance with international law, and the settlement of the Suez Canal problem in accordance with the six principles adopted by the Security Council." One of those six principles was that there shall be "free and open transit" through the canal. And the joint statement..issued in Washington... refers pointedly to the fact that Egypt accepted these principles. The statement described Mr.Dulles as "concerned" with what is called "current developments." As a consequence, it said, he is in close touch with Secretary General Hammarskjold and other members of the United Nations. It quotes Secretary Dulles as saying the United States will :continue to use its influence" in pursuit of peace in the Middle East. It also quoted Mrs. Meir as expressing "deep concern" over the return of Egypt to the Gaza Strip..and as pointing out the "gravity with which Israel views the situation." The joint statemnt was issued after Mrs. Meir conferred at the State Department for more than three hours. Late in the afternoon she flew to New York. And she has an appointment to see Secretary General Hammarskjold tonight at the United Nations headquarters. Hammarskjold again postponed his scheduled departure for Cairo. The latest plan is that he will take off tomorrow.

The Cairo radio said tonight that United Nations troops will leave all the towns in the Gaza Strip within 48 hours. The United Nations Emergency Force is being relegated to patroling the perimeter of the strip. And that patrol, we're told, is now being carried out 24 hours a day. My colleague Dan Karasik (who is in Gaza) says he is encountering more and more Egyptian military personnel. Egyptian troops are reported, unofficially, to have advanced to a point within 25 miles of the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba. Israel sent a ship through the gulf today to the Red Sea without incident.

Crown Prince Faisal, of Saudi Arabia, said today "We do not accept internationalization of the Gulf of Aqaba. We will oppose it with every means in our power." Faisal made the statement in Cairo, after a meeting with President Nasser.

President Eisenhower received reports on the Middle East situation on board the guided missile cruiser Canberra. In the morning, he saw a Terrier missile destroy a target aircraft flying by remote control seven and a half miles from the ship. In the afternoon, the President..in News Secretary Hagerty's phrase.."soaked up more sun." The Canberra is proceeding on a northwest course toward Bermuda, where Mr. Eisenhower will meet British Prime Minister Macmillan on Thursday for top-level talks.

In Congress today, a special committee..headed by Senator Fulbright of Arkansas..opened hearings in its investigation of Middle East policy. Fulbright said the State Department has agreed to furnish the committee documents concerning withdrawal of the United States offer to help Egypt build the Aswan Dam.

The Senate Judiciary Committee today approved the nomination of Charles Evans Whittaker, of Kansas City, as an associate justice of the Supreme Court. Judge Whittaker succeeds retired Justice Stanley Reed.

The House Judiciary Committee approved a modified version of President Eisenhower's civil rights program..and sent it to the Rules Committee. And the full House voted to authorize a higher interest rate of Savings Bonds purchased after last February first. The Treasury wants to raise the present three percent rate to three and a quarter percent to stimulate sales. The measure authorizing an interest rate as high as three and a half percent ..now goes to the Senate.

A federal grand jury today indicted four officers of the international teamsters union on charges of contempt of Congress. They are Frank Brewster, chairman of the teamsters' western conference; Einar Mohn, an international vice president, and two lesser officials, Nugent La Poma and Harry Reiss. All four had refused to answer questions put to them by the Senate investigations subcommittee, on grounds the subcommittee lacked jurisdiction.

In Manila, Carlos Garcia was sworn in today as president of the Philippines succeeding Ramon Magsaysay, who died Saturday in an airplane accident. Garcia had held the office of vice president. He says he will continue his predecessor's pro-American anti-Communist policies.

A new round of disarmament talks opened today in London..attended by the representatives of Russia, Britain, Canada, France and the United States. Russia offered..right away..to cut the strength of its forces in the satellite states, on condition NATO forces in Western Europe are also reduced.

In examining Egypt's moral right to be in the Gaza Strip, as distinguished from its legal right (which no one questions), one need go back only to the statement of Secretary General Hammarskjold to the United Nations February 22nd. This outlined the agreement he had reached with President Nasser. He said Egypt would be willing to have the United Nations Emergency Force act exclusively during the take-over in the Gaza Strip "in the first instance." At the time, the vagueness of this phrase: "in the first instance" was criticized, but it had been hard to get a majority in the United Nations for the use of the emergency force, and the vagueness was held to be useful.

Mr. Hammarskjold went on to fill in details of the understanding. Egypt, he said, would make special and helpful arrangements with the United Nations and its various agencies "during the period of transition." These would cover police protection, assure good civilian administration, give maximum assistance to the refugee program, and foster economic development in the Gaza region. Here again is a vague phrase: " the period of transition." Here again, if its duration were to be spelled out, the formal rights of Nasser in Gaza would be limited. So this, too, was left vague. But the list of helpful arrangements Nasser agreed to, made it clear that a lengthy stay of the emergency force was foreseen. Colonel Nasser and Mr. Hammarskjold had reached an agreement that did not prejudice Egypt's legal rights in Gaza, but by which Colonel Nasser undertook not to exercise them for an "indefinite time.

The Secretary General informed the United States of Colonel Nasser's promise, and the United States thereupon endorsed Israel's "assumption" that the withdrawal of Israeli forces would bring into the Gaza Strip the emergency forces, which alone would occupy and administer it. Colonel Nasser made no promise to us, so he did not break his word to us. But he violated an understanding with Mr. Hammarskjold, and this led to an assurance we gave to Israel being proved worthless.

Nasser's action angered the State Department, but did not altogether surprise it. Its first reaction came promptly; it announced that economic aid to Israel, which had been discontinued at the time of the invasion, would be renewed. And quite pointedly no mention was made of lifting economic sanctions on Egypt. Washington felt that for the first time since the crisis, it was openly taking sides in the conflict, though it was doing so in a subdued way. At the same time it sent strong notes to warn and caution Nasser, while a note to Ben - Gurion asked only restraint and patience.

Some observers believe that Nasser decided to go back on the understanding with Hammarskjold so as to strengthen his bargaining position in the negotiations with Israel that lie ahead. He does not want the Gaza Strip permanently but he does want to get something for giving it up. Maybe he has taken it back to be able to sell it later at a price.

His action has left Washington in an unenviable position. We have no legal way to push him out of Gaza. Actually it is technically not our problem. It is a U.N. problem, as today's communique stressed. It was the United Nations, without acquiescence, that dealt Colonel Nasser the trump ace he now holds as to his legal right in Gaza. Even though he assured Dag Hammarskjold that he wouldn't play the ace, it can't be taken away from him.

What Washington wants now is to get over the Gaza hurdle, so as to take up Phase Two of the Middle East crisis. Phase One was getting the invaders out of Egypt. Phase two was to be devoted to the negotiation of a general settlement. Part of our program for Phase Two was to have the United Nations Emergency Force take over the Gaza - Israel frontier until a final settlement is reached. But legaly, Nasser doesn't have to accept the U.N. in Gaza at all. So we have been pressing Israel to allow the emergency force to function on both sides of the armistice line,that is, to be partly in Israeli territory. In that way we hope to persuade Nasser to accept the forces on the Gaza side. In other words we are asking Israel to help us save Nasser's face.

The whole complicated chain of events in the Middle East demonstrates at least two things: results can be achieved in that area through the United Nations when the United States and the Soviet Union want the same thing. We now want tranqullity and agreement, and the Russians don't.

So far as Washington in concerned, it would probably be fair to say that the air will soon be thick with birds coming home to roost - birds called "assumptions", "expectations", and "assurances."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Stewart Metz.

METZ:

MURROW: Diplomats are experts in language, as illustrated by the agreement last month on administration of the Gaza Strip. Galen, the ancient Greek, said, " The chief virtue language can have is clearness." But Goerge Ade siad, "For Parlor use, the vague generality is a lifesaver. " And diplomats in search of agreement are inclined to go along with this point of view.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., March 19, 1957

This is the news:

Secretary General Hammarskjold took off today on another mission to the Middle East. He will confer with President Nasser in Cairo... and then, perhaps, go on to Jerusalem to talk with Prime Minister Ben Gurion. Hammarskjold said... at the airport... that he is going to Cairo for "clarification of pending questions to the extent that it is possible at this stage." He said there is no agenda. But he listed as issues of "immediate practical significance" questions affecting United Nations responsibility for canal clearance and continued activities of the United Nations Emergency Force. Hammarskjold is due in Cairo on Thursday.

Egypt today set forth the procedure by which it plans to operate the Suez Canal. It did this in the form of a memorandum, delivered to the foreign embassies in Cairo, including the embassy of the United States. The memorandum states that Egypt "still is determined to respect the letter and the spirit of the Convention of 1888," which made the canal an international waterway. It proposes that claims... resulting from nationalization of the canal last July... be settled either by direct agreement or arbitration. It further proposes the creation of a special fund for improvement of the canal. But it insists that canal tolls be paid in advance to the Suez Canal Authority "or its nominees". In other words, to Egypt. [redacted] The memorandum thus appears to reject the interim plan (for collection of [redacted] tolls) sponsored by the United States, Norway, Britain and France. Under that plan, the canal tolls would be divided equally between Egypt and some international monetary organization... such as the World Bank... pending a final settlement. The memorandum claims [redacted] Egypt proved itself "thoroughly able" to run the canal before the outbreak of hostilities last fall. And it concludes by saying the Egyptian government will issue another detailed statement on this subject later on. Dispatches from Cairo say the memorandum is not regarded there as closing the door to further negotiation. [redacted]

→

Egypt announced today that the Suez Canal is now open to ships of 1-thousand tons. And it gave the United Nations salvage team permission to start raising the last major obstruction in the canal on Friday.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion said today that he is convinced that peace eventually will come to the Middle East. But, he said, it cannot be at the expense of Israel's basic rights. Ben Gurion made the statement in an interview with the United Press. He said Israel will "fully" defend its right to free navigation through the Gulf of Aqaba. On the subject of Egypt's take-over of the Gaza Strip, Ben Gurion said: "I feel that a great opportunity for establishment of a more peaceful situation is being almost wilfully thrown away." Israel withdrew from the Gaza Strip, he said, "on the assumption that Egypt would not be allowed to return." He also recalled President Eisenhower's statement that it "should not be assumed that Israeli shipping will be interferred with in the Suez Canal."

In Washington this afternoon, the Israeli ambassador... Abba Eban... conferred for an hour with Christian Herter, the undersecretary of state. Eban told reporters afterward that he had submitted "concrete proposals"... and that the situation in Gaza must be reversed. He declined to go into details. "Our action," he said, "will be controlled not only by what we discuss here, but also by [redacted] what happens in the area itself."

Administration policy came in for attack today on the floor of the Senate. Democratic Senator Morse... a member of the Foreign Relations Committee... said there is [redacted] "growing evidence of gross malfeasance in office, by the secretary of state." "Mr. Dulles' language," he said, "has to be considered very carefully, as the representatives of Israel have found out. When they thought they were getting assurances," Morse declared, "they were just getting expressions of hope." Senate Democratic Leader Johnson reported "a great deal of apprehension in Congress" over Egypt's return to the Gaza Strip. And Democratic Senator Mansfield said recent developments have added urgency to his proposal for creation of a stronger, permanent United Nations Emergency Force.

The Senate today confirmed William Joseph Brennan, Jr., and Charles Evans Whittaker, as associate justices of the Supreme Court. The nominations were approved by voice vote.

And a Senate subcommittee approved President Eisenhower's civil rights program and sent it to the full judiciary committee.

Secretary of Defense Wilson today ordered a 12 percent cut in office personnel employed by the armed services in and around Washington. Under the order, the Defense Department, Army, Navy and Air Force must eliminate 6-thousand, 414 jobs in the Washington area in the next fiscal year. And the reductions are not to be confined to people in the low-grade categories, where there is low pay. The economy move does not affect the combat strength of the armed forces. The manpower cuts are confined to major headquarters involved in administrative and office work.

Postmaster General Summerfield warned the House Post Office Committee today that Congress will be nullifying much of its effort to cut the budget if it fails to raise postal rates. The Administration counted on a "sizeable" increase in postal rates, he said, in estimating its income.

The Federal Reserve Board today sent the President's Council of Economic Advisers a 16-hundred-page report on the effect of installment buying on the national economy. The report says installment buying is not a primary cause of inflation or depression, but that it can help unstabilize the entire economy. According to the report, 45 families out of a hundred are now making time payments... totaling 31 and a half billion dollars. The Reserve Board made no recommendation as to whether Congress should enact standby legislation for regulating installment buying. (President Eisenhower requested this study a year ago.)

A federal grand jury today indicted James Hoffa, vice president of the international teamsters union, on charges of conspiring to bribe an employe of the Senate rackets committee. Hyman Fischbach, an attorney, was indicted on the same charge. Hoffa and Fischback are accused of trying... by means of bribery... to plant a (NEW YORK LAWYER AS A) spy within the committee, to steal secret documents. Instead, the "spy" reported immediately to the F.B.I. [The Senate committee is currently investigating teamster activities.] Today, it questioned West Coast teamsters boss Frank Brewster. Brewster was confronted with a series of hotel vouchers and cancelled checks indicating union money was used to pay the expenses of his race horse jockey and trainer. Brewster said he couldn't recall such payments. Nor could he remember whether he had used 4-thousand dollars from a special union fund for a down-payment on a house in California.

Last Saturday, the president of the Philippines... Ramon Magsaysay... died in an airplane accident. My colleague, Bob Pierpoint, knew President Magsaysay. He also knows the problems of Southeast Asia, and he says that in relation to these problems the United States... in the death of Ramon Magsaysay... has suffered a heavy loss. For a direct report on the possible repercussions, we switch to Bob Pierpoint in Tokyo.

(Pierpoint tape runs 3:05
(Ends on cue: "--to Edw. R.
(Murrow in N.Y."

That was the report of Bob Pierpoint, who has traveled much in Southeast Asia and knows whereof he speaks.

President Eisenhower today paid personal tribute to Ramon Magsaysay. In a message of sympathy... sent from the cruiser Canberra... he called Magsaysay "one of the great and courageous statesmen of his time."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) Now, here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

The United States has lost a friend in the death of President Magsaysay of the Philippines. He not only was pro-American, but also anti-Communist... and he demonstrated it in his deeds. As our first president, George Washington, said long ago: "Actions, not words, are the true criterion of the attachment of friends."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

TUESDAY, MARCH 19, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: Last Saturday, the President of the Philippines, Ramon Magsaysay, died in an airplane accident. My colleague, Bob Pierpoint, knew President Magsaysay. He also knows the problems of Southeast Asia. For a direct report on the possible repercussions, we switch to Bob Pierpoint in Tokyo.

PIERPOINT: The sudden death of Philippines' President, Ramon Magsaysay is tragic for both the Philippines and the United States. It is also, coming at this particular time, sheer bad luck. Almost as if the saints had loaded the dice against us in Asia. More than any other serious factor, it was Magsaysay' strong pro-Americanism, his wholehearted conviction that the best interests of his own country runs parallel to the interests of the United States. They kept the Filipinos firmly by our side during these past four years. There have been times when the strong ties between the Philippines and America were severely strained. For example, there was the quarrel over which country had title to the many American military bases, scattered throughout the Philippines. Most of these bases were not yens for military purposes, but America held title that it'd acquired, during the years the Philippines were an American colony. Many Filipinos resented this ownership of vast amounts of their land by a foreign government. But, President Magsaysay kept his resentment under control, kept it from boiling over while impatiently persuading the American government to restore title on all the military bases to the Filipinos. The American bases' problem is still not completely settled. The issue now, revolves around how much legal jurisdiction the Filipinos have or about American troops serving there. Negotiations tossed around late last year on this delicate subject but Magsaysay refused to allow even this diplomatic inquest to jeopardize friendly Philippine-American relations. Now, with Magsaysay gone, the American bases problem could well be used by unscrupulous Philippine politicians. Perhaps, for example, to help win the November Presidential elections through inflaming sensitive Filipino feelings against the United States. Magsaysay' sudden passing could also jeopardize SEATO, the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization, America's defense plan for that vital area. The SEATO Pact is currently under strong attack by the Communists. Many of the neutralist nations of Asia also condemn SEATO, as 'an American alliance with aggressive designs'. There are even those in the Philippines, who for their own purposes have attacked SEATO, and have advocated greater neutralism for the Philippines. As long as their revered leader was outspokenly for SEATO, there was no question where the Filipinos stood. But, with the death of Magsaysay, the opposition voices are liable to sound much more appealing. President Magsaysay was a dedicated; dedicated to the welfare of his own people; dedicated to the cause of the free world. In Asia, he was a rare man; one who understood democracy and what it can do; one who understood Communism and what it is trying to do. In the Philippines, in Asia and the New World, President Magsaysay will be missed. This is Bob Pierpoint in Tokyo. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was the report of Bob Pierpoint, who has travelled much in Southeast Asia, and knows where-of he speaks.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

TUESDAY, MARCH 19, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: Last Saturday, the President of the Philippines, Ramon Magsaysay, died in an airplane accident. My colleague, Bob Pierpoint, knew President Magsaysay. He also knows the problems of Southeast Asia. For a direct report on the possible repercussions, we switch to Bob Pierpoint in Tokyo.

PIERPOINT: The sudden death of Philippines' President, Ramon Magsaysay is tragic for both the Philippines and the United States. It is also, coming at this particular time, sheer bad luck. Almost as if the saints had loaded the dice against us in Asia. More than any other serious factor, it was Magsaysay' strong pro-Americanism, his wholehearted conviction that the best interests of his own country runs parallel to the interests of the United States. They kept the Filipinos firmly by our side during these past four years. There have been times when the strong ties between the Philippines and America were severely strained. For example, there was the quarrel over which country had title to the many American military bases, scattered throughout the Philippines. Most of these bases were not yens for military purposes, but America held title that it'd acquired, during the years the Philippines were an American colony. Many Filipinos resented this ownership of vast amounts of their land by a foreign government. But, President Magsaysay kept his resentment under control, kept it from boiling over while impatiently persuading the American government to restore title on all the military bases to the Filipinos. The American bases' problem is still not completely settled. The issue now, revolves around how much legal jurisdiction the Filipinos have or about American troops serving there. Negotiations tossed around late last year on this delicate subject but Magsaysay refused to allow even this diplomatic inquest to jeopardize friendly Philippine-American relations. Now, with Magsaysay gone, the American bases problem could well be used by unscrupulous Philippine politicians. Perhaps, for example, to help win the November Presidential elections through inflaming sensitive Filipino feelings against the United States. Magsaysay' sudden passing could also jeopardize SEATO, the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization, America's defense plan for that vital area. The SEATO Pact is currently under strong attack by the Communists. Many of the neutralist nations of Asia also condemn SEATO, as 'an American alliance with aggressive designs'. There are even those in the Philippines, who for their own purposes have attacked SEATO, and have advocated greater neutralism for the Philippines. As long as their revered leader was outspokenly for SEATO, there was no question where the Filipinos stood. But, with the death of Magsaysay, the opposition voices are liable to sound much more appealing. President Magsaysay was a dedicated; dedicated to the welfare of his own people; dedicated to the cause of the free world. In Asia, he was a rare man; one who understood democracy and what it can do; one who understood Communism and what it is trying to do. In the Philippines, in Asia and the New World, President Magsaysay will be missed. This is Bob Pierpoint in Tokyo. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was the report of Bob Pierpoint, who has travelled much in Southeast Asia, and knows where-of he speaks.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 19, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Secretary General Hammarskjold took off today on another mission to the Middle East. He will confer with President Nasser in Cairo and then, perhaps, go on to Jerusalem to talk with Prime Minister Ben Gurion. Hammarskjold said.. at the airport..that he is going to Cairo for "clarification of pending questions to the extent that it is possible at this stage." He said there is no agenda. But he listed as issues of "immediate practical significance" questions affecting United Nations responsibility for canal clearance and continued activities of the United Nations Emergency Force. Hammarskjold is due in Cairo on Thursday.

Egypt today set forth the procedure by which it plans to operate the Suez Canal. It did this in the form of a memorandum, delivered to the foreign embassies in Cairo, including the embassy of the United States. The memorandum states that Egypt "still is determined to respect the letter and the spirit of the Convention of 1888" which made the canal an international waterway. It proposes that claims...resulting from nationalization of the canal last July.. be settled either by direct agreement or arbitration. It further proposes the creation of a special fund for improvement of the canal. But it insists that the canal tolls be paid in advance to the Suez Canal Authority "or its nominees". In other words, to Egypt. The memorandum thus appears to reject the interim plan (for collection of tolls) sponsored by the United States, Norway, Britain and France. Under than plan, the canal tolls would be divided equally between Egypt and some international monetary organization..such as the World Bank... pending a final settlement. The memorandum claims Egypt proved itself "thoroughly able" to run the canal before the outbreak of hostilities last fall. And it concludes by saying the Egyptian government will issue another detailed statement on this subject later on. Dispatches from Cairo say the memorandum is not regarded there as closing the door to further negotiation.

Egypt announced today that the Suez Canal is now open to ships of 1-thousand tons. And it gave the United Nations slavage team prerission to start raising the last major obstruction in the canal on Friday.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion said today that he is convinced that peace eventually will come to the Middle East. But, he said, it cannot be at the expense of Israel's basic rights. Ben Gurion made the statement in an interview with the United States. He said Israel will "fully" defend its rights to free navigation through the Gulf of Aqaba. On the subject of Egypt's takeover of the Gaza Strip, Ben Gurion said:"I feel that a great opportunity for establishment of a more peaceful situation is being almost wilfully thrown away." Israel withdrew from the Gaza Strip, he said, "on the assumption that Egypt would not be allowed to return." He also recalled President Eisenhower's statement that it "should not be assumed that Israeli shipping will be interferred with in the Suez Canal."

In Washington this afternoon, the Israeli ambassador..Abba Eban..conferred for an hour with Christian Herter, the undersectetary of state. Eban told reporters afterwrrd that he had submitted "concrete proposals"...and that the situation in Gaza must be reversed. He declined to go into details. "Our action," he said, "will be controlled not only by what we discuss here but also by what happens nn the area itself."

Administration policy came in for attack today on the floor of the Senate. Democratic Senator Morse..a member of the Foreign Relations Committee..said there is "growing evidence of gross malfeasance in office by the secretary of state." "Mr. Dulles' language, " he said, " has to be considered very carefully, as the representatives of Israel have found out. When they thought they were getting assurances," Morse declared, " they were just getting expressions of hope." Senate Democratic Leader Johnson reported "a great deal of apprehension in Congress" over Egypt's return to the Gaza Strip. And Democratic Senator Mansfield said recent developments have added urgency to his proposal for creation of a stronger, permanent United Nations Emergency Force.

The Senate today confirmed William Joseph Brennan, Jr. and Charles Evans Whittaker as associate justices of theSupreme Court. The nominations were approved by voice vote.

And a Senate subcommittee approved President Eisenhower's civil rights program and sent it ot the full judiciary committee.

Secretary of Defense Wilson today ordered a 12 percent cut in office personnel employed by the armed services in and around Washington. Under the order, the Defense Department, Army, Navy and Air Force must eliminate 6-thousand, 414 jobs in the Washington area in the next fiscal year. And the reductions are not to be confined to people in the low-grade categories, where there is low pay. The economy move does not affect the combat strength of the armed forces. The manpower cuts are confined to major headquarters involved in administrative and office work.

Postmaster General Summerfield warned the House Post Office Committee today that Congress will be nullifying much of its effort to cut the budget if it fails to raise postal rates. The administration counted on a "sizeable" increase in postal rates, he said, in estimating its income.

The Federal Reserve Board today sent the President's Council of Economic Advisers a 16 - hundred - page report on the effect of installment buying on the national economy. The report says installment buying is not a primary casse of inflation or depression, but that it can help unstabilize the entire economy. According to the report, 45 families out of a hundred are now making time payments..totaling 31 and a half billion dollars. The Reserve Board made no recommendation as to whether Congress should enact standby legislatoon for regulating installment buying. President Eisenhower requested this study a year ago.

A federal grand jury today indicted James Hoffa, vice president of the international teamsters union, on charges of conspiring to bribe an employe of the Senate rackets committee. Hyman Fischbach, an attorney, was indicted on the same charge. Hoffa and Fischback are accused of trying ..by means of bribery .. to plant a New York lawyer as a spy within the committee, to steal secret documents. Instead, the "spy" reported immediately to the F.B.I. The Senate committee is currently investigating teamster activities. Today, it questioned West Coast teamsters boss Frank Brewser. Brewster was confronted with a series of hotel vouchers and cancelled checks indicating union money was used to pay the expenses of his race horse jockey and trainer. Brewster said he couldn't recall such payments. Nor could he remember whether he had used 4 - thousand dollars from a special union fund for a down-payment on a house in California.

Last Saturday, the president of the Philippines..Ramon Magsaysay ..died in an airplane accident. My colleague, Bob Pierpoint, knew President Magsaysay. He also knows the problems of Southeast Asia, and he says that in relation to these problems the United States..in the death of Ramon Magsaysay..has suffered a heavy loss. For a direct report on the possible repercussions, we switch to Bob Pierpoint in Tokyo.

PIERPOINT: The sudden death of Philippine's President, Ramon Magsaysay is tragic for both the Philippines and the United States. It is also, coming at this particular time, sheer bad luck. Almost as if the saints had loaded the dice against us in Asia. More than any other serious factor, it was Magsaysay's strong pro-Americanism, his wholehearted conviction that the best interests of his own country run parallel to the interests of the United States. They kept the Phillipinos firmly by our side during these past four years. There have been times when the strong ties between the Philipppnes and America were severely strained. For example, there was the quarrel over which country had title to the many American military bases, scattered throughout the Philippines. Most of these bases were not used for military purposes, but America held title that it'd acquired, during the years the Philippines were an American colony. Many Filipinos resented this ownership of vast amounts of their land by a foreign government. But, President Magsaysay kept his resentment under control, kept it from boiling over while impatiently persuading the American government to restore title on all the military bases to the Filipinos. The American bases problem is still not completely settled. The issue now, revolves around how much legal jurisdiction the Filipinos have or about American troops serving there. Negotiations tossed around late last year on this delicate subject but Magsaysay refused to allow even this diplomatic inquest to jeopardize friendly Philippine - American relations. Now, with Magsaysay gone, the American bases problem could well be used by unscrupulous Philippine politicians. Perhaps, for example, to help win the November Presidential elections through inflaming sensitive Filipino feelings against the United States. Magsaysay's sudden passing could also jeopardize SEATO, the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization, America's defense plan for that vital area. The SEATO Pact is currently under strong attack by the Communists. Many of the neutralist nations of Asia also condemn SEATO, as "an American alliance wtth aggressive designs." There are even those in the Philippines, who for their own purposes have attacked SEATO, and have advocated greater neutralism for the Philippines. As long as their revered leader was outspokenly for SEATO, there was no question where the Filippinos stood. But, with the death of Magsaysay, the opposition voices are liable to sound such more appealing. President Magsaysay was a dedicated; dedicated to the welfare of his own people; dedicated to the cause of the free world. In Asia, he was a rare man; one who understood democracy and what it can do; one who understood Communism and what it is trying to do. In the Philippines, in Asia and in the New World, Magsaysay will be missed. This is Bob Pierpoint in Tokyo. Now back to Edward

R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was the report of Bob Pierpoint, who has travelled much in Southeast Asia, and knows where-of he speaks.

President Eisenhower today paid personal tribute to Ramon Magsaysay. In a message of sympathy...sent from the cruises Canberra..he called Magsaysay "one of the great and courageous statesmsn of his time."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: TheUnited States has lost a friend in the death of President Magsaysay of the Philippines. He not only was pro-American, but also anti-Communist.. and he demonstrated it in his deeds. As our first president, George Washington, said long ago: "Actions, not words, are the true criterion of the attachment of friends."

Goodnight and good luck.

Good evening:

This is Charles Collingwood. I'm sitting in tonight for Ed Murrow, because he has a bad cold.

President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister Macmillan have both arrived in Bermuda for their meeting that begins FORMALLY tomorrow---an intimate, top-level conference aimed at repairing the Anglo-American alliance, damaged by policy differences over the Middle East. The prime minister was the first to arrive. He flew from England, and when he got off the plane he expressed confidence that the talks "will be helpful in building up the strong tradition of Anglo-American friendship upon which the whole future of the free world depends. We have a great deal to get done," he said, "in a few days." Mr. Eisenhower arrived six hours later, on board the U.S.S. Canberra, looking tanned and fit after the cruise down from Norfolk that took six days. The sky was mostly overcast, but there was no rain. And as he came ashore, in the captain's gig, he received two 21-gun salutes---one from the Canberra and another from a British warship standing by in the harbor. Mr. Eisenhower was greeted personally by the British prime minister and the colonial governor, General John Woodall, resplendent in a plumed helmet and tropical whites. "I am sure," the President said, "that in the next few days we will do much to strengthen the long and lasting friendship between the British Empire and my own country."

Secretary of State Dulles did not take off for the Bermuda conference until this forenoon. Mr. Dulles said... at Washington airport... that he looked forward to the conference and had hope for good results. He said he had no "independent" statement to make, since this is a meeting between the president and prime minister. However, Mr. Dulles did respond to questions put to him about the prospect for a peaceful settlement in the Middle East. He said "a good deal of progress" toward a peaceful solution had been made over the past several months. "There are fluctuations from day to day," Mr. Dulles said, "but the general trend is satisfactory and in the interest of peace and justice."

Shortly after Secretary Dulles left Washington, the State Department voiced hope that a satisfactory interim arrangement will be arrived at for running the Suez Canal, pending a final settlement. The statement was in reference to the Egyptian memorandum yesterday, which [redacted] insisted---among other things---that canal tolls are to be paid to Egypt. The State Department said it is reserving judgment on the Egyptian memorandum. But, at the same time, it said the United States supports a solution of the problem, based on the six principles approved by the Security Council last October. [redacted] One of those principles was that there shall be free transit through the canal without discrimination. Egypt is still barring passage by Israeli ships. [redacted]

A 10-year program of foreign economic development... to cost 10-billion dollars... was proposed today to Congress. The proposal was made by Max E. Millikan, director of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Center for International Studies. Millikan was testifying before a Senate committee as it began a series of public hearings on the foreign aid question. He said 80 percent of the vast, new program should consist of loans and the rest in outright grants. Another witness was Herbert Robinson, president of the Council for Economic and Industry Research, who said underdeveloped countries must be able to count on long-range American assistance. Otherwise, they may be forced to seek help from Russia.

The House today cut President Eisenhower's request for 6-billion dollars... for running 18 government agencies in the next fiscal year... by 9 percent. The reduction amounted to 538-million dollars. And the Civil Defense Administration was the agency hardest hit. It got only 39-million of the 130-million dollars requested. The big money bill now goes to the Senate.

Dave Beck, president of the international teamsters union, bowed today to the authority of the Senate rackets committee. Last week, the committee chairman... Senator McClellan... gave Beck until 3 o'clock this afternoon to decide whether to produce his financial records. Today, an hour before the deadline, the teamsters president told reporters in Seattle he had complying with its request. he had sent McClellan a telegram saying in part, "I recognize the authority of your committee to require my presence before you. I will appear voluntarily at your pleasure, and will then bring with me records covering the period you specify." Beck said he was doing this on advice of counsel and without prejudice to his rights. McClellan then fired back a telegram... calling on the teamsters president to testify next Tuesday. Beck was asked to bring with him all personal financial records from 1949 through 1955, maintained either by himself or by others. And these records, McClellan said, are to include any pertaining to loans or advances from the union, "or any unit thereof."

The committee heard more testimony today from the West Coast teamsters boss, Frank Brewster. Brewster acknowledged he received about 5-thousand dollars a year... for three years...from the union's insurance broker. But he swore it was not a commission. The money, he said, was for helping take care of race horses he and the broker owned together. Brewster said... in further testimony... that the union contributed to the 1954 campaign of Governor Knight of California and that later the union got the man of its choice appointed director of the Port of San Francisco. Governor Knight promptly issued a statement saying he had "no record" of any financial contribution by the teamsters union to any of his campaigns. He also said he had "nothing whatsoever" to do with the appointment of Charles Tait of Seattle as San Francisco port director.

The puppet premier of Hungary... Janos Kadar... arrived in Moscow today for 10 days of talks. There was no announcement of an agenda. But reportedly a wide range of political and economic problems will be discussed. Kadar made a speech at the Moscow airport, thanking Russia for its intervention in the Hungarian revolt. Premier Bulganin responded by calling Soviet-Hungarian friendship "a wonderful example of the vital strength of world socialism."

Today... in Dublin... the Irish parliament chose Eamon de Valera as prime minister. This was just a formality, since de Valera had led his party to victory in nationwide elections earlier this month.

The British government today offered to release Archbishop Makarios from exile, if he would call... publicly... for an end to anti-British "terrorism" on Cyprus. The offer was announced in the House of Commons by Colonial Secretary Alan Lennox-Boyd. The Cypriot underground said... last week... it would issue a cease-fire if Makarios were set free. Lennox-Boyd said today that if Makarios is released, there is no question "at this stage" THAT HE WILL BE allowed to return to Cyprus. He announced that Britain is willing, in principle, to have NATO mediate the Cyprus dispute. (All three principals in the dispute... Britain, Greece and Turkey... are members of NATO). THE GREEK GOVERNMENT HAS ANNOUNCED REJECTION OF BRITAIN'S PROPOSAL FOR NATO MEDIATION.

Vice President Nixon has finished his goodwill tour of Africa, and tonight he and Mrs. Nixon are flying across the Atlantic on their way back to Washington. During the day... in Tunis... they attended the celebration marking the first anniversary of Tunisian independence from France. (The French representative, incidentally, boycotted the ceremony when he discovered that an Algerian nationalist leader was also going to attend).

Howard K. Smith, the chief European correspondent for CBS News, accompanied Vice President Nixon to all of the African countries he visited except Tunisia. And tonight he is here in New York. Howard, what was the real purpose of Mr. Nixon's trip?

(Tape runs 3:55
Ends on cue: "--in the years to come."

Thank you, Howard. It's good to have you here, after your journey.

This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with Ed Murrow's Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

Vice President Nixon is on his way home, after visiting eight countries on a trip that covered more than 8-thousand miles in 22 days. All but one of these countries was in Africa--an area of the world of which far too little still is known. Samuel Johnson would have understood what Mr. Nixon was about. "The use of traveling," he once said, "is to regulate imagination by reality and, instead of thinking how things may be, to see them as they are."

This is Charles Collingwood. Ed Murrow will see you tomorrow.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - COLLINGWOOD SUBSTITUTING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

COLLINGWOOD: Vice-President Nixon has finished his good will tour of Africa and tonight he and Mrs. Nixon are flying across the Atlantic on their way back to Washington. Howard K. Smith, the Chief European Correspondent for CBS News, accompanied Vice-President Nixon to all of the African countries he visited, except Tunisia. Tonight he's here in New York. Howard, what was the real purpose of Mr. Nixon's trip?

SMITH: Well, Charles, the men around Vice-President Nixon say that his tour of Africa had two purposes. One, to try to get America more interested in Africa; and two, to let the people of Africa know that America's interested in them. Not having been here, not having seen how much interest the Vice-President's odyssey aroused here at home, I cannot answer the purpose number one - to get the United States interested in Africa. But I believe the second purpose, that of making the Africans think that the world's greatest nation is concerned about them, was very well and favorably served by the tour.

Mr. Nixon, who seems to have absorbed all that Dale Carnegie had to teach about winning friends and influencing people, did things that no high personage has ever done before in Africa. He exported the American election campaign technique to the heart of that continent. On arrival in town, he would make flattering little speeches, in which some feature of every country he visited, the jungle of Liberia, the bush of Ghana, the mountains of Abyssinia always reminded him of some pleasant feature of his home state, California; though to those of us who had seen California, the parallel, sometimes, seemed obscure.

In his little speeches, he never neglected to pay tribute to everybody around - the local leaders; their police force;

the common people; the honor guard that met him and so on. At news conferences, he was always especially deferential to the local African reporters. When the American reporters present tried to break off the conference, as they do in Washington, by saying, 'Thank you, Mr. Vice-President', and then rising to leave, Nixon invariably begged them to excuse him, while he turned again to the scribes of the humble local papers, to indicate his readiness to say more, if they wanted to ask more.

His best technique, however, was to break his processions from the airports to the towns, wherever there was a crowd, and get out of his car and move into the crowd of people, by the roadsides, and shake hands all 'round. From the cheers and shouts of the people emitted and the way they rushed the Vice-President with outstretched hands, this, apparently, was a huge success.

In Ghana, the newly independent nation, that used to be the British Gold Coast Colony, people soon began shouting, 'Show Boy' at him. That may have an undertone of derogation to the American ear, but among the negroes of Ghana, it was the highest possible compliment. It established Mr. Nixon, as a kind of national pin-up, for that is the nickname that the people of Ghana give to their own very popular Prime Minister, Dr. Nkrumah.

The strategy that induced the administration to send Mr. Nixon on this tour of the independent nations of Africa, deserves a few words of explanation. Africa, hitherto spared the cold war, is expected to become an important theatre of the continuing argument from now on. For one thing, Egypt and Northeast Africa is in trouble and is therefore accepting more and more help from Russia. This means that for the first time there's a possibility of Communist penetration of Africa by that Egyptian gate. For another thing, there's no doubt that the grant of independence by Britain to the Gold Coast Colony, three weeks ago, is going to quicken the pace of all the African colonies towards independence. And, freedom means, among other things, the freedom for them to be wooed by the Russia, that is now beginning to make that penetration.

So far, anyone who followed Mr. Nixon on his tour, will have seen, the West and in particular the United States has the inside track for Africa's friendship. Far the majority of native Africans, who have college education, got it either in the United States or in England, and are very appreciative of that fact. But, from now on, the West is going to have to work much harder to retain that friendship. The Vice-President's tour was a kind of opening salvo in a campaign that is likely to get much more interesting and much more intense in the years to come.

COLLINGWOOD: Thank you, Howard. It's good to have you here, after your journey.

1. for murrow.

Well, Charles,

The men around Vice President Richard Nixon say that his tour of Africa has had two purposes: one, to try to get America more interested in Africa...and two, to let the people of Africa know that America is interested in them.

Not having been here and + not having seen how much interest the vice president's odyssey aroused here at home, I cannot answer for purpose number one-- which is to get the US interested in Africa. But I believe the second purpose, that of making the Africans think the world's greatest nation is concerned about them has been very well and favorably served by the tour.

~~The~~ Mr. Nixon- who seems to have absorbed all that Dale Carnegie has to teach about winning friends and influencing people- did things that no high personage has ever done in Africa: he exported the American election campaign ~~xxxxxx~~ technique to the heart of that continent. On arrival in town he would make flattering little speeches in which some feature of every nation he visited- the jungle of Liberia, the bush of Ghana, the mountains of Abyssinia-always reminded him out loud of some pleasant feature of his home state, California. Though to those of us who have seen California, the parallels sometimes seemed obscure.

2.) for murrow.

In his little speeches he never neglected to pay tribute to everybody, the local leaders, their police force, their common people, the honor guard that met him.

At NEWS conferences, he always was especially deferential to the local African reporters. When the American reporters present tried to break off the conference as they do in Washington, by saying thank you Mr. Vice president and rising to leave, Nixon invariably begged them to excuse him while he turned again to the scribes of the humble local papers to indicate readiness to say more if they wanted to ask more.

His best technique was to break his procession from the airport to the towns wherever there was a crowd + get out of his car to move into clots of people by the roadsides and shake hands all round. They voiced From the cheers and shouts and the way they rushed the vice president with out-stretched hands, this was a huge triumph.

3.)-- for murrow.

In Ghana, the newly independent nation that used to be the British Gold Coast colony, they soon began shouting "Show Boy" at him. That may have an undertone of derogation to your ear, but among the negroes of Ghana it is the highest possible compliment. It established Mr. Nixon as a kind of n national Pin:up, and is the nickname they give to their very popular Prime Minister, Dr. Enkrumah.

....

The strategy that induced the Administration to send Mr. Nixon on this tour of the independent nations of Africa deserves a few words of exposition. Africa, hitherto spared the Cold War, is expected to become an important theater of that confinuing argument in the very near future.

For one thing, Egypt - in northeast Africa- is introuble and therefore accepting more and more help from Russia. This means that for the first time there is a possibility of Communist penetration of Africa by the Egyptian gate.

4.)-- for murrow.

For another thing, there is no doubt that the grant of independence by Britain to the Gold Coast colony three weeks ago is going to quicken the pace of all the African colonies towards independence...and freedom means among other things the freedom to be wooed by the Russia that is now beginning to make the penetration.

So far- anyone who followed Mr. Nixon on his tour will have seen- the West, and in particular the United States, has the inside track for Africa's friendship. Far the majority of native Africans who have college education got it in the US or in England, and appreciate the fact. But from now on, the West is going to have to work harder to retain that friendship.

The vice president's tour was a kind of opening salvo in a campaign that is likely to get much more interesting and intense in the years just ahead.

+++

The men around Vice President Richard Nixon say that his tour of Africa has had two purposes: one, to try to get America more interested in Africa...and two, to let the people of Africa know that America is interested in them.

Not having been here and not having seen how much interest the vice president's odyssey aroused here at home, I cannot answer for purpose number one—which is to get the US interested in Africa. But I believe the second purpose, that of making the Africans think the world's greatest nation is concerned about them has been very well and favorably served by the tour.

Mr. Nixon - who seems to have absorbed all that Dale Carnegie has to teach about winning friends and influencing people - did things that no high personage has ever done in Africa: he exported the American election campaign technique to the heart of that continent. On arrival in towns, he would make flattering little speeches in which some feature of every nation he visited - the jungle of Liberia, the bush of Ghana, the mountains of Abyssinia - always reminded him out loud of some pleasant feature of his home state, California...Though to those of us who have seen California, the parallels sometimes seemed obscure.

In his little speeches he never neglected to pay tribute to everybody, the local leaders, their police force, their common people, the honor guard that met him.

At news conferences, he always was especially deferential to the local African reporters. When the American reporters present tried to break off the conference as they do in Washington, by saying thank you Mr. Vice President, and rising to leave, Nixon invariably begged them to excuse him while he turned again to the scribes of the humble local papers to indicate readiness to say more if they wanted to ask more.

His best technique was to break his procession from the airport to the towns wherever there was a crowd and get out of his car and move into the clots of people by the roadsides and shake hands all around. From the cheers and shouts they voiced and the way they rushed the vice president with out-stretched hands, this was a huge triumph.

In Ghana, the newly independent nation that used to be the British Gold Coast colony, they soon began shouting "Show Boy" at him. That may have an undertone of derogation to your ear, but among the Negroes of Ghana it is the highest possible compliment. It established Mr. Nixon as a kind of national pin-up, and is the nickname they give to their very popular Prime Minister, Dr. Enkrumah.

The strategy that induced the Administration to send Mr. Nixon on this tour of the independent nations of Africa deserves a few words of exposition. Africa, hitherto spared the Cold War, is expected to become an important theater of that continuing argument in the very near future.

For one thing, Egypt - in northeast Africa - is in trouble and therefore accepting more and more help from Russia. This means that for the first time there is a possibility of Communist penetration of Africa by the Egyptian gate.

For another thing, there is no doubt that the grant of independence by Britain to the Gold Coast colony three weeks ago is going to quicken the pace of all the African colonies towards independence... and freedom means among other things, the freedom to be wooed by the Russia that is now beginning to make the penetration.

So far - anyone who followed Mr. Nixon on his tour will have seen - the West, and in particular the United States, has the inside track for Africa's friendship. Far the majority of native Africans who have college education got it in the US or in England, and apppeciate the fact. But from now on, the West is going to have to work harder to retain that friendship.

The vice president's tour was a kind of opening salvo in a campaign that is likely to get much more interesting and intense in the years just ahead.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS (CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING)
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

Good evening:

This is Charles Collingwood. I'm sitting in tonight for Ed Murrow, because he has a bad cold.

President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister Macmillan have both arrived in Bermuda for their meeting that begins formally tomorrow - an intimate, top-level conference aimed at repairing the Anglo-American alliance, damaged by policy differences over the Middle East. The prime minister was the first to arrive. He flew from England, and when he got off the plane he expressed confidence that the talks "will be helpful in building up the strong tradition of Anglo-American friendship upon which the whole future of the free world depends. We have a great deal to get done," he said, "in a few days." Mr. Eisenhower arrived six hours later, on board the U.S.S. Canberra, looking tanned and fit after the cruise down from Norfolk that took six days. The sky was mostly overcast, but there was no rain. And as he came ashore, in the captain's gig, he received two 21-gun salutes - one from the Canberra and another from a British warship standing by in the harbor. Mr. Eisenhower was greeted personally by the British prime minister and the colonial governor, General John Woodall, resplendent in a plumed helmet and tropical whites. "I am sure," the President said, "that in the next few days we will do much to strengthen the long and lasting friendship between the British Empire and my own country."

Secretary of State Dulles did not take off for the Bermuda conference until this forenoon. Mr. Dulles said...at the Washington airport...that he looked forward to the conference and had hope for good results. He said he had no "independent" statement to make, since this is a meeting between the president and prime minister. However, Mr. Dulles did respond to questions put to him about the prospect for a peaceful settlement in' the Middle East. He said "a good deal of progress" toward a peaceful solution had been made over the past several months. "There are fluctuations from day to day," Mr. Dulles said, "but the general trend is satisfactory and in the interest of peace and justice."

Shortly after Secretary Dulles left Washington, the State Department voiced hope that a satisfactory interim arrangement will be arrived at for running the Suez Canal, pending a final settlement. The statement was in reference to the Egyptian memorandum yesterday, which insisted - among other things - that canal tolls are to be paid to Egypt. The State Department said it is reserving judgment on the Egyptian memorandum. But, at the same time, it said the United States supports a solution of the problem, based on the six principles approved by the Security Council last October. One of those principles was that there shall be free transit through the canal without discrimination. Egypt is still barring passage by Israeli ships.

A 10-year program of foreign economic development...to cost 10-billion dollars...was proposed today to Congress. The proposal was made by Max E. Millikan, director of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Center for International Studies. Millikan was testifying before a Senate committee as it began a series of public hearings on the foreign aid question. He said 80 percent of the vast, new program should consist of loans and the rest in outright grants. Another witness was Herbert Robinson, president of the Council for Economic and Industry Research, who said underdeveloped countries must be able to count on long-range American assistance. Otherwise, they may be forced to seek help from Russia.

The House today cut President Eisenhower's request for 6-billion dollars...for running 18 government agencies in the next fiscal year..by 9 percent. The reduction amounted to 538-million dollars. And the Civil Defense Administration was the agency hardest hit. It got only 39-million of the 130-million dollars requested. The big money bill now goes to the Senate.

Dave Beck, president of the International Teamsters Union, bowed today to the authority of the Senate rackets committee. Last week, the committee chairman...Senator McClellan...gave Beck until 3 o'clock this afternoon to decide whether to produce his financial records. Today, an hour before the deadline, the teamsters president told reporters in Seattle he had telegraphed the committee complying with its request. He had sent McClellan a telegram saying in part, "I recognize the authority of your committee to require my presence before you. I will appear voluntarily at your pleasure, and will then bring with me records covering the period you specify." Beck said he was doing this on advice of counsel and without prejudice to his rights. McClellan then fired back a telegram...calling on the teamsters president to testify next Tuesday. Beck was asked to bring with him all personal financial records from 1949 through 1955, maintained either by himself or by others. And these records, McClellan said, are to include any pertaining to loans or advances from the union, "or any unit thereof."

The committee heard more testimony today from the West Coast teamsters boss, Frank Brewster. Brewster acknowledged he received about 5-thousand dollars a year...for three years...from the union's insurance broker. But he swore it was not a commission. The money, he said, was for helping take care of race horses he and the broker owned together. Brewster said...in further testimony...that the union contributed to the 1954 campaign of Governor Knight of California and that later the union got the man of its choice appointed director of the Port of San Francisco. Governor Knight promptly issued a statement saying he had "no record" of any financial contribution by the teamsters union to any of his campaigns. He also said he had "nothing whatsoever" to do with the appointment of Charles Tait of Seattle as San Francisco port director.

The puppet premier of Hungary...Janos Kadar...arrived in Moscow today for 10 days of talks. There was no announcement of an agenda. But reportedly a wide range of political and economic problems will be discussed. Kadar made a speech at the Moscow airport, thanking Russia for its intervention in the Hungarian revolt. Premier Bulganin responded by calling Soviet-Hungarian friendship "a wonderful example of the vital strength of world socialism."

Today...in Dublin...the Irish Parliament chose Eamon de Valera as prime minister. This was just a formality, since de Valera had led his party to victory in nationwide elections earlier this month.

The British government today offered to release Archbiship Makarios from exile, if he would call...publicly...for an end to anti-British "terrorism" on Cyprus. The offer was announced in the House of Commons by Colonial Secretary Alan Lennox-Boyd. The Cypriot underground said...last week...it would issue a cease-fire if Makarios were set free. Lennox-Boyd said today that if Makarios is released, there is no question "at this stage" that he will be allowed to return to Cyprus. He announced that Britain is willing, in principle, to have NATO mediate the Cyprus dispute. (All three principals in the dispute...Britain, Greece and Turkey...are members of NATO.) The Greek government has announced rejection of Britain's proposal for NATO mediation.

Vice President Nixon has finished his goodwill tour of Africa, and tonight he and Mrs. Nixon are flying across the Atlantic on their way back to Washington. During the day...in Tunis...they attended the celebration marking the first anniversary of Tunisian independence from France. (The French representative, incidentally, boycotted the ceremony when he discovered that an Algerian nationalist leader was also going to attend.)

Howard K. Smith, the chief European correspondent for CBS News, accompanied Vice President Nixon to all of the African countries he visited except Tunisia. And tonight he is here in New York. Howard, what was the real purpose of Mr. Nixon's trip?

SMITH: Well, Charles, the men around Vice-President Nixon say that his tour of Africa had two purposes. One, to try to get America more interested in Africa; and two, to let the people of Africa know that America's interested in them. Not having been here, not having seen how much interest the Vice-President's odyssey aroused here at home, I cannot answer the purpose number one - to get the United States interested in Africa. But I believe the second purpose, that of making the Africans think that the world's greatest nation is concerned about them, was very well and favorably served by the tour.

Mr. Nixon, who seems to have absorbed all that Dale Carnegie had to teach about winning friends and influencing people, did things that no high personage has ever done before in Africa. He exported the American election campaign technique to the heart of that continent. On arrival in town, he would make flattering little speeches, in which some feature of every country he visited, the jungle of Liberia, the bush of Ghana, the mountains of Abyssinia always reminded him of some pleasant feature of his home state, California; though to those of us who had seen California, the parallel, sometimes, seemed obscure.

In his little speeches, he never neglected to pay tribute to everybody around - the local leaders; their police force; the common people; the honor guard that met him and so on. At news conferences, he was always especially deferential to the local African reporters. When the American reporters present tried to break off the conference, as they do in Washington, by saying,

"Thank you, Mr. Vice-President", and then rising to leave, Nixon invariably begged them to excuse him, while he turned again to the scribes of the humble local papers, to indicate his readiness to say more, if they wanted to ask more.

His best technique, however, was to break his processions from the airports to the towns, wherever there was a crowd, and get out of his car and move into the crowd of people, by the roadsides, and shake hands all 'round. From the cheers and shouts the people emitted and the way they rushed the Vice-President with outstretched hands, this, apparently, was a huge success.

In Ghana, the newly independent nation, that used to be the British Gold Coast Colony, people soon began shouting, "Show Boy" at him. That may have an undertone of derogation to the American ear, but among the negroes of Ghana, it was the highest possible compliment. It established Mr. Nixon, as a kind of national pin-up, for that is the nickname that the people of Ghana give to their own very popular Prime Minister, Dr. Nkrumah.

The strategy that induced the administration to send Mr. Nixon on this tour of the independent nations of Africa, deserves a few words of explanation. Africa, hitherto spared the cold war, is expected to become an important theatre of the continuing argument from now on. For one thing, Egypt and Northeast Africa is in trouble and is therefore accepting more and more help from Russia. This means that for the first time there's a possibility of Communist penetration of Africa by that Egyptian gate. For another thing, there's no doubt that the grant of independence by Britain to the Gold Coast Colony, three weeks ago, is going to quicken the pace of all the African colonies towards independence. And, freedom means, among other things, the freedom for them to be wooed by the Russians, that is now beginning to make that penetration.

So far, anyone who followed Mr. Nixon on his tour, will have seen, the West and in particular the United States has the inside track for Africa's friendship. For the majority of native Africans, who have a college education, got it either in the United States or in England, and are very appreciative of that fact. But, from now on, the West is going to have to work much harder to retain that friendship. The Vice-President's tour was a kind of opening salvo in a campaign that is likely to get much more interesting and much more intense in the years to come.

COLLINGWOOD: Thank you, Howard. It's good to have you here, after your journey.

This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with Ed Murrow's Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN: COMMERCIAL

COLLINGWOOD: Vice President Nixon is on his way home, after visiting eight countries on a trip that covered more than 8-thousand miles in 22 days. All but one of these countries was in Africa - an area of the world of which far too little still is known. Samuel Johnson would have understood what Mr. Nixon was about. "The use of traveling," he once said, "is to regulate imagination by reality and, instead of thinking how things may be, to see them as they are."

This is Charles Collingwood. Ed Murrow will see you tomorrow.

Thurs., March 21, 1957

This is the news—

The Air Force reports that a MILITARY transport plane... with 67 persons aboard... is overdue and assumed down in the Pacific Ocean, some 200 miles southeast of Japan. The aircraft is identified as a C-97 transport, bound from Travis Air Force Base in California to Tokyo. It carries 57 passengers and a crew of 10. The Air Force says a full search is underway in the area between Wake Island and Japan.

[redacted]

The meeting between President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister Macmillan formally opened today in Bermuda. They discussed Middle East problems. And it is reported [redacted] that they achieved "a gratifying measure of agreement." For the details, we switch now to George Herman in Bermuda.

Tape runs 3:05

Ends on cue "--to ERM in NY."

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold today began a series of talks with President Nasser./ My colleague, Frank Kearns, reports from Cairo that these talks are strictly exploratory. There is no set agenda, not even a set schedule./ U.N. sources stress they are merely a continuation of talks which started in New York and which will be resumed when Hammarskjold returns to New York./ The discussions in Cairo are said to be jumping from the Suez Canal question, to Gaza, to Aqaba--all inter-connected. And Hammarskjold is said, for the first time in his five visits to the Middle East in just over a year, to be hacking away at the very roots of the Middle East problem, the whole Arab-Israeli situation./ Kearns quotes "top sources" in Cairo as saying that one of Hammarskjold's main goals is enforcement of the battered 1949 armistice agreement, down to the last paragraph and final period. For the Israelis, that would mean allowing United Nations troops on their side of the armistice line---a move which they have refused so far./ It also means Israel would have to pull out of the little triangle of land on the Sinai border, an area which was supposed to have been demilitarized but which Israeli forces occupied in 1955. Kearns says Nasser naturally goes along with these ideas, and happily, but that he is expected to balk... and balk hard... at the ideas

Hammarskjold has for him -- mainly for Egypt and the other Arab states to drop their insistence that they are still in a legal state of war with Israel. This, of course, would clear the way for Israeli ships to use the Gulf of Aqaba and, perhaps, even the Suez Canal. It might also knock down the Arab blockade of Israel which, Kearns predicts, will be fought every inch of the way by Nasser and his allies. In short, Kearns says, Hammarskjold is playing for high stakes -- real peace in the Middle East. And, he adds, it's probably the toughest diplomatic poker game of his entire career.

Vice President Nixon returned to Washington today from his 22-day African tour. Nixon said he found the problem of resettlement of Arab refugees from Palestine "more important" than he anticipated. All interested countries, including the United States, must devote "every effort" to solve this problem, he said, "if we are going to have peace in the Middle East." Nixon said the Administration should give higher priority to Africa. He recommended the stepping-up of cultural exchanges. And the size of State Department missions in the area, he said, should be increased. He said that in the next 25 years, the African continent may be the decisive battleground in the struggle for the survival of democracy. Nixon told reporters that regardless of Nasser's hopes for dominating Arab Africa, none of the African nations -- including Libya and the Sudan -- "will slavishly follow the line of any outsider." Each of the new independent states, he said, is "jealous" of its independence and "leery" of anyone seeking to dominate them from the outside. Nixon said he will submit a written report to the President within 10 days.

The Israeli foreign minister... Mrs. Golda Meir... stopped off in Paris today, on the way back to Jerusalem from her talks in Washington and New York. After conferring with French officials, Mrs. Meir said Israel has "no intention whatsoever" of accepting an Egyptian blockade of either the Suez Canal or the Gulf of Aqaba. Israel, she said, has received no reply to certain "concrete suggestions" she made to the State Department, during her Washington visit.

The Israeli army headquarters in Tel Aviv says that Syrians and Israelis exchanged fire for two hours yesterday, on the Syrian frontier. Israel says the Syrians started the action... and that there were no Israeli casualties. Syria says it was the Israelis who first opened fire. Israel also accuses Jordan of sending a patrol today into Israeli territory.

The House Appropriations Committee approved another money bill today after cutting it by about 4 percent. The measure requested nearly 3-billion dollars for running the Labor and Welfare Departments in the next fiscal year. The committee has now acted on five appropriation bills, with cuts totaling 800-million dollars.

Democratic Senator Byrd of Virginia proposed today that President Eisenhower's budget be slashed by six and a half billion dollars. The budget... in its original form... called for appropriation of a record 72-billion dollars. In a Senate speech, Byrd called this budget "dangerous". He said domestic programs can be cut by three billion dollars, foreign aid by two billion dollars, and the military-atomic programs by one and a half billion dollars simply, in his words "by squeezing out waste." He said he will follow through with details later.

In England, the port of Southhampton is reported shut down due to a dock strike. This morning, the government used Navy tugs to get the liner Queen Mary under way to New York. Shipyard workers... who have been on strike since Saturday... charged the government with strike-breaking. And, in sympathy, thousands of longshoremen in Southhampton walked off their jobs. A strike of a million industrial workers is still scheduled for Saturday.

The puppet government of Hungary today [redacted] rejected an American protest over the arrest of Hungarian visitors to the United States legation in Budapest. The government called the protest "unfounded". It claimed the arrests were part of a round-up of [redacted] "criminal elements".

Today... in Rangoon... the United States signed an agreement to help Burma's economic development. Under the agreement, Burma will receive two loans... totaling 40-million dollars... from the Export-Import Bank. Both loans are repayable in 40 years.

Word for Today

Much has been said in Bermuda of Anglo-American friendship... and the need for its preservation in these trying time. Woodrow Wilson once said, "Friendship (and he must have been speaking of friendship among nations) [redacted] is the only cement that will ever hold the world together." And George Washington said, "Friendship is a plant of slow growth and must withstand the shocks of adversity."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

THURSDAY, MARCH 21, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: Today in Rangoon, the United States signed an agreement to help Burma's economic development. Under the agreement Burma will receive two loans totalling a forty million dollars from the Export Import Bank. Both loans are repayable in ten years.

The Middle East was discussed today in Bermuda. Later on the discussion will go to an even more vital subject and that is the question of trade with Communist China. This will be a difficult subject on which to reach agreement. An increase of trade with Communist China is what Mr. Macmillan is expected to advocate. And he wants this trade to be put on the same basis as that governing trade with the Soviet Union. Britain needs additional trade to bolster its economic position, but the administration in Washington is not ready to offer any favors to the Chinese Communists. A preview of the Bermuda conference would indicate that there are many subjects upon which agreement is likely to prove difficult, if not impossible. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

THURSDAY, MARCH 21, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: Today in Rangoon, the United States signed an agreement to help Burma's economic development. Under the agreement Burma will receive two loans totalling a forty million dollars from the Export Import Bank. Both loans are repayable in ten years.

The Middle East was discussed today in Bermuda. Later on the discussion will go to an even more vital subject and that is the question of trade with Communist China. This will be a difficult subject on which to reach agreement. An increase of trade with Communist China, is what Mr. Macmillan is expected to advocate. And he wants this trade to be put on the same basis as that governing trade with the Soviet Union. Britain needs additional trade to bolster its economic position, but the administration in Washington is not ready to offer any favors to the Chinese Communists. A preview of the Bermuda conference would indicate that there are many subjects upon which agreement is likely to prove difficult, if not impossible. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

THURSDAY, MARCH 21, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: The meeting between President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister Macmillan formally opened today in Bermuda. They discussed Middle East problems, and it is reported that they achieved a gratifying measure of agreement. For the details we switch now to George Herman in Bermuda.

HERMAN: There has been a distinct change in atmosphere at the Big Two conference. The British delegation came here in a rather aggressive and challenging manner, bringing with them a press corps which had been thoroughly and repeatedly briefed in what Britain wanted in the way of American policy changes. The American delegation, on the other hand, has been giving the impression it would all be one big love-seat, concerned mainly with everybody getting to know the other fellow's point of view a little better.

Today, the entire day has been given over to discussions of the Middle Eastern problem. And tonight, during the official briefing of reporters, the English spokesman, Peter Hope, of the Foreign Office, suddenly volunteered the information that the main impressions gained on his side, was one of a surprising and gratifying amount of agreement and an extremely good atmosphere of mutual understanding. Presidential news secretary Hagerty joined in to say the two delegations found themselves not so far apart in their positions as they had expected or as other people had expected. The impression given was that the United States had decided, even before the conference, at some changes in policy or, perhaps, it would be fairer to say, some changes in policy emphasis before freezing to the British. Hagerty said, under questioning, that the United States position at the end of today's session was not particularly different from the American position worked out before we came down to Bermuda.

In large part, today's discussions revolved around ways and means of understanding some of Egyptian President Nasser's extremely strong bargaining positions. Various means of bypassing the Suez Canal in a long-range program for oil supplies are and still are being discussed. That means includes not only the much talked about alternate pipeline routes from Iraq to the Mediterranean through Iran and Turkey, through the Baghdad Pact area and the ways of the Pan-Arabic area, but also stepped up construction of very heavy oil tankers, which can go around the Cape about as profitably as they can go through the Suez Canal. They also include additional emphasis on Euratom and other means of building up a European power economy, not dependent on the Middle East. The details are still under discussion. But tomorrow, the main emphasis of the talk is the European and NATO affairs and the questioning of strengthening Britain's defense and lowering its drain on her shaky economy.

Our Deputy Secretary of Defense, Reuben Robertson, will join the talks tomorrow morning; and Air Force Secretary Querles, Atomic Energy Chairman Strauss and Deputy Under-Secretary for Political Affairs Robert Murphy fly down tomorrow to join in later.

This is George Herman in Bermuda. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITY THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 21, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Air Force reports that a military transport plane..with 67 persons aboard is overdue and assumed down in the Pacific Ocean, some 200 miles southeast of Japan. The aircraft is identified as a C-97 transport, bound from Travis Air Force Base in California to Tokyo. It carries 57 passengers and a crew of 10. The Air Force says a full search is underway in the area between Wake Island and Japan.

The meeting between President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister MacMillan formally opened today in Bermuda. They discussed Middle East problems. And it is reported that they achieved "a gratifying measure of agreement." For the details, we switch now to George Herman in Bermuda.

HERMAN: There has been a distinct change in atmosphere at the Big Two conference. The British delegation came here in a rather aggressive and challenging manner, bringing with them a press corps which had been thoroughly and repeatedly briefed in what Britain wanted in the way of American policy changes. The American delegation, on the other hand, has been giving the impression it would all be one big loveseat, concerned mainly with everybody getting to know the other fellow's point of view a little better.

Today, the entire day has been given over to discussions of the Middle Eastern problem. And tonight, during the official briefing of reporters, the English spokesman, Peter Hope, of the Foreign Office, suddenly volunteered the information that the main impressions gained on his side, was one of a surprising and gratifying amount of agreement and extremely good atmosphere of mutual understanding. Presidential news secretary Hagerty joined in to say the two delegations found themselves not so far apart in their positions as they had expected or as other people had expected. The impression given was that the United States had decided, even before the conference, at some changes in policy or, perhaps, it would be fairer to say, some changes in policy emphasis before freezing to the British. Hagerty said, under questioning, that the United States position at the end of today's session was not particularly different from the American position worked out before we came down to Bermuda.

In large part, today's discussions revolved around ways and means of understanding some of Egyptian President Nasser's extremely strong bargaining positions. Various means of bypassing the Suez Canal in a long-range program for oil supplies are and still are being discussed. That means includes not only the much talked about alternate pipeline, routes from Iraq to the Mediterranean through Iran and Turkey, through the Baghdad Pact area and the ways of the Pan-Arabic area, but also stepped up construction of very heavy oil tankers, which go around the Cape about as profitably as they can go through the Suez Canal. They also include additional empahsis on Euratom and other means of building up a European power economy, not dependent on the Middle East. The details are still under discussion. But tomorrow, the main emphasis of the talk is the European and NATO affairs and the questioning of strengthening Britain's defense and lowering its drain on her shaky economy.

Our Deputy Secretary of Defense, Reuben Robertson, will join the talks tomorrow morning; and Air Force Secretary Quarles, Atomic Energy Chairman Strauss and Deputy Under-Secretary for Political Affairs Robert Murphy fly down tomorrow to join in later.

This is George Herman in Bermuda. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold today began a series of talks with President Nasser. My colleague, Frank Kearns, reports from Cairo that these talks are strictly exploratory. There is no set agenda, not even a set schedule. U.N. sources stress they are merely a continuation of talks which started in New York and which will be resumed when Hammarskjold returns to

New York. The discussions in Cairo are said to be jumping from the Suez Canal question, to Gaza, to Aqaba -- all inter-connected. And Hammarskjold is said, for the first time in his five visits to the Middle East in just over a year, to be hacking away at the very roots of the Middle East problem, the whole Arab-Israeli situation. Kearns quotes "top sources" in Cairo as saying that one of Hammarkkjold's main goals is enforcement of the battered 1949 armistice agreement, down to the last paragraph and final period. For the Israelis, that would mean allowing United Nations troops on their side of the armistice line-- a move which they have refused so far. It also means Israel would have to pull out of the little triangle of land on the Sinai border, an area which was supposed to have been demilitarized but which Israeli forces occupied in 1955. Kearns says Nasser naturally goes along with these ideas, and happily, but that he is expected to balk...and balk hard..at the ideas Hammarskjold has for him-- mainly for Egypt and the other Arab states to drop their insistence that they are still in a legal state of war with Israel. This, of course, would clear the way for Israeli ships to use the Gulf of Aqaba, and, perhaps, even the Suez Canal. It might also knock down the Arab blockade of Israel which, Kearns predicts, will be fought every inch of the way by Nasser and his allies. In short, Kearns says, Hammarskjold is playing for high stakes, real peace in the Mid. East. He adds, it's probably the toughest diplomatic poker game of his entire career.

Vice President Nixon returned to Washington today from his 22-day African tour. Nixon said he found the problem of resettlement of Arab refugees from Palestine "more important" than he anticipated. All interested countries, including the United States, must devote "every effort" to solve this problem, he said, "if we are going to have peace in the Middle East." Nixon said the Administration should give higher priority to Africa. He recommended the stepping-up of cultural exchanges. And the size of the State Department missions in the area, he said, should be increased. He said that in the next 25 years, the African continent may be the decisive battleground in the struggle for the survival of democracy. Nixon told reporters that regardless of Nasser's hopes for dominating Arab Africa, none of the African nations -- including Libya and the Sudan -- "will slavishly follow the line of any outsider." Each of the new independent states, he said, is "jealous" of its independence and "leery" of anyone seeking to dominate them from the outside. Nixon said he will submit a written report to the President within 10 days.

The Israeli foreign minister..Mrs. Golda Meir..stopped off in Paris today on the way back to Jerusalem from her talks in Washington and New York. After conferring with French officials, Mrs. Meir said Israel has "no intention whatsoever of accepting an Egyptian blockade of either the Suez Canal or the Gulf of Aqaba. Israel, she said, had received no reply to certain "concrete suggestions" she made to the State Department during her Washington visit.

The Israeli army headquarters in Tel Aviv says the Syrians and Israelis exchanged fire for two hours yesterday, on the Syrian frontier. Israel says the Syrians started the action..and that there were no Israeli casualties. Syria says it was the Israelis who first opened fire. Israel also accuses Jordan of sending a patrol today into Israeli territory.

The House Appropriations Committee approved another money bill today after cutting it by about 4 percent. The measure requested nearly 3 - billion dollars for running the Labor and Welfare Departments in the next fiscal year. The committee has now acted on five appropriation bills, with cuts totaling 800-million dollars.

Democratic Senator Byrd of Virginia proposed today that President Eisenhower's budget be slashed by six and a half billion dollars. The budget..in its original form..called for approptiation of a record 72-billion dollars . In a Senate speech, Byrd called this budget "dangerous". He said domestic programs can be cut by three billion dollars, foreign aid by two billion dollars, and the military - atomic programs by one and a half billion dollars simply, in his words "by squeezing out waste." He said he will follow through with details later.

In England, the port of Southhampton is reported shut down due to a dock strike. This morning, the government used Navy tugs to get the liner Queen Mary under way to New York. Shipyard workers..who have been on strike since Saturday..charged the government with strike - breaking. And, in sympathy, thousands of longshoremen in Southhampton walked off their jobs. A strike of a million industrial workers is still scheduled for Saturday.

The puppet government of Hungary today rejected an American protest over the arrest of Hungarian visitors to the United States legation in Budapest. The government called the protest "unfounded". It claimed the arrests were part of a round-up of "criminal elements."

Today..in Rangoon..the United States signed an agreement to help Burma's economic development. Under the agreement, Burma will receive two loans ... totaling 40 million dollars..from the Export - Import Bank. Both loans are repayable in 40 years.

The Middle East was discussed today in Bermuda. Later on the discussion will go on to an even more vital subject and that is the question of trade with Communist China. This will be a difficult subject on which to reach agreement. An increase of trade with Communist China is what Mr. Macmillan is expected to advocate. And he wants this trade to be put on the same basis as that governing trade with the Soviet Union. Britain needs additional trade to bolster its economic porition, but the administration in Washington is not ready to offer any favors to the Chinese Communists. A preview of the Bermuda conference would indicate that there are many subjects upon which agreement is likely to prove difficult, if not impossible. This is Ed Murrow. I"ll be back in a moment with the Word for today. Now, here is our announcer.

ANNOUNCER :

MURROW: Much has been said in Bermuda of Anglo-American friendship..and the need for its preservation in these trying times. Woodrow Wilson once said "Friendship (and he must have been speaking of friendship among nations) is the only cement that will ever hold the world together." And George Washington said, "Friendship is a plant of slow growth and must withstand the shocks of adversity.

Goodnight and good luck!

This is the news:

San Francisco was hit today by a series of earthquakes. For a direct report, we switch to Don Mozley in San Francisco.

(There will be 5-second delay due to reversal of network. Mozley will run three mins and return on cue: "--to Edw. R. Murrow in N.Y.")

That was the first-hand report of my colleague, Don Mozley, in San Francisco.

The search is continuing... in the Western Pacific... for the Air Force transport plane that disappeared yesterday off the coast of Japan. ~~The aircraft was flying from Travis Air Force Base in California to Tokyo, and it carried 57 passengers and a crew of 10. All but three of the passengers are military personnel.~~ It is now daylight in the Pacific. Low clouds that limited visibility yesterday have given way to clear skies. More than 70 aircraft... as well as U.S. Navy ships and Japanese fishing vessels... are taking part in the search.

President Eisenhower told British Prime Minister Macmillan today, in Bermuda, that the United States is willing to join the military phase of the Baghdad Pact. Specifically, the United States offered to join the military committee of the pact, if it is invited to do so. (There is no question the invitation will be issued.) The other members of the pact are Great Britain, Pakistan, Turkey, Iran and Iraq. A British foreign office spokesman in Bermuda said, "Her Majesty's government warmly welcomes this development in United States policy." Mr. Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan talked alone today for about an hour, as their military aides discussed defense policy. There were no briefings. It was plain, however, that these discussions concerned Britain's plan to cut back its military forces in Western Europe... including the possibility of furnishing Britain with modern American weapons.

The State Department said today... in Washington... that "preliminary talks" have begun, looking toward RESUMPTION of economic aid to Israel.

2A

A 20-million-dollar economic program was suspended when Israel invaded Egypt in October. The State Department said talks "on a working level" were started Monday simultaneously in Washington and Tel Aviv.

The Israeli foreign minister... Mrs.Golda Meir... returned to Jerusalem today from her series of conferences in Washington and at United Nations headquarters, here in New York. The United States, she said, supports Israel's view that the United Nations should remain in control of the Gaza Strip.

Secretary General Hammarskjold is continuing his talks with Egyptian leaders in Cairo. For a direct report on that, we switch to Frank Kearns in Cairo.

Tape runs 3:20
Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

President Eisenhower today formally announced the nomination of Charles E. Bohlen as ambassador to the Philippines. Bohlen is the government's top expert on Russia and has served as ambassador to Moscow for the past four years. ~~He is expected to be succeeded in Moscow by Llewellyn Thompson, the present ambassador to Austria.~~

The Senate has confirmed the nomination of Thomas S. Gates, Jr., of Philadelphia, as secretary of the Navy. Gates has been serving as Navy undersecretary. He succeeds Charles S. Thomas, who resigned.

President Eisenhower today asked the Senate to ratify the charter for the international atoms-for-peace agency. The agency... for worldwide development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes... was proposed by Mr. Eisenhower in 1953, in a speech before the United Nations General Assembly. ~~The program, as finally drafted, calls for international inspection. The President said today that the United States will provide fissionable material for agency projects "only as this safeguard system is put in effect." Russia ratified the charter last month.~~

The Senate Armed Services Committee today approved the promotion of Brigadier General Ralph Zwicker to the rank of major general. Zwicker was a key witness two years ago in the Army-McCarthy hearings.

West Coast teamsters boss Frank Brewster... and two other union officials... pleaded "not guilty" today to charges of contempt of Congress. The two other officers are Einar Mohn, executive vice president, and Nugent La Poma, secretary-treasurer of Local 174 in Seattle. All three had refused to answer questions put to them two months ago by the Senate investigations subcommittee. A fourth defendant... Harry Reiss of New York... did not appear for arraignment and a bench warrant was issued for his arrest. Brewster told the Senate rackets committee today that he, personally, disapproved of the action of teamsters president Dave Beck in borrowing union money without interest. Beck has said he borrowed at least 300-thousand dollars without interest, or security. He also said all the money has been repaid. Beck is due to testify before the committee on Tuesday. Chairman McClellan said today that 700-thousand [redacted] is "still unaccounted for."

A federal judge today sentenced Herman [redacted] of New Orleans to three months in jail for contempt of Congress. He [redacted] also imposed a fine of 500 dollars. The charge grew out of Liveright's refusal last year to answer questions regarding alleged Communist activities. He has been released on 1-thousand dollars bond, pending an appeal.

The government reports that the cost-of-living went up in February for the sixth consecutive month. The consumer price index advanced four-tenths of one percent to reach a new all-time high. The February increase is attributed mainly to higher prices for household furnishings and food.

In Britain, a "basis of agreement" is said to have been reached in the shipyard strike. Details of the agreement were not announced. Government officials say a basis has also been reached for settling the threatened nationwide railroad strike. [redacted] the railroad workers would get a 5 percent wage increase, retroactive to March fourth. But a walkout of British government workers is still set for noon tomorrow.

Today, in this country, a study group of seven scientists reported that a direct relationship exists between cigarette smoking and lung cancer. "Lung cancer," the report said, "occurs five to fifteen times more frequently among cigarette smokers than non-smokers." Two sponsors of the study group the American Cancer Society and the American Heart Association, say they have not had time to evaluate the report. The Cancer Society released the findings, after they were published today by the Atlanta Constitution. The society called their publication "premature". The tobacco industry says the report "apparently offers no original evidence... but is another review of studies made by others." The deductions made from these [redacted] studies, it says, [redacted] have been "widely questioned."

Jerry Bryan

The earthquake... with its terrible potential... is a manifestation of nature quite beyond the control of Man. John Ruskin was speaking of the paradoxical quality of nature when he said, "What nature does generally is sure to be more or less beautiful. What she does rarely will either be very beautiful, or absolutely ugly."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, March 22, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: This is the news. San Francisco was hit today by a series of earthquakes. For direct report we switch to Don Mozley in San Francisco.

MOZLEY: Well, Ed, San Francisco still has the shakes, both mentally and seismologically, this evening, as the after-shocks of today's terrifying earthquake continue every half hour or so. Statistically, we have twenty casualties, most of them only twisted ankles and the like, as office workers ran screaming into the street in San Francisco's Civic Center and in the financial district. Damage has been widespread and fairly heavy, extending well beyond the usual cracked windows, shattered merchandise, falling plaster and damaged walls. A portion of the Coast Highway slipped into the ocean just south of the county line, and helicopters were sent to the scene to rescue fishermen trapped on the rocks there with no way to go either north or south. In San Francisco itself, a four hundred foot length of road, bordering Lake Merced, toppled into the lake. But so far as anybody knows, the road was empty at the time. Persons having lunch in the famed Top of the Mark, in the Mark Hopkins Hotel, on Nob Hill, said it swayed like a tree limb in a good strong breeze. And the Golden Gate Bridge also bounced up and down. But engineers said the giant cables handled it easily, just as they do in a stiff wind.

The University of California's seismograph skated clear off the dial, after showing a reading of five and a half on a scale of ten. There have been stronger earthquakes, of course, but usually, they're not right underneath you as this one seemed to be.

My own experience was probably typical of thousands. I was trapped in a room with a door that wouldn't open, because the frame was being pushed and shoved against the door itself. There's nothing to do in that case but wait for things to quiet down.

And a short time ago, Ed, as I prepared these notes, another after-shock sent my typewriter table sailing clear across the room. Fortunately, a lot of give is built into San Francisco's modern buildings, so they roll more alarmingly than dangerously.

A man who lived through the 1906 earthquake and fire in San Francisco, oddly enough, was in the Sheraton Palace Hotel today, the hotel which had been wrecked in that disturbance fifty years ago. He was Charles Rosenthal, who told us:

ROSENTHAL: Well, I lived through the earthquake in 1906 and I think this is much more severe. I think this is much heavier. Very much heavier. I think it's more heavier. I think it was much more direct.

MOZLEY: Well, in your own words, how would you describe this quake that hit here about 11:35 this morning?

ROSENTHAL: Well, I've gone through a great many of 'em, not only here but in ... down in ... south, and I think this is the most severe one I've ever gone through in my life.

MOZLEY: And from my own experience, Ed, having gone through the 1933 earthquake at Long Beach, in Southern California, I'd say today's was certainly the equal of it. But of shorter duration.

As for these after-shocks, seismologists say that all these minor jolts are a safety valve, keeping the pressure underground from building up to a really disastrous quake.

And that's the story from San Francisco. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, March 22, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: This is the news. San Francisco was hit today by a series of earthquakes. For direct report we switch to Don Mozley in San Francisco.

MOZLEY: Well, Ed, San Francisco still has the shakes, both mentally and seismologically, this evening, as the after-shocks of today's terrifying earthquake continue every half hour or so. Statistically, we have twenty casualties, most of them only twisted ankles and the like, as office workers ran screaming into the street in San Francisco's Civic Center and in the financial district. Damage has been widespread and fairly heavy, extending well beyond the usual cracked windows, shattered merchandise, falling plaster and damaged walls. A portion of the Coast Highway slipped into the ocean just south of the county line, and helicopters were sent to the scene to rescue fishermen trapped on the rocks there with no way to go either north or south. In San Francisco itself, a four hundred foot length of road, bordering Lake Merced, toppled into the lake. But so far as anybody knows, the road was empty at the time. Persons having lunch in the famed Top of the Mark, in the Mark Hopkins Hotel, on Nob Hill, said it swayed like a tree limb in a good strong breeze. And the Golden Gate Bridge also bounced up and down. But engineers said the giant cables handled it easily, just as they do in a stiff wind.

The University of California's seismograph skated clear off the dial, after showing a reading of five and a half on a scale of ten. There have been stronger earthquakes, of course, but usually, they're not right underneath you as this one seemed to be.

My own experience was probably typical of thousands. I was trapped in a room with a door that wouldn't open, because the frame was being pushed and shoved against the door itself. There's nothing to do in that case but wait for things to quiet down.

And a short time ago, Ed, as I prepared these notes, another after-shock sent my typewriter table sailing clear across the room. Fortunately, a lot of give is built into San Francisco's modern buildings, so they roll more alarmingly than dangerously.

A man who lived through the 1906 earthquake and fire in San Francisco, oddly enough, was in the Sheraton Palace Hotel today, the hotel which had been wrecked in that disturbance fifty years ago. He was Charles Rosenthal, who told us:

ROSENTHAL: Well, I lived through the earthquake in 1906 and I think this is much more severe. I think this is much heavier. Very much heavier. I think it's more heavier. I think it was much more direct.

MOZLEY: Well, in your own words, how would you describe this quake that hit here about 11:35 this morning?

ROSENTHAL: Well, I've gone through a great many of 'em, not only here but in ... down in ... south, and I think this is the most severe one I've ever gone through in my life.

MOZLEY: And from my own experience, Ed, having gone through the 1933 earthquake at Long Beach, in Southern California, I'd say today's was certainly the equal of it. But of shorter duration.

As for these after-shocks, seismologists say that all these minor jolts are a safety valve, keeping the pressure underground from building up to a really disastrous quake.

And that's the story from San Francisco. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 22, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

San Francisco was hit today by a series of earthquakes. For a direct report, we switch to Don Mozley in San Francisco.

MOZLEY: Well, Ed, San Francisco still has the shakes, both mentally and seismologically, this evening, as the after-shocks of today's terrifying earthquake continue every half hour or so. Statistically, we have twenty casualties, most of them only twisted ankles and the like, as office workers ran screaming into the street in San Francisco's Civic Center and in the financial district. Damage has been widespread and fairly heavy, extending well beyond the usual cracked windows, shattered merchandise, falling plaster and damaged walls. A portion of the Coast Highway slipped into the ocean just south of the county line, and helicopters were sent to the scene to rescue fishermen trapped on the rocks there with no way to go either north or south. In San Francisco itself, a four hundred foot length of road, bordering Lake Merced, toppled into the lake. But so far as anybody knows, the road was empty at the time. Persons having lunch in the famed Top of the Mark, in the Mark Hopkins Hotel, on Nob Hill, said it swayed like a tree limb in a good strong brreze. Adn the Golden Gate Bridge also bounced up and down, But engineers said the giant cables handled it easily, just as they do in a stiff wind.

The University of California's seismograph skated clear off the dial, after showing a reading of five and a half on a scale of ten. There have been stronger earthquakes, of course, but usually, they're not right underneath you as this one seemed to be.

My own experience was probably typical of thousands. I was trapped in a room with a door that wouldn't open, because the frame was being pushed and shoved against the door itself. There's nothing to do in that case but wait for things to quiet down.

And a short time ago, Ed, as I prepared these notes, another after-shock sent my typewriter table sailing clear across the room. Fortunately, a lot of give is built into San Francisco's modern buildings, so they roll more alarmingly than dangerously.

A man who lived through the 1906 earthquake and fire in San Francisco, oddly enough, was in the Sheraton Palace Hotel today, in the hotel which had been wrecked in that disturbance fifty years ago. He was Charles Rosenthal who told us:

ROSENTHAL: Well, I lived through the earthquake in 1906 and I think this is much more severe. I think this is much heavier. Very much heavier. I think it's more heavier. I think it was much more direct.

MOZLEY: Well, in your own words, how would you describe this quake that hit here about 11:35 this morning?

ROSENTHAL: Well, I've gone thouugh a great many of 'em, not only here but in... down in...south, and I think this is the most severe one I've ever gone through in my life.

MOZELY: And from our own experience, Ed, having gone through the 1933 earthquake at Long Beach, in Southern California, I'd say today's was certainly the equal of it. But of shorter duration.

As for these after-shocks, seismologists say that all these minor jolts are a safety valve, keeping the pressure underground from building up to a really disasterous quake.

And that's the story from San Francisco. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was the first-hand report of my colleague, Don Mozley, in San Francisco.

The search is continuing ..in the Western Pacific..for the Air Force transport plane that disappeared yesterday off the coast of Japan. It is now daylight in the Pacific. Low clouds that limited visibility yesterday have given way to clear skies. More than 70 aircraft..as well as U.S. Navy ships and Japanese fishing vessels are taking part in the search.

President Eisenhower told British Prime Minister MacMillan today, In Bermuda, that the United States is willing to join the military phase of the Baghdad Pact. Specifically, the United States offered to join the military committee of that pact, if it is invited to do so. (There is no question the invitation will be issued.) The other members of the pact are Great Britain, Pakistan, Turkey, Iran and Iraq. A British foreign office spokesman in Bermuda said, "Her Majesty's government warmly welcomes this development in United States policy." Mr. Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan talked alone today for about an hour, as their military aides discussed defense policy. There were no briefings. It was plain, however, that these discussions concerned Britain's plan to cut back its military forces in Western Europe..including the possibility of furnishing Britain with modern American weapons.

The State Department said today...in Washington..that "preliminary talks" have begun, looking toward resumption of economic aid to Israel. A 20-million-dollar economic program was suspended when Israel invaded Egypt in October. The State Department said talks "on a working level" were started Monday simultaneously in Washington and Tel Aviv.

The Israeli foreign minister..Mrs. Golda Meir..returned to Jerusalem today from her series of conferences in Washington and at United Nations headquarters, here in New York. The United States, she said, supports Israel's view that the United Nations should remain in control of the Gaza Strip.

Secretary General Hammarskjold is continuing his talks with Egyptian leaders in Cairo. For a direct report on that, we switch to Frank Kearns in Cairo.

KEARNS: Tomorrow is expected to be a crucial day in the Nasser-Hammarskjold talks. Their initial meeting last night, according to top sources, was cordial and general. They apparently only scratched the surface of the three explosive and inter - locked problems out here, Gaza, Aqaba and the Suez Canal. But even that relaxed arm chair discussion in Nasser's house last night created a storm of paper work and legal talk today. Hammarskjold has spent practically all of this day with the Egyptian Foreign Minister, Mahmoud Fawzi; and it's all preparation for the big session tomorrow. This meeting is scheduled to start tomorrow morning, at the Delta Barrage, a beautifully landscaped park-like area, at a Nile dam, eight miles north of Cairo. In the villa there Nasser and Hammarskjold are expected to talk all morning, have lunch, continue their session in the afternoon. And all sources here expect both men to take off their gloves at this meeting, to start punching away at the heart of all problems. The talks, like all those in which Hammarskjold is involved, are highly secret. Neither UN aides nor Egyptian officials will even hint at what's really going on. Even tonight they still stress the work "exploratory". They say the whole thing's on a day-to-day basis, with no set schedule. Neither side will even say whether progress is satisfactory.

However, the best informed circles here say Hammarskjold has two main objectives in mind: One, to renew and rejuvenate the shattered and bloody 1949 armistice agreement. This is expected to raise objections from the Israelis, who might have to withdraw from El Auja, let UN troops patrol their side of the border. But Nasser, who might go along happily with this idea, is expected to protest vehemently at what Hammarskjold reportedly has waiting for him, namely, a demand that the Arabs abandon their state of war with Israel. Reports earlier today said Egypt's President is in a moderate mood, willing to compromise, even anxious to show a spirit of cooperation. But things may be different tomorrow. If Nasser has any one pet hate, an intense and personal hate, it is the Baghdad Pact. Some sources even maintain his anti-West moods all date from the birth of this pact.

Now, tonight, new stories out of Bermuda say President Eisenhower has declared the U.S. is ready to join the Baghdad Pact's key Military Committee. No official comment here as yet. But those who know Nasser best say this will infuriate him, may make him more anti- American, more anti-West, and perhaps, less cooperative with Hammarskjold'A delicate maneuverings.

Also, with Egypt's funds still blocked by the States, it's doubtful if his nerve will brighten any at today's State Department announcement that preliminary talks are started on resuming a twenty-million dollar economic aid program for Israel.

So, in almost every respect, tomorrow's Nasser-Hammarskjold talks are likely to be crucial. At the same time, no dramatic climax is expected as yet.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

ERM: President Eisenhower today formally announced the nomination of Charles E. Bohlen as ambassador to the Philippines. Bohlen is the government's top expert on Russia and has served as ambassador to Moscow for the past four years.

The Senate has confirmed the nomination of Thomas S. Gates, Jr. of Philadelphia, as secretary of the Navy. Gates has been serving as Navy undersecretary. He succeeds Charles S. Thomas, who resigned.

President Eisenhower today asked the Senate to ratify the charter for the international atoms-for-peace agency. The agency..for world wide development of atomic energy for peacefulpurposes..was proposed by Mr. Eisenhower in 1953, in a speech before the United Nations General Assembly.

The Senate Armed Services Committee today approved the promotion of Brigadier General Ralph Zwicker to the rank of major general. Zwicker was a key witness two years ago in the Army-McCarthy hearings.

West Coast teamsters boss Frank Brewster ..and two other union officials pleaded "not guilty" today to charges of contempt of Congress.

The government reports that the cost-of-living went up in February for the sixth consecutive month. The consumer price index advanced four-tenths of one percent to reach a new all-time high. The February increase is attributed mainly to higher prices for household furnishings and food.

In Britain, a "basis of agreement" is said to have been reached in the shipyard strike. Details of the agreement were not announced.

Today, in this country, a study group of seven scientists reported that a direct relationship exists between cigarette smoking and lung cancer. "Lung cancer", the report said, "occurs five to fifteen times more frequently among cigarette smokers than non-smokers." Two sponsors of the study group, the American Cancer Society and the American Heart Association, say they have not had time to evaluate the report. The Cancer Society realeased the findings after they were published today by the Atlanta Constitution. The society called their publication "premature". The tobacco industry says the report "apparently offers no original evidence.."...but is another review of studies made by others." The deductions made from these studies, it says, have been "widely questioned."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The earthquake..with its terrible potential..is a manifestation of nature, quite beyond the control of Man. John Ruskin was speaking of the paradoxical quality of nature when he said, "What nature does generally is sure to be more or less beautiful. What whe does rarely will either be very beautiful, or absolutely ugly."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., March 25, 1957

[redacted]

[redacted]

This is the news:

President Eisenhower summoned congressional leaders of both parties to the White House this afternoon for a briefing on the Bermuda conference. For that story, we switch to George Herman [redacted] in Washington. [redacted]

The Bermuda conference is [redacted] provoking comment in Britain. For a report on the British point of view, we switch to [redacted], Alexander Kendrick, in London. [redacted]

Talks aimed at settling the British shipyard strike broke up in deadlock today, when the union rejected an offer of a five percent pay increase. The union wants 10 percent. So do a million workers in the aviation, auto and machine tool industries who walked out on Saturday.

(more) 9

Tonight, the Conservative government set up a court of inquiry to deal with the dispute. And it immediately called for an end to both strikes, pending its investigation.

Prime Minister St. Laurent of Canada arrived in Bermuda today for two days of talks with British Prime Minister Macmillan. St. Laurent said the talks will be concerned primarily with trade.

The United Nations Secretary General... Dag Hammarskjold... will conclude his series of conferences with Egyptian leaders in Cairo tomorrow. He saw President Nasser tonight for what may have been the last meeting. Tomorrow he is scheduled to see Foreign Minister Fawzi... and then leave on Wednesday for New York.

Informed quarters say Hammarskjold will not visit Israel this trip because he was not invited by the Israeli government. Israeli sources at the United Nations say Hammarskjold is welcome in Jerusalem, if he can bring concessions from Egypt to help break the deadlock.

The French tug Edgar Bonnet was raised from the bottom of the Suez Canal today, near Ismailia. Once the tug is towed out of the channel, the canal... technically at least... will be open to ships displacing up to 20-thousand tons.

(more)

A treaty to set up a common market for six European countries was signed today in Rome. The treaty in time would do away with existing tariff barriers between West Germany, Italy, France, Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg. A separate treaty... signed by the same six countries... would create an agency called "Euratom" for the pooling of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. Both treaties are subject to ratification by the parliaments of the six countries involved. The school children of Rome were given a holiday to celebrate the signing. And Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium predicted March 25th will become "one of the important dates in European history." The Vatican radio expressed hope that the two treaties "will open new prospects and start better days for Europe and the world."

The Senate approved an agreement today whereby Britain will be allowed to postpone seven annual payments on its postwar debt. Britain requested the postponement in view of its economic crisis, and President Eisenhower urged Congress to act.

The Senate Finance Committee voted today to extend both corporation and excise taxes at their present level for another 15 months. A series of amendments for helping small business were turned down. A similar measure already has passed the House.

The chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission... Lewis Strauss... told Congress today that nuclear power reactors are safe. He said that if a hundred large reactors were operating in the United States, the odds for getting killed in any year in a reactor accident would be less than one in fifty million. Strauss was testifying before the joint atomic energy committee.

Counsel for Dave Beck, president of the teamsters union, says Beck "positively" will appear before the Senate rackets committee tomorrow as scheduled. Speculation Beck might not appear arose from the cancellation of an airline reservation made in his name in Seattle.

The Supreme Court today refused to review desegregation orders for the public schools in Charlottesville and Arlington County, Virginia. The state of Virginia had appealed a circuit court decision upholding integration of the schools. Lower court orders to desegregate the schools have been held in abeyance, pending outcome of the appeal. Today, the Supreme Court said simply that a request to review the orders had been denied. It means the lower court instructions to desegregate are now final.

The Supreme Court also denied a hearing to Joseph Nunan, Jr., former commissioner of internal revenue. Nunan had been convicted of income tax evasion in the years 1946 through 1950. He contended his case had been made "a political football" in the 1952 campaign.

The court set aside a narcotics conviction in a Chicago case, because the identity of a "John Doe" informant was kept secret. It held... in a six to one decision... that "where the disclosure of an informer's identity is relevant and helpful to the defense of an accused, the privilege of secrecy must give way."

N. Mohammed Ali

~~Vice President Nixon called at the White House this morning and talked to President Eisenhower about his recent tour of Africa. Later, Mr. Nixon will give the President a formal written report.~~

The spring blizzard which hit the Midwest over the week-end has claimed nineteen lives. Four persons died of carbon monoxide poisoning, when they were stranded in their car near Hooker, Oklahoma. Five deaths are reported in Illinois, and three each in Kansas, Nebraska and Texas. Two trains are stranded in Kansas. Helicopters have brought out two injured passengers from the eastbound Golden State Limited. The 400 passengers on the Union Pacific's westbound City of St. Louis, stranded near Winona, have all been brought out to safety.

The Bermuda conference was concerned with the future. The leaders of the two countries recognized the truth of the old saying: "It's but little good you'll do, watering last year's crops." They might also take note of Santayana's warning. "Those who cannot remember the past," he said, "are condemned to repeat it."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

MONDAY, MARCH 25, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: This is the news. President Eisenhower summoned Congressional leaders of both parties to the White House this afternoon for a briefing on the Bermuda conference. For that story, we switch to my colleague George Herman, in Washington.

HERMAN: When the top Congressional leaders of both parties emerged from their seventy-five minute conference with the President and the Secretary of State, their comments were almost entirely in the negative. No, the President had made no requests for any new legislation from the Bermuda conference; No, neither he nor Dulles had mentioned the need for appropriating any more money; No, there were apparently no secret unpublished agreements with Britain during the course of the Bermuda talks. Almost the only positive aspect was an assertion by two Senators that the possibility of supplying guided missiles to France, as well as to England, had been brought up by some of the Congressional leaders, but no conclusions were reached.

The three negative rejoinders from the legislators emerging from the White House all point up the negative aspect of the Bermuda conference, an aspect which is certainly not as important as the positive accomplishments of that meeting, but which merits and receives extra stress because of a fundamental misunderstanding about this conference. And that misunderstanding is simple. Most people expected top level, bilateral conference of this kind to produce results as big and as spectacular as the personalities involved; and confused by the dramatic outcomes of Big Four and Big Five conferences, where numerous powers with partially or drastically conflicting interests have locked themselves into a conference room to hammer out a compromise, they expected concrete and perhaps dramatic results.

But this kind of bilateral conference between two so closely allied nations, in such constant and close touch, is a far different thing. It's not a separate moment in time and politics; it's not a beginning or even an ending. It's more along the lines of a spurt in the middle of a continuing flow of discussions and arrangements and the working out of details, which preceded the conference, and will certainly follow it.

Take, for example, the question of providing guided missiles to Britain, the most dramatic outcome. That idea has been under discussion and negotiation between our countries since British Defense Minister, Duncan Sandys, visited the United States at the end of last January. The arrangements certainly spurted ahead at Bermuda, but even they are not yet complete. Some of the financial agreements, for example, are still to be worked out. But all of this obscures the supremely important positive aspect of the talks. The fact that the disastrous split between our two countries in sympathies and understanding, in common purpose and in means of supporting that purpose, has now been very largely worked out. And that, once again, we intend to move forward together. Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: The Bermuda conference is provoking comment in Britain. For a report on the British point of view, we switch to my colleague, Alexander Kendrick, in London.

KENDRICK: The primary fact about the Bermuda conference, in British eyes, is that it was held. It's main accomplishment was the visible restoration of the Anglo-American partnership on a frank and trustful basis. This doesn't mean that the two countries agree on everything. In fact, there were quite a few items President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan did not exactly agree on at the Mid Ocean Club. The embargo on Communist China was one. The UN's role as a repository of American foreign policy was another. The long range aspects of the Middle East crisis was a third. But the Anglo-American promise to seek coordination of their policies means, to the British, not only that there cannot be a repetition of actions like the Suez invasion, taken without consultation, but also means less talk from Washington about a separate, strictly anti-colonial line.

The British are extremely pleased that the United States has decided to join the Military Committee of the Baghdad Pact and they are relieved that the United States has recognized the economic problems connected with defense and have confirmed a new lend-lease arrangement to supply atomic missiles to this country. As a result of Bermuda, the British, for the first time, see the Eisenhower Doctrine taking on flesh, blood and treaty commitments. But they are not so certain of a common front if the Hammarksjold mission to Cairo fails and Col. Nasser remains unyielding.

The British view is that the Bermuda agreement has yet to meet the acid test of events. As a golfer diplomat put it, "It isn't the stroke that counts, so much as the follow-through."

The one point on which British opinion tonight seems definite is that of future hydrogen bomb tests. It's recognized that in the absence of a disarmament agreement continued nuclear activity is inevitable. But the British are extremely worried about Strontium 90, and even the London Times today joined the Labor and Liberal opposition in advocating the limitations of H-bomb explosions by agreement with the Russians, instead of depending on mutual self-restraint.

The Labor Party is now building up the H-bomb as a major political issue in this country and opened its attack at question time today in the House of Commons. But on the whole, Bermuda is taken here as a distinct success for the new Prime Minister and the restoration of the Anglo-American alliance is welcomed, even if the British partnership is to be a junior one. And now back to Ed Murrow.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

MONDAY, MARCH 25, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: This is the news. President Eisenhower summoned Congressional leaders of both parties to the White House this afternoon for a briefing on the Bermuda conference. For that story, we switch to my colleague George Herman, in Washington.

HERMAN: When the top Congressional leaders of both parties emerged from their seventy-five minute conference with the President and the Secretary of State, their comments were almost entirely in the negative. No, the President had made no requests for any new legislation from the Bermuda conference; No, neither he nor Dulles had mentioned the need for appropriating any more money; No, there were apparently no secret unpublished agreements with Britain during the course of the Bermuda talks. Almost the only positive aspect was an assertion by two Senators that the possibility of supplying guided missiles to France, as well as to England, had been brought up by some of the Congressional leaders, but no conclusions were reached.

The three negative rejoinders from the legislators emerging from the White House all point up the negative aspect of the Bermuda conference, an aspect which is certainly not as important as the positive accomplishments of that meeting, but which merits and receives extra stress because of a fundamental misunderstanding about this conference. And that misunderstanding is simple. Most people expected top level, bilateral conference of this kind to produce results as big and as spectacular as the personalities involved; and confused by the dramatic outcomes of Big Four and Big Five conferences, where numerous powers with partially or drastically conflicting interests have locked themselves into a conference room to hammer out a compromise, they expected concrete and perhaps dramatic results.

But this kind of bilateral conference between two so closely allied nations, in such constant and close touch, is a far different thing. It's not a separate moment in time and politics; it's not a beginning or even an ending. It's more along the lines of a spurt in the middle of a continuing flow of discussions and arrangements and the working out of details, which preceded the conference, and will certainly follow it.

Take, for example, the question of providing guided missiles to Britain, the most dramatic outcome. That idea has been under discussion and negotiation between our countries since British Defense Minister, Duncan Sandys, visited the United States at the end of last January. The arrangements certainly spurted ahead at Bermuda, but even they are not yet complete. Some of the financial agreements, for example, are still to be worked out. But all of this obscures the supremely important positive aspect of the talks. The fact that the disastrous split between our two countries in sympathies and understanding, in common purpose and in means of supporting that purpose, has now been very largely worked out. And that, once again, we intend to move forward together. Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: The Bermuda conference is provoking comment in Britain. For a report on the British point of view, we switch to my colleague, Alexander Kendrick, in London.

KENDRICK: The primary fact about the Bermuda conference, in British eyes, is that it was held. It's main accomplishment was the visible restoration of the Anglo-American partnership on a frank and trustful basis. This doesn't mean that the two countries agree on everything. In fact, there were quite a few items President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan did not exactly agree on at the Mid Ocean Club. The embargo on Communist China was one. The UN's role as a repository of American foreign policy was another. The long range aspects of the Middle East crisis was a third. But the Anglo-American promise to seek coordination of their policies means, to the British, not only that there cannot be a repetition of actions like the Suez invasion, taken without consultation, but also means less talk from Washington about a separate, strictly anti-colonial line.

The British are extremely pleased that the United States has decided to join the Military Committee of the Baghdad Pact and they are relieved that the United States has recognized the economic problems connected with defense and have confirmed a new lend-lease arrangement to supply atomic missiles to this country. As a result of Bermuda, the British, for the first time, see the Eisenhower Doctrine taking on flesh, blood and treaty commitments. But they are not so certain of a common front if the Hammarksjold mission to Cairo fails and Col. Nasser remains unyielding.

The British view is that the Bermuda agreement has yet to meet the acid test of events. As a golfer diplomat put it, "It isn't the stroke that counts, so much as the follow-through."

The one point on which British opinion tonight seems definite is that of future hydrogen bomb tests. It's recognized that in the absence of a disarmament agreement continued nuclear activity is inevitable. But the British are extremely worried about Strontium 90, and even the London Times today joined the Labor and Liberal opposition in advocating the limitations of H-bomb explosions by agreement with the Russians, instead of depending on mutual self-restraint.

The Labor Party is now building up the H-bomb as a major political issue in this country and opened its attack at question time today in the House of Commons. But on the whole, Bermuda is taken here as a distinct success for the new Prime Minister and the restoration of the Anglo-American alliance is welcomed, even if the British partnership is to be a junior one. And now back to Ed Murrow.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 25, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news

President Eisenhower summoned Congressional leaders of both parties to the White House this afternoon for a briefing on the Bermuda conference. For that story, we switch to my colleague George Herman, in Washington.

HERMAN: When the top Congressional leaders of both parties emerged from their seventy-five minute conference with the President and the Secretary of State, their comments were almost entirely in the negative. No, the President had made no requests for any new legislation from the Bermuda conference; no, neither he nor Dulles had mentioned the need for appropriating any more money; no, there were apparently no secret unpublished agreements with Britain during the course of the Bermuda talks. Almost the only positive aspect was anassertion by two Senators that the possibility of supplying guided missiles to France, as well as to England, had been brought up by some of the Congressional leaders, but no conclusions were reached.

The three negative rejoinders from the legislators emerging from the White House all point up the negative aspect of the Bermuda conference, an aspect which is certainly not as important as the positive accomplishments of that meeting, but which merits and receives extra stress because of a fundamental misunderstanding about this conference. And that misunderstanding is simple. Most people expected top level, bilateral conference of this kind to produce results as big and as spectacular as the personalities involved; and confused by the dramatic outcomes of Big Four and Big Five conferences, where numerous powers with partially or drastically conflicting interests have locked themselves into a conference room to hammer out a compromise, they expected concrete and perhaps dramatic results.

But this kind of bilateral conference between two so closely allied nations, in such constant and close touch, is a far different thing. It's not a separate moment in time and politics, it's not a beginning or even an ending. It's more along the lines of a spurt in the middle of a continuing flow of discussions and arrangements and the working out of details, which preceded the conference, and will certailly follow it.

Take, for example, the question of providing guided missiles to Britain, the most dramatic outcome. That idea has been under discussion and negotiation between our countries since British Defense Minister, Duncan Sandys, visited the United States at the end of last January. The arrangements certainly spurted ahead at Bermuda, but even they are not yet complete. Some of the financial agreements, for example, are still to be worked out. But all of this obscures the supremely important positive aspect of the talks. The fact that the disastrous split between our two countries in sympathies and understanding, in common purposes and in means of supporting that purpose, has now been very largely worked out. And that, once again, we intend to move forward together. Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: The Bermuda conference is provoking comment in Britain. For a report on the British point of view, we switch to my colleague, Alexander Kendrick, in London.

KENDRICK: The primary fact about the Bermuda conference, in British eyes, is that it was held. It's main accomplishment was the visible restoration of the Anglo-American partnership on a frank and trustful basis. This doesn't meanthat the two countries agree on everything. In fact, there were quite a few items President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan did not exactly agree on at the Mid Ocean Club. The embargo on Communist China was one. The UN's role as a repository of American foreign policy was another. The long range aspects of the Middle East crisis was a third. But the Anglo-American promise to seek coordination of their policies means, to the British, not only that there cannot be a repetition of actions like the Suez invasion, taken without consultation, but also means less talk from Washington about a separate, strictly anti-colonial line.

The British are extremely pleased that the United States has decided to join the Military Committee of the Baghdad Pact and they are relieved that the United States has recognized the economic problems connected with defense and have confirmed a new lend-lease arrangement to supply atomic missiles to this country. As a result of Bermuda, the British, for the first time, see the Eisenhower Doctrine taking on flesh, blood and treaty commitments. But they are not so certain of a common front if the Hammarskjold mission to Cairo fails and Colonel Nasser remains unyielding.

The British view is that the Bermuda agreement has yet to meet the acid test of events. As a golfer diplomat put it, "it isn't the stroke that counts, so much as the follow-through."

The one point on which British opinion tonight seems definite is that of future hydrogen bomb tests. It's recognized that in the absence of a disarmament agreement continued nuclear activity is inevitable. But the British are extremely worried about Strontium 90, and even the London Times today joined the Labor and Liberal opposition in advocating the limitations of H-bomb explosions by agreement with the Russians, instead of depending on mutual self-restraint.

The Labor Party is now building up the H-bomb as a major political issue in this country and opened its attack at question time today in the House of Commons. But on the whole, Bermuda is taken here as a distinct success for the new Prime Minister and the restoration of the Anglo-American alliance is welcomed, even if the British partnership is to be a junior one. And now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: Talks aimed at settling the British shipyard strike broke up in deadlock today, when the union rejected an offer of a five percent pay increase. The union wants 10 percent. So do a million workers in the aviation, auto and machine tool industries who walked out on Saturday. Tonight, the Conservative government set up a court of inquiry to deal with the dispute. And it immediately called for an end to both strikes, pending its investigation.

Prime Minister St. Laurent of Canada arrived in Bermuda today for two days of talks with British Prime Minister Macmillan. St. Laurent said the talks will be concerned primarily with trade.

The United Nations Secretary General ...Dag Hammarskjold..will conclude his series of conferences with Egyptian leaders in Cairo tomorrow. He saw President Nasser tonight for what may have been the last meeting. Tomorrow he is scheduled to see Foreign Minister Fawzi..and then leave on Wednesday for New York.

Informed quarters say Hammarskjold will not visit Israel this trip because he was not invited by the Israeli government. Israeli sources at the United Nations say Hammarskjold is welcome in Jerusalem, if he can bring concessions from Egypt to help break the deadlock.

The French tug Edgar Bonnet was raised from the bottom of the Suez Canal today, near Ismailia. Once the tug is towed out of the channel, the canal... technically at least..will be open to ships displacing up to 20-thousand tons.

A treaty to set up a common market for six European countries was signed today in Rome. The treaty in time would do away with existing tariff barriers between West Germany, Italy, France, Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg. A separate treaty ..signed by the same six counries.. would create an agency called "Euratom" for the pooling of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. Both treaties are subject to ratification by the parliaments of the six countries involved The school children of Rome were given a holiday to celebrate the signing. And Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium predicted March 25th will become "one of the . ..

important dates in European history." The Vatican radio expressed hope that the two treaties "will open new prospects and start better days for Europe and the world."

The Senate approved an agreement today whereby Britain will be allowed to postpone seven annual payments on its postwar debt. Britain requested the postponement in view of its economic crisis, and President Eisenhower urged Congress to act.

The Senate Finance Committee voted today to extend both corporation and excise taxes at their present level for another 15 months. A series of amendments for helping small business were turned down. A similar measure already has passed the House.

The chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission..Lewis Strauss..told Congress today that nuclear power reactors are safe. He said that if a hundred large reactors were operating in the United States, the odds for getting killed in any year in a reactor accident would be less than one in fifty million. Strauss was testifying before the joint atomic energy committee.

Counsel for Dave Beck, president of the teamsters union, says Beck "positively" will appear before the Senate rackets committee tomorrow as scheduled. Speculation Beck might not appear arose from the cancellation of an airline reservation made in his name in Seattle.

The Supreme Court today refused to review desegregation orders for the public schools in Charlottesville and Arlington County, Virginia. The state of Virginia had appealed a circuit court decision upholding integration of the schools. Lower court orders to desegregate the schools have been held in abeyance, pending outcome of the appeal. Today, the Supreme Court said simply that a request to review the orders had been denied. It means the lower court instructions to desegregate are now final.

The Supreme Court also denied a hearing to Joseph Nunan, Jr., former commissioner of internal revenue. Nenan had been convicted of income tax evasion in the years 1946 through 1950. He contended his case had been made "a political football" in the 1952 campaign.

The court set aside a narcotics conviction in a Chicago case, because the identity of a "John Doe" informant was kept secret. It held..in a six to one decision..that "where the disclosure of an informer's edentity is relevant and helpful to the defense of an accused, the privilege of secrecy must give way."

The spring blizzard which hit the Midwest ever the week-end has claimed nineteen lives. Four persons died of carbon monoxide poisoning, when they were stranded in thier car near Hooker, Oklahoma. Five deaths are reported in Illinois and three each in Kansas, Nebraska and Texas. Two trains are stranded in Kansas. Helicopters have brought out two injured pessengers from the eastbound Golden State Limited. The 400 passengers on the Union Pacific's Westbound City of St. Louis , stranded near Winona, have all been brought out to safety.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The Bermuda Conference was concerned with the future. The leaders of the two countries recognized the truth of the old saying" "It's but little good you'Il do, watering last year's crops." They might also take note of Santayana's warning. " Those who cannot remember the past," he said, "are comdemned to repeat it."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., March 26, 1957

This is the news:

Dave Beck, president of the international teamsters union, appeared before the Senate rackets committee today, as he promised. But he refused to submit his financial records or to answer questions put to him regarding his alleged "misappropriation" of union funds. Repeatedly, perhaps as many as eighty times, he refused to answer on grounds of possible self-incrimination. And almost every time, he said he was invoking the Fifth Amendment on the advice of his chief counsel, former Senator James Duff. Chairman McClellan and other members of the committee got tired of these references to Duff. Finally Senator McNamara of Michigan retorted, "I want to say to you that I am not a bit impressed." Beck challenged the jurisdiction of the committee in his case. ~~He read a letter saying that insofar as the committee was seeking to adjudicate alleged criminal practices or activities, it was usurping judicial prerogatives~~

—7

[redacted] At one point, the committee subpoenaed Beck's financial records. But he still refused to surrender them. [redacted]

President Meany of the A.F.L. - C.I.O. has called a special meeting of his executive council on Friday to consider the Beck case. The A.F.L. - C.I.O. recently adopted a code of ethics for the labor movement. The code prescribes, among other things, that a union official who invokes the Fifth Amendment when questioned about his duties at a proper inquiry, is unfit to hold office. Beck himself is a member of the executive council. When the code was instituted, he refused to sign it.

The hearing before the Senate committee will resume tomorrow. There will be a summary of Beck's testimony on C.D.S. 10:05 E.S.T.

A federal court jury today convicted Seymour Peck, a New York newspaperman, of contempt of Congress. Peck refused... last year... to name Communists with whom he had associated before he quit the party in 1949. No date for sentencing was set.

Republican members of the House today approved a resolution... calling for reduced federal spending and a tax cut "as soon as practicable." The resolution was voted after the weekly meeting of Republican congressional leaders with the President. Mr. Eisenhower was quoted as saying he would welcome any budget cut "that would not do damage to the vital interests of the country." Democratic leaders also want to cut the budget, so they can propose an income tax cut that would go into effect by the first of next year.

The spring blizzard that struck the Midwest and Plains states over the week-end has blown itself out over the Ohio Valley. And rail traffic, paralyzed by snow drifts is returning to normal. Some drifts in Western Kansas were 30 feet deep. By the latest count, 34 persons died.

Secretary of State Dulles told his weekly news conference today that Egypt has no right to order the withdrawal of United Nations emergency forces from Egyptian territory "at this time." Dulles said the United States still favors an opinion from the World Court, on whether the Straits of Tiran... at the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba... embraces international waters. He said this country will propose to the United Nations that it seek such a ruling.

Saudi Arabia and Lebanon issued a joint statement tonight declaring the Gulf of Aqaba to be "purely Arab waters."

In Cairo today, United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold wound up his secret talks with Egyptian leaders. The secretary general gave no hint as to whether progress had been made toward breaking the Middle East deadlock. His spokesman would say only that the talks had "proved useful". Hammarskjold is not visiting Israel on this trip. He will start back for New York tomorrow, by way of Beirut.

President Eisenhower made a series of nominations today affecting the defense establishment. The Air Force chief, General Twining, was nominated to become chairman of the joint chiefs of staff... succeeding Admiral Radford, who resigns August 15th. (Thus an airman becomes head of the joint chiefs of staff for the first time since the unification of the armed forces). Twining is to be succeeded as Air Force chief of staff by General Thomas White, currently serving as Air Force vice chief of staff. The President also nominated Admiral Arleigh Burke for another two-year term as chief of naval operations.

Mr. Eisenhower accepted "with great reluctance" the resignation of Reuben Robertson as deputy secretary of defense and nominated Secretary of the Air Force Quarles to succeed him. James Douglas, undersecretary of the Air Force, was named to succeed Quarles as secretary. The appointment of General Twining as chairman of the joint chiefs of staff was expected. Admiral Radford has served two two-year terms as chairman, the maximum period allowed by law. All of today's nominations are subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Russia today proposed an immediate temporary ban on the testing of nuclear weapons. The proposal was made at the United Nations disarmament meeting in London... and announced by the Soviet Foreign Ministry in Moscow. A foreign ministry spokesman said Russia already had proposed an agreement for permanent abolition of H-bomb tests and gotten nowhere. Therefore, he said, Russia is now prepared to agree to the temporary suspension of such tests, ~~with a time limit. The Soviet spokesman, in effect, rejected the Anglo-American proposal... made at the Bermuda conference... that nuclear tests be registered in advance with the United Nations and that limited international observation be allowed. "Tests are harmful to human beings," he said, "regardless whether they are observed or registered."~~

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization today announced plans for spending an additional 630-million dollars on defense facilities in Western Europe, including airfields and communications. Under the program, NATO will set up its own early warning radar network.

~~Russia has warned Norway (which is a member of NATO) that it will be in "immense danger" if it allows Western bases to be established on Norwegian soil. The threat was contained in a letter from Soviet Premier Bulganin, made public tonight by the Norwegian government.~~

The French elder statesman, Edouard Herriot, died today after a long illness. Herriot was three times premier of France. And for six years he was president of the National Assembly. He was honorary president of the assembly at the time of his death.

Edward R. Murrow. March 26, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

Yesterday was to have been the big day in Secretary General Hammarskjold's negotiations with President Nasser. Either Nasser had been induced to make concessions or the deadlock continued. As there has been no news of concessions, the deadlock presumably remains. Secretary Dulles at his news conference today said he still had "cautious optimism." But he could not be expected to throw up his hands, at least not in public. And there are still long-term and short-term steps to be tried. The problem comes down to finding bargaining power with Nasser, which at this stage the United Nations and United States do not have.

A short-term step Mr. Dulles again advocated today was to station U.N. emergency forces on both sides of the armistice line, something Israel declines to discuss. If Israel ~~acceded~~ agreed to it, presumably Egypt would. But Israel is waiting for Mr. Hammarskjold to say that Egypt is ready to end the state of belligerency. If he would say that, Israel might talk about troops on the armistice line. Without the ending of belligerency, the Gaza problem and the access of Israeli shipping to the Suez Canal cannot be solved.

One long-term step was discussed at Bermuda, which is to build a large pipeline through Turkey to bring oil from the entire Persian Gulf area and Iraq to the Mediterranean. That would take Europe's fuel supply out of Nasser's grip. ~~This is not the same scheme as the one to lay a pipeline across Israeli territory, a plan not now so favored because the Arab oil-producing countries might boycott it.~~ But the trans-Turkish pipeline is too far away to frighten Nasser. And right now the crisis is in a stage where we can find no new pressure to bring on Nasser, and seem to be pressing Israel instead. We are delaying the resumption of economic aid, as though we were hoping Israel would join us in making Nasser more accomodating. The Israeli do not think this is what President Eisenhower had in mind when he assured Premier Ben-Gurion that he would "not be disappointed," if he pulled his troops out of Egypt.

This deadlock, coming immediately after the Bermuda conference, has somewhat deflated the importance of the co-operation achieved there. It certainly did not devise ways of making Nasser more reasonable at this moment. And it may be useful to appraise the Bermuda meeting in modest terms in place of the rhetoric about unity.

It is, of course, no disparagement of the value of the Bermuda conference to stress that the good will it produced was more important than the agreements it reached. Most of the agreements would have been come to without a high-level meeting. That holds especially for the one that stands out as the biggest achievement of the conference, the decision of the United States to join the military committee of the Baghdad pact. That decision was reached long before the Bermuda conference. So was the agreement about supplying guided missiles, which was the result of the Duncan Sandys visit.

Actually the decision as to the Baghdad pact was made as soon as the Administration adopted the Eisenhower doctrine. ~~We had stayed clear of the pact because it felt our adherance to it would be interpreted by most Arabs as being no more than reinforcement of British power. The Eisenhower doctrine gave us a new reason. We could say that we were opposing the spread of communism in the Middle East.~~ However, no announcement of the decision was made. It was held back for Ambassador Richard's first visit as exponent of the Eisenhower Doctrine in the area. He had expected to give out the news in Turkey, Iraq or Iran. Apparently the news was given out at Bermuda first to add to the importance of the meeting there, ~~and done so at the cost of emphasizing the power [illegible] Britain.~~

There is no doubt the Bermuda conference was candid and free-speaking. The tone was set by Ike and Harold being Ike and Harold to each other, and feeling at liberty to barge into each other's quarters in dressing gowns to say anything that occurred to either one. Intimacy between governments obviously is helped by such intimacy at the top.

This will be of value as time goes on. But the value could be lost if misunderstood or exaggerated. The United States and Britain are allies in Europe, but only there. In the Middle East they are close associates. In Asia, shall we say, they are cordial speaking acquaintances. We and the British no longer want the same thing everywhere, as we did in the war. And it took the Suez crisis to shock the two countries into realizing it, and into realizing that close ties remain that are decidedly worth saving. Now they have been saved, and both countries will be stronger for it. But what has been accomplished in Bermuda is mainly to write insurance against another Suez crisis. Neither that crisis nor any other great world problem was solved, or brought close to solution.

George Bryan

Word for Today

There is good reason to suppose that things will go better now between Britain and the United States as a result of the Bermuda talks. We should not, however, exaggerate the gain... and hope beyond good reason. For as Benjamin Franklin wisely observed, "When the expectation is raised too high, 'tis a disadvantage to the thing expected."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 26, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Dave Beck, president of the international teamsters union, appeared before the Senate rackets committee today, as he promised. But he refused to submit his financial records or to answer questions put to him regarding his alleged "misapproptiation" of union funds. Repeatedly, perhaps as many as eighty times, he refused to answer on grounds of possible self-incrimination. And almost every time, he said he was invoking the Fifth Amendment on the advice of his chief counsel, former Senator James Duff. Chairman McClellan and other members of the committee got tired of these references to Duff. Finally Senator McNamara of Michigan retorted, " I want to say to you that I am not a bit impressed." Beck challenged the jurisdiction of the committee in his case. At one point, the committee subpoenaed Beck's financial records. But he still refused to surrender them.

President Meany of the A.F.L. - C.I.O. has called a special meeting of his executive council on Friday to consider the Beck case. The A.F.L.-C.I.O. recently adopted a code of ethics for the labor movement. The code prescribes, among other things, that a union official who invokes the Fifth Amendment when questioned about his duties at a proper inquiry is unfit to hold office. Beck hemself is a member of the executive council. When the code was instituted, he refused to sign it.

The hearing before the Senate committee will resume tomorrow. There will be a summary of Becks testimony. on C.B.S. at 10:05 E.S.T.

A federal court jury today convicted Seymour Peck, a New York newspaperman, of contempt of Congress. Peck refused..last year..to name Communists with whom he associated before he quit the party in 1949. No date for sentencing was set.

Republican members of the House today approved a resolution..calling for reduced federal spending and a tax cut "as soon as practicable." The resolution was voted after the weekly meeting of Republican congressional leaders with the President. Mr. Eisenhower was quoted as saying hewould welcome any budget cut "that would not do damage to the vital interests of the country." Democratic leaders also want to cut the budget, so they can propose an income tax cut that would go into effect by the first of next year.

The spring blizzard that struck the Midwest and Plains states over the week-end has blown itself out over the Ohio Valley. And rail traffic paralyzed by snow drifts is returning to normal. Some drifts in Western Kansas were 30 feet deep. By the latest count, 34 persons died.

Secretary of State Dulles told his weekly news conference today that Egypt has no right to order the withdrawal of United Nations emergency forces from Egyptian territory "at this time." Dulles aaid the United States still favors an opinion from the World Court on whether the Straits of Tiran..at the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba..embraces international waters. He said this country will propose to the United Nations that it seek such a ruling.

Saudi Arabia and Lebanon issued a joint statement tonight declaring the Gulf of Aqaba to be "purely Arab waters."

In Cairo today, United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold wound up his secret talks with Egyptian leaders. The secretary general gave no hint as to whether progress had been made toward breaking the Middle East deadlock. His spokesman would say only that the talks had "proved useful." Hammarskjold is not visiting Israel on this trip. He will start back for New York tomorrow, by way of Beirut.

President Eisenhower made a series of nominations today affecting the defense establishment. The Air Force chief, General Twining, was nominated to become chairman of the joint chiefs of staff...succeeding Admiral Radford, who resigns August 15th. (Thus an airman becomes head of the joint chiefs of staff for the first time since the unification of the armed forces.) Twining is so be succeeded as Air Force chief of staff by General Thomas White, currently serving as Air Force vice chief of staff. The President also nominated Admiral Arleigh Burke for another two-year term as chief of naval operations.

Mr. Eisenhower accepted "with great reluctance" the resignation of Reuben Robertson as deputy secretary of defense and nominated Secretary of the Air Force Quarles to succeed him. James Douglas, undersecretary of the Air Force, was named to succeed Quarles as secretary. The appointment of General Twining as chairman of the joint chiefs of staff was expected. Admiral Radford has served two, two-year terms as chairman, the maximum period allowed by law. All of today's nominations are subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Russia today proposed an immediate temporary ban on the testing of nuclear weapons. The proposal was made at the United Nations disarmament meeting in London..and announced by the Soviet Foreign Ministry in Moscow. A foreign ministry spokesman said Russia already has proposed an agreement for permanent abolition of the H-bomb tests and gotten nowhere. Therefore, he said, Russia is now prepared to agree to the temporary suspension of such tests.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization today announced plans for spending an additional 630-million dollars on defense facilities in Western Europe, including airfields and communications. Under the program, NATO will set up its own early warning radar network.

The French elder statesman, Edouard Herriot, died today after a long illness. Herriot was three times premier of France. And for six years he was president of the National Assembly. He was honorary president of the assembly at the time of his death.

Yesterday was to have been the big day in Secretary General Hammarskjold's negotiations with President Nasser. Either Nasser had been induced to make concessions or the deadlock continued. As there has been no news of concessions, the deadlock presumably remains. Secretary Dulles at his news conference today said he still had "cautious optimism." But he could not be expected to throw up his hands, at least not in public. And there are still long-term and short-term steps to be tried. The problem comes down to finding bargaining power with Nasser, which at this stage the United Nations and United States do not have.

A short-term step Mr. Dulles again advocated today was to station U.N. emergency forces on both sides of the armistice line, something Israel declines to discuss. If Israel agreed to it, presumably Egypt would. But Israel is waiting for Mr. Hammarskjold to say that Egypt is ready to end the state of belligerency. If he would say that, Israel might talk about troops on the armistice line. Without the ending of belligerency, the Gaza problem and the access of Israeli shipping to the Suez Canal cannot be solved.

One long-term step was discussed at Bermuda, which is to build a large pipeline through Turkey to bring oil from the entire Persian Gulf area and Iraq to the Mediterranean. That would take Europe's fuel supply out of Nasser's grip. But the trans-Turkish pipeline is too far away to frighten Nasser. And right now the crisis is in a stage where we can find no new pressure to bring on Nasser, and seem to be pressing Israel instead. We are delaying the resumption of economic aid, as though we were hoping Israel would join us in making Nasser more accomodating. The Israeli do not think this is what President Eisenhower had in mind when he assured Premier Ben-Gurion that he would "not be disappointed" if he pulled his troops out of Egypt.

This deadlock, coming immediately after the Bermuda conference, has somewhat deflated the importance of the co-operation achieved there. It certainly did not devise ways of making Nasser more reasonable at this moment. And it may be useful to appraise the Bermuda meeting in modest terms in place of the rhetoric about unity.

It is, or course, no disparagement of the value of the Bermuda conference to stress that the good will it produced was more important than the agreements it reached. Most of the agreements would have been come to without a high level meeting. That holds especially for the one that stands out as the biggest achievement of the conference, the decision of the United States to join the military committee of the Baghdad pact. That decision was reached long before the Bermuda conference. So was the agreement about supplying guided missiles, which was the result of the Duncan Sandys visit.

Actually the decision as to the Baghdad pact was made as soon as the Administration adopted the Eisenhower doctrine. However, no announcement of the decision was made. It was held back for Ambassador Richard's first visit as exponent of the Eisenhower Doctrine in the area. He had expected to give out the news in Turkey, Iraq or Iran. Apparently the news was given out at Bermuda first to add to the importance of the meeting there.

There is no doubt the Bermuda conference was candid and free-speaking. The tone was set by Ike and Harold being Ike and Harold to each other, and feeling at liberty to barge into each other's quarters in dressing gowns to say anything that occurred to either one. Intimacy between governments obviously is helped by such intimacy at the top.

This will be of value as time goes on. But the value could be lost if misunderstood or exaggerated. The United States and Britain are allies in Europe, but only there. In the Middle East they are close associates. In Asia, shall we say, they are cordial speaking acquaintances. We and the British no longer want the same thing everywhere, as we did in the war. But what has been accomplished in Bermuda is mainly to write insurance against another Suez crisis. Neither that crisis nor any other great world problem was solved, or brought close to solution.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: There is good reason to suppose that things will go better now between Britain and the United States as a result of the Bermuda talks. We should not, however, exaggerate the gain..and hope beyond good reason. For as Benjamin Franklin wisely observed, "When the expectation is raised too high, 'tis a disadvantage to the thing expected."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., March 27, 1957

This is the news:

The Senate has voted to continue corporate and excise taxes at their present level for another 15 months. / The measure now goes back to the House, which voted a 12-month extension. Final House approval is expected tomorrow, so President Eisenhower can sign the legislation without delay. Under present law, the tax rates are scheduled to drop automatically on April first. / And this would cost the government about 3-billion dollars in revenue a year.

The federal budget came in for lengthly discussion today at President Eisenhower's news conference. It started when a reporter asked Mr. Eisenhower about congressional efforts to make substantial cuts.

(Tape runs 3:35
(Ends on cue: "--and let's not (forget it."

Mr. Eisenhower said the agreement to send guided missiles to Britain will not mean an increase in American production of atomic weapons. He "doubted" there is any great significance... so far as use of the Gulf of Aqaba as an international waterway is concerned... to reports that Saudi Arabian troops have moved into the Aqaba area. And he used strong words in commenting on Russia's threat to Norway against allowing Western bases to be set up on Norwegian soil.

(Tape runs :40
(Ends on cue: "--for its own security (certainly is clear."

Mr. Eisenhower was asked whether he would comment... generally... on how he feels about the obligation of any person to testify before a congressional committee. Specifically, whether it was proper for a union leader (meaning Dave Beck) to invoke the Fifth Amendment to avoid giving testimony. Mr. Eisenhower said, in reply:

(Tape runs 1:10
(Ends on cue: "--when it's used (properly and improperly."

President Eisenhower told his news conference he is feeling "very much better" since the long cruise down to Bermuda. But he said he could still use some more sun. The White House said later the President has "absolutely" no plans to go to Florida. He does hope to go to Augusta, Georgia sometime next month.

The Senate rackets committee heard testimony today that teamsters president Dave Beck spent funds from the union treasury for thousands of dollars' worth of articles for his own use... ranging from washing machines to rugs. The testimony was given by Nathan Shefferman, a labor-management consultant. Shefferman said he bought the articles at discount, with his own money, and then was reimbursed with money from the union. He swore, however, that he did not know this at the time. He also denied receiving favored treatment from Beck or the teamsters union for employers represented by him in union matters. He testified he bought merchandise for other union leaders at cut-rate, and was re-imbursed. The committee pointed out, however, that in these other instances, there is no indication the purchases were made with union funds. When Beck was called back to the witness chair and asked about Shefferman's testimony, he again invoked the Fifth Amendment. Chairman McClellan wound up the day's hearing by accusing Beck of "utter contempt" for Congress.

President Eisenhower's special ambassador, James P. Richards, left Teheran today for Pakistan... after discussing the Eisenhower Doctrine with Iranian officials. Iran issued a communique pledging its cooperation in trying to block Soviet penetration in the Middle East. Richards is explaining to the Middle East countries in person how the Eisenhower Doctrine will work.

The United States today expressed "deep concern" over the murder of two American aid officials in Iran. Iranian police say the Americans were killed by bandits on Sunday, as they were traveling by jeep. Two Iranians accompanying them also were killed. And the wife of one of the Americans apparently was kidnaped. The American victims are identified as Brewster Wilson of Portland, Oregon, and Kevin Carroll of Issaquah, Washington. Mrs. Carroll is missing.

Soviet Premier Bulganin made a speech tonight... denouncing the Bermuda conference as a plot aimed at intensifying the Cold War. Instead of agreeing to stop the testing of hydrogen weapons, he said, President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan agreed to supply guided missiles to the British armed forces. Bulganin's speech was made at a Kremlin meeting attended by Janos Kadar, the puppet premier of Hungary. In an apparent thrust at Marshal Tito, Bulganin criticized what he called "the attitude of some Yugoslav leaders" toward the Hungarian revolt. These leaders, he said, took the same attitude as Secretary of State Dulles.

Poland said today that it is cutting its armed forces by another 44-thousand men. The Polish government already had announced cuts... within the past year... totaling nearly a hundred thousand men. Today's announcement indicated the action was taken to help Poland's economy... but it also contained an appeal for a disarmament agreement among the world's major powers.

The more than a million shipyard and factory workers on strike for higher pay in Britain are scheduled to be joined Saturday by 500-thousand more industrial workers in the greater London area. The government has called for [redacted] an end to the walkout for the good of the country.

The British colonial office said today that Nigeria has expressed a desire for full independence in two years. Nigeria is a British colony and protectorate on the west coast of Africa, with a population of about 31-million. It has its own parliament, and talks on a new constitution are scheduled to be held in London in May.

There has been a severe explosion in Mexico City. First reports say the blast occurred in a fireworks warehouse, [redacted], and that 14 persons were killed and more than a hundred injured.

George Bryan

Word for Today

There is no bargain basement price for security. Josh Billings said, "It is now 30 years since a phellow with green goggles on offered tew sell me sumthing for 50 cents whitch he sed waz worth 5 dollars. I've forgot what it waz, but i remember it waz a beat. And az often az once a year ever since I hav tried the same thing over and got beat every time."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, March 27, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The Federal budget came in for lengthy discussion today at President Eisenhower's news conference. It started when a reporter asked Mr. Eisenhower about Congressional efforts to make substantial cuts.

PRES. EISENHOWER: I can't tell you how strongly I feel what I've told you before. This budget was not only made carefully. It was made intelligently. Its purpose was, first of all, to provide the moneys to carry out programs already authorized by Congress, and next to lay before the Congress certain new legislation, of programs, that we believe now was important for the United States and should be carried through. At the same time we're doing this, we well know that in an organization as vast as the Federal government and employing as it does, two and a half million civilians, and three million people in the Armed Services, that to say that every bit of that budget is completely correct to the last dollar -and you can find no ways of saving money anywhere if you can investigate long enough in any particular item or activity. That's foolish. Now, if we start in with this budget, we've got many parts that can't be touched. We have got interest in the public debt, we have got grants in aid that're fixed by law, we've got veterans' charges, and then we've got long series of agricultural programs that require from us money.

You can't take these things and just stop them in mid-stride. Now, I don't know of any one that it is said we can cut our Armed Forces by 20% or 10% or any other thing that would give us a significant saving in budg.. in the budget. I don't know of anyone that thinks we should stop producing fissionable material. Now, foreign aid - foreign aid has no pressure group in any district in the United States, and so it comes up to the man who suddenly becomes very economy-minded - and I must say, it's a very great ... very great satisfaction to find out there are so many economy-minded people in Washington than used to be here (laughter) and so this becomes a third target. But I say to you there are no dollars today that are being spent more wisely for the future of American peace and prosperity than the dollars we put in foreign aid.

Well, now, let's ... if anyone is interested in economy, let's go to the things that are open for all to see. Take the Post Office deficit. I've been trying to get it stopped for the last four years, and I've made just zero progress; except through the efficiency of Mr. Summerfield and his people in giving service at less cost.

Take the vast number or the great number of public works that're authorized without proper engineering studies to back them up. Congress authorized and why? Must be for political purposes. Because the engineering department has not said they are necessary. But I come back again, in the security field. There we are not going to touch any of these things severely or we're going to suffer. And of all of those, I would say none is more important than so-called foreign aid. I perfectly ... I'm perfectly sure we should refer to it only as mutual aid; because it's not only the welfare of somebody else we're seeking, we're seeking our own future - markets, prosperity and peace. And so as we work with these countries, we are working also for ourselves. Let's not forget it.

MURROW: Mr. Eisenhower said the agreement to send guided missiles to Britain will not mean an increase in American production of atomic weapons. He doubted there is any great significance so far as the use of the Gulf of Aqaba as an international waterway is concerned, to reports that Saudi Arabian troops have moved into the Aqaba area, and he used strong words in commenting on Russia's threat to Norway against allowing Western bases to be set up on Norwegian soil.

PRES. EISENHOWER: Well, of course, we recognize that any nation in the world has a right to take such measures as it deems necessary for its own security and defense. I think the statements of the Russians are completely indefensible and while I know of no specific purpose or plan that leads to this particular charge they're making and their particular threats, as you call them, that they're making, the right of Norway to take any measures it pleases within its own country for its own security certainly is clear.

MURROW: Mr. Eisenhower was asked whether he would comment, generally, on how he feels about the obligation of any person to testify before a Congressional committee. Specifically, whether it was proper for a union leader, meaning Dave Beck, to invoke the Fifth Amendment to avoid giving testimony. Mr. Eisenhower said in reply:

PRES. EISENHOWER: Well, without my tell you, I'm not a lawyer - and so as to legal aspects of this I know nothing. I do uphold, with all the emphasis I can, the right of Congress to investigate in order to form the basis of legitimate legislation in any field in which the Congress feels it has responsibility. Now, I think the power and the dignity of the Congress, in this regard, are in good hands and they will protect that right and execute it faithfully. I, personally, don't want to comment on the right of a citizen to take the Fifth Amendment, because I have no doubt that in some instances it is absolutely a basic safeguard of American liberty or it wouldn't have been written as a Fifth Amendment to the Constitution - although I must say, I probably share the common reaction, if a man has invoked the Fifth Amendment there must be something he doesn't want to tell. But I think that it's there and I think that the lawyers have to decide when it's used properly and improperly.

MURROW: President Eisenhower told his news conference he is feeling very much better since the long cruise down to Bermuda. But, he said, he could still use some more sun.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, March 27, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The Federal budget came in for lengthy discussion today at President Eisenhower's news conference. It started when a reporter asked Mr. Eisenhower about Congressional efforts to make substantial cuts.

PRES. EISENHOWER: I can't tell you how strongly I feel what I've told you before. This budget was not only made carefully. It was made intelligently. Its purpose was, first of all, to provide the moneys to carry out programs already authorized by Congress, and next to lay before the Congress certain new legislation, of programs, that we believe now was important for the United States and should be carried through. At the same time we're doing this, we well know that in an organization as vast as the Federal government and employing as it does, two and a half million civilians, and three million people in the Armed Services, that to say that every bit of that budget is completely correct to the last dollar -and you can find no ways of saving money anywhere if you can investigate long enough in any particular item or activity. That's foolish. Now, if we start in with this budget, we've got many parts that can't be touched. We have got interest in the public debt, we have got grants in aid that're fixed by law, we've got veterans' charges, and then we've got long series of agricultural programs that require from us money.

You can't take these things and just stop them in mid-stride. Now, I don't know of any one that it is said we can cut our Armed Forces by 20% or 10% or any other thing that would give us a significant saving in budg.. in the budget. I don't know of anyone that thinks we should stop producing fissionable material. Now, foreign aid - foreign aid has no pressure group in any district in the United States, and so it comes up to the man who suddenly becomes very economy-minded - and I must say, it's a very great ... very great satisfaction to find out there are so many economy-minded people in Washington than used to be here (laughter) and so this becomes a third target. But I say to you there are no dollars today that are being spent more wisely for the future of American peace and prosperity than the dollars we put in foreign aid.

Well, now, let's ... if anyone is interested in economy, let's go to the things that are open for all to see. Take the Post Office deficit. I've been trying to get it stopped for the last four years, and I've made just zero progress; except through the efficiency of Mr. Summerfield and his people in giving service at less cost.

Take the vast number or the great number of public works that're authorized without proper engineering studies to back them up. Congress authorized and why? Must be for political purposes. Because the engineering department has not said they are necessary. But I come back again, in the security field. There we are not going to touch any of these things severely or we're going to suffer. And of all of those, I would say none is more important than so-called foreign aid. I perfectly ... I'm perfectly sure we should refer to it only as mutual aid; because it's not only the welfare of somebody else we're seeking, we're seeking our own future - markets, prosperity and peace. And so as we work with these countries, we are working also for ourselves. Let's not forget it.

MURROW: Mr. Eisenhower said the agreement to send guided missiles to Britain will not mean an increase in American production of atomic weapons. He doubted there is any great significance

so far as the use of the Gulf of Aqaba as an international waterway is concerned, to reports that Saudi Arabian troops have moved into the Aqaba area, and he used strong words in commenting on Russia's threat to Norway against allowing Western bases to be set up on Norwegian soil.

PRES. EISENHOWER: Well, of course, we recognize that any nation in the world has a right to take such measures as it deems necessary for its own security and defense. I think the statements of the Russians are completely indefensible and while I know of no specific purpose or plan that leads to this particular charge they're making and their particular threats, as you call them, that they're making, the right of Norway to take any measures it pleases within its own country for its own security certainly is clear.

MURROW: Mr. Eisenhower was asked whether he would comment, generally, on how he feels about the obligation of any person to testify before a Congressional committee. Specifically, whether it was proper for a union leader, meaning Dave Beck, to invoke the Fifth Amendment to avoid giving testimony. Mr. Eisenhower said in reply:

PRES. EISENHOWER: Well, without my tell you, I'm not a lawyer - and so as to legal aspects of this I know nothing. I do uphold, with all the emphasis I can, the right of Congress to investigate in order to form the basis of legitimate legislation in any field in which the Congress feels it has responsibility. Now, I think the power and the dignity of the Congress, in this regard, are in good hands and they will protect that right and execute it faithfully. I, personally, don't want to comment on the right of a citizen to take the Fifth Amendment, because I have no doubt that in some instances it is absolutely a basic safeguard of American liberty or it wouldn't have been written as a Fifth Amendment to the Constitution - although I must say, I probably share the common reaction, if a man has invoked the Fifth Amendment there must be something he doesn't want to tell. But I think that it's there and I think that the lawyers have to decide when it's used properly and improperly.

MURROW: President Eisenhower told his news conference he is feeling very much better since the long cruise down to Bermuda. But, he said, he could still use some more sun.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 27, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Senate has voted to continue corporate and excise taxes at their present level for another 15 months. The measure now goes back to the House, which voted a 12-month extension. Final House approval is expected tomorrow, so President Eisenhower can sign the legislation without delay. Under present law, the tax rates are scheduled to drop automatically on April first. And this wouldcost the government about 3 - billion dollars in revenue a year.

The federal budget came in for lengthy discussion today at President Eisenhower's news conference. It started when a reporter asked Mr. Eisenhower about congressional efforts to make substantial cuts.

EISENHOWER: I can't tell you how strongly I feel what I've told you before. This budget was not only made carefully. It was made intelligently. Its purpose was, first of all, to provide the moneys to carry out programs already authorized by Congress, and next to lay before the Congress certain new legislation, of programs, that we believe now was important for the United States and should be carried through. At the same time we're doing this, we well knew that in an organization as vast as the federal government and employing as it does, two and a half million civilians, and three million people in the Armed Services, that to say that every bit of that budget is completely correct to the last dollar - and you can find no ways of saving money anywhere if you can investigate long enough in any particular item or activity. That's foolish. Now, if we start in with this budget we've got many parts that can't be touched. We've got grants in aid that're fixed by law, we've got veterans' charges, and then we've got long series of agricultural programs that require from us money.

You can't take these things and just stop them in mid-stride. Now, I don't know of anyone that it is said we can cut our Armed Forces by 20% or 10% or any other thing that would give us a significant saving in the budget. I don't know of anyone that thinks we should stop producing fissionable material. Now, foreign aid- foreign aid has no pressure group in any district in the United States, and so it comes up to the man who suddenly becomes very economy minded - and I must say, it's very . great .. very great satisfaction to find out there are so many economy - minded people in Washington than used to be here (laughter) and so this becomes a third target. But I say to you there are no dollars today that are being spent more wisely for the future of American peace and prosperity than the dollars we put in foreign aid.

Well, now, let's...if anyone is interested in economy, let's go to the things that are open for all to see. Take the Post Office deficit. I've been trying to get it stopped for the last four years, and I've made just zero progress' except through the efficiency of Mr. Summerfield and his people in giving service at less than cost.

Take the vast number or the great number of public works that're authorized without proper engineering studies to back them up. Congress authorized and why? Must be for political purposes. Because the engineering department has not said they are necessary. But I come back again, in the security field. There we are not going to touch any of these things severely or we're going to suffer. And of all of those, I sould say none is more important than so-called foreign aid. I perfectly ...I'm perfectly sure we should refer to it only as mutual aid; because it's not only the welfare of somebody else we're seeking, we're seeking our own future - markets, prosperity and peace. And so as we work with these contries, we are working also for ourselves. Let's not forget it.

MURROW: Mr. Eisenhower said the agreement to send guided missiles to Britain will not mean an increase in American production of atomic weapons. He doubted there is any great significance so far as the use of the Gulf of Aqaba as an international waterway is concerned, to reports that Saudi Arabian troops have moved into the Aqaba area, and he used strong words in commenting on Russia's threat to Norway against allowing Western bases to be set up on Norwegian soil.

EISENHOWER: Well, of course, we recognize that any nation in the world has a right to take such measures as it deems necessary for its own security and defense. I think the statements of the Russians are completely indefensible and while I know of no specific purpose or plan that leads to this particular charge they're making and their particular threats, as you call them, that they're making, the right of Norway to take any measures it pleases within its own country for its own security certainly is clear.

MURROW: Mr. Eisenhower was asked whether he would comment, generally, on how he feels about the obligation of any person to testify before a Congressional committee. Specificaly, whether it was proper for a union leader, meaning Dave Beck, to invoke the Fifth Amendment to avoid geving testimony.Mr. Eisenhower said in reply:

EISENHOWER: Well, without my telling you, I'm not a lawyer - and so as to legal aspects of this I know nothing. I do uphold, with all the emphasis I can, the right of Congress to investigate in order to form the basis of legitimate legislation in any field in which the Congress feels it has responsibility. Now, I think the power and the dignity of the Congress, in this regard, are in good hands and they will protect that right and execute it faithfully. I , personally, don't want to comment on the right of a citizen to take the Fifth Amendment, because I have no doubt that in some instances it is absolutely a basic safeguard of American liberty or it wouldn't have been written as a Fifth Amendment to the Constitution - although I must say, I probably share the common reaction, if a man has invoked the Fifth Amendment there must be somethnng he doesn't want to tell. But I think that it's there and I think that the lawyers have to decide when it's used properly and improperly.

MURROW: President Eisenhower told his news conference he is feeling very much better since the long cruise down to Bermuda. But, he said, he could still use more sun. The White House said later the President has "absolutely" no plans to go to Florida. He does hope to go to Augusta, Georgia sometime next month.

The Senate rackets committee heard testimony today that teamsters president Dave Beck spent funds from the union treasury for thousands of dollars' worth of articles for his own use...ranging from washing machines to rugs. The testimony was given by Nathan Shefferman, a labor - management consultant. Shefferman said he bought the articles at discount, with his own money, and then was reimbursed with money from the union. He swore, however, that he did not know this at the time. He also denied receiving favored treatment from Beck or the teamsters union for employers represented by him in union matters. He testified he bought merchandise for other union leaders at cut-rate, and was re-imbursed. The committee pointed out, however, that in these other instances, there is no indication the purchases were made with union funds. When Beck was called back to the witness chair and asked about Shefferman's testimomny he again invoked the Fifth Amendment. Chairman McClellan wound up the day's hearing by accusing Beck of "utter contempt" for Congress.

President Eisenhower's special ambassador, James P. Richards, left Teheran today for Pakistan..after discussing the Eisenhower Doctrine with Iranian officials. Iran issued a communique pledging its cooperation in trying to block Soviet penetration in the Middle East. Richards is explaining to the Middle East countries in person how the Eisenhower Doctrine will work.

The United States today expressed "deep concern" over the murder of two American aid officials in Iran. Iranian police say the Americans were killed by bandits on Sunday, as they were traveling by jeep. Two Iranians accompanying them also were killed. And the wife of one of the Americans apparently was kidnapped. The American victims are identified as Brewster Wilson of Portland, Oregon, and Kevin Carrol of Issaquah, Washington. Mrs. Carrol is missing.

Soviet Premier Bulganin made a speech tonight..denouncing the Bermuda conference as a plot aimed at intensifying the Cold War. Instead of agreeing to stop the testing of hydrogen weapons, he said, President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan agreed to supply guided missiles to the British armed forces. Bulganin's speech was made at a Kremlin meeting attended by Janos Kadar, the puppet premier of Hungary. In an apparent thrust at Marshal Tito, Bulganin criticized what he called "the attitude of some Yugoslav leaders" toward the Hungarian revolt. These leaders, he said, took the same attitude as Secretary of State Dulles.

Poland said today that it is cutting its armed forces by another 44-thousand men. The Polish government already had announced cuts..within the past year..totaling nearly a hundred thousand men. Today's announcement indicated the action was taken to help Poland's economy...but it also contained an appeal for a disarmament agreement among the world's major powers.

The more than a million shipyard and factory workers on strike for higher pay in Britain are scheduled to be joined Saturday by 500-thousand more industrial workers in the greater London area. The government has called for an end to the walkout for the good of the country.

The British colonial office said today that Nigeria has expressed a desire for full independence in two years. Nigeria is a British colony and protectorate on the west coast of Africa, with a population of about 31-million. It has its own parliament, and talks on a new constitution are scheduled to be held in London in May.

There has been a severe explosion in Mexico City. First reports say the blast occurred in a fireworks warehouse and that 14 persons were killed an more than a hundred injured.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: There is no bargain basement price for security. Josh Billings said, "It is now 30 years since a phellow with green goggles on offered tew sell me sumthing for 50 cents which he sed was worth 5 dollars. I've forgot what it waz, but i remember it waz a beat. And as often as once a year ever since i have tried the same thing over and got beat every time."

Goodnight and good luck.

This is the news:

Egypt announces that vessels up to 19-thousand tons will be able to pass through the Suez Canal, starting tomorrow... and that the canal will be open to "normal" traffic about the middle of next month. / A United Nations spokesman says the last major obstruction... a sunken Egyptian frigate... will be raised in five or six days.

~~In Jerusalem, the Israeli government says it will send a "test ship" through the Suez Canal to assert its right of free passage... as set forth in the United Nations Security Council resolution of 1951. But the Israeli Foreign Ministry indicated it may be some time before the test actually is carried out.~~

The State Department today advised American shipowners to steer clear of the Suez Canal until its physical and legal hazards have been "fully eliminated." The department said "its information was" that hazards still exist in the immediate approaches to the canal, notably the Gulf of Suez. It also pointed out that discussions are still in progress between United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold and the Government of Egypt with respect to future operation of the canal. The implication was clear. The United States does not look with favor on use of the canal... at least by ships of American registry... until a settlement is reached.

Secretary General Hammarskjold returned to New York today from six days of talks with President Nasser and went immediately into a round of conferences with Western diplomats. His first meeting... lasting more than an hour... was with United States Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge. Lodge said afterwards that Hammarskjold had brought back "a great deal of information" as a result of his talks with Nasser. He said that... in his opinion... Hammarskjold's trip had been "very useful". And he said he was relaying what the secretary general had told him to Washington.

Russia today accused "extremist circles" in France and Israel of plotting a new war against Egypt. The accusation was published by the Soviet news agency Tass and broadcast by Moscow Radio. It said: "The unleashing of new aggression against Egypt would create a direct threat of widespread military conflict with heavy consequences to the cause of peace." French Foreign Minister Pineau said yesterday that France would back Israel's right to answer with force any Egyptian attack against Israeli soil... launched either from the Gulf of Aqaba or the Gaza Strip.

Talks between Hungarian and Soviet leaders ended in Moscow tonight with a farewell banquet and... ironically... a puppet show. A communique signed by the hand-picked premier of Hungary, Janos Kádar, and Soviet Premier Bulganin praised the Red Army for its role in crushing the October revolt. It said Russia will give the Kádar regime 215-million dollars this year in goods and long-term credits. And it said new talks will have to be held regarding the legal status of Soviet troops "temporarily" stationed in Hungary.

Today... at the United Nations disarmament conference in London... the United States rejected Russia's proposal for an immediate temporary ban on nuclear weapons tests. Harold Stassen reiterated that tests can be ended only if East and West agree to inspection. And he challenged Russia to list the time and place of all atomic tests conducted over the past two years. Russia has claimed that secret nuclear tests are impossible.

Britain today announced the immediate release of Archbishop Makarios, leader of the Cypriot movement for union with Greece. Last year, the British deported Makarios to an island in the Indian Ocean, after charging him with supporting terrorist activities. The British colonial secretary, Alan Lennox-Boyd, told the House of Commons today, that Makarios has asked the Greek Cypriot underground to call off its operations, on condition Britain ends the present state of emergency. Lennox-Boyd said the state of emergency cannot be lifted until the British governor of Cyprus feels it is safe to do so... but that Makarios will be released anyway. ~~Britain has also offered the present underground leader, Colonel Grivas, safe-conduct out of Cyprus. Lennox-Boyd~~ He said Britain will ~~[illegible]~~ now seek NATO mediation of the Cyprus dispute. And he indicted Makarios will take part in the mediation talks. The archbishop, however, will not be allowed to return to Cyprus at this time.

The National Cypriot Committee... in London... has hailed the British move as a step toward "an honorable and just solution of the Cyprus problem." ~~In Athens, the Greek cabinet met in emergency session.~~

My colleague, Alexander Kendrick, cables me from London that the subject of Makarios was discussed at length at the Bermuda conference. Kendrick says although it is officially denied that the release has anything to do with the conference, it is "dead certain" President Eisenhower either suggested it or endorsed it as the most sensible of several alternatives.

In Washington, the Army says two more of its divisions will start reorganizing next month as atomic combat units. The two divisions are identified as the 4th Armored... at Fort Hood, Texas... and the 4th Infantry at Fort Lewis, Washington.

Defense Secretary Wilson today issued a formal directive accepting some recommendations of the Committee on Classified Information headed by former Assistant Defense Secretary Coolidge. But Wilson rejected a suggestion that newsmen be forced... by grand jury action... to divulge the source of any news leaks which jeopardize national security.

President Eisenhower today abolished the National Security Training Commission as of June 30. The commission was set up six years ago to oversee the proposed universal military training program which Congress never approved.

Congress today completed action on a bill continuing corporate and excise taxes at their present level for another 15 months. The House approved the measure... passed by the Senate yesterday... and sent it to President Eisenhower for his signature.

~~The House Labor Committee decided today to make a broad study of union welfare funds. Chairman Barden of North Carolina said, "Some union welfare funds are being pillaged." Secretary of Labor Mitchell said his department is going to make a study of legislation that may be needed to "protect" the funds of union workers.~~

~~The Senate rackets committee is in recess.~~

Edward R. Murrow: March 28, 1957. 7/45 p.m.

President Eisenhower announced yesterday that he is about to propose legislation to deal with a President's disability to perform his duties. He has now called a meeting with congressional leaders for tomorrow morning. They will discuss the recommendation made by a group headed by Attorney General Brownell, which was asked to study the problem after the President's own experience with disabling illness.

This is action; but it does not mean that the gap in the constitution is about to be closed. If the recommendation by the Attorney General's group is followed, probably nothing would become effective during President Eisenhower's term. For it proposes an amendment to the Constitution, which needs concurrence of three-fourths of the states; usually a long drawn-out affair. Some experts deny that a Constitutional amendment is necessary. But Mr. Eisenhower said yesterday he thinks it is.

The amendment recommended by the Brownell group would not close the gap in the Constitution. It would only half close it. It would authorize a President to declare his own disability, and turn over his duties to the Vice President. It would make it clear that the Vice President would only act until the President again could act for himself.

Mr. Eisenhower spoke yesterday of Vice Presidents having been reluctant to act for the President, because the Constitution does not make it clear whether they would become President or acting President, and when and how the President would take over again.

This was true when Garfield was shot. In the preceding campaign, Arthur had been maliciously accused of having accepted nomination as Vice President, hoping to reach the White House through assassination of the President. The charge having been made, he felt he had to refuse to deputize for the President so long as he stayed alive.

At the time Woodrow Wilson suffered his stroke, Vice President Marshall was urged to act in Wilson's stead, but frankly said he was afraid that if Wilson recovered he would treat him like a usurper. ~~So the country was run from Wilson's bedside, often by Mrs. Wilson and Secretary Tumulty deciding what should be brought to the President's attention.~~

But the proposed amendment would not deal with situations like these. What it would deal with is the situation at the time of President'Eisenhower's heart attack of 1955. Mr. Eisenhower was quite capable of recognizing his disability and appointing the Vice President to act for him. Garfield and Wilson were not. And the proposed amendment leaves wholly unanswered the old question: how a President's disability is to be determined and how the end of it is to be determined.

Since the President has said he will invite suggestions from Congressional leaders, they may come up with a proposal to close the gap completely. But Mr. Brownell thinks that so many views are held on the method of determining disability, that it would be better to concentrate on something everyone will accept. He is sure his proposed amendment will receive general approval. Other steps, he believes, can come later.

Two proposals have been much discussed in Congressional circles. One is a proposal made by Representative Celler, after House Committee hearings, which would authorize the Vice President to decide by himself when a President is incapable of performing his duties and when he is capable of resuming them. This has been vehemently rejected as making it possible for an unscrupulous Vice President to depose the President at will, with Congress being able to punish him only through the involved process of impeachment.

The other proposal is to set up a "disability commission". This would consist of the chief justice and two associate justices of the Supreme Court, the Secretaries of State and Treasury, the majority and minority leaders in the Senate, and the Speaker and minority leader in the House. The commission would have to certify the President's disability, as well as his ability to return to work. Many congressmen believe that this could be coupled with the authorization of a President to declare his own disability, and the two reforms could be adopted without amendment of the Constitution. But the Constitutional authorities do not agree among themselves, and some question the right of Congress to meddle with executive functions, since they are kept so scrupulously separate in the Constitution.

It now looks as though a long debate in Washington might be beginning. And if this is to be followed by the slow motion of a Constitutional amendment, the gap in that document may remain for a long time to come.

Word for Today

A long time ago... when Theodore Roosevelt was vice president... he said, "The Vice President is really a fifth wheel to the coach. It is not a stepping stone to anything except oblivion." A year after Roosevelt said that, William McKinley was assassinated and he became President. Today... as Thomas Paine said... "A new method of thinking has arisen."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 28, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Egypt announces that vessels up to 19-thousand tons will be able to pass through the Suez Canal, starting tomorrow..and that the canal will be open to "normal" traffic about the middle of next month. A United Nations spokesman says the last major obstruction ..a sunken Egyptian frigate..will be raised in five or six days.

The State Department today advised American shipowners to steer clear of the Suez Canal until its physical and legal hazards have been "fully eliminated." The department said "its information was" that hazards still exist in the immediate approaches to the canal, notably the Gulf of Suez. It also pointed out that discussions are still in progress between United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold and the Government of Egypt with respect to future operation of the canal. The implication was clear. The United States does not look with favor on use of the canal..at least by ships of American registry... until a settlement is reached.

Secretary General Hamarskjold returned to New York today from six days of talks with President Nasser and went immediately into a round of conferences with Western diplomats. His first meeting..lasting more than an hour... was with United States Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge. Lodge said afterwards that Hammarskjold had brought back "a great deal of information" as a result of his talks with Nasser. He said that..in his opinion.. Hammarskjold's trip had been "very useful". And he said he was relaying what the secretary general had told him to Washington.

Russia today accused "extremist circles" in France and Israel of plotting a new war against Egypt. The accusation was published by the Soviet news agency Tass and broadcast by Moscow Radio. It said: "The unleashing of new aggression against Egypt would create a direct threat of widespread military conclict with heavy consequences to the cause of peace." French Foreign Minister Pineau said yesterday that France would back Israel's right to answer with force any Egyptian attack against Israeli soil...launched either from the Gulf of Aqaba or the Gaza Strip.

Talks between Hungarian and Soviet leaders ended in Moscow tonight with a farewell banquet and..ironically..a puppet show. A communique signed by the hand-picked premier of Hungary, Janos Kadar, and Soviet Premier Bulganin praised the Red Army for its role in crushing the October revolt. It said Russia will give the Kadar regime 215 - million dollars this year in goods and long-term credits. And it said new talks will have to be held regarding the legal status of Soviet troops "temporarily" stationed in Hungary.

Today..at the United Nations disarmament conference in London..the United States rejected Russia's proposal for an immediate temporary ban on nuclear weapons tests. Harold Stassen reiterated that tests can be ended only if East and West agree to inspection. And he challenged Russia to list the time and place of all atomic tests conducted over the past two years. Russua has claimed that secret nuclear tests are impossible.

Britain today announced the immediate release of Archbishop Makarios, leader of the Cypriot movement for union with Greece. Last year, the British deported Makarios to an island in the Indian Ocean after charging him with supporting terrorist activities. The British colonial secretary, Alan Lennox-Boyd, told the House of Commons today that Makarios has asked the Greek Cypriot underground to call off its operations on condition Britain ends the present state of emergency. Lennox-Boyd said the state of emergency cannot be lifted until the British governor of Cyprus feels it is safe to do so..but that Makarios will be released anyway. He said Britain will now seek NATO mediation of the Cyprus dispute. And he indicated that he will take part in the mediation talks. The archbishop, however, will not be allowed to return to Cyprus at this time.

The National Cypriot Committee .. in London..has hailed the British move as a step toward " an honorable and just solution of the Cyprus problem."

My colleague, Alexander Kendrick, cables me from London that the subject of Makarios was discussed at length at the Bermuda conference. Kendrick says although it is officially denied that the release has anything to do with the conference, it is "dead certain" President Eisenhower either suggested it or endorsed it as the most sensible of several alternatives.

In Washington, the Army says two more of its divisions will start reorganizing next month as atomic combat units. The two divisions are identified as the 4th Armored..at Fort Hood, Texas...and the 4th Infantry at Fort Lewis, Washington.

Defense Secretary Wilson today issued a formal directive accepting some recommendations of the Committee onClassified Information headed by former Assistant Defense Secretary Coolidge. But Wilson rejected a suggestion that newsmen be forced..by grand jury action..to divulge the source of any news leaks which jeopardize national security.

Congress today completed action on a bill continuing corporate and excise taxes at their present level for another 15 months. The House approved the measure ..passed by the Senate yesterday..and sent it to President Eisenhower for his signature.

President Eisenhower announced yesterday that he is about to propose legislation to deal with a President's disability to perform his duties. He has now called a meeting with congressional leaders for tomorrow morning. They will discuss the recommendation made by a group headed by Attorney General Brownell, which was asked to study the problem after the President's own experience with disabling illness.

This is action; but it does not mean that the gap in the constitution is about to be closed. If the recommendation by the Attorney General's group is followed, probably nothing would become effective during President Eisenhower's term. For it proposes an amendment to the Constitution, which needs concurrence of three-fourths of the states; usually a long drawn-out affair. Some experts deny that a Constitutional amendment is nesessary. But Mr. Eisenhower said yesterday he thinks it is.

The amendment recommended by the Brownell group would not close the gap in the Constitution. It would only half close it. It would authorize a President to declare his own disability and turn over his duties to the Vice President. It would make it clear that the Vice President would only act until the President again could act for himself.

Mr. Eisenhower spoke yesterday of Vice Presidents having been reluctant to act for the President, because the Constitution does not make it clear whether they would become President or acting President, and when and how the President would take over again.

This was true when Garfield was shot. In the preceding campaign, Arthur had been maliciously accused of having accepted nomination as Vice President, hoping to reach the White House through assassination of the President. The charge ahving been made, he felt he had to refuse to deputize for the President so long as he stayed alive.

At the time Woodrow Wilson suffered his stroke, Vice President Marshall was urged to act in Wilson's stead, but frankly said he was afraid that if Wilson recovered he would treat him like a usurper.

But the proposed amendment would not deal with situations like these. What it would deal with is the situation at the time of President Eisenhower's heart attack of 1955. Mr. Eisenhower was quite capable or recognizing his disability and appointing the Vice President to act for him. Garfield and Wilson were not. And the proposed amendment leaves wholly unanswered the old question: how a President's disability is to be determined and how the end of it is to be determined.

Since the President has said he will invite suggestions from Congressional leaders, they may come up with a proposal to close the gap completely. But Mr. Brownell thinks that so many views are held on the method of determining disability, that it would be better to concentrate on something everyone will accept. He is sure his proposed amendment will receive general approval. Other steps, he believes, can come later.

Two proposals have been much discussed in Congressional circles. One is a proposal made by Representative Celler, after House Committee hearings, which would authorize the Vice President to decide by himself when a President is incapable of performing his duties and when he is capable of resuming them. This has been vehemently rejected as making it possible for an unscrupulous Vice President to depose the President at will, with Congress being able to punish him only through the involved process of impeachment.

The other proposal is to set up a "disability commission." This would consist of the chief justice and two associate justices of the Supreme Court, the Secretaries of State and Treasury, the majority and minority leaders in the Senate, and the Speaker and minority leader in the House. The commission would have to certify the President's disability, as well as his ability to return to work. Many congressmen believe that this could be coupled with the authorization of a President to declare his own disability, and the two reforms could be adopted without amendment to the Constitution. But the Constitutional authorities do not agree among themselves, and some question the right of Congress to meddle with executive functions, since they are kept so scrupulously separate in the Constitution.

It now looks as though a long debate in Washingtn might be beginning. And if this is to be followed by the slow motion of a Constitutional amendment, the gap in that document may remain for a long time to come.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is our announcer.

ANNOUNCER:

MURROW: A long time ago..when Theodore Roosevelt was vice president..he said, "The Vice President is really a fifth wheel to the coach. It is not a stepping stone to anything except oblivion." A year after Roosevelt said that, William McKinley was assassinated and he became President. Today..as Thomas Paine said..." A new method of thinking has arised."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., March 29, 1957

This is the news:

The AFL-CIO today suspended Dave Beck, president of the international teamsters union, as a vice president of the AFL-CIO and as a member of its executive council. The suspension was voted unanimously by the executive council... and was a direct result of Beck's invocation of the Fifth Amendment earlier this week before the Senate rackets committee. The AFL-CIO code of ethics prescribes that a union official who invokes the Fifth Amendment at a proper inquiry into his handling of union affairs forfeits the right to hold office. The executive council ordered Beck to stand union trial on May 20th. ~~[illegible] said Beck will be asked at that time "to answer for his actions in bringing the labor movement into disrepute... and his failing to explain the many charges against him with regard to misuse of union funds." (That's a direct quote).~~

The [redacted] council also ordered an investigation of the teamsters union to determine whether it is "substantially dominated or controlled by corrupt influences." Today's council action would appear to be the most drastic ever taken by the American labor movement against one of its top leaders.

James Hoffa, vice president of the teamsters union, pleaded innocent today to bribery charges growing out of the Senate rackets investigation. Hoffa and Hyman Fischbach, a Miami attorney, allegedly tried to get inside information by bribing a Senate investigator. Fischbach also pleaded innocent... and their trial was set for May 27th.

President Eisenhower [redacted] today outlined to congressional leaders his proposal for determining presidential disability. Mr. Eisenhower said he favors a constitutional amendment... authorizing the cabinet --- BY MAJORITY VOTE --- to decide when the vice president should take over the duties of a disabled President. The vice president would not vote. This procedure would apply if a President were unable to decide his own disability. If a President were still able to decide for himself, he would ask the vice president in writing to take over. In both instances, he would relinquish his duties temporarily to the vice president. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said... after the White House meeting... that Mr. Eisenhower's proposal will be given "respectful consideration." The Republican leader, Senator Knowland, commented that amending the constitution "isn't something that can be done in a week or two." And House Speaker Rayburn questioned the need of amending the Constitution at all. Republican Representative Keating of New York has a plan different from Mr. Eisenhower's, and... late today... introduced legislation to enact it into law. Keating would have a special commission, instead of the cabinet, determine presidential disability. The commission would have 11 members. These would be the vice president, the chief justice of the Supreme Court, the senior associate justice, the speaker of the House, the House and Senate majority and minority leaders, the secretaries of the State and Treasury, and the attorney general. The vice president would serve as chairman.

~~The House got sidetracked in its economy drive today when it voted 5-million dollars for the rural library program. President Eisenhower had requested 3-million dollars for the program.~~

A Senate committee heard testimony today on the State Department ban on first-hand news coverage in Red China. J. Russell Wiggins, of the Washington Post and Times-Herald, said the ban infringed on the right of people in the United States to know... through their own reporters... about conditions in China. Wiggins testified as the spokesman for the American Society of Newspaper Editors. William Worthy... who last winter joined two newsmen from Look Magazine in defying the State Department ban...protested the delay of the department in renewing his passport. Worthy said that in the course of his overseas reporting he had seen how totalitarian governments restrict news coverage. He said, "Neither as a newsman, nor as a citizen, do I want to see even the seeds of such controls planted in this country." While he was in China, Worthy did occasional broadcasts for C.B.S. He told the committee he had heard from a "reputable source" that the State Department put pressure on C.B.S. not to use the broadcasts... but that the network used them anyway. No comment on this so far from the State Department.

A House banking subcommittee voted today to lower the downpayments required from veterans seeking home loans under the F.H.A. The White House announced... at the same time... a program of easier credit terms for prospective home-buyers.

A constitution that would give Singapore internal self-government was agreed on today in London. Representatives from the British colony have been conferring in London for more than two weeks. [redacted]

Archbishop Makarios said today that he is "not prepared" to negotiate the political future of Cyprus unless he can return to the island colony. Britain announced yesterday that the exiled Cypriot leader was now free to go wherever he wished---except to Cyprus. The British exiled him last year, after charging him with actively supporting terrorist activities on the island. [redacted]

In London today, Lord Salisbury resigned as government leader in the House of Lords. The resignation was [redacted] a protest against the Conservative government decision to set Makarios free. Prime Minister Macmillan said he accepted it "with the greatest regret." Salisbury also resigned as Lord President of the Privy Council... a post which made him a member of the cabinet, without portfolio.

Russia tonight handed a diplomatic note to Denmark. The note is believed to be similar to the Bulganin message delivered earlier this week to Norway, warning against the establishment of NATO bases on Norwegian soil.

Edward R. Murrow: March 28, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The contest between Colonel Nasser and the Western world has reached a stage where it is possible to report on the score up to date. We have new information from two sources, Egypt's own official memorandum to the State Department on its plans for the Suez Canal, and the outcome of the talks between Nasser and Dag Hammarskjold in Cairo. The score at this point shows Nasser almost incredibly ahead. If this were a baseball game, it would be about nineteen to nothing in favor of Nasser.

To take up first the outcome of the talks with Mr. Hammarskjold. Nasser gave his personal assurances that he would not move troops into the Gaza Strip for the time being, and he expressed no interest in stopping shipping through the Gulf of Aqaba. But these are not new concessions. They are re-affirmations. At the time when the United Nations was trying to get the British, French and Israeli out of Egypt he gave these assurances to Mr. Hammarskjold, and he gave one more which he subsequently broke. That was to allow the U.N. emergency force to administer the Gaza Strip. He broke this in sending an Egyptian official, called a civil governor - but in fact a general - to take over the civil administration.

It is technically true that Nasser does not need to acquiesce in United Nations occupation of the Gaza Strip, since under the armistice

Egypt is to hold and administer the strip until peace is completed. But Nasser's life depended on getting the invaders out of Egypt, and he promised not to claim his technical rights so as to be rescued from overwhelming military defeat and his own oblivion. Then, when he was saved, he took back one of the technical rights. More than that, he now seems to be pressing the advantage.

C.B.S. ~~correspondent Michael Elkins in Jerusalem cables that the U.N.~~ emergency force does not have ~~any more the direct or exclusive responsibility~~ for guarding the border. ~~The Egyptian governor has ordered that~~ Egyptian police must accompany emergency force patrols on all their activities. He quotes ~~Joseph Tekoah, Israeli official in charge of armistice affairs,~~ as saying that Egypt ~~has turned the emergency~~ force into a weapon of aggressive policy ~~against~~ Israel.

Nasser's program for the Suez Canal was sent to the State Department for its comments, so presumably it is open for further discussion. But as it stands it claims everything for Egypt that Nasser demanded at the time he seized the Canal. There is one slight improvement, in that he agrees that disputes between signatories of the 1888 convention can be arbitrated by the world court. But this does not cover one of the outstanding issues, Israel's right to use the Canal. For Israel was not a signatory of the original convention, not having been born at that date.

Nasser's program is one of total and absolute control of the Canal. He does promise procedures by which part of the Canal tolls are set aside for new construction and to reimburse the former canal owners. But these procedures are not protected by international safeguards. Egypt is the sole master. Nothing is even mentioned about Israeli shipping. Indeed the subject is neatly hidden behind the high-sounding promise that the Canal is to be for the use of all on equal terms as set forth in the original statute. But this statute was in force when Egypt banned Israeli shipping, so nothing is changed.

Egypt has contended all along it is entitled to bar Israeli shipping as an exercise of belligerent rights. Mr. Dulles said this week that he does not believe Egypt can exercise belligerent rights under the armistice. He pointed out that the U.N. Security Council, in upholding Israel's right to use the Canal in 1957 did so on the basis that Egypt doesn't have belligerent rights under the armistice. Since Mr. Dulles said this after having studied the Nasser memorandum for nearly a week, it may be that he has chosen this as the next issue on the agenda.

The Nasser memorandum not only ignores the Security Council's vote of six years ago, it ignores the six principles adopted by the Security Council last year, one of which was that the Canal should be "insulated from the politics of any country." The Nasser program does not insulate it. Egypt would be just as free to play politics with the Canal as not to do so. At best Nasser could be asked to promise not to do so. There would be no authority that could compel him to keep his word.

One of the questions Mr. Hammarskjold put to Nasser before leaving Cairo was whether he was ready to give up the state of belligerency with Israel. He asked the question in writing, and so far has received no reply. ~~If his reply should be even faintly favorable to an end of belligerency the crisis might yet take a more hopeful turn. But it would be hard to find anyone, even in the State Department, who expects an answer that would be acceptable to Israel, let alone the British and French and ourselves.~~ Nasser's

Word for Today

A few minutes ago, I ventured to compare the contest with Nasser to a baseball game in which the score might be something like 19 to nothing in his favor. Nationalizing the Suez Canal was relatively easy---like catching a pop fly. But Tommy Heinrich once said, "Catching a fly ball is a pleasure. Knowing what to do with it after you catch it is a business."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 29, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The AFL_CIO today suspended Dave Beck, president of the international teamsters union, as a vice president of the AFL-CIO and as a member of its executive council. The suspension was voted unanimously by the executive council...and was a direct result of Beck's invocation of the Fifth Amendment earlier this week. before the Senate rackets committee.

The AFL_CIO code of ethics prescribes that a union official who invokes the Fifth Amendment at a proper inquiry into his handling of union affairs forfeits the right to hold office. The executive council ordered Beck to stand union trial on May 20th. The Council also ordered an investigation of the teamsters union to determine whether it is "substantially dominated or controlled by corrupt influences." Today's council action would appear to be the most drastic ever taken by the American labor movement against one of its top leaders.

James Hoffa, vice president of the teamsters union, pleaded innocent today to bribery charges growing out of the Senate rackets investigation. Hoffa and Hyman Fischbach, a Miami attorney allegedly tried to get inside information by bribing a Senate investigator. Fischbach also pleaded innocent..and their trial was set for May 27th.

President Eisenhower today outlined to congressional leaders his proposal for determining presidential disability. Mr. Eisenhower said he favors a constitutional amendment..authorizing the cabinet..by majority vote..to decide when the vice president should take over the duties of a disabled President. The vice president would not vote. This procedure would apply if a President were unable to decide his own disability. If a President were still able to decide for himself, he would ask the vice president in writing to take over.

In both instances, he would relinquish his duties temporarily to the vice president . Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said..after the White House meeting.. that Mr. Eisenhower's proposal will be given "respectful consideration." The Republican leader, Senator Knowland, commented that amending the constitution "isn't something that can be done in a week or two." And House Speaker Rayburn questioned the need of amending the Constitution at all. Republican Representative Keating of New York has a plan different from Mr. Eisenhower's and..late today..introduced legislation to enact it into law. Keating would have a special commission instead of the cabinet determine presidential disability. The commission would have 11 members. These would be the vice president, the chief justice of the Supreme court, the senior associate justice, the speaker of the House, the House and Senate majority and minoirty leaders, the secretaries of the State and Treasury, and the Attorney General. The Vice President would serve as chairman.

A Senate committee heard testimony today on the State Department ban on first - hand news coverage in Red China. J. Russell Wiggins, of the Washington Post and Times - Herald, said the ban infringed on the right of people in the United States to know, through their own reporters..about conditions in China. Wiggins testified as the spokesman for the American Society of Newspaper Editors. William Worthy..who last winter joined two newsmem from Look Magazine in defying the State Department ban..protested the delay of the department in renewing his passport. Worthy said that in the course of his overseas reporting he had seen how totalitarian governments restrict news coverage. He said, "Neither as a newsman nor as a citizen, do I want to see even the seeds of such controls planted in this country." While he was in China, Worthy did occasional broadcasts for C.B.S. He told the committee he had heard from a "reputable source" that the State Department put pressure on C.B.S. not to use the broadcasts ..but that the network used them anyway. No comment on this so far from the State Department.

A House banking subcommittee voted today to lower the downpayments required from veterans seeking home loans under the F.H.A. The White House announced.. at the same time..a program of easier credit terms for prospective home-buyers.

A constitution that would give Singapore internal self-government was agreed on today in London. Representatives from the British colony have been conferring in London for more than two weeks.

Archbishop Makarios said today that he is "not prepared" to negotiate the political future of Cyprus unless he can return to the island colony. Britain announced yesterday that the exiled Cypriot leader was not free to go wherever he wished except Cyprus. The British exiled him last year, after charging him with actively supporting terrorist activities on the island.

In London today, Lord Salisbury resigned as government leader in the House of Lords. The resignation was a protest against the Conservative government decision to set Makarios free. Prime Minister Macmillan said he accepted it "with the greatest regret." Salisbury also resigned as Lord President of the Privy Council....a post which made him a member of the cabinet without portfolio.

Russia tonight handed a diplomatic note to Denmark. The note is believed to be similar to the Bulganin message delivered earlier this week to Norway, warning against the establishment of NATO bases on Norwegian soil.

The contest between Colonel Nasser and the Western world has reached a state where it is possible to report on the score up to date. We have new information from two sources, Egypt's own official memorandum to the State Department on its plans for the Suez Canal, and the outcome of the talks between Nasser and Dag Hammarskjold in Ciaro. The score at this point shows Nasser almost incredibly ahead. If this were a baseball game, it would be about nineteen to nothing in favor of Nasser.

To take up first the outcome of the talks with Mr. Hammarskjold, Nasser gave his personal assurances that he would not move troops into the Gaza Strip for the time being, and he expressed no interest in stopping shipping through the Gulf of Aqaba. But these are not new concessions. They are re-affirmations. At the time when the United Nations was trying to get the British, French and Israeli out of Egypt, he gave these assurances to Mr. Hammarskjold, and he gave one more which he subsequently broke. That was to allow the U.N. emergency force to administer the Gaza Strip. He broke this in sending an Egyptian official, called a civil governor- but in fact a general - to take over the civil administration.

It is technically true that Nasser does not need to acquiesce in United Nations occupation of the Gaza Strip, since under the armistice Egypt is to hold and administer the strip until peace is completed. But Nasser's life depended on getting the invaders out of Egypt, and he promised not to claim his technical rights so as to be rescued from overwhelming military defeat and his own oblivion. Then, when he was safe, he took back one of the technical rights. More than that, he now seems to be pressing the advantage.

Nasser's program for the Suez Canal was sent to the State Department for its comments, so presumably it is open for further discussion. But as it stands it claims everything for Egypt that Nasser demanded at the time he seized the Canal. There is one slight improvement, in that he agrees that disputes between signatories of the 1888 convention can be arbitrated by the world court. But this does not cover one of the outstanding issues, Israel's right to use the Canal. For Israel was not a signatory of the original convention, not having been born at that date.

Nasser's program is one of total and absolute control of the Canal. He does promise procedures by which part of the Canal tolls are set aside for new construction and to reimburse the former canal owners. But these procedures are not protected by international safeguards. Egypt is the sole master.

Nothing is even mentioned about Israeli shipping. Indeed the subject is neatly hidden behind the high-sounding promise that the Canal is to be for the use of all on equal terms as set forth in the original statute. But this statute was in force when Egypt banned Israeli shipping, so nothing is changed.

Egypt has contended all along it is entitled to bar Israeli shipping as an exercise of belligerent rights. Mr. Dulles said this week that he does not believe Egypt can exercise belligerent rights under the armistice. He pointed out that the U.N. Security Council, in upholding Israel's right to use the Canal in 1951 did so on the basis that Egypt doesn't have belligerent rights under the armistice. Since Mr. Dulles said this after having studied the Nasser memorandum for nearly a week, it may be that he has chosen this as the next issue on the agenda.

The Nasser memorandum not only ignores the Security Council's vote of six years ago, it ignores, the six principles adopted by the Security Council last year, one of which was that the Canal should be "insulated from the politics of any country." The Nasser program does not insulate it. Egypt would be just as free to play politics with the Canal as not to do so. At best Nasser could be asked to promise not to do so. There would be no authority that could compel him to keep his word.

One of the questions Mr. Hammarskjold put to Nasser before leaving Cairo was whether he was ready to give up the state of belligerency with Israel. He asked the question in writing, and so far has received no reply.

This is Ed Murrow. I"ll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is our announcer.

ANNOUNCER:

MURROW: A few minutes ago, I ventured to compare the contest with Nasser to a baseball game in which the score might be something like 19 to nothing in his favor. Nationalizing the Suez Canal was relatively easy -- like catching a pop fly. But Tommy Heinrich once said, "Catching a fly ball is a pleasure. Knowing what to do with it after you catch it is a business. :

Good night and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., April 1, 1957

This is the news:

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold said today that Egypt has outlawed the infiltration of Israeli territory from the Gaza Strip. Hammarskjold said... in a statement issued here in New York... that Egyptian regulations against such raids into Israel are being put into force. And, he said, they are backed up by penalties. Hammarskjold also said, "The role of the United Nations Emergency Force in assisting in the prevention of infiltration will be made clearly known to the population of the Gaza Strip by the appropriate authorities." The statement did not go into details. The United Press reports from Cairo tonight that Egypt will refuse to allow United Nations troops to fire on any "infiltrators" they may see trying to cross over into Israel. U.P. quotes "authoritative sources" as saying this will be the Egyptian position until Israel permits the United Nations Emergency Force to patrol the Israeli side of frontier.

→

The Israeli ambassador to the United States... Abba Eban... conferred with Hammarskjold today at United Nations headquarters. This was Hammarskjold's first meeting with an Israeli representative since he returned last week from his talks with President Nasser in Cairo.

Nasser met in Cairo today with John J. McCloy. Mr. McCloy is in charge of the financial aspect of the United Nations project for clearing the Suez Canal. He and Nasser are said to have discussed a possible loan to Egypt for new canal equipment. ~~Such a loan... reportedly in the neighborhood of 10 million dollars... might be arranged through the United Nations or the World Bank.~~

In Washington, the State Department today reiterated that the six principles adopted by the United Nations Security Council last October "should provide the basis for the future operation of the Suez Canal." One of those principles is that the canal "shall be insulated from the politics of any country." The State Department said its note to the Egyptian government last week-end advocated a settlement consistent with the six principles. It again expressed hope that American shipowners will exercise "prudence", and not send their vessels through the canal at once.

The Middle East question was debated today in the British House of Commons. Prime Minister Macmillan said... in opening the debate... that the basic aims of the United States and Britain in the area are identical, "even if at times there are divergencies on how to achieve it." Macmillan insisted there were no secret agreements at the Bermuda Conference. And he denied the report that President Eisenhower pressured him to release Archbishop Makarios... as a step toward settling the Cyprus dispute. "There is," he said, "no truth whatever in this allegation." He said American guided missiles should be available in Britain "in the fairly near future." He conceded warheads for these missiles will be under American control, in accordance with United States law. But the missiles will be manned, he said, by British troops. And he added, "We are not precluded from making our own warheads." Macmillan said Britain is prepared to consider "any practical scheme" for limiting nuclear tests. "But abolition of the tests at this time," he said, "would leave us at the mercy of certain powers." Russia today also rejected a Japanese appeal that it stop its H-bomb tests.

Chairman Strauss of the Atomic Energy Commission said today in Washington that the United States is making "encouraging progress" toward harnessing the H-bomb for peaceful purposes. Strauss told a news conference the commission will start work this summer on a new experimental device at the Princeton research center... which, he said, will represent "the biggest step yet" toward learning the secret of how to produce power through a fusion reaction. He emphasized that the device will not be a pilot plant for thermonuclear power. "Success," he said, "may be years away."

The premier of Iran is reported to have resigned, as the result of the murder last week of three Americans by Iranian bandits. The murder of the American aid officials was said... early today... to have resulted in the cutting off of the Point Four aid program to Southeastern Iran. The State Department said this afternoon that no instructions for suspension of such aid have gone out from Washington.

Congress heard testimony today on President Eisenhower's proposal for a constitutional amendment... setting forth procedure in case of disability of a president. Mr. Eisenhower would have a majority of the cabinet determine whether a President is disabled... and then for the Vice President to become temporary acting president. Attorney General Brownell testified on behalf of the Eisenhower proposal. He said that... in his opinion... the Constitution now empowers the vice president to declare the President disabled, and to replace him. B rownell said this should be corrected. He told the House Judiciary Subcommittee that the question of presidential disability should not depend on one man's judgment.

The Supreme Court today refused to review the licensing of three private power dams in Hell's Canyon on the Snake River in Idaho. The refusal was on an appeal from a lower court opinion... upholding the Federal Power Commission in granting the license to a private utility. Public power interests contended that a single high dam... built by the Government... would provide more flood control and produce more electric power.

The Supreme Court cited an instance today when employers may resort to the lock-out. It ruled that all employers... bargaining jointly with a union... may lawfully lock out their workers, if the union strikes against one of the employers engaged in the negotiations. The case involves the teamsters union and eight linen supply companies in upstate New York. When the teamsters struck one of the companies in 1953 in the course of joint negotiations the other firms laid off their drivers... whereupon the union filed an unfair labor practice complaint. In deciding against the union, the Supreme Court said it was confining itself "to the circumstances in this case."

The State Department said today that it has "tentatively" turned down the application of reporter William Worthy for a new passport. Worthy is one of three American newsmen who last winter defied the State Department ban on travel to Red China. ~~A department spokesman said Worthy is being~~ denied a passport because his China visit was "prejudicial to the interests of the United States" and because there is reason to believe he might not ~~[illegible]~~ in the future "abide by the geographical limitations which may be placed in the passport." Worthy is a reporter for the Baltimore Afro-American, who has also ~~done~~ occasional broadcasts for C.B.S. The other two newsmen ~~men~~ who violated the ban on travel to Red China are photographer Philip Harrington and correspondent Edmund Stevens of Look Magazine. Harrington is back in this country, and his passport has been picked up by the State Department. The American embassy in Moscow has stamped Stevens' passport "Good Only for Return to the United States."

The United States tonight lifted [redacted] the ban it has had on travel to Egypt, Israel, Syria and Jordan for the past five months.

Edward R. Murrow: April 1, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

Once in a while this reporter takes a little time to try to sell a book. This is done on the assumption that to be informed it is still necessary to read. To look and listen is not enough.

I have been worried about this particular book for something over three years -- that's how long it was in the writing. It was written by a foreign correspondent. Having spent a considerable chunk of my life working at that job, and being addicted to the reading of books, it is permissible to say that many books by foreign correspondents read as though their middle name was Kilroy - "And then I said to the Prime Minister..." or, "I telephoned the airport and they held the plane..." or, "If the censors hadn't butchered my story...." - that sort of thing. This isn't that kind of book. It was written by David Schoenbrun, our Paris Correspondent, whose despatches you have frequently heard on this report over the past ten years. Schoenbrun is a short, rather well-padded man who appears to walk on his toes - built close to the ground for proper balance. And he has written as balanced a book as you will find in many months of reading. It's about France, a country that he knows and loves, but the love is not blind.

The reviewers have been kind and, indeed, enthusiastic about this book.

So for once I find myself on the side of the majority. The title, by the way, is: "As France Goes". It is a masterful job of objective analysis, written to be read, not to be referred to for a fact or a figure. He explains France and the French. He neither condones nor condemns. No American has closer relations with high-ranking French officials, but you would not know that from the book. It is revealed only in brilliant and incisive portraits he paints of them. Whether he is dealing with French politics, manners, morals, economics or individuals, he is always explaining and illustrating.

It is as though France were an individual rather than a nation. Schoenbrun does a sort of character analysis: why this individual hates his own government, is generally against rather than for, reluctant to pay taxes, inclined to drink too much, descended from some gallant and also rather doubtful ancestors, an individual who doesn't believe in bigness, is an individualist to the edge of anarchy, stingy in personal finances, while laughingly raiding the national Treasury. Schoenbrun presents this individual to American readers in a warm and sympathetic fashion, but doesn't try to conceal the indiscretions, the imperfections of character, the downright stubbornness, or the family skeletons. It is as disciplined a piece of writing as you will find on contemporary affairs. And in effecting this introduction, Schoenbrun does not stand between France and the reader.

If you have met this France before, and perhaps fallen under the spell of her charms, you will find out things about her in this book that you never knew before. If you have not met France in person, and are merely bewildered or angered by her conduct, then "As France Goes" is as gracious and informative an introduction as you are likely to get.

Schoenbrun tells the story of the French taxi-cab driver who habitually drove through red stop lights, because he was a man capable of exercising judgment, not to be dictated to by a mechanical device. And he ends the book: "If mankind itself is to survive, I would guess that future historians will be recording the birth of the first Republic of the world. I would guess, too, that if that happy millenium is ever reached, it will have been a Frenchman who first proposed or drafted the World Constitution. There will probably be another Frenchman who will deliver the most brilliant analysis of its errors, and vote against it. And somewhere in the stratosphere, carrying delegates to the first meeting of the World Government, there will be a rocket plane from Paris, flying through an infra-red stop beam, because its pilot is a man and not a machine."

That is the end of my effort to sell, "As France Goes" by David Schoenbrun.

I think it was Carlyle who said there were two kinds of books, good ones and bad ones. This is a good one.

Stuart Metz

Word for Today

My colleague, David Schoenbrun, has written himself a book. And it is a good one. Of Course, IN FRANCE he had a good subject. Herman Melville said, "To produce a mighty book, you must choose a mighty theme. No great and enduring volume can ever be written on the flea---though, I might say, many have tried."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 1, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold said today that Egypt has outlawed the infiltration of Israeli territory from the Gaza Strip. Hammarskjold said..in a statement issued here in New York..that Egyptian regulations against such raids into Israel are being put into force. And, he said, they are backed up by penalties. Hammarskjold also said, "The role of the United Nations Emergency Force in assisting in the prevention of infiltration will be made clearly known to the population of the Gaza Strip by the appropriate authorities." The statement did not go into details. The United Press reports from Cairo tonight that Egypt will refuse to allow United Nations troops to fire on any "infiltrators" they may see trying to cross over into Israel. U.P. quotes "authoritative sources" as saying this will be the Egyptian position - until Israel permits the United Nations Emergency Force to patrol the Israeli side of the frontier.

The Israeli ambassador to the United States..Abba Eban..conferred with Hammarskjold today at United Nations headquarters. This was Hammarskjold's first meeting with an Israeli representative since he returned last week from his talks with President Nasser in Cairo.

Nasser met in Cairo today with John J. McCloy. Mr. McCloy is in charge of the financial aspect of the United Nations projects for clearing the Suez Canal. He and Nasser are said to have discussed a possible loan to Egypt for new canal equipment.

In Washington, the State Department today reitirated that the six principles adopted by the United Nations Security Council last October "should provide the basis for the future operation of the Suez Canal." One of those principles is that the canal "shall be insulated from the politics of any country." The State Department said its note to the Egyptian government last week-end advocated a settlement consistent with the six principles. It again expressed hope that American shipowners will exercise "prudence", and not send their vessels through the canal at once.

The Middle East question was debated today in the British House of Commons. Prime Minister Macmillan said..in opening the debate..that the basic aims of the United States and Britain in the area are identical, "even if at times there are divergencies on how to achieve it." Macmillan insisted there were no secret agreements at the Bermuda Conference. And he denied the report that President Eisenhower pressured him to release Archbishop Makarios..as a step toward settling the Cyprus dispute. "There is", he said, "no truth whatever in this allegation." He said American guided missiles should be available in Britain "in the fairly near future." He conceded warheads for these missiles will be under American control, in accordance with United States law. But the missiles will be manned, he said, by British troops. And he added, "We are not precluded from making our own warheads." Macmillan said Britain is prepared to consider "any practical scheme" for limiting nuclear tests. "But abolition of the tests at this time," he said, "would leave us at the mercy of certain powers." Russia today also rejected a Japanese appeal that it stop its H-bomb tests.

Chairman Strauss of the Atomic Energy Commission said today in Washington that the United States is making "encouraging progress" toward harnessing the H-bomb for peaceful purposes. Strauss told a news conference the commission will start work this summer on a new experimental device at the Princeton research center..which, he said, will represent "the biggest step yet" toward learning the secret of how to produce power through a fusion reaction. He emphasized that the device will not be a pilot plant for thermonuclear power. "Success", he said, "may be years away."

The premier of Iran is reported to have resigned, as the result of the murder last week of three Americans by Iranian bandits. The murder of the American aid officials was said...early today..to have resulted in the cuttings off of the Point Four aid program to Southeastern Iran. The State Department said this afternoon that no instructions for suspension of such aid have gone out from Washington.

Congress heard testimony today on President Eisenhower's proposal for a constitutional amendment..setting forth procudure in case of disability of a president. Mr. Eisenhower would have a majority of the cabinet determine whether a President is disabled..and then for the Vice President to become temporary acting president. Attorney General Brownell testified on behalf of the Eisenhower proposal. He said that..in his opinion..the Constitution now empowers the vice president to declare the President disabled, and to replace him. Brownell said this should be corrected. He told the House Judiciary Subcommittee that the question of presidential disability should not depend on one man's judgement.

The Supreme Court today refused to review the licensing of three private power dams in Hell's Canyon on the Snake River in Idaho. The refusal was on an appeal from a lower court opinion..upholding the Federal Power Commission in granting the license to a private utility. Public power interests contended that a single high dam..build by the Government..would provide more flood control and produce more electric power.

The Supreme Court cited an instance today when employers may resort to the lock-out. It ruled that all employers..bargaining jointly with a union..may lawfully lock out their workers, if the union strikes against one of the employers engaged in the negotiations. The case involves the teamsters union and eight linin supply companies in upstate New York. When the teamsters struck one of the companies in 1953 in the course of joint negotiations, the other firms laid off their drivers,.whereupon the union filed an unfair labor practice complaint. In deciding against the union, the Supreme Court said it was confining itself "to the circumstances in this case."

The State Department said today that it has "tentatively" turned down the application of reporters William Worthy for a new passport. Worthy is one of three American newsmen who last winter defied the State Department ban on travel in Red China.

The United States tonight lifted the ban it has had on travel to Egypt, Israel, Syria and Jordan for the past five months.

Once in a while this reporter takes a little time to try to sell a book. This is done on the assumption that to be informed it is still necessary to read. To look and to listen is not enough.

I have been worried about this particular book for something over three years - that's how long it was in the writing. It was written by a foreign correspondent, by David Schoenbrun, our Paris Correspondent, whose despatches you have frequently heard on this report over the past ten years. Schoenbrun is a short, rather well-padded man who appears to walk on his toes - built close to the ground for proper balance. And he has written as balanced a book as you will find in many months of reading. It's about France, a country that he knows and loves, but the love is not blind.

The reviewers have been kind, and indeed, enthusiastic about this book. So for once I find myself on the side of the majority. The title, by the way, is : "As France Goes". It is a masterful job of objective analysis, written to be read, not to be referred to for a fact of a figure. He explains France and the French. He neither condones nor condemns. No American has closer relations with high-ranking French officials, but you would not know that from the book. It is revealed only in brilliant and incisive portraits he paints of them. Whether he is dealing with French politics, manners, morals, economics, or individuals, he is always explaining and illustrating.

It is as though France were an individual rather than a nation. Schoenbrun does a sort of character analysis: why this individual hates his own government, is generally against rather than for, reluctant to pay taxes, inclined to drink too much, descending from some gallant and also rather doubtful ancestors, an individual who doesn't believe in bigness, is an individualist to the edge of anarchy, stingy in personal finances, while laughingly raiding the national treasury. Schoenbrun presents this individual to American readers in a warm and sympathetic fashion, but doesn't try to conceal the indiscretions, the imperfections of character, the downright stubbornness, or the family skeletons. It is as disciplined a piece of writing as you will find on contemporary affairs. And in effecting this introduction, Schoenbrun does not stand between France and the reader.

If you have met this France before, and perhaps fallen under the spell of her charms, you will find out things about her in this book that you never knew before. If you have not met France in person, and are merely bewildered or angered by her conduct, then "As France Goes" is as gracious and informative an introduction as you are likely to get.

Schoenbrun tells the story of the French taxi-cab driver who habitually drove through red stop lights, because he was a man capable of exercising judgement, not to be dictated to by a mechanical device. And he ends the book: "If mankind itslef is to survive, I would guess that future historians will be recording the birth of the first Republic of the world. I would guess, too, that if that happy milleniom is ever reached, it will have been a Frenchman who first proposed or drafted the World Constitution. There will probably be another Frenchman who will deliver the most brilliant analysis of its errors, and vote against it. And somewhere in the stratosphere, carrying delegates to the first meeting of the World Government, there will be a rocket plane from Paris, flying through an infra-red stop beam, because its pilot is a man and not a machine."

That is the end of my effort to sell, "As France Goes" by David Schoenbrun.

I think it was Carlyle who said there were two kinds of books, good ones and bad ones. This is a good one.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Stuart Metz.

METZ:

MURROW: My colleague, David Schoenbrun, has written himself a book. And it is a good one. Of course, in France, he had a good subject. Herman Melville said, "To produce a mighty book, you must choose a mighty theme. No great and enduring volume can ever be written on the flea---though, I might say, many have tried."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., April 2, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that achieving world peace is "far more important" than cutting taxes. "The world must have peace," he said, "or we come close to the point where we say it must perish." Mr. Eisenhower said the Federal Government must help the states to build more schools, "if democracy is to be vital." And he expressed confidence the school construction program will be approved, once there is an understanding of the need. Mr. Eisenhower made these remarks in an informal talk before the annual conference of the Advertising Council.

Vice President Nixon told a meeting of Republican women today that Mr. Eisenhower showed "the proper kind of attitude" when he told Congress to cut his budget wherever possible. There is no excuse for defeatism, Nixon said, as far as the record of the Administration is concerned. ~~He said, "This~~ administration has avoided mistakes which would have involved the United States in war." And this, he added, was done "without surrender of territory or compromise of moral principle."

→

A new biography of Secretary of State Dulles... written by John Robinson Beal... is much in the news. It says, among other things, that President Eisenhower once sent a personal letter to Chiang Kai-shek, "satisfying" Chiang that the United States would help defend the islands of Matsu and Quemoy in case of invasion by Red China. Today, when Mr. Dulles held his news conference, the first question put to him was whether the United States ever gave any guarantees to Chiang to help defend Matsu and Quemoy. And Secretary Dulles said:

#1 Tape runs 35 seconds. Ends on cue: "--when the circumstances call for it."

A reporter then wanted to know if there was ever a secret letter to Chiang Kai-shek which might have raised some question on this point.

#2 T ape runs 57 seconds. Ends on cue: "--to the defense of Taiwan and Pengu."

Next, the questioning turned to the statement in the Dulles biography to the effect that when Mr. Dulles cancelled the United States offer to help Egypt build the high Aswan Dam, he was taking a calculated "major gambit" in the Cold War. On this, Mr. Dulles said:

—7

#3 Tape runs 20 seconds. Ends on cue: "--not in terms of what may have been written about me."

Mr. Dulles was then asked, specifically, if he decided to cancel the Aswan Dam offer in order to force a showdown with the Soviet Union in the Middle East.

#4 Tape runs 2:35. Ends on cue: "--which are stalwart and work with us."

Mr. Dulles said the United States should know... within the next 24 or 48 hours...whether Egypt is willing to negotiate seriously on an agreement for operating the Suez Canal. / The United States, he said, fully supports Israel's right to send ships through the canal. / The United States feels that the Egyptian memorandum... delivered last week... should have included the six principles laid down by the Security Council, as the basis for a settlement. One of the principles was that the canal should be open to the shipping of all nations, in accordance with the Convention of 1888; [redacted] another was, that operation of the canal should be "insulated" from the politics of any country. Mr. Dulles indicated that this was one of the changes advocated in a State Department note... delivered to the Egyptian government on Sunday.

It was announced today that the United Nations Emergency Force is moving its main supply base out of the Suez Canal Zone, to the town of Rafa, in the Gaza Strip. Its air base is being moved out of the canal zone to Al Arish, 25 miles southwest of Rafa. The bases are thus brought closer to the headquarters of United Nations Commander Burns, in Gaza.

Reports from Teheran say the premier of Iran will formally announce his resignation tomorrow. The announcement is not expected to mention the fact... but the murder last week of three Americans, by Iranian bandits, undoubtedly contributed to his action. A government source said the need for a stronger government was demonstrated by the failure, so far, to find the persons responsible.

An agreement providing 20-million dollars in American aid to Morocco was signed today in Rabat.

~~Moscow today announced that the Soviet parliament will meet in special session on May 7th. The announcement gave no detail of the agenda. However, Communist Party Boss Khrushchev has proposed a plan for decentralizing the Russian economy. And no doubt this proposal will be acted upon.~~

Deputy Undersecretary of State Robert Murphy told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee today that the United States will not allow American newsmen to visit Red China, so long as the Communists continue to hold ~~eight~~ American civilians as prisoners. Eight American civilians are still held in Red China.

~~Thus the Communists~~ Murphy said the Chinese Communists have given this country the "definite impression" that they would release these prisoners if the official United States ban against American newsmen going there were dropped. "They are trying," he said, "to trade bodies against concessions."

~~Murphy added that the State Department would welcome a formula which would permit American reporters to visit China without "yielding to blackmail."~~

He denied that the State Department had put pressure on the Columbia Broadcasting System, to keep the network from using broadcasts by William Worthy, when he and two other American newsmen visited China last winter in defiance of the State Department ban. Worthy testified last week that such pressure was applied on the network, but that it went ahead and used his broadcasts anyway. Murphy told the committee today that he did get in touch by telephone with William S, Paley, ~~the~~ chairman of the board of directors of CBS, but no pressure was brought to bear.

Frank Stanton, president of CBS, has wired the Senate subcommittee that the State Department did not exert pressure on CBS to cancel the Worthy broadcasts. The call from Murphy, he said, was for the purpose of "obtaining information about Worthy's relationship to CBS." And, says Stanton, "it seemed to be clear to us, that Mr. Murphy's call was for the purpose of obtaining information only, and did not constitute pressure."

In Britain, union leaders have ordered a million, 700-thousand strikers to go back to work on Thursday, pending a government inquiry into their demands for higher pay. ~~British shipyard workers have been on strike since the middle of last month. They were joined... in the past 10 days... by more than a million factory workers. And the walkout has threatened to cut off the flow of British exports.~~ The unions have warned that the wave of strikes may be resumed; they say they will not regard the decisions of the government court of inquiry as binding.

~~Today... in this country... teamsters president Dave Beck said his union will carry out a public relations program to combat what he called "anti-labor legislation". Beck said the program had been approved by the union's executive board. He did not say on what scale the campaign would be carried out; there had been talk of a million-dollar program. But apparently this isn't in the cards.~~

Texans went to the polls today to elect a new United States senator. The election was necessitated by the resignation of Democratic Senator Price Daniel to become governor. If his successor... elected today... turns out to be a Republican, the Republican Party would take over control of Congress. The Senate would be divided equally between 48 Republicans and 48 Democrats, and Vice President Nixon could break the deadlock in any reorganization move by voting with his party. In today's election, the leading Republican contender was Thad Hutcheson, a Houston attorney. The two leading Democratic candidates are former Representative Dies and Ralph Yarborough, an attorney from Austin. The polls are in the process of closing. And the first returns should be coming in in about half an hour. Republican Leader Knowland said today that his party will try to organize the Senate, if a Republican wins.

Bryan

These are days in which there is as much news in what people say as in what they do. Biographers and statesmen alike are in a position to influence history. Abraham Lincoln once said, in another time of crisis: "In times like the present, men should utter nothing for which they would not willingly be responsible through time and eternity."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, April 2, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... A new biography of Secretary of State Dulles, written by John Robinson Beale, is much in the news. It says - among other things - that President Eisenhower once sent a personal letter to Chiang-Kai-shek "satisfying Chiang that the United States would help defend the islands of Matsu and Quemoy in case of invasion by Red China." Today, when Mr. Dulles held his news conference, the first question put to him was whether the United States ever gave any guarantees to Chiang to help defend Matsu and Quemoy. And Secretary Dulles said:

DULLES: No, the only commitments of the United States are those expressed in the act of Congress, which calls for the defense of Formosa, Taiwan, and the Pengu? area, and other related areas if their defense is connected with the defense of Taiwan and Pengu. That decision will be made by the President when the circumstances call for it.

MURROW: A reporter then wanted to know if there was ever a secret letter to Chiang-Kai-shek which might have raised some question on this point.

DULLES: Well, I wouldn't want to say there had never been any communication between the President and the heads of other governments. He has quite an extensive correspondence of that kind and that is a matter which is within his jurisdiction on which I don't comment.

QUERY: Mr. Secretary, do you know anything about a personal assurance from President Eisenhower on this point that might have satisfied Chiang-Kai-shek that the United States would defend those two islands?

DULLES: I'm quite confident that there is nothing beyond what I have described. Obviously, that description which I've given implies that under certain conditions, we would go to the defense of the islands. That is if their defense seemed related to the defense of Taiwan and Pengu.

MURROW: Next, the questioning turned to the statement in the Dulles biography, to the effect that when Mr. Dulles cancelled the United States offer to help Egypt build the High Aswan Dam he was taking a calculated major gambit in the cold war. On this Mr. Dulles said:

DULLES: I don't care to comment on articles that're written about me. If there're any subjects that - as a result of that? writing - seemed to wor... to merit your question of me, I'm glad to answer questions on their merit. But not in terms of what may have been written about me.

MURROW: Mr. Dulles was then asked, specifically, if he decided to cancel the Aswan Dam offer in order to force a showdown with the Soviet Union in the Middle East.

DULLES: Well, I think that question could be answered in the negative. There were, of course, a number of reasons which dictated our declining to go ahead with the Aswan Dam proposal. It was perhaps first of all and most imperative the fact that the Appropriations Committee of the Senate had unanimously passed a resolution providing that none of the 1957 funds could be used for the Aswan Dam. There was the fact that we had come to the feeling in our own mind that it was very dubious whether a project of this magnitude could be carried through with mutual advantage. It's a tremendous project, involving a billion-and-a-half dollars. Probably in the event it would cost more than that. And the Egyptian component of that, in terms of domestic currency and effort, would involve a gigantic effort and call for a austerity program over a period of twelve to fifteen years. Undoubtedly, that would be a burden and cause a complaint on the part of the Egyptian people and probably the responsibility for that would be placed upon the foreign lenders and they would end up by being disliked instead of liked.

Then there was a further fact that the Egyptians had during the immediately preceding period had been developing ever closer relations with the Soviet bloc countries. And only a few days before I was asked for a definitive answer by the Egyptians had recognized Communist China, being the first Arab nation to do so, and indeed, I think the only nation in the world to do so since the attack on Korea. And in that way the Egyptians, in a sense, forced upon us a issue to which I think there was only one proper response, that was do nations which play both sides get better treatment than nations which are stalwart and work with us.

MURROW: Mr. Dulles said the United States should know within the next twenty-four or forty-eight hours whether Egypt is willing to negotiate seriously on an agreement for operating the Suez Canal. The United States, he said, fully supports Israel's right to send ships through the canal. The United States feels that the Egyptian memorandum, delivered last week, should have included the six principles laid down by the Security Council as the basis for a settlement. One of the principles was that the canal should be opened to the shipping of all nations in accordance with the Convention of 1888. Another was that operation of the canal should be insulated from the politics of any country. Mr. Dulles indicated that this was one of the changes advocated in the State Department note delivered to the Egyptian government on Sunday.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, April 2, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... A new biography of Secretary of State Dulles, written by John Robinson Beale, is much in the news. It says - among other things - that President Eisenhower once sent a personal letter to Chiang-Kai-shek "satisfying Chiang that the United States would help defend the islands of Matsu and Quemoy in case of invasion by Red China." Today, when Mr. Dulles held his news conference, the first question put to him was whether the United States ever gave any guarantees to Chiang to help defend Matsu and Quemoy. And Secretary Dulles said:

DULLES: No, the only commitments of the United States are those expressed in the act of Congress, which calls for the defense of Formosa, Taiwan, and the Pengu? area, and other related areas if their defense is connected with the defense of Taiwan and Pengu. That decision will be made by the President when the circumstances call for it.

MURROW: A reporter then wanted to know if there was ever a secret letter to Chiang-Kai-shek which might have raised some question on this point.

DULLES: Well, I wouldn't want to say there had never been any communication between the President and the heads of other governments. He has quite an extensive correspondence of that kind and that is a matter which is within his jurisdiction on which I don't comment.

QUERY: Mr. Secretary, do you know anything about a personal assurance from President Eisenhower on this point that might have satisfied Chiang-Kai-shek that the United States would defend those two islands?

DULLES: I'm quite confident that there is nothing beyond what I have described. Obviously, that description which I've given implies that under certain conditions, we would go to the defense of the islands. That is if their defense seemed related to the defense of Taiwan and Pengu.

MURROW: Next, the questioning turned to the statement in the Dulles biography, to the effect that when Mr. Dulles cancelled the United States offer to help Egypt build the High Aswan Dam he was taking a calculated major gambit in the cold war. On this Mr. Dulles said:

DULLES: I don't care to comment on articles that're written about me. If there're any subjects that - as a result of that writing - seemed to wor... to merit your question of me, I'm glad to answer questions on their merit. But not in terms of what may have been written about me.

MURROW: Mr. Dulles was then asked, specifically, if he decided to cancel the Aswan Dam offer in order to force a showdown with the Soviet Union in the Middle East.

DULLES: Well, I think that question could be answered in the negative. There were, of course, a number of reasons which dictated our declining to go ahead with the Aswan Dam proposal. It was perhaps first of all and most imperative the fact that the Appropriations Committee of the Senate had unanimously passed a resolution providing that none of the 1957 funds could be used for the Aswan Dam. There was the fact that we had come to the feeling in our own mind that it was very dubious whether a project of this magnitude could be carried through with mutual advantage. It's a tremendous project, involving a billion-and-a-half dollars. Probably in the event it would cost more than that. And the Egyptian component of that, in terms of domestic currency and effort, would involve a gigantic effort and call for a austerity program over a period of twelve to fifteen years. Undoubtedly, that would be a burden and cause a complaint on the part of the Egyptian people and probably the responsibility for that would be placed upon the foreign lenders and they would end up by being disliked instead of liked.

Then there was a further fact that the Egyptians had during the immediately preceding period had been developing ever closer relations with the Soviet bloc countries. And only a few days before I was asked for a definitive answer by the Egyptians had recognized Communist China, being the first Arab nation to do so, and indeed, I think the only nation in the world to do so since the attack on Korea. And in that way the Egyptians, in a sense, forced upon us a issue to which I think there was only one proper response, that was do nations which play both sides get better treatment than nations which are stalwart and work with us.

MURROW: Mr. Dulles said the United States should know within the next twenty-four or forty-eight hours whether Egypt is willing to negotiate seriously on an agreement for operating the Suez Canal. The United States, he said, fully supports Israel's right to send ships through the canal. The United States feels that the Egyptian memorandum, delivered last week, should have included the six principles laid down by the Security Council as the basis for a settlement. One of the principles was that the canal should be opened to the shipping of all nations in accordance with the Convention of 1888. Another was that operation of the canal should be insulated from the politics of any country. Mr. Dulles indicated that this was one of the changes advocated in the State Department note delivered to the Egyptian government on Sunday.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 2, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that achieving world peace is "far more important" than cutting taxes. "The world must have peace," he said, "or we come close to the point where we say it must perish." Mr. Eisenhower said the Federal Government must help the states to build more schools, "if democracy is to be vital." And he expressed confidence the school construction program will be approved, once there is an understanding of the need. Mr. Eisenhower made these remarks in an informal talk before the annual conference of the Advertising Council.

Vice President Nixon told a meeting of Republican women today that Mr. Eisenhower showed " the proper kind of attitude" when he told Congress to cut his budget wherever possible. There is no excuse for defeatism, Nixon said, as far as the record of the Administration is concerened.

A new biography of Secretary of State Dulles..written by John Robinson Beal..is much in the news It says, among other things, that President Eisenhower once sent a personal letter to Chiang Kai-shek, "satisfying" Chiang that the United States would help defend the islands of Matsu and Quemoy in case of invasion by Red China. Today, when Mr. Dulles held his news conference, the first question put to him was whether the United States ever gave any guarantees to Chiang to help defend Matsu and Quemoy. And Secretary Dulles said:

DULLES: No, the only commitments of the United States are those expressed in the act of Congress, which calls for the defense of Formosa, Taiwan, and the Pengu area, and other related areas if their defense is connected with the defense of Taiwan and Pengu. That decision will be made by the President when the circumstances call for it.

MURROW: A reporter then wanted to know it there was ever a secret letter to Chiang - Kai-shek which might have raised some question on this point.

DULLES: Well, I wouldn't want to say there had never been any communication between the President and the heads of other governments. He was quite an extensive correspondence of that kind and that is a matter which is within his jurisdiction on which I don't comment.

QUERY: Mr. Secretary; do you know anything about a personal assurance from President Eisenhower on this point that might have satisfied Chiang-Kai-shek that the United States would defend those two islands?

DULLES; I'm quite confident that there is nothing beyond what I have described. Obviously, that description which I've given implies that under certain conditions, we would go to the defense of the islands. That is if their defense seemed related to the defense of Taiwan and Pengu.

MURROW: Next, the questioning turned to the statement in the Dulles biography to the effect that when Mr. Dulles cancelled the United States offer to help Egypt build the High Aswan Dam he was taking a calculated major gambit in the cold war. On this Mr. Dulles said:

DULLES: I don't care to comment on articles that're written about me. If there're any subjects that - as a result of that writing..seem to ..to merit your question of me, I'm glad to answer questions on their merit. But not it terms of what may have been written about me.

MURROW: Mr. Dulles was than asked, specifically, if the decided to cancel the Aswan Dam offer in order to force a showdown with the Soviet Union in the Middle East.

DULLES: Well, I think that question could be answered in the negative. There were, of course, a number of reasons which dictated our declining to go ahead with the Aswan Dam proposal. It was perhaps first of all and most impertaive the fact that the Appropriations Committee of the Senate had unanimously passed a resolution providing that none of the 1957 funds could be used for the Aswan Dam. There was the fact that we had come to the feeling in our mind that it was very dubious whether a project of this magnitude could be carried through with mutual advantage. It's a tremendnous project, involving a billion-and-a half dollars. Probably in the event it would cost more than that. And the Egyptian component of that, in terms of domestic currency and effort, would involve a gigantic effort and call for an austerity program over a period of twelve to fifteen years. Undoubtedly, that would be a burden and cause a complaint on the part of the Egyptian people and probably the responsibility for that would be placed upon the foreign lenders and they would end up be being disliked instead of liked.

Then there was a further fact that the Egyptians had during the immediately preceding period had been developing ever closer relations with the Soviet bloc countries. And only a few days before I was asked for a definitive answer by the Egyptians had recognized Communist China, being the first Arab nation to do so, and indeed, I think the only nation in the world to do so since the attack on Korea. And in that way the Egyptians, in a sense, forced upon us an issue to which I think there was only one proper response, that was do nations which play both sides get better treatment than nations which are stalwart and work with us.

MURROW: Mr. Dulles said the United States should know within the next twenty-four or forty-eight hours whether Egypt is willing to negotiate seriously on an agreement for operating the Suez Canal. The United States, he said, fully supports Israel's right to send ships through the canal. The United States feels that the Egyptian memorandum, deliverered last week, should have included the six principles laid down by the Security Council as the basis for a settlement. One of the principles was that the canal should be opened to the shipping of all nations in accordance with the Convention of 1888. Another was that operation of the canal should be insulated from the politics of any country. Mr. Dulles indicated that this was one of the changes advocated in the State Department note delivered to the Egyptian government on Sunday.

MURROW: It was announced today that the United Nations Emergency Force is moving its main supply base out of the Suez Canal Zone to the town of Rafa, in the Gaza Strip. Its air base is being moved out of the canal zone to Al Arish 25 miles southwest of Rafa. The bases are thus brought closer th the headquarters of United Nations Commander Burns, in Gaza.

Reports from Teheran say the premier of Iran will formally announce his resignation tomrrrow. The announcement is not expected to mention the fact.. but the murder last week of three Americans by Iranian bandits, undoubtedly contributed to his action. A government source said the need for a stronger government was demonstrated by the failure so far to find the persons responsible.

An agreement providing 20-million dollars in American aid to Morocco was signed today in Rabat.

Depute Undersecretary of State Robert Murphy told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee today that the United States will not allow American newsmen to visit Red China so long as the Communists continue to hold American civilians as prisoners. Eight American civilians are still held in Red China. Murphy said the Chinese Communists have given this coontry the "definite impression" that they would release these prisoners if the official United States ban against American newsmen going there were dropped. "They are trying" he said, "to trade bodies against concessions." He denied that the State Department had put pressure on the Columbia Broadcasting System, to keep the network from using broadcasts by William Worthy, when he and two other American newsmen visited China last winter in defiance of the State Department ban. Worthy testified last week that such pressure was applied on the network, but that it went ahead and used his broadcasts anyway. Murphy told the committed todaythat he did get in touch by telephone with William S. Paley, chairman of the board of directors of CBS, but no pressure was brought to bear. Frank Stanton, president of CBS, has wired the Senate subcommittee that the State Department did not exert pressure on CBS to cancel the Worthy broadcasts. The call from Murphy, he said, was for the purpose of "obtaining information about Worthy's relationship to CBS." And, says Stanton, "it seemed to be clear to us that Mr. Murphy's call was for the purpose of obtaining information only, and did not constitute pressure."

In Britain, union leaders have ordered a million, 700-thousand strikers to go back to work on Thursday, pending a government inquiry into their demands for higher pay. The unions have warned that the wave of strikes may be resumed; they say they will not regard the desisions of the government court of inquiry as binding.

Texans went to the polls today to elect a new United States senator. The election was necessitated by the resignation of Democratic Senator Price Daniel to become governor. If his successor..elected today..turns out to be a Republican, the Republican Party would take over control of Congress. The Senate would be divided equally between 48 Republicans and 48 Democrats, and Vice President Nixon cuuld break the deadlock in any reorganization move by voting with his party. In today's election, the leading Republican contender was Thad Hutcheson, a Houston attorney. The two leading Democratic candidates are former Representative Dies and Ralph Yarborough, an attorney from Austin. The polls are in the process of closing. And the first returns should be coming in in about half an hour. Republican Leader Knowland said today that his party will try to organize the Senate, if th Republican wins.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moemtn with the Word for Today.Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: These are days in which there is as much news in what people say as in what they do. Biographers and statesmen alike are in aposition to influence history. Abraham Lincoln once said, in another time of crisis: "In times like the present, men should utter nothing for which they would not willingly be responsible through time and eternity."

Goodnight and good luck.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today denied that he ever assured Chiang Kai-shek that the United States would help defend the islands of Matsu and Quemoy, in case of Chinese Communist attack. A new biography of John Foster Dulles says Mr. Eisenhower once gave the Chinese Nationalist leader such assurance. The President also denied that he invited Anthony Eden (when Eden was prime minister) and French Premier Mollet to Washington last November, for the purpose of announcing an Egyptian cease-fire. And he firmly denied reports that he intends to retire... and turn his duties over to Vice President Nixon. He called the reports "the worst rot I have ever heard." Then... on a lighter subject... Mr. Eisenhower said he had given his drivers orders "never to exceed the speed limit." Last week, the reporters trailing the President to his Gettysburg farm said his car did 70 to 75 miles an hour... in a 55-mile-an-hour zone. The reporters themselves were stopped by police. Mr. Eisenhower said today that he was unaware that his car was speeding... that he was engaged in a back-seat conference. But henceforth, he said, his drivers will be "particularly careful." A question raised at the news conference concerned President Eisenhower's 72-billion-dollar budget for the next fiscal year. The President said he does not believe his budget can be cut as much as 2-billion dollars... without impairing the national security, or curtailing needed domestic services. He said he hopes "eventually" to reduce taxes... but could not say when.

The under-secretary of the Treasury... Randolph Burgess... said today that Congress would be doing the "sound thing" if it cut President Eisenhower's budget by 2 to 3-billion dollars. Burgess was testifying before the Senate Finance Committee. He predicted lower taxes "next year", if the budget for the next two fiscal years can be kept under 70-billion dollars.

House Speaker Rayburn says Democratic congressmen are going to make a study to see if taxes can be cut this year.

Postmaster General Summerfield is reported to have told a House committee today that the Post Office Department must have an extra 47-million dollars at once, or curtail its service drastically. The additional money is needed, he said, to tide the department over the final three months of the fiscal year ending June 30th. Summerfield is quoted by committee members as saying that if the money is not forthcoming, it will be necessary to close all post offices on Saturday. All city carrier deliveries on Saturday, he said, would also have to be stopped. And through the week, delivery of mail in business districts would be restricted to one a day.

Israel said today that it is negotiating with the United Nations Emergency Force for the erection of barbed wire along the Gaza frontier. An Israeli foreign ministry spokesman said a barrier is needed to keep Arab infiltrators out of Israel. He said if the negotiations fail, Israel may put up the barbed wire itself. The spokesman declined to say when Israel might try to send a ship through the Suez Canal to test its right of free passage. Tonight, a responsible Egyptian source in Cairo said, "It is not a question of the Egyptian Canal Authority refusing to allow an Israeli vessel to pass through. It is simply," he said, "that Egypt will not permit an enemy vessel to enter its territorial waters." This is in line with Egypt's argument that the 1949 armistice with Israel did not end the state of war... that a state of belligerency still exists.

Iran got a new government today. Premier Ala resigned and was succeeded by Manouchehr Eghbal (MAHN-OO-SHUR EGG-BAHL), a former president of Teheran University and a close associate of the shah. Ala's resignation is attributed to the murder... last week... of three Americans by Iranian bandits. It was announced today that the bandit officially identified as the slayer of Mrs. Anita Carroll has been killed by loyal tribesmen. The hunt for the other, surviving bandits continues.

The United States today accused Communist Hungary of reverting to "some of the worst practices of Stalinist terror." The State Department said the Kadar government has "vengefully" arrested Hungarians on a mass scale and has re-instituted, by decree, "the cruel practice of banishment." The statement was timed to coincide with the 12th anniversary of the "liberation" of Hungary by Russian troops in World War Two. It called the contrast between that event in 1945 and what is happening in Hungary today "ironic".

The Atomic Energy Commission said today that its new series of nuclear tests will get underway in Nevada around May 15th and continue through the summer. It said the tests will be of "relatively low explosive force." There will also be experimentation involving "the safety of nuclear weapons during handling and storage."

The death toll in the tornado that hit the Dallas area yesterday has risen to 10. Nearly 200 persons were injured, and damage in Dallas is estimated at 4-million dollars. Six lives were lost in Oklahoma. New tornadoes appeared in Texas and Arkansas today but caused only minor damage. Tornado alerts have been issued for a wide area, ranging from eastern Texas to southern Illinois.

Democratic National Chairman Butler said today that the victory of a Democrat in yesterday's special senatorial election in Texas is "a bad omen" for the Republicans. President Eisenhower told his news conference today, "I think the Republicans are alert to the situation and are really going to work." Ralph Yarborough, Democratic attorney from Austin, won yesterday's multi-cornered race... edging out another Democrat, former Representative Dies. The leading Republican contender, Thad Hutcheson, ran third.

An outbreak of rioting in Santiago, the capital of Chile, today claimed at least two lives. Mobs stoned the presidential palace and tried to storm the Pan American Bank in the face of gunfire from Chilean troops. It was the worst outbreak in a week of rioting in Santiago. My colleague, Bill Downs, has dug into the background of these disorders. And for his story, we switch now to Washington.

(Downs runs 3:42 (He asked to be allowed to tape his piece, so he could get some sleep!) Returns on cue, "And now back to Ed Murrow.")

That was the report of Bill Downs on the dangerous economic situation in Chile.

The AFL-CIO today invited the teamsters union to attend a hearing on May 6th on the basis of derogatory information turned up by the Senate rackets committee. The invitation was issued by the AFL-CIO Ethical Practices Committee. The union does not have to accept. (This is in addition to the union trial, set for May 20th).

Grant Rogers

Word for Today

The budget... as usual... has become a subject of controversy between the Chief Executive and Congress. A politician, quite naturally, desires to cut taxes, if it is at all possible. Will Rogers defined the budget as "a mythical beanbag." Congress, he said, votes mythical beans into it... and then tries to reach in an pull real beans out."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 3, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: It was the worst outbreak in a week of rioting in Santiago. My colleague, Bill Downs, has dug into the background of these disorders; and for his story, we switch now to Washington.

DOWNS: There's an object lesson for the United States in the tragic rioting that has shaken the South American nation of Chile. A seemingly little thing, like raising bus and trolley fares to three cents from two cents a ride, set off a series of demonstrations in the capital city of Santiago and other communities, which have resulted in a number of deaths and scores of injured.

These people are casualties, not of the Communists, not of the cold war, but of a little understood thing called inflation. It is the ironic nature of this economic disease that these Chileans were fighting against the government's attempt to control inflation - in effect, were rioting in order to get more inflation. This is the story.

For the past twenty years, the cost of living in Chile has been on a steady rise. The country is not economically wealthy. It depends on 90 percent of its dollar exchange from the Chilean copper mines and nitrate exports. Many foodstuffs have to be imported.

Chile is an operating democracy with a freely elected Parliament and some 19 political parties. A series of coalition governments adopted generous social security laws. The national wage-scale is tied to the cost of living. When it went up, wages went up. Some economists say that Chile adopted much more generous sociological legislation than her economy could support.

Anyway, the government was forced to print money. Until there was an obvious crisis in 1955, when the Chilean peso fell in value to where it took 650 pesos to equal one dollar.

Well, ninety-seven year old President Carlos Ibanez decided that drastic action must be taken. The national business and industrial life were stagnating. Industries were being taxed up to 80 percent of their profits and no industries were coming in. There was no expansion of the industrial base, and new capital refused to invest. President Ibanez hired the financial firm of Klein and Saxe in New York City to go to Chile to examine and overhaul the national economy and its laws.

Then the Ibanez administration started a series of reforms. During the past sixteen months, this inflation control program showed great promise. Taxes on such dollar earning copper companies as Anaconda and Kinnecut were reduced from 80 percent to 20 percent. New capital was beginning to show up. The Chilean peso even recovered somewhat to where it took only 560 pesos instead of 650 of them to equal the value of a dollar.

But it is also the nature of the disease of inflation that in curing it, it is the ordinary workingman who suffers first. When the cost of living index went down, wages also, automatically, went down and there was great unhappiness among the people. Then yesterday public temper exploded when the government, in order to balance the budget of its public transportation, raised bus and trolley rides by one cent.

Aging President Ibanez, who once was a dictator and still is a popular hero, was forced to declare a state of emergency throughout the nation, and a state of siege in the capital of Santiago. The violence goes on.

Here in Washington, virtually every administration official and Congressman is talking about cutting the President's 72 billion dollar budget and warning against inflation. Thus, the lesson of Chile is a poignant one for all U. S. citizens tonight. That lesson is: The best cure for the economic disease of inflation is not to catch it in the first place. Now back to Ed Murrow.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 3, 1957

7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today denied that he ever assured Chiang Kai-shek that the United States would help defend the islands of Matsu and Quemoy in case of Chinese Communist attack. A new biography of John Foster Dulles says Mr. Eisenhower once gave the Chinese Nationalist leader such assurance. The President also denied that he invited Anthony Eden (when Eden was prime minister) and French Premier Mollet to Washington last November for the purpose of announcing an Egyptian cease-fire. And he firmly denied reports that he intends to retire...and turn his duties over to Vice President Nixon. He called the reports "The worst rot I have ever heard." Then...on a lighter subject..Mr. Eisenhower said he had given his drivers orders "never to exceed the speed limit." Last week, the reporters trailing the President to his Gettysburg farm said his car did 70 to 75 miles an hour in a 55-mile-an-hour zone. The reporters themselves were stopped by police. Mr. Eisenhower said today that he was unaware that his car was speeding...and that he was engaged in a back-seat conference. But henceforth, he said, his drivers will be "particularly careful." A question raised at the news conference concerned President Eisenhower's 72-billion-dollar budget for the next fiscal year. The President said he does not believe his budget can be cut as much as 2 - billion dollars..without imapiring the national security or Curtailing needed domestic services. He said he hopes "eventually" to reduce taxes..but could not say when.

The under-secretary of the treasury..Randolph Burgess..said today that Congress would be doing the "sound thing" if it cut President Eisenhower's budget by 2 to 3 billion dollars. Burgess was testifying before the Senate Finance Committee. He predicted lower taxes "next year", if the budget for the next two fiscal years can be kept under 70 billion dollars.

House Speaker Rayburn says Democratic congressmen are going to make a study to see of taxes can be cut this year.

Postmaster General Summerfield is reported to have told a House Committee today that the Post Office Department must have an extra 47-million dollars at once, or curtail its services drastically. The additional money is needed, he said, to tide the department over the final three months of the fiscal year ending June 30th. Summerfield is quoted by committee members as saying that if the money is not forthcoming, it will be necessary to close all post offices on Saturday. All city carrier deliveries on Saturday, he said, would also have to be stopped. And through the week, delivery of mail in business districts would be restricted to one a day.

Israel said today that it is negotiating with the United Nations Emergency Force for the erection of barbed wire along the Gaza frontier. An Israeli foreign ministry spokesman said a barrier is needed to keep Arab infiltrators out of Israel. He said if the negotiations fail, Israel may put up the barbed wire itself. The spokesman declined to say when Israel might try to send a ship through the Suez Canal to test its right of free passage. Tonight, a responsible Egyptian source in Cairo said, "It is not a question of the Egyptian Canal Authority refusing to allow an Israeli vessel to pass through. It is simply", he said, "that Egypt will not permit an enemy vessel to enter its territorial waters. This is in line with Egypt's argument that the 1949 armistice with Israel did not end the state of war...that a state of belligerency still exists.

Iran got a new government today. Premier Ala resigned and was succeeded by Manoucher Eghbal, a former president of Teheran University and a close associate of the shah. Ala's resignation is attributed to the murder...last week... of three Americans by Iranian bandits. It was announced today that the bandit officially identified as the slayer of Mrs. Anita Carrol has been killed by loyal tribesmen. The hunt for the other, surviving bandits continues.

The United States today accused Communist Hungary of reverting to "some of the worst practices of Stalinist terror." Tha State Department said the Kadar government has "vengefully" arrested Hungarians on a mass scale and has re-instituted, by decree, "the cruel practice of banishment." The statement was timed to coincide with the 12th anniversary of the "liberation" of Hungary by Russian troops in World War Two. It called the contrast between that event in 1945 and what is happening in Hungary today "ironic."

The Atomic Energy Commission said today that its new series of nuclear tests will get underway in Nevada around May 15th and continue through the summer. It said the tests will be of "relatively low explosive force." There will also be experimentation involving "the safety of nuclear weapons during handling and storage."

The death toll in the tornado that hit the Dallas area yesterday has risen to 10. Nearly 200 persons were injured, and damage in Dallas is estimated at 4 - million dollars. Six lives were lost in Oklahoma. New tornadoes appeared in Texas and Arkansas today but caused only minor damage. Tornado alerts have been issued for a wide area, ranging from eastern Texas to southern Illinois.

Democratic National Chairman Butler said today that the victory of a Democrat in yesterday's special senatorial election in Texas is "a bad omen" for the Republicans. President Eisenhower told his news conference today, "I think the Republicans are alert to the situation and are really going to work." Ralph Yarborough, Democratic attorney from Austin, won yesterday's multi-cornered race...edging out another Democrat, former Representative Dies. The leading Republican contended, Thad Hutcheson, ran third.

An outbreak of rioting in Santiago, the capital of Chile, today claimed at least two lives. Mobs stoned the presidential palace and tried to storm the Pan American Bank in the face of gunfire from Chilean troops. It was the worst outbreak in a week of rioting in Santiago. My colleague, Bill Downs, has dug into the background of these disorders. And for his story, we switch now to Washington.

DOWNS: There's an object lesson for the United States in the tragic rioting that has shaken the South American nation of Chile. A seemingly little thing, like raising bus and trolley fares to three cents from two cents a ride, set off a series of demonstrations in the capital city of Santiago and other communities, which have resulted in a number of deaths and scores of injured.

These people are casualties, not of the Communists, not of the cold war, but of a little understood thing called inflation. It is the ironic nature of this economic disease that these Chileans were fighting against the government's attempt to control inflation - in effect, were rioting in order to get more inflation, This is the story.

For the past twenty years, the cost of living in Chile has been on a steady rise. The country is not economically wealthy. It depends on 90 percent of its dollar exchange from the Chilean copper mines and nitrate exports. Many foodstuffs have to be imported.

Chile is an operating democracy with a freely elected Parliament and some 19 political parties. A series of coalition governments adopted generous social security laws. The national wage-scale is tied to the cost of living. When it went up, wages went up. Some economists say that Chile adopted much more generous sociological legislation than her economy could support.

Anyway, the government was forced to print money. Until there was an obvious crisis in 1955, when the Chilean peso fell in value to where it took 650 pesos to equal one dollar.

Well, seventy-nine year old President Carlos Ibanez decided that drastic action must be taken. The national business and industrial life were stagnating. Industries were being taxed up to 80 percent of their profits and no industries were coming in. There was no expansion of the industrial base, and new capital refused to invest. President Ibanez hired the financial firm of Klein and Saxe in New York City to go to Chile to examine and overhaul the national economy and its laws.

Then the Ibanez administration started a series of reforms. During the past sixteen months, this inflation control program showed great promise. Taxes on such dollar earning copper companies as Anaconda and Kinnecut were reduced from 80 percent to 20 percent. New capital was beginning to show up. The Chilean peso even recovered somewhat to where it took only 560 peson instead of 650 of them to equal the value of a dollar.

But it is also the nature of the disease of inflation that in curing it, it is the ordinary workingman who suffers first. When the cost of living index went down, wages also, automatically, went down and there was great unhappiness among the people. Then yesterday public temper exploded when the government, in order to balance the budget of its public transportation, raised bus and trolley rides by one cent.

Aging President Ibanez, who once was a dictator and still is a popular hero, was forced to declare a state of emergency throughout the nation, and a state of siege in the capital of Santiago. The violence goes on.

Here in Washington, virtually every administration official and Congressman is talking about cutting the President's 72 billion dollar budget and warning against inflation. Thus, the lesson of Chile is a poingant one for all U.S. citizens tonight. That lesson is: the best cure for the economic disease of inflation is not to catch it in the first place. Now back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: That was the report of Bill Downs on the dangerous economic situation in Chile.

The AFL_CIO today invited the teamsters union to attend a hearing on May 6th on the basis of derogatory information turned up by the Senate rackets committee. The invitation was issued by the AFL-CIO Ethical Practices Committee. The union does not have to accept. This is in addition to the union trial set for May 20th.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The budget, as usual, has become a subject of controversy between the Chief Executive and Congress. A politician, quite naturally, desires to cut taxes if it is at all possible. Will Rogers defined the budget as "a mythical beanbag." Congress, he said, "votes mythical beans into it...and then tries to reach in and pull real beans out."

Goodnight and good luck.

Collingwood for Murrow Thurs., Apr. 4, 1957

Good evening:

This is Charles Collingwood. I'm sitting in for Ed Murrow, who was away on assignment... and then got caught up in the bad weather most of the country's been having these past few days. His plane got in safely a little while ago... through a snowstorm... but not quite in time to do this broadcast. We had two inches of snow, here in New York City today---a record for this date. That was nothing compared to the snow that fell in the Northern Plains States: Philip, South Dakota, had 20 inches. Some highways in Wyoming have been closed. A bus with 30 passengers is reported stranded near Sherman Hill, Wyoming. And there were new tornadoes today in Mississippi, Alabama, Kentucky and Tennessee. A tornado killed two persons in Mississippi. In the other three states, there was damage but no deaths.

President Eisenhower is speaking to the centennial dinner of the National Education Association tonight on---how terribly important he feels education to be in the life of this country. The text of the President's speech has been released. And Mr. Eisenhower says the nation's schools are more important than our Nike anti-aircraft batteries and "more powerful even than the energy of the atom." "This is true," he says "if for no other reason than that modern weapons must be manned by highly educated personnel, if they are to be effective. And the energy of the atom can only be understood and developed by the most highly trained minds." But this is not Mr. Eisenhower's only thought. "The hope of the world," he warns, "is that wisdom can arrest conflict between brothers." He calls war "the deadly harvest of arrogant and unreasoning minds."

The President contends that federal help is necessary... on an emergency basis... because, in his words, "the school building program has suffered three setbacks in this generation---the depression of the 30's, the war of the 40's, and the Korean crisis of the 50's." Mr. Eisenhower's speech tonight is a new, direct appeal to Congress to approve his four-year school aid program. Only this afternoon a House education subcommittee went further and approved a five-year, 2-billion-dollar program of federal grants to the states to help them build more classrooms. This measure is really a compromise. Many Democrats have been urging a six-year program costing 3-billion, 600-million dollars. The Administration program would not only run just four years, but it calls for an expenditure of only a billion, 300-million dollars.

Postmaster Summerfield told reporters today... at a news conference... what he told a House committee yesterday---namely, that the Post Office Department must have an extra 47-million dollars at once, or order a drastic curtailment of service affecting the whole country. The additional money is needed, he said, to tide the department over the final three months of this fiscal year, ending June 30th. Yesterday, in spite of this appeal, a House appropriations subcommittee voted to give the postal department only 17 of the 47-million dollars Summerfield said was essential. Summerfield told reporters today that unless there are assurances in the next 48 hours that his department will get the entire 47-million, it may be necessary to end all city carrier deliveries on Saturdays, close all post offices on Saturdays... and reduce mail deliveries in business districts to one delivery a day. It might even be necessary in the next three months, he said, to stop the sale of postal money orders.

The White House announced today that Prime Minister Kishi of Japan will visit Washington on June 19th for talks with President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles. The White House said they will discuss "matters of mutual interest"... and that this government "anticipates a useful exchange of views."

A Senate judiciary subcommittee said today that it wanted to know whether the William Worthy (who defied the State Department ban on reporting in Red China) is the same William Worthy who... in 1944... was charged with failure to report to a camp for conscientious objectors. Reporter Worthy has issued a statement saying he is the same man. Worthy said he refused to enter the camp "because the government was assigning men geographically on the grounds of race and color." There was, he said, no charge of draft-dodging or evasion. He said the government dropped the case after it learned he was eligible for deferment under a 4-F classification because of a duo-denal ulcer. The Senate subcommittee has been looking into the State Department's refusal to issue Worthy a new passport. [redacted] A department official brought up the subject of Worthy's draft status in testifying today before another Senate group. Worthy said the draft matter is irrelevant to the current inquiry.

Britain today announced plans for adapting the British military establishment to the atomic era and for cutting defense costs. The drastic program... set forth in a government "white paper" calls for abolition of military conscription by 1961. Battleships will be scrapped. Jet fighters and bombers... now on the drafting board... will be abandoned. (Existing types of aircraft will be used until missiles are available to replace them). And the size of the British armed forces, in the next five years, will be cut almost in half. All British combat troops will be withdrawn from Korea. British air forces in Germany will be reduced 50 percent... and its ground troops in Germany by nearly 17 percent. For its defense, Britain will depend increasingly on nuclear weapons---bombs and rockets. The "white paper" calls the new defense plan "the biggest change in British military policy in normal times."

The Defense Department in Washington today announced the promotion of General Curtis Lemay, to vice chief of staff of the United States Air Force. General Lemay has been serving for more than eight years as head of the Strategic Air Command. In his new job, he will be succeeding General Thomas D. White, who becomes Air Force chief of staff on the retirement of General Twining, on June 30th. Twining becomes chairman of the joint chiefs of staff. The Pentagon confirmed today that General Lemnitzer, [redacted] commander of U.S. forces in the Far East, has been appointed vice chief of staff of the Army. The appointment is effective July first.

The free world was shocked today by the news that the Canadian ambassador to Egypt... Egerton Norman... had taken his own life by leaping from the roof of a building in Cairo. Norman was said, in testimony before the Senate internal security subcommittee, both in 1951... and again last month... that he had once been a Communist. The Canadian Embassy today issued this statement: "The Canadian ambassador has always been an extremely conscientious public servant. Recently, unpleasant publicity and accusations greatly distressed him. In his distressed condition," the statement concludes, "Mr. Norman apparently took his own life early today." In Ottawa, the Canadian minister of external affairs... Lester Pearson... said the charges against Norman were "disposed of years ago after careful investigation." Secretary of State Dulles expressed this country's regret over the ambassador's death.

There has been a vast acceleration of events in Britain this past week... all bearing on the question: How long will the Conservative government be able to stay in power? There are many factors---all of them important to the military and economic security of Great Britain and, to a large extent, to the whole free world. We asked Howard K. Smith to give us a report on this, and so now---for that story---we switch to London.

Tape runs 5:00
Ends on cue: "--to Charles Collingwood
in New York."

That was the report of Howard K. Smith on the political repercussions recent events have had in Britain. This is Charles Collingwood.

I'll be back in a moment with Ed Murrow's Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

It seems that... for so long as w e can remember... Britain has been plagued with major problems. But an Englishman does not easily despair. Ralph Waldo Emerson once said, "This aged England. I see her not dispirited." And it was Emerson who also said, "I find the Englishman to be him OF all men who stands firmest in his shoes." England well remembers she has seen dark days before."

And as Ed Murrow would say, "Goodnight and good luck!"

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

THURSDAY, APRIL 4, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

COLLINGWOOD: There's been a vast acceleration of events in Britain this past week, all bearing on the same question: How long will the Conservative government be able to stay in power? We asked Howard K. Smith to give us a report on this, and so now, for that story, we switch to London.

SMITH: As should be the case in every well-ordered democracy, there are two views in Britain about how the Macmillan Conservative government is doing. In the words of Labor Member of Parliament, Richard Crossman, who writes a column in a London paper, "Macmillan may hang on for a time, but his government is finished and he knows it." Or in the words of a Conservative Member of Parliament, "The Conservative's fortunes have been falling continuously since the Suez crisis last autumn, until last weekend. Then they hit rock bottom, and now they're clearly on the way back up."

The Foreign correspondent in Britain, partial to neither side, can certainly agree that something has snapped here in the past few days, but whether it was the government's neck, as Labor says, or the government's hitherto unbroken streak of bad luck, as the Tories insist, it is still hard to say. Monday, when the week began, was as black a day as any British government has faced in a long time. Rebellion was rife inside the governing Conservative Party. Its members were accusing their Cabinet of going soft in foreign affairs. The mighty Lord Salisbury had resigned from the Conservative Cabinet because it had decided to release the Cypriote Nationalist leader Archbishop Makarios from exile.

Lesser Tories were accusing their Cabinet of having done this in response to American pressure at the Bermuda conference. It was said that Macmillan was now going to accept Nasser's terms for passage through the Suez Canal also. There was genuine fear of a party rebellion materializing around Lord Salisbury over these matters and wrecking the government.

At the same time, a half million more British workers had come out on strike over the weekend, making the total nearly 2,000,000 idle; and the pound sterling, the all important statistic in this country, was falling on world markets as buyers were turning to other sources of goods. No government could withstand a serious fall in the pound for long.

At the same time on Monday, a usually reliable public opinion poll told what would happen if the government here were forced to call new elections. It said that Labor was way ahead of the government in the voter's sentiments here in Britain by nearly twelve percentage points. That is the biggest lead the poll has ever given to either British political party since World War II.

Well, late on Monday, Macmillan in a debate on the results of the Bermuda conference, persuaded his party that he had not even discussed Makarios' release with President Eisenhower at Bermuda. And he said he was not going to accept Nasser's terms for passage through Suez and that America was doing the same. This seemed to satisfy his party and it rallied behind him. By some kind of metaphysics, as yet not fully understood, the British Trade Union leaders were persuaded to call off their strike and to negotiate; and today, all of Britain has gone back to work and the pound sterling is rallying.

By political magic today it is not the reunified Tories, it is the Labor opposition which is split and wrangling. Most Laborites are in favor of holding the coming British H-bomb test in the Pacific, but the powerful Left Wing of the party wants the test stopped and a real fight is taking place over that inside the opposition, much to the Tories' relief.

Also today, Defense Minister Sandys announced

a new defense plan for Britain, which will abolish conscription and reduce the cost of defense, and may well regain the Tories some of their lost votes. And next week comes the annual national budget, which it is rumored will cut taxes and regain some more support.

It is easy, therefore, to see how the Conservatives can argue that suddenly this week their long spell of bad luck has been broken. They're on the way back up in fortune's favor. The Laborites say, however, just as persuasively, that this is just a short bout of Indian Summer before a political winter really freezes the Tories out. The strikes, they point out, were called off by one union leader's tie-breaking vote. Half the unions are furious over what they consider a sellout, and if the unions don't get all of the big increase in pay they had asked for, by negotiation, the strikes will return in sharper form. This is highly possible.

In foreign affairs, Labor says that Britain cannot go on resisting Nasser's demands. Britain must pay his tolls his way or British ships will have to travel the long way around Africa and be at a tremendous commercial disadvantage against other nations' shipping. So Macmillan will have to cave in sometime, and when he does, the barely stifled Tory revolt will flame forth and this time will consume him.

Which of these interpretations of the fast changing events of this week is right, we will probably know but we will probably know only in a few week's time. Back now to Charles Collingwood in New York.

COLLINGWOOD: That was the report of Howard K. Smith on the political repercussions that recent events are having in Britain.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

THURSDAY, APRIL 4, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

COLLINGWOOD: There's been a vast acceleration of events in Britain this past week, all bearing on the same question: How long will the Conservative government be able to stay in power? We asked Howard K. Smith to give us a report on this, and so now, for that story, we switch to London.

SMITH: As should be the case in every well-ordered democracy, there are two views in Britain about how the Macmillan Conservative government is doing. In the words of Labor Member of Parliament, Richard Crossman, who writes a column in a London paper, "Macmillan may hang on for a time, but his government is finished and he knows it." Or in the words of a Conservative Member of Parliament, "The Conservative's fortunes have been falling continuously since the Suez crisis last autumn, until last weekend. Then they hit rock bottom, and now they're clearly on the way back up."

The Foreign correspondent in Britain, partial to neither side, can certainly agree that something has snapped here in the past few days, but whether it was the government's neck, as Labor says, or the government's hitherto unbroken streak of bad luck, as the Tories insist, it is still hard to say. Monday, when the week began, was as black a day as any British government has faced in a long time. Rebellion was rife inside the governing Conservative Party. Its members were accusing their Cabinet of going soft in foreign affairs. The mighty Lord Salisbury had resigned from the Conservative Cabinet because it had decided to release the Cypriote Nationalist leader Archbishop Makarios from exile.

Lesser Tories were accusing their Cabinet of having done this in response to American pressure at the Bermuda conference. It was said that Macmillan was now going to accept Nasser's terms for passage through the Suez Canal also. There was genuine fear of a party rebellion materializing around Lord Salisbury over these matters and wrecking the government.

At the same time, a half million more British workers had come out on strike over the weekend, making the total nearly 2,000,000 idle; and the pound sterling, the all important statistic in this country, was falling on world markets as buyers were turning to other sources of goods. No government could withstand a serious fall in the pound for long.

At the same time on Monday, a usually reliable public opinion poll told what would happen if the government here were forced to call new elections. It said that Labor was way ahead of the government in the voter's sentiments here in Britain by nearly twelve percentage points. That is the biggest lead the poll has ever given to either British political party since World War II.

Well, late on Monday, Macmillan in a debate on the results of the Bermuda conference, persuaded his party that he had not even discussed Makarios' release with President Eisenhower at Bermuda. And he said he was not going to accept Nasser's terms for passage through Suez and that America was doing the same. This seemed to satisfy his party and it rallied behind him. By some kind of metaphysics, as yet not fully understood, the British Trade Union leaders were persuaded to call off their strike and to negotiate; and today, all of Britain has gone back to work and the pound sterling is rallying.

By political magic today it is not the reunified Tories, it is the Labor opposition which is split and wrangling. Most Laborites are in favor of holding the coming British H-bomb test in the Pacific, but the powerful Left Wing of the party wants the test stopped and a real fight is taking place over that inside the opposition, much to the Tories' relief.

Also today, Defense Minister Sandys announced

a new defense plan for Britain, which will abolish conscription and reduce the cost of defense, and may well regain the Tories some of their lost votes. And next week comes the annual national budget, which it is rumored will cut taxes and regain some more support.

It is easy, therefore, to see how the Conservatives can argue that suddenly this week their long spell of bad luck has been broken. They're on the way back up in fortune's favor. The Laborites say, however, just as persuasively, that this is just a short bout of Indian Summer before a political winter really freezes the Tories out. The strikes, they point out, were called off by one union leader's tie-breaking vote. Half the unions are furious over what they consider a sellout, and if the unions don't get all of the big increase in pay they had asked for, by negotiation, the strikes will return in sharper form. This is highly possible.

In foreign affairs, Labor says that Britain cannot go on resisting Nasser's demands. Britain must pay his tolls his way or British ships will have to travel the long way around Africa and be at a tremendous commercial disadvantage against other nations' shipping. So Macmillan will have to cave in sometime, and when he does, the barely stifled Tory revolt will flame forth and this time will consume him.

Which of these interpretations of the fast changing events of this week is right, we will probably know but we will probably know only in a few week's time. Back now to Charles Collingwood in New York.

COLLINGWOOD: That was the report of Howard K. Smith on the political repercussions that recent events are having in Britain.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 4, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

Good Evening:...

This is Charles Collingwood. I'm sitting in for Ed Murrow, who was away on assignement...and then got caught up in the bad weather most of the country's been having these past few days. His plane got in safely a little while ago... through a snowstorm..but not quite in time to do this broadcast. We had two inches of snow here in New York City today...a record for this date. That was nothing compared to the snow that fell in the Northern Plains States:Philip, South Dakota, had 20 inches. Some highways in Wyoming have been closed. A bus with 30 passengers is reported stranded near Sherman Hill, Wyoming. And there were new tornadoes today in Mississippi, Alabama, Kentucky, and Tennessee. A tonado killed two persons in Mississippi. In the other three states, there was damage, but no deaths.

President Eisenhower is speaking to the centennial dinner of the National Education Association tonight - - on how terribly important he feels education to be in the life to this country. The text of the President's speech has been released. And Mr. Eisenhower says the nation's schools are more important than our Nike anti-aircraft batteries and "more powerful than the energy of the atom." "This is true," he says, "if for no other reason than that modern weapons must be manned by highly educated personnel, if they are to be effective. And the energy of the atom can only be understood and developed by the most highly trained minds." But this is not Mr. Eisenhower's only thought. "The hope of the world," he warns, "is that wisdom can arrest conflict between brothers." He calls war " the deadly harvest of arrogant and unreasoning minds." The President contends that federal help is necessary on an emergency basis...because, in his words, "the school building program has suffered three setbacks int this generataion ---the depression of the 30's , the war of the 40's, and the Korean crisis of the 50's." Mr. Eisenhower's speech tonight is a new, direct appeal to Congress to approve his four-year school aid program. Only this afternoon a House education subcommittee went further and approved a five-year , 2 - billion dollar program of federal grants to the states to help them build more classrooms. This measure is really a compromise. Many Democrats have been urging a six - year program costing 3-billion, 600-million dollars. The Administration program would not only run just four years, but it calls for an expenditure of only a billion, 300- million dollars.

Postmaster Summerfield told reporters today..at a news conference...what he told a House committee yesterday---namely, that the Post Office Department must have an extra 47-million dollars at once, or order a drastic curtailment of service affecting the whole country. The Additional money is needed, he said, to tide the department over the final three months of this fiscal year, ending June 30th. Yesterday, in spite of this appeal, a House appropriations subcommittee voted to give the postal department only 17 of the 47 million dollars Summerfield said was essential. Summerfield told reporters today that unless there are assurances in the next 48 hours that his department will get the entire 47-million, it may be necessary to end all city carrier deliveries on Saturdays, close all post offices on Saturdays..and reduce mail deliveries in business districts to one delivery a day. It might even be necessary in the next three months, he said, to stop the sale of postal money orders.

A Senate judiciary subcommittee said today that it wanted to know whether the William Worthy (who defied the State Department ban on reporting in Red China) is the same William Worthy who....in 1944...was charged with failure to report to a camp for conscientious objectors. Reporter Worthy has issued a statement saying he is the same man. Worthy said he refused to enter the camp "because the government was assigning men geographically on the grounds of race and color." There was, he said, no charge of draft-dodging or evasion. He said the government dropped the case after it learned he was eligible for deferment under 4-F classification because of a duodenal ulcer. The Senate subcommittee has been looking into the State Department's refusal to issue Worthy a new passport. A department official brought up the subject of Worthy's draft status in testifying today before another Senate group. Worthy said the draft matter is irrelevant to the current inquiry.

The White House announced today that Prime Minister Kishi of Japan will visit Washington on June 19th for talks with President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles. The White House said they will discuss "matters of mutual interest"...and that this government "anticipated a useful exchange of views."

The Defense Department in Washington today announced the promotion of General Curtis Lemay to vice chief of staff of the United States Air Force. General Lemay has been serving for more than eight years as head of the Strategic Air Command. In his new job, he will be succeeding General Thomas D. White, who becomes Air Force Chief of Staff on the retirement of General Twining on June 30th. Twining becomes chairman of the joint chiefs of staff. The Pentagon confirmed today that General Lemnitzer, commander of U.S. forces in the Far East, has been appointed vice chief of staff of the Army. The appointment is effective July first.

The free world was shocked today by the news that the Canadian ambassador to Egypt...Egerton Norman..had taken his own life by leaping from the room of a building in Cairo. Norman was said, in testimony before the Senate internal security subcommittee, both in 1951..and again last month..that he had once been a Communist. The Canadian Embassy today issued this statement: "The Canadian ambassador has always been an extremely conscientious public servant. Recently, unpleasant publicity and accusations greatly distressed him.' In his distressed condition," the statement concludes, "Mr. Norman apparently took his own life early today." In Ottawa, the Canadian minister of external affairs

...Lester Pearson..said the charges against Norman were "disposed of years ago after careful investigation." Secretary of State Dulles expressed this country's regret over the ambassador's death.

There has been a vast acceleration of events in Britain this past week... all bearing on the question: How long will the Conservative government be able to stay in power? There are many factors --- all of them important to the military and economic security of Great Britain and, to a large extent, to the whole free world. We asked Howard K. Smith to give us a report on this, and so now --- for that story -- we switch to London.

SMITH: As should be the case in every well-ordered democracy, there are two views in Britain about how the Macmillan Conservative government is doing. In the words of Labor Member of Parliament, Richard Crossman, who writes a column in a London paper, "Macmillan may hang on for a time, but his government is finished and he knows it." Or in the words of a Conservative Member of Parliament, "The Conservative's fortunes have been falling continuously since the Suez crisis last autumn, until last weekend. Then they hit rock bottom, and now they'r clearly on the way back up."

The Foreign correspondent in Britain, partial to neither side, can certainly agree that something has snapped here in the past few days, but whether it was the government's neck, as Labor says, or the government's hitherto unbroken streak of bad luck, as the Tories insist, it is still hard to say. Monday, when the week began, was as black a day as any British government has faced in a long time. Rebellion was rife inside the governing Conservative Party. Its members were accusing their Cabinet of going soft in foreign affairs. The mighty Lord Salisburyhad resigned from the Conservative Cabinet because it has decided to release the Cypriote Nationalist leader Archbishop Makarios from exile.

Lesser Tories were accusing their Cabinet of having done this in response to American pressure at the Bermuda conference. It was said that Macmillan was now going to accept Nasser's terms for passage through the Suez Canal also. There was genuine fear of a party rebellion materializing around Lord Salisbury over these matters and wrecking the government.

At the same time, a half million more British workers had come out on strike over the weekend, making the total nearly 2,000,000 idle; and the pound sterling, the all important statistic in this country, was falling on world markets as buyers were turning to other sources of goods. No government could withstand a serious fall in the pound for long.

At the same time on Monday, a usually reliable public opinion poll told what would happen if the government here were forced to call new elections. It said that Labor was way ahead of the government in the voter's sentiments here in Britain by nearly twelve percentage points. That is the biggest lead the poll had ever given to either British political party since World War II.

Well, late on Monday, Macmillan in a debate on the results of the Bermuda conference persuaded his party that he had not even discussed Makarios' release with President Eisenhower at Bermuda. And he said he was not going to accept Nasser's terms for passage through Suez and that America was doing the same. This seemed to satisfy his party and it rallied behind him. By some kind of metaphysics, as yet not fully understood, the British Trade Union leaders were persuaded to call off their strike and to negotiate;, and today, all of Britain has gone back to work and the pound sterling is rallying.

By political magic today it is not the reunified Tories, it is the Labor opposition which is split and wrangling. Most Laborites are in favor of holding the coming British H-bomb test in the Pacific, but the powerful Left Wing of the party wants the test stopped and a real fight is taking place over that inside the opposition, much to the Tories' relief.

Also today, Defense Minister Sandys announced a new defense plan for Britain, which will abolish conscription and reduce the cost of defense, and may well regain the Tories some of their lost votes. And next week comes the annual national budget, which it is rumored will cut taxes and regain some more support.

It is easy, therefore, to see how the Conservatives can argue that suddenly this week their long spell of bad luck has been broken. They'r on the way back up in fortune's favor. The Laborites say, however, just as persuasively, that this is just a short bout of Indian Summer before a political winter really freezes the Tories out. The strikes, they point out, were called off by one union leader's tie-breaking vote. Half the unions are furious over what they consider a sellout, and if the unions don't get all of the big increase in pay they had asked for, by negotiation, the strikes will return in sharper form. This is highly possible.

In foreign affairs, Labor says thet Britain cannot go on resisting Nasser's demands. Britain must pay his tolls his way or British ships will have to travel the long way around Africa and be at a tremendous commercial disadvantage against other nations' shipping. So Macmillan will have to cave in sometime, and when he does, the barely stifled Tory revolt will flame forth and this time will comsume him.

Which of these interpretations of the vast changing events of this week is right, we will probably know but we will probably know only in a few week's time. Back now to Charles Collingwood in New York.

COLLINGWOOD: That was the report of Howard K. Smith on the political repercussions recent events have had in Britain. This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with Ed Murrow's Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: It seems that...for so long as we can remember...Britain has been plagued with major problems. But an Englishman does not easily despair. Ralph Waldo Emerson once said, "This aged England. I see her not dispirited." And it was Emerson who also said, "I find the Englishman to be him of all men who stands firmest in his shoes." England well remembers she has seen dark days before.

And as Ed Murrow would say, "Goodnight and good luck!"

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Apr. 5, 1957

This is the news:

The Moscow radio warned Holland again tonight that its cities will be "obliterated", if American atomic bases in Holland are ever used against the Soviet Union. Holland received a similar warning from Russia last night. So did Britain and West Germany. And before that, Soviet Premier Bulganin sent warning notes... in the same vein... to Norway and Denmark.

Moscow said today that it is "highly doubtful" Britain will carry through its new, revolutionary defense policy. The British government announced yesterday... in a "white paper"... that it was abolishing military conscription and that the size of the British armed forces, in the next five years, would be cut almost in half. Henceforth, for its defense, Britain would depend increasingly on nuclear weapons---bombs and missiles. Moscow sought to belittle the program today in its radio broadcasts. The British press greeted the action of the Conservative government with almost unqualified approval. There has been no official reaction yet in Washington. The United States was informed of the British program in advance. But, despite this, there seems to have been an element of surprise. President Eisenhower agreed... at the Bermuda conference... to supply Britain with guided missiles, which form an integral part of the new program. Chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services Committee said today that the Air Force is making good progress in the development of its intermediate range ballistic missile. He said the I.R.B.M., which has a range of about 15-hundred miles, will be operational at "a reasonably early date." But this, he cautioned, does not mean a matter of days. He said, "It more likely will be a matter of months." ~~Russell also said the B-52 bomber is being made into a more effective weapon, "with improved range and operational capabilities." Russell was speaking on the basis of briefings his committee has received in the past two days from Air Force leaders.~~

It's announced that Russia carried out another nuclear weapons test on Wednesday. The announcement... which was made simultaneously in London and Washington... gave no details.

~~Indonesia today protested Britain's decision to hold nuclear tests this summer in the Southwest Pacific. The British government rejected previous protests by Japan. The Indonesian note... delivered today in London... called such tests "dangerous to the well-being of mankind."~~

Chancellor Adenauer indicated today that the new West German Army must have tactical atomic weapons. Adenauer told a news conference these weapons basically are "nothing more than a development of artillery." And he added, "We cannot renounce for our troops the newest developments." Adenauer conceded that the question of larger atomic weapons should be treated separately. He said the international situation has deteriorated in the past 12 to 18 months. "That we in Germany have peace," he said, "is solely due to the fact that the atomic arm of the United States is extraordinarily strong."

The United States is reported to have offered economic aid to Poland amounting to about 75-million dollars. A Polish economic mission has been in Washington... discussing possible aid... since the latter part of February. Seventy-five million dollars would be [redacted] a fourth of the 300-million Poland requested last month.

The United States and Yugoslavia signed an agreement today in Belgrade, under which Yugoslavia will get 13-million dollars' worth of American cotton and wheat.

In Washington today, the House Appropriations Committee voted another slash in [redacted] President Eisenhower's budget. [redacted] This time, it was a reduction of 218-million dollars in the request for the Commerce Department and its related agencies---a cut amounting to 25 percent. The biggest slice was made in funds requested for the Maritime Administration for ship construction. And the Office of Strategic Information was cut off without a cent. The committee approved [redacted] the hiring of 33-hundred additional technicians by the Civil Aeronautics Administration... because, it said, of increased air traffic and the need to man new navigation-control facilities. Altogether, in acting on six money bills, the committee has voted to cut Mr. Eisenhower's budget by more than a billion dollars.

The House Appropriations Committee acted today in the crisis in the Post Office Department. Postmaster Summerfield has said that unless his department gets an additional 47-million dollars right away, it will have to curtail its service drastically. Yesterday, a subcommittee recommended letting the department have an extra 17-million dollars to tide it over the next three months. Summerfield insisted he has to have the whole 47-million, and today the full committee agreed to take up the matter next Friday... with strong indications that it will meet Summerfield at least part way. ~~Summerfield told a news conference late this afternoon that he will issue orders to curtail postal service... beginning a week from tomorrow... if Congress does not give him the extra money he says he needs. The curtailment, he said, will include the suspension of all Saturday mail deliveries... and window service at all post offices in the country.~~

Secretary of State Dulles hoped to confer today with Secretary General Hammarskjold, here in New York. Mr. Dulles noted... before his take-off from Washington... that he had not had an opportunity to see the secretary general since the Hammarskjold-Nasser talks last week in Cairo. Dulles' plane, however, was delayed by bad weather. ~~unable to land in New York because of bad weather. And he had to return to Washington without keeping the appointment.~~

Israel is reported determined to try to exercise its right of passage through the Suez Canal, even if this means provoking a new crisis in the Middle East. The Israeli ambassador... Abba Eban... is said to have stated this position on Tuesday, when he conferred with Undersecretary of State Herter. Eban reportedly told Herter that any agreement with Egypt for operation of the canal must include Israel's right... recognized by the United Nations... to use the waterway. Israel also feels that it has a clear legal right to send ships through the Gulf of Aqaba. The United States has suggested getting an opinion from the World Court on whether Egypt can legally close the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba to Israeli shipping. Eban is said to have told Herter that no such ruling is necessary.

Egypt tonight accused Israel of making "provocative statements and threats of attack."

Edward R. Murrow: April 5, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

One of the puzzling phenomena in American life is the complacency of the public with a third-rate postal service. This comment is in order today because of the battle between the House Appropriations Committee and Postmaster General Summerfield over the restoration of thirty million dollars in the postal budget. Mr. Summerfield is threatening to stop rural and city mail deliveries on Saturdays altogether, along with other curtailments, if he doesn't get his money. The committee is to decide next Friday.

The impoverishment of the postal service has been going on for a long time, and what is hard to explain is that the public doesn't mind. If it minded, the House Appropriations Committee wouldn't dream of crippling the postal services still further. ~~But the only concession that Congress has made recently to public opinion over postal service was its refusal in the last session to raise first-class postal rates to help wipe out the huge postal deficit. Having done this, it did nothing to wipe out the deficit, or to make the postal service efficient.~~

It now is quite reasonable to speak of the balkanization of the American postal services. It would be hard to find a country that called itself ~~civilized~~ Modern that has as few mail deliveries as we do. In Tokyo the mail deliveries number six a day, and no large European capital is without at least four to five deliveries. New York City, which boasts of having the busiest post office in the world, one that carries one-tenth of the nation's postal load, has one residential delivery a day. And now Postmaster General Summerfield talks of reducing deliveries to five a week.

Foreign postal deliveries are better, not only in number but in speed. Mail goes overnight almost from any part of England or France to any other part. It crosses London and Paris in a few hours. In New York, mail may take two days or longer to get from one side of Central Park to the other. This came out in a test the New York Times made of mail handling, which showed that less than fifty percent of the letters sent from and to New York residents were delivered overnight. Two days is the usual time for delivery between relatively close cities, like New York and Washington, almost as though trains and planes didn't exist.

Because the United States Post Office is one of the biggest public utilities in the world, with its budget of around three billion dollars, its inadequacy is often put down to bureaucracy. But it is nearer the truth to say that the public can get what it wants if it is willing to pay for it, and it no longer is willing to pay for first-class postal service. The three-cent rate for first-class letters has been in effect since the depression year of 1932, without regard to the doubling of costs since then.

As compared with our three-cent rate, the British rate is four-point-seventeen cents, the French is seven-point-five cents, the Swedish is eight-point five cents, the German is four-point-eight cents. Postal services show a profit in Canada, Britain, France, Sweden and Germany, and the only sizeable deficit in Europe is Switzerland, where it is ten percent of the total postal budget. Ours is twenty-seven percent.

It is possible to attribute some of our postal shortcomings to policies in the Post Office department, which gives too many services that can't pay for themselves. But by and large the fault is with the public, which obviously could have the best and doesn't want it.

This raises some interesting speculations. One is that we are less dependent on personal mail than we used to be. More communication between business men, members of a family and friends is done by telephone, even though it costs more. One must think so, or the outcry against exasperating slowness of mail would shake the walls of Congress. Once upon a time the American community was knit together by its postal services. That was in the time when Benjamin Franklin was proud to be at the head of the colonial posts. Had it not been for a reliable delivery of letters in colonial days there might never have been a concerted uprising against the British. Today, the country is knit together by other media, by television, radio, an almost instantaneous news service and the telephone, as well as by the letters and periodicals that come through the mail. The [illegible] the mails seems to be going steadily down.

STET

The inconvenience of slow and infrequent mail deliveries probably cost the country -- that is, business and private individuals -- far more than a first-class mail service would come to. Economy in the postal services can be demonstrated to be highly expensive. But if the public doesn't mind, Congress will not face up to the problem, and we shall continue to be the world's richest and best organized country, content to have one of the world's poorer postal services.

Word for Today

Benjamin Franklin was a postal official back in colonial times. And if he were here today, he might be making some suggestions. Ben, for example, was a crank on the subject of economy. He once said, "'Tis a well spent penny [redacted] saves a groat." But in another proverb, he said: "An empty bag cannot stand upright." (The post office money bags, he [redacted] might say, need a bit of filling.)

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 5, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Moscow radio warned Holland again tonight that its cities will be "obliterated", if American atomic bases in Holland are ever used against the Soviet Union. Holland received a similar warning from Russia last night. So did Britain and West Germany. And before that, Soviet Premier Bulganin sent warning notes...in the same vein...to Norway and Denmark.

Moscow said today that it is "highly doubtful"Britain will carry through its new, revolutionary defense policy. The British government announced yesterday ..in a "white paper"...that it was abolishing military conscription and that the size of the British armed forces, in the next five years, would be cut almost in half. Henceforth, for its defense, Britain would depend increasingly on nuclear weapons -- bombs and missiles. Moscow sought to belittle the program today in its radio broadcasts. The British press greeted the action of the Conservative government with almost unqualified approval. There has been no official reaction yet in Washington. The United States was informed of the British program in advance. But, despite this, there seems to have been an element of surprise. President Eisenhower agreed...at the Bermuda conference... to supply Britain with guided missiles, which form an integral part of the new program. Chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services Committee said today that the Air Force is making good progress in the development of its intermediate range ballistic missile. He said the I.R.B.M., which has a range of about 15-hundres miles, will be operational at "a reasonably early date." But this, he cautioned, does not mean a matter of days. He said, "It more likely will be a matter of months."

It's announced that Russia carried out another nuclear weapons test on Wednesday. The announcement...which was made simultaneously in London and Washington...gave no details.

Chancellor Adenauer indicated today that the new West Germany Army must have tactical atomic weapons. Adenauer told a news conference these weapons basically are "nothing more than a development of artillery." And he added, "We cannot renounce for our troops the newest developments." Adenauer conceded that the question of larger atomic weapons should be treated separately. He said the international situation has deteriorated in the past 12 to 18 months. "That we in Germany have peace," he said, "is solely due to the fact that the atomic arm of the United States is extraordinarily strong."

The United States is reported to have offered economic aid to Poland amounting to about 75 million dollars. A Polish economic mission had been in Washington...discussing possible aid...since the latter part of February. Seventy five million dollars would be a fourth of the 300-million Poland requested last month.

The United States and Yugoslavia signed an agreement today in Belgrade, under which Yugoslavia will get 13-million dollars' worth of American cotton and wheat.

In Washington today, the House Appropriations Committee voted another slash in President Eisenhower's budget. This time it was a reduction of 218-million dollars in the request for the Commerce Department and its related agencies -- a cut amounting to 25 percent. The biggest slice was made in funds requested for the Maritime Administration for ship construction. And the Office of Strategic Information was cut off without a cent. The committee approved the hiring of 33 - hundred additional technicians by the Civil Aeronautics Administration...because, it said, of increased air traffic and the need to man new navigation - control faiilities. Altogether, in acting on six money bills, the committee has voted to cut Mr. Eisenhower's budget by more than a billion dollars.

The House Appropriations Committee acted today in the crisis in the Post office Department. Postmaster Summerfield has said that unless his department gets an additional 47 million dollars right away, it will have to curtail its service drastically. Yesterday, a subcommittee recommended letting the department have an extra 17 - million dollars to tide it over the next three months. Summerfield insisted he has to have the whole 47 million, and today the full committee agreed to take up the matter next Friday...with strong indications that it will meet Summerfield at least part way.

Secretary of State Dulles hoped to confer today with Secretary General Hammarskjold, here in New York. Mr. Dulles noted...before his take-off from Washington...that he had not had an opportunity to see the secretary general since the Hammarskjold - Nasser talks last week in Cairo. Dulles's plane, however, was delayed by bad weather.

Israel is reported determined to try to exercise its right of passage through the Suez Canal, even if this means provoking a new crisis in the Middle East. The Israeli ambassador...Abba Eban...is said to have stated this position on Tuesday, when he conferred with Undersecretary of State Herter. Eban reportedly told Herter that any agreement with Egypt for operation of the canal must include Israel's right...recognized by the United Nations...to use the waterway. Israel also feels that it has a clear legal right to send ships through theGulf of Aqaba. The United States has suggested getting an opinion from the World Court on whether Egypt can legally close the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba to Israeli shipping. Eban is said to have told Herter that no such ruling ns necessary.

Egypt tonight accused Israel of making "provocative statements and threats of attack."

One of the puzzling phenomena in American life is the complacency of the public with a third-rate postal service. This comment is in order today because of the battle between the House Appropriations Committee and postmaster General Summerfield over the restoration of thirty million dollars in the postal budget. Mr. Summerfield is threatening to stop rural and city mail deliveries on Saturdays altogether, along with other curtailments, if he doesn't get his money. The committee is to decide next Friday.

The impoverishment of the postal service has been going on for a long time, and what is hard to explain is that the public doesn't mind. If it minded, the House Appropriations Committee wouldn't dream of crippling the postal services still further.

It now is quite reasonable to speak of the "balkanization" of the American postal services. It would be hard to find a country that called itself modern that has as few mail deliveries as we do. In Tokyo the mail deliveries number six a day, and no large European capital is without at least four to to five deliveries. New York City, which boasts of having the busiest post office in the world, one that carries one-tenth of the nation's postal load, has one residential delivery a day. And now Postmaster General Summerfield talks of reducing deliveries to five a week.

Foreign postal deliveries are better, not only in number but in speed. Mail goes overnight almost from any part of England or France to any other part. It crosses London and Paris in a few hours. In New York, mail may take two days or longer to get from one side of Central Park to the other. This came out is a test the New York Times made of mail handling, which showed that less than fifty percent of the letters sent from and to New York residents were delivered overnight. Two days is the usual time for delivery between relatively close cities, like New York and Washington, almost as though trains and planes didn't exist.

Because the United States Post Office is one of the biggest public utilities in the world, with its budget of around three billion dollars, its inadequacy is often put down to bureaucracy. But it is nearer the truth to say that the public can get what it wants if it is willing to pay for it, and it no longer is willing to pay for first class postal service. The three-cent rate for first-class letters has been in effect since the depression year of 1932, without regard to the doubling of costs since then.

As compared with our three-cent rate, the British rate is four-point seventeen cents, the French is seven-point-five cents, the Swedish is eight-point five cents, the German is four-point eight cents. Postal services show a profit in Canada, Britain, France, Sweden and Germany, and the only sizeable deficit in Europe is Switzerland, where it is ten percent of the total postal budget. Ours is twenty-seven percent.

It is possible to attribute some of our postal shortcomings to policies in the Post Office department, which gives too many services that can't pay for themselves. But by and large the fault is with the public, which obviously could have the best and doesn't want it.

This raises some interesting speculations. One is that we are less dependent on personal mail than we used to be. More communication between business men, members of a family and friends is done by telephone, even though it costs more. One must think so, or the outcry against exasperating slowness of mail would shake the walls of Congress. Once upon a time the American community was knit together by its postal services. That was in the time when Benjamin Franklin was proud to be at the head of the colonial posts. Had it not been for a reliable delivery of letters in colonial days, there might never have been a concerted uprising against the British. Today, the country is knit together by other media, by television, radio, and almost instantaneous news service and telephone, as well as by the letters and periodicals that come through the mail. The dependence on the mails seems to be goingsteadily down.

The inconvenience of slow and infrequent mail deliveries probably cost the country - that is business and private individuals - far more than a first-class mail service would come to. Economy in the postal services can be demonstrated to be highly expensive. But if the public doesn't mind, Congress will not face up to the problem, and we shall continue to be the world's richest and best organized country, content to have one of the world's poorer postal services.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

ANNOUNCER:

MURROW: Benjamin Franklin was a postal official back in colonial times. And if he were here today, he might be making some suggestions. Ben, for example, was a crank of the subject of economy. He once said, "'Tis a well spent penny saves a groat." But in another proverb, he said: "An empty bag cannot stand upright." The post office money bags, he might say, need a bit of filling.

Goodnight and good luck.

Lesueur for Murrow Mon., Apr. 8, 1957

Good evening:

Secretary of State Dulles recommended a new procedure today for administering foreign aid. Mr. Dulles wants DIRECT military assistance transferred to the Defense Department. (The cost would be included in the Defense Department budget.) Money for purely ECONOMIC aid would be set aside in a special fund. And up to 750-million dollars a year... from this fund... would be available to friendly countries on the basis of easy, long-term loans. Mr. Dulles made these proposals to a special Senate committee... which has been making a study of the foreign aid problem. (I should like to discuss this question of foreign aid further, in a few minutes).

~~After his testimony today, Secretary Dulles left Washington by plane for a vacation at his Duck Island retreat in Lake Ontario. He'll be gone about a week.~~

The United States has formally signed an agreement with Saudi Arabia, entitling U.S. forces to use the Dhahran Air Base for another five years. The agreement was reached in principle during the recent state visit of King Saud in Washington. And the actual signing... on April 2nd... was announced today by the State Department. In return for rights to the air base the United States will continue to sell Saudi Arabia military equipment... and help train Saudi Arabian troops. We will improve the harbor of Dammam, on the Persian Gulf. And U.S. officials say that... in time... we may sell the Saudi Arabians jet aircraft for training purposes. However, [redacted] in negotiating the agreement, the United States was NOT able to get the Arab kingdom to lift its ban on American servicemen of Jewish faith.

The last major obstacle has now been cleared from the Suez Canal. For the first time since the outbreak of hostilities five months ago, the canal... physically, at least... is now open to vessels displacing up to 20-thousand tons. The Egyptian Canal Authority has yet to declare... formally... that the waterway is open. That announcement MAY come tomorrow. The last BIG obstacle to traffic was the Egyptian frigate "Abukir". It was towed out of the channel by two German tugs... while boat-whistles blew and crowds cheered from the shore.

Reports from the Middle East tonight say Israel has agreed to the erection of a 42-mile barbed-wire fence along the border of the Gaza Strip. Egypt is said to be on the verge of agreeing to the barrier, as the result of talks between Israel and Egypt... sponsored by the United Nations commander, General Burns.

Israel protested to the UN Security Council today, over the alleged infiltration of Israeli territory by Arab Fedayeen from the Gaza Strip. Israel charged that there have been NINETEEN separate incidents involving Arab infiltrators since the patroling of the Gaza frontier was taken over by the UN Emergency Force.

While Israel was filing its protest... here in New York... Egypt was accusing Israeli patrols of kidnaping two Arabs in the Gaza Strip, over the week-end.

Cairo newspapers said today that President Nasser has proposed a new summit meeting... of the heads of state of Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Jordan. No date for such a meeting appeared in the Egyptian press. The Cairo radio said today that Egypt will sink any Israeli ship that tries to go through the Suez Canal. And ONE semi-official paper goes so far as to threaten the "destruction" of Israel, if such an attempt is made.

Progress MAY have been made today at the five-power disarmament talks in London. Russia is said to have indicated interest in a proposed "first step"... amounting to a 10 percent cut in armaments across the board. Harold Stassen, representing the United States, is reported to have reacted to this... by saying America would agree to a further 15 percent cut, PROVIDED the first cut of 10 percent is agreed on and satisfactorily carried out. Sources close to the talks say the Russian delegate called Stassen's statement "very important"... that he promised it would be given careful study.

The Soviet Union has carried out another nuclear weapons test---the second in less than a week. Last Friday, it was announced ~~simultaneously~~... in London and ~~[illegible]~~ Washington... that the Soviets had set off a nuclear blast on Wednesday. Now it's revealed that Russia followed this up with another test on Saturday. Again, no details are divulged.

The ~~[illegible]~~ timing of these Russian tests is interesting. For weeks now, Russia has been warning various NATO ~~countries~~ ALLIES that they run the risk of obliteration, if they allow U.S. atomic bases to be set up on their soil. The latest country to receive the Soviet warning is Greece. The Moscow radio warns Greece ~~[illegible]~~ is in danger of annihilation with the rest, unless it follows what Moscow chooses to call "the road of peaceful coexistence with the U.S.S.R." Russia ~~has~~ also repeated its earlier warning to Denmark.

~~A country that has no desire to possess the hydrogen bomb is West Germany; at least, not at this time. Defense Minister Strauss confirmed today that last week, when Chancellor Adenauer indicated West Germany must have atomic weapons, he was speaking of TACTICAL weapons... such as atomic artillery... and NOT big nuclear weapons like the hydrogen bomb. And it will be at least 20 months, Strauss said, before the West German Army is ready for A weapons of even the small, tactical variety.~~

For the French, this was a day given over to the welcoming of Queen Elizabeth of Great Britain... and her husband, Prince Philip. The queen was greeted with a 101-gun salute, as she officially entered Paris through the Porte d'Orleans. Later, when she rode up the Champs Elysees to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, she was cheered by one of the largest crowds that famous boulevard has ever known. And tonight... at a state dinner... she toasted the French nation. She said: "May the confident understanding between the French Republic and the United Kingdom always endure."

In Indonesia, President Sukarno has appointed "a cabinet of experts"... in hopes of ending the crisis that has threated to tear his country apart. The new emergency cabinet has 23 members---three of whom are considered to be Communists or fellow-travelers. But the new prime minister... Dr. Djuanda... belongs to no political party. He is a former minister of finance and is regarded as friendly to the United States. The cabinet is independent of Parliament. (It can't be voted out of existence). For this reason, the leader of the largest Moslem party as called it unconstitutional. And there is some question whether Moslems named to the cabinet will agree to serve.

Here in this country... in Atlantic City... the United Auto Workers voted today to set up a "public review board", to police the union against any violation of the AFL-CIO ethical practices code. The seven-member board of distinguished citizens outside the union was created through an amendment to the U.A.W. constitution.

Lesueur april 8,1957 murrow-7:45p

Well

Income tax time is a time of reckoning for the government as well as for you and me... And its no secret that one of President Eisenhower's "big-spending" items is in trouble.. That item is Foreign Aid. the President plans to put four and a quarter billion dollars on the line in the upcoming year, and make new committments to extend this spending into the future.

Congressmen have singled out Foreign Aid for a cut.. a sampling of their steady stream of letters from the voters shows that foreign aid is mentioned by tax-payers more than any other single item..

Congressmen tell us that this is one thing that writers-in get specific about, when they give their opinions where congress should cut the budget, in order to clear the road for later relief, from the current high personal income tax levels..

So it comes as no surprise today that Secretary of State Dulles has come up with a new approach to our massive foreign AID program..

Now Everyone knows that foreign aid won't be shut off.

even without any new action by Congress, the 1958 Foreign Aid outlay would exceed three billion dollars, because of previous committments..

[redacted] although foreign aid may be a natural and specific target for the heavily-burdened tax-payer, Congress itself is keenly aware of its importance in the cold War. Particularly the fact that it may save us a lot of money in the future, and blood, as well..

Nevertheless Congress is seeking ways to cut taxes after next year, and its looking for places to cut at least three billion dollars from the next fiscal year.. #

The conduct of our foreign policy is, of course, Mr. Dulles' responsibility and the foreign aid program is "his" means of dangling a carrot in front of real and potential allies.

So the new approach he outlined today, while not cutting his "precious" foreign aid, would at least make it clearer to the tax-payer and to congress, as to where and how it is being spent..

The Secretary of State suggests, that because foreign aid is a "long-term proposition"--in other words, ONE we're going to have to live with for a long time--[redacted]e it should be broken down into its direct and indirect categories--- including a special fund, to lend up to 750 million dollars a year, to friendly nations, on easy terms..

XXXXXXXXX

So far as direct military aid is concerned, Mr. Dulles proposes that this be transferred to the Defense Department. and included in The Defense Budget - Actually ~~This~~ ~~This~~ would really be a book-keeping job and not a cut in foreign aid, but it would be in line with the thoughts of many congressmen.. They feel that the tax-paying public has long been confused by lumping all foreign aid into a single appropriations bill..

Since a great deal of foreign aid money goes into arming friendly allies, a lot of congressmen think this point should be emphasized..

Now Mr. Dulles proposes that direct military aid be continued at about the current level, under The Defense Dept — [redacted] cutting [redacted] the [redacted] — si[redacted] weapons. under[redacted] — that is, giving Regarding technical assistance, [redacted] less favored countries the "know-how" to raise their [redacted] living standards, Mr. Dulles thinks this should be continued "on much the present basis."

But What really attracted the attention of congress today, was Dulles' suggestion of a major change.. That is, a special [redacted] revolving fund for economic development loans to our free world allies..

The present mutual assistance program operates on direct grants of money to friendly allies.. The Dulles program would change these direct grants into loans..

The Secretary of State [redacted] deliberately left the details of this new plan "VAGUE" [redacted]. Said administration leaders wanted to "feel their way" in devising it...Dulles said "he" [redacted] was thinking of long-term, low interest loans.. some of them repayable in the "soft" currencies of the borrowing nations.

The fund would act as a bank, he thought, and make the loans under "broad purposes" described by congress.. Eventually, he thinks the fund [redacted] "could be" self-sustaining. He didn't mention any figures to start it off, except enough for a couple of years ahead, but eventually he thought it might [redacted] reach 750 million dollars a year...

On the whole, we're told that Mr. Dulles's plan got a friendly reception from the Senate committee. Altho last year the Administration effort to put foreign aid on a long term basis prooved unsuccessful. But this might be a way to get around Congressional reluctance to committ future sessions of congress to long-term outlays..

Mr. Dulles made it clear that he wasn't suggesting his plan be adopted THIS year.. But it does look like a preview of President Eisenhower's message to congress on foreign AID expected next month. a program which Dulles said "must continue--lest this country face a peril--the like of which we have never known."

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news-- (cue)

But first - Stuart Metz

One of the best chefs among our nato allies, was reduced to tears today...All becuz of too much publicity...It seems the three-level cake of spun candy he prepared for Queen Elizabeth's reception, was televised before she saw it...And the heat of the TV lights caused it to collapse...But the French are still resourceful. The chef trimmed the cake down to two layers, applied icing over the top--And Maybe Queen Elizabeth didn't know the difference..

This is Larry LeSueur---good nite..

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRUL 8, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone:

Secretary of State Dulles recommended a new procedure today for administering foreign aid. Mr. Dulles wanted direct military assistance transferred to the Defense Department. The cost would be included in the Defense Department budget. Money for purely economic aid would be set aside in a special fund. And up to 750-million dollars a year...from this fund...would be available to friendly countries on the basis of easy, long-term loans. Mr. Dulles made these proposals to a special Senate committee which has been making a study of the foreign aid problem. (I should like to discuss this question of foreign aid further, in a few minutes.)

The United States has formally signed an agreement with Saudi Arabia, entitling U.S. forces to use the Dhahran Air Base for another five years. The agreement was reached in principle during the recent state visit of King Saud in Washington. And the acutal signing...on April 2nd..was announced today by the State Department. In return for rights to the air base, the United States will continue to sell Saudi Arabia military equipment and help train Saudi Arabian troops. We will improve the harbor of Damman, on the Persian Gulf. And U.S. officials say that in time..we may sell the Saudi Arabians jet aircraft for training purposes. However, in negotiating the agreement, the United States was not able to get the Arab kingdom to lift its ban on American servicemen of Jewish faith.

The last major obstacle has now been cleared from the Suez Canal. For the first time since the outbreak of hostilities five months ago, the canal ...physically , at least..is not open to vessels displacing up to 20-thousand tons. The Egyptian Canal Authority has yet to declare..formally..that the waterway is open. That announcement may come tomorrow. The last big obstacle to trafic was the Egyptian frigate "Abukir." It was towed out of the channel by two German tugs while boat - whistles blew and crowds cheered from the shore.

Reports from the Middle East tonight say Israel has agreed to the erection of a 42 - mile barbed wire fence along the border of the Gaza Strip. Egypt is said to be on the verge of agreeing to the barrier, as the result of talks between Israel and Egypt...sponsored by the United Nations commander, General Burns.

Israel protested to the UN Security Council today, over alleged infiltration of Israeli territory by Arab Fedayeen from the Gaza Strip. Israel charged that there have been nineteen separate incidents involving Arab infiltrators since the patroling of the Gaza frontier was taken over by the UN Emergency Force.

While Israel was filing its protest here in New York...Egypt was accusing Israeli patrols of kidnaping two Arabs in the Gaza Strip, over the week-end.

Cairo newspapers said today that President Nasser has proposed a new summit meeting..of the heads of state of Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Jordan. No date for such a meeting appeared in the Egyptian press. The Cairo radio said today that Egypt will "sink"any Israeli ship that tries to go through the Suez Canal. And one "semi - official" paper goes so far as to "threaten the destruction"of Israel is such an attempt is made.

Progress may have been made today at the five-power disarmament talks in London. Russia is said to have indicated interest in a proposed "first step" amounting to a 10 percent cut in armamants across the board. Harold Stassen, representing the United States, is reported to have reacted to this.. by saying America would agree to a further 15 percent cut, provided the first cut of 10 percent is agreed on and satisfactorily carried out. Sources close to the talks say the Russian delegate called Stassen's statement "very important" that he promised it would be given careful study.

The Soviet Union has carried out another "nuclear weapons" test--the second in less than a week. Last Friday, it was announced in London and Washington..that the Soviets had set off a nuclear blast on Wednesday. Now it's revealed that Russia followed this up with another test on Saturday. Again, no details are divulged.

The timing of these Russian tests is interesting. For weeks now, Russia has been warning various NATO allies that they run the risk of obliteration, if the allow U.S. atomic bases to be set up on their soil. The latest country to receive the Soviet warning is Greece. The Moscow radio warns Greece its in danger of annihilation with the rest, unless it follows what Moscow chooses to call "the road to peaceful coexistence with the U.S.S.R." Russia also repeated its earlier warning to Denmark.

For the French, this was a day given over to the welcoming of Queen Elizabeth of Great Britain...and her husband, Prince Philip. The queen was greeted with a 101-gun salute, as she officially entered Paris through the Port d'Orleans. Later, when whe rode up the Champs Elysees to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, she was cheered by one of the largest crowds that famous boulevard has ever known. And tonight..at a state dinner..she toasted the Frenh nation. She said:"may the confident understanding between the French Republic and the United Kingdom always endure."

Here in this country..in Atlantic City..the United Auto Workers voted today to set up a "public review board", to police the union against any violation of the AFL-CIO "ethical" practcces code. The seven member board of distinguished citizens outside the union was created through an amendment to the UAW constitution.

Income tax time is a time of reckoning for the government as well as for you and me. And its no secret that one of President Eisenhower's "big-spending" items is in trouble. That item is Foreign Aid. The President plans to put four and a quarter billion dollars on the line in the upcoming year, and make new commitments to extend this spending into the future.

Congressmen have singled out Foreign Aid for a cut. A sampling of their steady stream of letters from the voters shows that foreign aid is mentioned by tax-payers more than any other single item.

Congressmen tell us that this is one thing that writers-in get specific about, when they give their opinions where congress should cut the budget, in order to clear theroad for later relief from the current high personal income tax levels.

So it somes as no surprise today that Secretary of State Dulles has come up with a new approach to our massive aid program.

Now everyone knows that foreign aid won't be shut off, even without any new action by Congress, the 1958 Foreign Aid outlay would exceed three billion dollars, because of previous commitments.

Although foreign aid may be a natural and specific target for the heavily-burdened tax-payer, Congress itself is keenly aware of its importance in the cold war. Particularly the fact that it may save us a lot of money in the future and blood as well.

Nevertheless Congress is seeking ways to cut taxes after next year, and its looking for places to cut at least three billion dollars from the next fiscal year.

The conduct of our foreign policy is, of course, Mr. Dulles' responsibility and the foreign aid program is "his" means of dangling a carrot in front of the real and potential allies.

So the new approach he outlined today, while not cutting his precious foreign aid, would at least make it clearero to the tax-payer and to Congress as to where and how it is being spent.

The Secretary of State suggests, that because foreign aid is a "long-term" proposition--in other words, one we're going to have to live with for a long time--it should be broken down into its direct and indirect categories--including a special fund, to lend up to 750 million dollars a year, to friendly nations on easy terms.

So far as direct military aid is concerned, Mr. Dulles proposes that this be transferred to the Defense Department, and included in the Defense Budget. Actually this would really be a book-keeping job and not a cut in foreign aid, but it would be in line with the thoughts of many congressmen. They feel that the tax-paying public has long been confused by lumping all foreign aid into a single appropriations bill.

Since a great deal of foreign aid money goes into arming friendly allies, a lot of congresmen think this point should be emphasized.

Now Mr. Dulles proposes that a direct military aid be continued at about the current level, under the Defense Department.

Regarding technical assistance that is giving less favored countries the "know-how" to raise their living standards, Mr. Dulles thinks this should be continued "on much the present basis."

But what really attracted the attention of congress today, was Dulles suggestion of a major change..that is, a special revolving fund for economic development loans to our free world allies.

The present mutual assistance program operates on direct grants of money to friendly allies. The Dulles program would change these direct grants into loans.

The Secretary of State deliberttely left the details of this new plan vague. He said administration leaders wanted to "feel their way" in devising it. Dulles said he was thinking of long-term, low interest loans..some of them repayable in the "soft" currencies of the borrowing nations.

The fund would act as a bank, he thought, and make the loans under "broad purposes" described by congress. Eventually, he thinks the fund could be self-sustaining. He didn't mention any figures to start it off, except enough for a couple of years ahead, but eventually he thought it might reach 750 million dollars a year.

On the whole Mr. Dulles's plan got a friendly reception from the Senate committee. Although last year the administration effort to put foreign aid on a long-term basis proved unsuccessful. But this might be a way to get around Congressional reluctance to commit future sessions of congress to long-term outlays.

Mr. Dulles made it clear that he wasn't suggesting his plan be adopted this year. But it does look like a preview of President Eisenhower's message to congress on foreign aid expexted next month..a program which Dulles said "must continue--lest this country face a peril--the like of which we have never known."

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news, but first, Stuart Metz.

METZ:

LESUEUR: One of the best chefs among our NATO allies, was reduced to tears today.. All because of too much publicity. It seems the three-level cake of spun candy he prepared for Queen Elizabeth's reception, was televised before she saw it...And the heat of the TV lights caused it to collapse. But the French are still resourceful. The chef trimmed the cake down to two layers, applied icing over the top, and maybe Queen Elizabeth didn't know the difference.

This is Larry LeSueur--good night.

Good evening, everyone.... Here's what happened today

The United States is reported to have made a "new approach" to Egypt... in the hope of reaching an agreement for international operation of the Suez Canal. Dispatches from Cairo early today described the talks between the United States and Egypt as "deadlocked." But the American ambassador, Raymond Hare, saw the Egyptian foreign minister for an hour this afternoon. And he is reported to have made "new" proposals. This report is accredited to "authoritative Egyptian sources." It is NOT officially confirmed. The United States, of course, wants President Nasser to reaffirm Egypt's adherence to the famous "six principles" endorsed by the U.N. Security Council last October. The first of these principles is that there shall be "free and open passage through the Suez Canal, without discrimination." Another is that the canal shall be "insulated" from the politics of any country. Egypt joined in endorsing these principles in October.... but has remained silent on them ever since.

Ships of 30-foot draft began using the Suez Canal today for the first time since the November hostilities. A convoy of six vessels... led by a 20-thousand-ton Italian tanker... started south from Port Said, while a five-ship convoy entered the canal at Suez and headed north. British, French and American ships were conspicuous ~~for~~ By their absence. The State Department advised American shippers again today to use "prudence" about using the canal. The department reminded them that negotiations over operation of the waterway are continuing... that an agreement has not yet been reached.

Egypt accused Israel tonight of committing "acts of provocation" along the Gaza frontier... and of making "a mockery" of peace and security in the area. For ITS part, Israel again accused Syria and Jordan of sending infiltrators deep into Israeli territory. An Israel spokesman said one firefight near the Syrian border lasted 20 minutes... but there were no casualties. Otherwise, there was an atmosphere of calm in Israel today, as the nation prepared for the Passover. It was announced that Prime Minister Ben Gurion will start a 10-day vacation, late next week.

(2A) (8)

In Budapest, the Kadar government has ordered an American attache to leave Hungary within 48 hours... on charges of espionage. The Communists claim that Captain Thomas Gleason, of Urbana, Illinois, took photographs of a Russian barracks. Gleason denies the charge. Last week, he and his superior officer, Colonel James Todd of Tulsa, Oklahoma, were stopped outside Budapest as they were driving in their car. They were surrounded for five hours by Red Army officers and Hungarian secret police, who accused them of taking pictures of a nearby barracks. The incident was recalled in the note... delivered today... calling for Gleason's expulsion from Hungary. But no such demand was made against Col. Todd.

In Congress today, the House voted a 25 percent cut in the budget requested by President Eisenhower for running the Commerce Department... and its related agencies... in the next fiscal year. The measure... as passed by the House... eliminates all new money requested for shipbuilding, including the appropriation for a new sister ship to the S.S. United States. And an attempt... by Democratic Representative Fogerty of Rhode Island... to restore nearly 2-million dollars for operating the Weather Bureau was shouted down. The measure now goes to the Senate.

Incidentally, Postmaster General Summerfield warned again today that unless Congress votes him extra money by Friday midnight, all Saturday postal service will have to be suspended. Summerfield says he must have an additional 47-million dollars for running the Post Office Department between now and July first. The House Appropriations Committee is taking the matter up again on Friday. Its chairman... Representative Cannon... has called Summerfield's threat to suspend service a "bluff". But Summerfield expressed confidence today that---in his words---"reason will prevail."

Today, President Eisenhower formally nominated Scott McLeod to be ambassador to Ireland... succeeding William Howard Taft the Third. A controversial figure, McLeod has headed-up the security bureau in the State Department since the early days of the Eisenhower Administration. Taft is coming home to become a member of the department's "policy planning staff." In another appointment today, Mr. Eisenhower named Miss Frances Willis to be ambassador to Norway. Miss Willis is presently serving as U.S. ambassador to Switzerland. She is the only woman ambassador the United States has had since the retirement of Clare Boothe Luce.

The Senate today confirmed President Eisenhower's appointment of General Nathan Twining as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It also approved the nomination of Donald Quarles as deputy secretary of defense... and the appointment of James Douglas to succeed Quarles as air secretary. Still another promotion confirmed today was that of General Thomas D. White as Air Force chief of staff, succeeding General Twining.

(4A)

George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, told the United Auto Workers convention today that organized labor must clean its own house. [redacted] "If labor is "big," Meany said, "it must assume "big" responsibilities." And he promised that American labor would meet its responsibility "head-on." There will be no "evasion," he said, "and no attempt to "sweep it under the rug." The United Auto Workers to day called for a special convention next January, to shape its demands in the negotiations with industry in 1958. And MADE IT plain that those demands will call... among other things... for a shorter work-week and more take-home pay.

In London today, the Conservative government presented its new budget to the House of Commons. The budget gives the British people [redacted] "some" tax relief... but promises no easy road ahead. For the story of what happened in Commons today... and its implications... we switch to London and Howard K. Smith.

(Tape runs 4 mins.
(Ends on cue: "---to Larry Lesueur in N.Y."

The other news in London today was made in the famous Old Bailey courthouse, where [redacted] a jury of ten men and two women returned a verdict of "not guilty" in the sensational murder trial of Dr. John Bodkin Adams. The doctor was charged with murdering an 81-year-old widow... with drugs... in order to get a chest of antique silver and other valuables from her estate. The jury returned its verdict of acquittal after deliberating just 44 minutes. The judge pronounced Adams discharged. The defendant murmured his thanks. And thus... in its 17th day... ended the longest murder trial in British criminal history. In view of his acquittal in this case, a charge that Adams murdered another wealthy patient has been dropped. And the bespectacled doctor is threatening to sue some British papers for libel, for the things they said about him during the trial.

All be back in a moment with a footnote to the News. But first George Bruce Footnote....

In N ew York, the delegates of Isreal and Jordon, sit near each other at the UN and eat in the same dining room, [redacted] adjacent the same receptions..But its different [redacted] in the tension-ridden Middle East.

There today, [redacted] to solve an international cattle-rustling case, Isreali and Jordanian [redacted] justices met [redacted] in the center of a bridge between the two countries..

Armed guards of Jordanian & Israeli soldiers stood by while justice was administered.

Then the Isrealis and Jordanians [redacted] justices shook hands - [redacted]e--but they didn't step across the frontier.

This is Larry LeSueur---Good Nite..

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

TUESDAY, APRIL 9, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

LE SUEUR: In London today the Conservative government presented its new budget to the House of Commons. The budget gives the British people some tax relief, but promises no easy road ahead. For the story of what happened in Commons today and its implications, we switch now to London and Howard K. Smith.

SMITH: Mr. Peter Thorneycroft, the Chancellor of the Exchequeur introduced Britain's annual budget to a jammed Parliament this afternoon. As was widely predicted, it offered many modest tax reductions. Entertainment tax was taken completely off the living theatre, which has been dying in Britain at the rate of about fifty theatres closed a year. Sports contests, like football games, in the future will not be taxed either; and the entertainment tax on movies goes down, while that on television licenses goes up. The income level at which Britain's punitive surtax begins is pushed upwards to relieve some breadwinners of having to pay it; the income level at which people over sixty-five years of age have to pay tax is also pushed up, to relieve some superannuated families of having to pay any income tax at all. The big extra shilling tax put on every gallon of gasoline last autumn, due to the Suez crisis, is removed. And finally, purchase tax, that is Britain's much higher equivalent of an American sales tax, is cut in half on some household things, like kitchenware.

None of these tax reductions is very big. However, these are the first tax reliefs this highly over-taxed nation has enjoyed for many years. And they will be welcome by those who benefit from them. The reception of the budget has been mixed; and that fact reveals the budget's aim and its meaning. Labor has promptly attacked the budget as "a rich man's budget." It gives, Labor speakers said today, no relief whatever to the worker.

In the budget speech, Mr. Thorneycroft even indicated that organized labor has been receiving too big a share of the national pie, and he suggested that labor should not ask for so much in the future. The feeling at the other end of the economic scale in Great Britain is pretty well indicated by a story that was reprinted in a Tory newspaper here in London today. The setting of this fable is in a Lower Slobovia-like village, where a peasant in abject poverty asked the Mayor how he could alleviate his misery. "You have a goat and a pig," the Mayor said. "Go and take the goat into your cottage and then come back and tell me how it is." Next day, the peasant came back and said, with the goat in the house, his conditions was even more miserable than before. "Then", said the Mayor, "bring the pig into the house, too." The peasant obeyed and the next day he came back to tell the Mayor that this made him more miserable than ever. "Well," said the Mayor," go home and put the pig out of your house." The peasant did and came back the next day to say that was a little better. "Good," said the Mayor. "Now go and put the goat out, too." The peasant did, and he returned the next morning to say that he was very much better now, and "Thank, Your Honor, for helping me to improve my condition so much." That rather bitter little story illustrates the mood of some sections of business in Britain, to whom Thorneycroft offered only a continuation of the very stringent credit conditions that hamper expansion of plant, and tax relief only to British businesses that are located in foreign countries.

What the Conservative Chancellor appears to have done by his budget was to ignore labor and much of business, and to concentrate his effort on relieving the middle classes in between. For they, almost alone, are benefited by the tax relief measures. From the Conservatives point of view, this probably makes sense. These are the people who have been emigrating, or at least who have been telling the pollsters that they intended to emigrate. More important than that, they are the former Conservative voters who have been staying away from the by-election polls in their thousands. And this year's budget is aimed to entice them back. And now back to Larry LeSueur in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

TUESDAY, APRIL 9, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

LE SUEUR: In London today the Conservative government presented its new budget to the House of Commons. The budget gives the British people some tax relief, but promises no easy road ahead. For the story of what happened in Commons today and its implications, we switch now to London and Howard K. Smith.

SMITH: Mr. Peter Thorneycroft, the Chancellor of the Exchequeur introduced Britain's annual budget to a jammed Parliament this afternoon. As was widely predicted, it offered many modest tax reductions. Entertainment tax was taken completely off the living theatre, which has been dying in Britain at the rate of about fifty theatres closed a year. Sports contests, like football games, in the future will not be taxed either; and the entertainment tax on movies goes down, while that on television licenses goes up. The income level at which Britain's punitive surtax begins is pushed upwards to relieve some breadwinners of having to pay it; the income level at which people over sixty-five years of age have to pay tax is also pushed up, to relieve some superannuated families of having to pay any income tax at all. The big extra shilling tax put on every gallon of gasoline last autumn, due to the Suez crisis, is removed. And finally, purchase tax, that is Britain's much higher equivalent of an American sales tax, is cut in half on some household things, like kitchenware.

None of these tax reductions is very big. However, these are the first tax reliefs this highly over-taxed nation has enjoyed for many years. And they will be welcome by those who benefit from them. The reception of the budget has been mixed; and that fact reveals the budget's aim and its meaning. Labor has promptly attacked the budget as "a rich man's budget." It gives, Labor speakers said today, no relief whatever to the worker.

In the budget speech, Mr. Thorneycroft even indicated that organized labor has been receiving too big a share of the national pie, and he suggested that labor should not ask for so much in the future. The feeling at the other end of the economic scale in Great Britain is pretty well indicated by a story that was reprinted in a Tory newspaper here in London today. The setting of this fable is in a Lower Slobovia-like village, where a peasant in abject poverty asked the Mayor how he could alleviate his misery. "You have a goat and a pig," the Mayor said. "Go and take the goat into your cottage and then come back and tell me how it is." Next day, the peasant came back and said, with the goat in the house, his conditions was even more miserable than before. "Then", said the Mayor, "bring the pig into the house, too." The peasant obeyed and the next day he came back to tell the Mayor that this made him more miserable than ever. "Well," said the Mayor," go home and put the pig out of your house." The peasant did and came back the next day to say that was a little better. "Good," said the Mayor. "Now go and put the goat out, too." The peasant did, and he returned the next morning to say that he was very much better now, and "Thank, Your Honor, for helping me to improve my condition so much." That rather bitter little story illustrates the mood of some sections of business in Britain, to whom Thorneycroft offered only a continuation of the very stringent credit conditions that hamper expansion of plant, and tax relief only to British businesses that are located in foreign countries.

What the Conservative Chancellor appears to have done by his budget was to ignore labor and much of business, and to concentrate his effort on relieving the middle classes in between. For they, almost alone, are benefited by the tax relief measures. From the Conservatives point of view, this probably makes sense. These are the people who have been emigrating, or at least who have been telling the pollsters that they intended to emigrate. More important than that, they are the former Conservative voters who have been staying away from the by-election polls in their thousands. And this year's budget is aimed to entice them back. And now back to Larry LeSueur in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 9, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

LARRY LESUEUR

Good Evening, everyone....Here's what happened today.

The United States is reported to have made a "new approach" to Egypt.. in hope of reaching an agreement for international operation of the Suez Canal. Dispatches from Cairo early today described the talks between the United States and Egypt as "deadlocked". But the American ambassador, Raymond Hare, saw the Egyptian foreign minister for an hour this afternoon. And he is reported to have made "new" proposals. This report is accredited to "authoritative Egyptian sources. It is not officially confireed. The United States, of course, wants President Nasser to reaffirm Egypt's adherence to the famous "six principles" endorsed by U.N. Security Council last October. The first of these principles is that there shall be "free and open passage through the Suez Canal, without discrimination." Another is that the canal shall be "insulated" from the politics of any country. Egypt joined in endorsing these principles in October..but has remained silent on them ever since.

Ships of 30-foot draft began using the Suez Canal today for the first time since November hostilities. An convoy of six vessels..led by a 20-thousand ton Italian tanker..started south from Port Said, while a five-ship convoy entered the canal at Suez and headed north. British, French and American ships were conspicuous by their absence. The State Department advised American shippers again today to use "prudence" about using the canal. The department reminded them that negotiations over operation of the waterway are continuing.. that an agreement has not yet been reached.

Egypt accused Israel tonight of committing "acts of provocation" along the Gaza frontier..and of making "a mockery" of peace and security in the area. For its part, Israel again accused Syria and Jordan of sending infiltrators deep into Israeli territory. An Israel spokesman said one firefight near the Syrian border lasted 20 minutes..but there were no casualties. Otherwise there was an atmosphere of calm in Israel today, as the nation prepared for the Passover. It was announced that Prime Minister Ben Gurion will start a 10-day vacation, late next week.

In Budapest, the Kadar government has ordered an American attache to leave Hungary within 48 hours...on charges of espionage. The communists claim that Captain Thomas Gleason, of Urbana, Illionos, took photographs of a Russian barracks. Gleason denied the charge. Last week, he and his superior officer, Colonel James Todd of Tulsa, Oklahoma, were stopped outside Budapest as they were driving in their car. They were surrounded for five hours by Red Army officers and Hungarian secret police, who accused them of taking pictures of a nearby barracks. The incident was recalled in the note...delivered today... calling for Gleason's expulsion from Hungary. But no such demand was made against Colonel Todd.

In Congress today, the House voted a 25 percent cut in the budget requested by President Eisenhower for running the Commerce Department..and its related agencies...in the next fiscal year. The measure...as passed by the House eliminated all new money requested for shipbuilding, including the appropriation for a new sister ship the the S.S. United States. And an attempt...by Democratic Representative Fogerty of Rhode Island...to restore nearly 2 - million dollars for operating the Weather Bureau was shouted down. The measure now goes to the Senate.

Incidentally, Postmaster General Summerfield warned again today that unless Congress votes him extra money by Friday midnight, all Saturday postal service will have to be suspended. Summerfield says he must have an additional 47-million dollars for running the Post Office Department between now and July first. The House Appropriations Committee is taking the matter up again on Friday. Its chairman..Representative Cannon..has called Summerfield's threat to suspend service a "bluff". But Summerfield expressed confidence today that--in his words--"reason will prevail."

Today, President Eisenhower formally nominated Scott McLeod to be ambassador to Ireland...succeeding William Howard Taft the Third. A controversial figure, McLeod has headed up the security bureau in the State Department since the early days of the Eisenhower Administration. Taft is coming home to become a member of the department's "policy planning staff." In another appointment today, Mr. Eisenhower named Miss Frances Willis to be ambassador to Norway. Miss Willis is presently serving as U.S. ambassador to Switzerlnad. She is the only woman ambassador the United States has had since the retirement of Clare Boothe Luce.

The Senate today confirmed President Eisenhower's appointment of General Nathan Twining as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It also approved the nominations of Donald Quarles as deputy secretary of defense..and the appointment of James Douglas to succeed Quarles as air secretary. Still another promotion confirmed today was that of General Thomas D. White as Air Force dhief of staff, succeeding General Twining.

George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, told the United Auto Workers convention today that organized labor must clean its own house. "If labor is big", Meany said, "it must assume big responsibilities." And he promised that American labor would meet its responsibility "head-on". There will be no "evasion", he said, "and no attempt to sweep it under the rug". The United Auto Workers today called for a special convention next January, to shape its demands in the negotiations with industry in 1958. And made it plain that those demands will call..among other things..for a shorter work-week and more take-home pay.

In London today the Conservative government presented its new budget to the House of Commons. The budget gives the British people some tax relief, but promises no easy road ahead. For the story of what happened in Commons today and its implications, we switch now to London and Howard K. Smith.

SMITH: Mr. Peter Thorneycroft, the Chancellor of the Exchequer introduced Britain's annual budget to a jammed Parliament this afternoon. As was widely predicted, it offered many modest tax reductions. Entertainment tax was taken completely off the living theatre, which has been dying in Britain at the rate of about fifty theatres closed a year. Sports contests, like football games, in the future will not be taxed either; and the entertainment tax on movies goes down, while that on television licences goes up. The income level at which Britain's punitive surtax begins is pushed upwards to relieve some breadwinners of having to pay it; the income level at which people over sixty-five years of age have to pay tax is also pushed up, to relieve some superannuated families of having to pay any income tax at all. The big extra shilling tax put on every gallon of gasoline last autumn, due to the Suez crisis, is removed. And finally, purchase tax, that is Britain's much higher equivalent of an American sales tax, is cut in half on some household things like kitchenware.

None of these tax reductions is very big. However, these are the first tax reliefs this highly over-taxed nation has enjoyed for many years. And they will be welcome by those who benefit from them. The reception of the budget has been mixed; and that fact reveals the budget's aim and its meaning. Labor has promptly attacked the budget as "a rich man's budget". It gives , Labor speakers said today, no relief whatever to the worker.

In the budget speech, Mr. Thorneycroft even indicated that organized labor has been receiving too big a share of the national pie, and he suggested that labor should not ask for so much in the future. The feeling at the other end of the economic scale in Great Britain is pretty well indicated by a story that was reprinted in a Tory newspaper here in London today. The setting of this fable is in a Lower Slobovia-like village where a peasant in abject poverty asked the Mayor how he could alleviate his misery. "You have a goat and a pig," the Mayor said. "Go and take the goat into your cottage and then come back and tell me how it is." Next day, the peasant came back and said, with the goat in the house, his condition was even more miserable than before. "Then", said the Mayor, "bring the pig into the house, too." The peasant obeyed and the next day he came back to tell the Mayor that this made him more miserable than ever. "Well", said the Mayor," go home and put the pig out of your house." The peasant did and came back the next day to say that was a little better. "Good", said the Mayor. "Now go and put the goat out, too." The peasant did, and he returned the next dorning to say that he was very much better now, and "Thank, Your Honor, for helping me to improve my condition so much." That rather bitter little story illustrates the mood of some sections of business in Britain, to whom Thorneycroft offered only a continuation of the very stringent credit conditions that hamper expansion of plant, and tax relief only to British business that are located in foreign countries.

What the Conservative Chancellor appears to have done by his budget was to ignore labor and much of business, and to concentrate his effort on relieving the middle classes in between. For they, almost alone, are benefited by the tax relief measures. From the Conservatives point of view, this probably makes sense. These are the people who have been emigrating, or at least who have been telling the pollsters that they intended to emigrate. More important than that, they are fhe fomer Conservative voters who have been staying away from the by-election polls in thousands. And this year's budget is aimed to entice them back. And now back to Larry LeSueur in New York.

LESUEUR: The other news in London today was made in the famous Old Bailey courthouse, where a jury of ten men and two women returned a verdict of "not guilty" in the sensational murder trial of Dr. John Bodkin Adams. The doctor was charged with murdering an 81 - year - old widow ..with drugs,.in order to get a chest of antique silver and other valuables from her estate. The jury returned its verdict of acquittal after deliberating just 44 minutes. The judge pronounced Adams discharged. The defendant murmered his thanks. And thus..in its 17th day..ended the longest murder trial in British criminal history. In view of his acquittal in this case, a charge that Adams murdered another wealthy patient has been dropped. And the bespectacled doctor is threatening to sue some British papers for libel, for the things they said about him during the trial.

I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the News. But first, George Bryan.

BRYAN L.L. In New York, the delegates of Israel and Jordan, sit near each other at the UN and eat in the same dining room, attend the same receptions, but it is different in the tension - ridden Middle East.

There today, to solve an internatoonal cattle-rustling case, Israeli and Jordanian justices met in the center of a bridge between the two countries. Armed guards of Jordan and Israeli soldiers stood by while justice was administered. Then the Israelis and Jordanian justices shook hands--but they didn't step across the frontier

This is Larry Lesuer. Goodnight.

Lesueur for Murrow Wed., Apr. 10, 1957

Good evening, everyone... Here's what happened today -

The United States sent Canada a note... expressing "sincere condolences" over the suicide last week of Herbert Norman, the Canadian ambassador to Egypt. Norman took his "own" life after the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee revived charges... made in 1951... that he had once been a Communist. The Canadian government investigated the accusations at the time and has declared them unwarranted. Today's American note to Canada was signed by Christian Herter, the under-secretary of state. Our government, it said, "deplores any development which adversely affects the traditional friendship between Canada and the United States." But the note disclaimed any responsibility... on the part of the Administration... for the release of the derogatory information against Norman. The executive branch, it said, has no jurisdiction over the views or opinions expressed by congressional committees.

Canada sent a note to the United States today.|| on the same subject. It suggested... quite bluntly..| that security information Canada gives the United States, from now on, be withheld from Congress---except when Canada gives "its" consent. The note said that when the names of Canadian officials come up before an investigating committee in Washington, they should be sent in confidence to the Canadian government.|| so the allegations can be investigated and dealt with in Canada. "The names," it said, "should NOT first be made known to the Canadian government through the press." It called such a state of affairs "intolerable".

The Canadian note was read in the House of Commons... in Ottawa... by Lester Pearson, Canada's minister of external affairs. Pearson said that in the future, Canada will make sure [redacted] that security information it gives Washington cannot---in Pearson's phrase---"be used for wrong purposes against Canadians." Canada, he said, is perfectly capable of looking after its own security affairs.

At his news conference today, President Eisenhower declined to criticize the conduct of the Internal Security Subcommittee in the Norman case.. He DID say, "I think it is a great sorrow to all of us that misunderstandings should occur." He called anything that tends to break down the good relations existing between the United States and Canada "a particularly unfortunate thing." And he said everything should be done to restore that good relationship as rapidly as possible. Mr. Eisenhower indicated that the issue came about through an inadvertency. A transcript of the hearing at which Norman was accused was cleared for publication by a State Department security officer. Secretary of State Dulles has said, however, that it was NOT cleared by the department officer having to do with policy. #

President Eisenhower told reporters that Britain's decision to cut back its armed forces took courage. That drastic step, he said, was thoroughly discussed at the recent Bermuda Conference. Mr. Eisenhower said the British are adapting their military establishment to the atomic-hydrogen age. and safeguarding their economy at the same time. Nevertheless, he said, the move has caused some anxiety among our NATO allies.

A reporter asked Mr. Eisenhower how he feels about British and Japanese trade with Red China. The President did not commit himself on this question. But Some people, he said, have suggested it is ridiculous to agree to allied trade with the Soviet bloc in Europe on a fairly free basis... and then continue to keep a close check on the China trade. As for the United States, Mr. Eisenhower said, our policy is simple: "We don't deal with Communist China."

President Eisenhower said the United States still hopes to get a satisfactory agreement with Egypt on operation of the Suez Canal. Our ambassador to Egypt... Raymond Hare... had another two-hour talk today with the Egyptian foreign minister in Cairo--the SIXTH in his series of conferences with the foreign minister so far. We are not told what progress was made today, if any. The Cairo press claims Egypt protested to Ambassador Hare... over that American tanker which sailed through the Gulf of Aqaba last week-end and delivered a large shipment of oil to Israel.

There was a tragedy today in the Gaza Strip. Two Indian soldiers attached to the U. N. Emergency Force were killed as they were engaged in clearing away mines.

Moscow radio warned the Middle East AND AFRICAN countries today that any American bases set up on their soil will be destroyed by Russia, in event of war involving the United States. And the Moscow broadcast added... ominously... that the blows rained down on these bases would be so enormous, large surrounding areas would "inevitably be affected." Moscow has delivered similar warnings in recent weeks to many countries, including Norway and Denmark. The foreign ministers of Norway and Denmark joined the foreign ministers of Iceland, Sweden and Finland today in a communique... ending a two-day meeting in Helsinki. The five nations declared their support of the United Nations effort "to achieve a lasting improvement of conditions in the Middle East." They also voiced support of the American proposal... calling for advance registration of nuclear tests, if Russia will do the same.

The strongly pro-Egyptian government of Jordan resigned today, after an emergency all-night meeting of the cabinet. Premier Nabulsi... who came to [redacted] power last October through his control of mob demonstrations against the Baghdad Pact... is out, reportedly at the demand of King Hussein. HOOS-200

Later -

I should like to discuss this new development fu[redacted]minute.

This country's biggest spy case... since the execution of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg... took a sudden, dramatic turn today, here in New York. Jack Soble and his wife, Myra, pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy... and, by so doing, may have saved themselves from the electric chair. In February, the Sobles pleaded innocent to all six counts of the indictment against them. Actually, what they did today was switch their plea on the second count. That is, they admitted conspiring with Soviet agents to obtain defense secrets. On this count, they are EACH liable to a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison and a 10-thousand-dollar fine. It is the first count... to which they still plead innocent... that carries the possible death penalty. That one accuses the Sobles of conspiring to TRANSMIT to Russia secret information concerning U.S. defense. Indications are this more serious charge will now be dropped. Sentencing on the lesser charge to which they pleaded guilty today has been set for May third. Incidentally, the THIRD defendant in the spy case was not involved in today's proceedings. Jacob Albam... who was arrested with the Sobles... still pleads innocent to ALL charges. And his trial starts May 22nd.

The United Auto Workers convention re-elected Walter Reuther president today... by acclamation. Reuther has been head of the giant auto workers union since 1946. This will be his seventh term.

And late today... in Congress... the House approved a bill ALLOWING Great Britain to postpone payments to the United States on its postwar debt. The Senate passed the measure earlier. And it now goes to the White House for the President's signature.

LeSueur april 10 1957 745p murrow..

C 1-70490

The strict censorship clamped down today over the Arab Kingdom of Jordon, makes even more obscure, the mysterious events of the past fortnite. But on the surface at least, today's sudden dismissal of Jordon's leftwing Prime Minister and his cabinet, by young King Hussein, MAY BE THE FIRST POLITICAL VICTORY FOR THE EISENHOWER MIDDLE EAST DOCTRINE

Only last week, amid rumors of a government crisis, Jordon's Prime Minister had a session with its pro-western King, [redacted] summoned a cabinet meeting, and announced to the world, that for the first time Jordon had agreed to [redacted] exchange [redacted] Ambassadors with the Soviet Union..

Today's ousting of the Prime Minister and cabinet looks like a sudden reversal of that policy, altho [redacted] there is no confirmation from censorship-locked Jordon..

However, there are some known facts...Its been evident for months that there was tension between the cabinet, and its left-wing-members and the [redacted] anti-communist King.

The British-educated, twenty-one-year-old King of Jordon, had recently warned the Prime Minister against the dangers of communist infiltration..

This was resented by several members of the Jordon government particularly, those former Palestine Refugges who had assumed power, and had pronounced leanings against Isreal and toward Egypt's Nasser...

They had long pressed for diplomatic relations with Russia, and the King after resisting, reluctantly agreed, on the condition it be made clear that Jordon would like American aid,too..

But last Thursday, Premier Nabullsi was quoted in a Jordonian radio broadcast to the effect that his country would accept Russian aid "if offered" but would decline american aid offers.. These he charged were designed to cut Jordon's ties with Egypt..

The left-wing members of Jordon's ousted cabinet have long insisted that the communist menace is a"faction" spread by the western powers to perpetuate their Middle East influence.

Their resentment was increased by the young King's counter-move. He ordered communist literature removed from the bookshops and newstands, without going through his left-wing Minister of the Interior..

Today the deep-rooted conflict between crown and cabinet came to a climax... with the abrupt dismissal of XXX Jordon's 46-year-old Prime Minister Suleiman N abullsi, who had strong ties with President N asser of Egypt and had championed a federation with pro-communist Syria..

At the same time, King Hussein shook-up Jordon's internal Security organization.. replacing a leftist general with an anti-communist..

There has been much at stake in Jordon, bearing on President Naaser's prestige and the Eisenhower Middle East XXXXXXX.Doctrine.

Apparently XXX Jordon's General Public has its ears glued to the Cairo "voice of the Arab" broadcasts, and its stories of how Nasser is a hero who rose from the people, got rid of a monarchy, fought Isreal, and is doing what he likes with the United Nations..

But on the other hand, the middle-class XXXXXXXXX merchants of Jordon, XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX have been watching another yardstick.. That's XXX Jordon's currency, simply because Jordon XXXX last year, accepted Arab financial backing in place of British subsidies.

And the Jordon pound has been falling ever since, although ~~the~~ not as fast or as low as Egypt's..

Jordon's middle-class merchants do NOT form a large part of the community...But although their numbers may be small, their importance is not...Many of them are for the federation of Jordon, not with Syria and Egypt, but with prospering, pro-western Iraq, the southern anchor of the anti-communist Bagdad pact...

It was the Nationalists in Jordon who prevented membership in the Bagdad pact two years ago, through street riots that toppled several governments..and led to the firing of the British chief of Jordon's Arab Legion, General Glubb, Pasha. The young British-minded King was then forced to cancel the British treaty by which they maintained air bases in Jordon.

Communist influence has increased since then, with three seats in Parliament and one in today's ousted cabinet..

King Hussein's action today may mark a tunring point in Jordon's future..Its too early to say whether Jordon will now cast its lot with American-supported Bagdad pact nations, But hopes are bound to pick up in London and Washington.. For Jordon has been the guinea-pig in the tug-of-war between Egypt's Nasser and the West...

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News.. (cue) But first----

Footnote —

President Eisenhow had a red-nose today..

And becuz people are more concerned over his looks than anyone else in the world, the President felt called upon to open his news conference with a personal announcement.. Explained that his red nose was due to an overdoes of the sun-lamp he's been using to cure his cough..

The President's nose may have been painfully red, but all the reporters agreed that the sun-lamp helped cure his recent short temper - The President was AMIABLE even when someone brought up the subject of speeding and helicopters..

This is Cary Heisen - Good nite

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today.....

The United States sent Canada a note..expressing "sincere condolences" over the suicide last week of Herbert Norman, the Canadian ambassador to Egypt. Norman took his own life after the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee revived charges..made in 1951..that he had once been a Communist. The Canadian government investigated the accusations at the time and has declared them unwarranted. Today's American note to Canada was signed by Christian Herter, the under-secretary of state. Our government, it said, "deplored any development which adversely affects the traditional friendship between Canada and the United States." But the note disclaimed any responsibility..on the part of the Administration..for the release of the derogatory information against Norman. The executive branch, it said, has no jurisdiction over the views or opinions expressed by any congressional committees.

Canada sent a note to the United States today..on the same subject. It suggested ..quite bluntly..that security information Canada gives the United States, from now on, be withheld from Congress -- except when Canada gives its consent. The note said that when the names of Canadain officials come up before an investigating committee in Washington, they should be sent in confidence to the Canadian government..so the allegations can be investigated and dealt with in Canada. "The names," it said, "should not first be made known to the Canadian government through the press." It called such a state of affairs "intolerable."

The Canadian note was read in the House of Commons..it Ottawa..by Lester Pearson, Canada'a minister of external affairs. Pearson said that in the future, Canada will make sure that security information it gives Washington cannot - in Pearson's phrase --- "be used for wrong purposes against Canadians." Canada, he said, is perfectly capable of looking after its own security affairs.

At his news conference today, President Eisenhower declined to criticize the conduct of the Internal Security Subcommittee in the Norman case. He did say, "I think it is a great sorrow to all of us that misunderstandings should occur." He called anything that tends to break down the good relations existing between the United States and Canada " a particularly unfortunate thing." And he said everything should be done to restore that good relationship as rapidly as possible. Mr. Eisenhower indicated that the issue came about through an inadvertency. A transcript of the hearing at which Norman was accused was cleared for publication by a State Department security officer. Secretary of State Dulles has said, however, that it was not cleared by the department officer having to do with policy.

President Eisenhower told reporters that Britain's decision to cut back its armed forces took courage. That drastic step, he said, was thoroughly discussed at the recent Bermuda Conference. Mr. Eisenhower said the British are adapting their military establishment to the atomic hydrogen age...and safeguarding their economy at the same time. Nevertheless, he said the move has caused some anxiety among our NATO allies.

A reporter asked Mr. Eisenhower how he feels about British and Japanese trade with Red China. The President did not commit himself on this question. But, he said, some people, have suggested it is ridiculous to agree to allied trade with the Soviet bloc in Europe on a fairly free basis..and then continue to keep a close check on the China trade. As for the United States, Mr. Eisenhower said, our policy is simple: "We don't deal with Communist China."

President Eisenhower said the United States still hopes to get a satisfactory agreement with Egypt on operation of the Suez Canal. Our ambassador to Egypt..Raymond Hare..had another two-hour talk today with Egyptian foreign minister in Cairo--the sixth in his series of conferences with the foreign minister so far. We are not told what progress was made today, if any. The Cairo press claims Egypt protested to Ambassador Hare...over that American tanker which sailed through the Gulf of Aqaba last week-end and delivered a large shipment of oil to Israel.

There was a tragedy today in the Gaza Strip. Two Indian soldiers attached to the U.N. Emergency Force were killed as they were engaged in clearing away mines.

Moscow radio warned the Middle East and African countries today that any American bases set up on their soil will be destroyed by Russia in event of war involving the United States. And the Moscow broadcasts added...ominously...that the blows rained down on these bases would be so enormous, large surrounding areas would "inevitably be affected." Moscow has delivered similar warnings in recent weeks to many countries, including Norway and Denmark. The foreign ministers of Norway and Denamrk joined the foreign ministers of Iceland, Sweden and Finland today in a communique...ending a two-day meeting in Helsinki. The five nations declared their support of the United Nations effort "to achieve a lasting improvement of conditions in the Middle East." They also voiced support of the American proposal...calling for advance registration of nuclear tests if Russia will do the same.

The strongly pro-Egyptian government of Jordan resigned today, after an emergency all-night meeting of the cabinet. Premier Nabulsi...who came to power last October through his control of mob demonstrations against the Baghdad Pact...it out, reportedly at the demand of King Hussein. I should like to discuss this new development later.

This country's biggest spy case...since the execution of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg...took a sudden, dramatic turn today, here in New York. Jack Soble and his wife, Myra, pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy...and, by so doing, may have saved themselves from the electric chair. In February, the Sobles pleaded innocent to all six counts of the indictment against them.

Actually, what they did today was switch their plea on the second count. That is, they admitted conspiring with Soviet agents to obtain defense secrets. On this count, they each are liable to a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison and a 10-thousand-dollar fine. It is the first count...to which they still plead innocent..that carries the possible death penalty. That one accuses the Sobles of conspiring to transmit to Russia , secret information concerning U.S. defense. Indications are this more serious charge will now be dropped. Sentencing on the lesser charge, to which they pleaded guilty today, has been set for May third. Incidentally, the third defendant in the spy case was not involved in today's proceedings. Jacob Albam...who was arrested with the Sobles ...still pleads innocent to all charges. And his trial starts May 22nd.

The United Auto Workers convention re-elected Walter Reuther president today...by acclamation. Reuther has been head of the giant auto workers union since 1946. this will be his seventh term.

And late today...in Congress. the House approved a bill allowing Great Britain to postpone payments to the United States on its postwar debt. The Senate passed the measure earlier. And it now goes to the White House for the President's signature.

The strict censorship clamped down today over the Arab Kingdom of Jordan makes even more obscure, the mysterious events of the past fortnite. But on the surface at least, today's sudden dismissal of Jordon's left wing Prime Minister and his cabinet, by young King Hussein, may be the first political victory for the Eisenhower Middle EAst doctrine.

Only last week, amid rumors of a government crisis, Jordon's Prime Minister had a session with its pro-western King, summoned a cabinet meeting, and announced to the world, that for the first time Jordon had agreed to exchange Ambassadors with the Soviet Union.

Today's ousting of the Prime Minister and cabinet looks like a sudden reversal of that policy, although there is no confirmation of the censorship-locked Jordon.

However, there are some known facts..its been evident for months that there was tension between the cabinet, and its left-wing-members and the anti-communist King.

The British - educated , twenty-one-year-old King of Jordon, had recently warned the Prime Minister against the dangers of Communist infiltration. This was resented by several members of the Jordon government, particularly, those former Palestine Refugees who had assumed power, and had pronounced leanings against Israel and toward Egypt's Nasser.

They had long pressed for diplomatic relations with Russia, and the King, after resisting, reluctantly agreed on the condition it be made clear that Jordon would like American aid, too.

But last Thursday, Premier Nabullsi was quoted in a Jordonian radio broadcast to the effect that his country would accept Russian aid "if offered" but would decline American aid offers. These he charged were designed to cut Jordon's ties with Egypt.

The left-wing members of Jordon's ousted cabinet have long insisted that the Communist menace is a "fiction" spread by the western powers to perpetuate their Middle East influence.

Their resentment was increased by the young King's counter-move. He ordered Communist literature removed from the bookshops and newstands, without going through his left-wing Minister of the Interior.

Today the deep-rooted conflict between crown and cabinet came to a climax ...with the abrupt dismissal of Jordon's 46-year-old Prime Minister Suleiman Nabullsi, who had a strong ties with President Nasser of Egypt and had championed a federation with pro-communist Syria.

At the same time, King Hussein shook-up Jordon's internal Security organization..replacing a leftist general with an anti-communist.

There has been much at stake in Jordon, bearing on President Nasser's prestige and the Eisenhower Middle East Doctrine.

Apparently Jordon's General public has its ears glued to the Cairo "Voice of the Arab" broadcasts, and its stories of how Nasser is a hero who rose from the people, got rid of a monarchy, fought Israel, and is doing what he likes with the United Nations.

But on the other hand, the middle-class merchants of Jordon, have been watching another yardstick. That's Jordon's currency, simply because Jordon last year, accepted Arab financial backing in place of British subsidies.

And the Jordon pound has been falling ever since, although not as fast or as low as Egypt's Jordon's middle-class merchants do not form a large part of the community but although their numbers may be small, their importance is not. Many of them are for the federation of Jordon, not with Syria and Egypt, but with prospering, pro-western Iraq, the southern anchor of the anti-communist Baghdad pact.

It was the Nationalists in Jordon who prevented membership in the Baghdad pact two years ago, through street riots that toppled several governments.. and led to the firing of the British chief of Jordon's Arab Legion, General Glubb, Pasha. The young British-minded king was then forced to cancel the British treaty by which they maintained air bases in Jordon.

Communist influence has increased since then, with three seats in Parliament and one in today's ousted cabinet.

King Hussein's action today may make a turning point in Jordon's future. Its too early to say whether Jordon will now cast its lot with American supported Baghdad pact nations, but hopes are bound to pick up in London and Washington, for Jordon has been the guinea - pig in the tug-of-war between Egypt's Nasser and the West. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the News.

ANNOUNCER:

LESUEUR: President Eisenhower had a red nose today. And because people are more concerned over his looks than anyone else in the world, the President felt called upon to open his news conference with a personal announcement. Explained that his red nose was due to an overdose of the sun-lamp he's been using to cure his cough.

The President's nose may have been painfully red but all the reporters agreed that the sun-lamp helped cure his recent short temper. The President was amiable even when someone brought up the subjects of speeding and helicopters.

This is Larry LeSueur. Goodnight.

Lesueur for Murrow Thurs., Apr. 11, 1957

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today....

Postmaster General Summerfield stuck to his guns. And so it looks as though most of the country's post offices will be closed on Saturday. Summerfield told the Senate Appropriations Committee today what he's been saying all along... that the Post Office Department MUST have an additional 47-million dollars to finish out this fiscal year. He told the committee the order curtailing service already is out... to take effect tomorrow midnight. "Nothing can stop it," he said, "except the availability of the money. And," he added, "apparently that's not in the cards." The House Appropriations Committee is meeting tomorrow... and may vote to give Summerfield the money he wants. But the House itself has adjourned until Monday. Unless it calls itself back into session,

→

Congress cannot possibly complete action on the appropriation measure by the Saturday deadline. In that case, the only mail delivered this Saturday will be "Special Delivery".

A suit to restrain Summerfield from suspending almost all third-class mail service... starting April 29th.. was filed this afternoon in District Court in Washington. The petition argues that such action would constitute an exercise of "unlawful authority"... and cause the parties to the suit "irrevocable damage". The suit was filed by Associated Third-class Mail Users, Incorporated, of Washington, D.C., and Spencer Gifts, Incorporated, of Atlantic City.

President Eisenhower told Congress today that it can cut 250-million dollars from the one and a quarter BILLION he requested for the soil-bank program. Secretary of Agriculture Benson was quick to add that this "in no sense" reflects a cutback in the program.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee heard testimony today AGAINST the State Department ban on travel by American newsmen in Red China. J. Russell Wiggins, executive editor of the Washington Post and Times-Herald, said it is in the "interests of the people of the United States to have swift, accurate and complete information about the territory controlled by Red China." Wiggins testified as secretary of the American Society of Newspaper Editors. Frank Bartholomew, president of the United Press, said... in a statement read to the committee... that "in the long run" free access to the news, at its source, "butweighs all other considerations."

There were numerous developments today in "the Norman case..." which has strained the [redacted] friendly relations between Canada and the United States. The Canadian ambassador to Egypt, Herbert Norman, committed suicide last week, after the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee revived charges that he had once been a Communist. The Canadian government takes the position that the charges were long since disproved. And yesterday... in a formal note... it protested the subcommittee action in making them a matter of public record. The note said Canada would have to stop giving security information to the United States... if the information was passed on to Congress without Canadian consent. The FIRST development today was the release... by an official of the subcommittee... of a statement signed by Chairman Eastland, and the ranking Republican member, Senator Jenner. The statement said the derogatory information against Norman not only had been cleared for publication by the State Department, but that the subcommittee was Told [redacted]... by the State Department... that the information had been corroborated by the F.B.I. [redacted] This joint statement... by Eastland and Jenner... had barely been put out, before the subcommittee tried to have it withdrawn. But, By then it was too late. [redacted] The statement already was on the NEWS wires. This afternoon, the State Department DENIED ever giving the Internal Security Subcommittee any information linking the Canadian diplomat with Communism. The State Department ALSO denied that it cleared the charges for publication. The department spokesman, Lincoln White, said the testimony of one witness WAS cleared... but that it contained "no adverse references to any Canadian official." White said the subcommittee apparently misinterpreted this... as meaning that the department had no objection to clearing the entire transcript. He declined to comment on the F.B.I. angle.

→

President Eisenhower conferred today with Canadian Ambassador Heeney, at the White House. Heeney told reporters... afterward... that he emphasized to Mr. Eisenhower the importance which his government, and the Canadian people, attach to the Norman case. He said the President asked him to convey to Prime Minister St. Laurent his regret over the tragedy... and his hope for continuance of good relations. Heeney himself expressed confidence that "logic, good sense and fairness" would prevail... and that "ultimately" friendly relations would be restored.

In Jordan today, there were demonstrations for the return of SU-LAY-MAHN NAH-BUL-SEE
Suleiman Nabulsi, the pro-Egyptian premier King Hussein OUSTED FROM [redacted] office yesterday. But there was no violence. An attempt to form a new government... more to the liking of the young king... apparently has failed for the time being. Moscow propaganda claims the United States brought on the crisis, in order to force Jordan to accept the Eisenhower Doctrine.

The Saudi Arabian embassy in Cairo issued a strong statement tonight. It said Saudi Arabia will take "all measures"... to bar Israeli shipping from the Gulf of Aqaba... all measures, it said, "to defend its legitimate historic rights."

Today... in Atlantic City... the United Auto Workers convention adopted a constitutional amendment, which may have far-reaching effect. The amendment gives office workers... belonging to the U.A.W.... the right to negotiate "supplementary agreements" in the course of industry-wide bargaining. President ~~Walther~~ Reuther told the convention this will help the union organize the white-collar workers in the industry... and improve the union's bargaining position.

President Eisenhower has called for establishment of a special three-man board... to help solve the air traffic problem. Mr. Eisenhower's recommendation went to Congress today, as part of an interim report on plans for modernizing the present traffic control system. The report warns that... by 1975... the scheduled airlines of the United States will be flying three times as many passenger miles as they do today... and that there will be many more military and private aircraft. The board proposed by Mr. Eisenhower would be made up of two representatives of the Commerce and Defense Departments... and a chairman appointed by the President. And its job would be to coordinate all the research being done on the traffic control problem. Democratic Senator Monroney already has criticized the proposal as not going far enough. Such a board, he says, should have the power to ORDER that its recommendations be put into effect... that otherwise there will be dangerous "dissention and delay." Monroney is chairman of the Senate subcommittee that will take up President Eisenhower's proposal.

LeDueur april 11 1957

To future historians, this year, 1957, may go down, NOT as the year in which the UN called off the invasion of Egypt and made the invaders withdraw, but the year which CONFIRMED the end of Britain's three hundred years of world leadership..

The change, of course, was accelerated by world war two,...Despite lend-lease and the Marshall Plan, Great Britain has never recovered from her exhaustion, the shock of the Blitz, and the enforced development of industrial power throughout her former Empire, which once fed Britain with just the raw materials to fashion the finished goods..

Britain has voluntarily stepped down from its traditional position as a great power, and is accepting for the future, the role of the largest and most influential of the medium powers...

Now Britain is a most difficult country to size up, and some historians have been counting her out, ever since our revolutionary war, [redacted]s [redacted]d... I remember reading a Frenchman's history of England, [redacted] in an air-raid shelter during the London blitz, and how comforting it was to know that he had counted Britain out [redacted] as far Back as 1781 when the red-coats yielded to us at Yorktown..

But its difficult to draw any other conclusion from the drastic cut in armed strength which Britain now plans..

The British have always been the masters of the plausible pretext, and this time they argue that their reliance on atomic retaliation, will mean "more punch for a [redacted] pound," the equivalent of our "more bang for a buck"...But the weak point in this reasoning, is that Russia is also equipping its army with atomic weapons, so that Britain's increase in fire-power will soon be cancelled out..

It's not easy to determine when this British decision became inevitable... Perhaps it was in [redacted] 1944 when the first german V-2 rocket landed on British soil, or perhaps in 1949, when Russia broke the [redacted] western monopoly on atom bombs.. Or maybe it was way back in [redacted] 1909, when Louis Bleriot [redacted] piloted his propeller-driven crate across the English Channel to the white cliffs of Dover..

But at any rate, [redacted] these military revolutions have climaxed [redacted] into a problem which Britain acknowledges [redacted]at she cannot meet...//

[redacted] The historic British White Paper put it this way: "The impact on strategic thought" it stated," of the rapid progress in scientific and technological development, MUST BE [redacted] reflected...And Britain's financial and economic strength, MUST BE maintained..

[redacted] "There IS, at present, according to the British," no means of adequate protection for the whole country, against the consequence of attack with NUCLEAR weapons."

Therefore, say the British, the over-riding [redacted] consideration, in all military planning, must be to prevent war, rather than prepare for it..

NOW The British have been called lots of things, [redacted], but no-one has [redacted] called them FOOLS...And their bold statement [redacted] regarding the invincibility of offense, in [redacted] NUCLEAR war, and the inadequacy of defense, will have repercussions the world over. especially in western europe.

France presents neither so isolated nor so concentrated a target as the British Isles. But her economy is just as shaky. And Britain's uncontradicted assertions, may proove tempting to a France searching for ways to unload its own defense burdens.

Ever since the Suez Canal, MIS-ADVENTURE, France and Britain have been driven closer together, if not by mutual friendship, then by their common predicament.

Science and Technology Do play a large role in human affairs, but psychology is still be reckoned with. At the UN, last November, it was the United States which offered the resolution demanding the British and French withdrawal from Suez.

And this reporter, like every UN observer, was aware of Britain's resentment. Britain realized it no longer rules the waves, but it didn't expect this country to be the first to say it couldn't waive the rules.

Events since then have marched to their inevitable conclusion.

Since we wouldn't permit Britain to employ its costly armed forces against a personal enemy, they've decided to scrap them, and let us foot most of the anti-communist defense bill.

Britain has stated in effect, that it can't afford to wait until the power of defense overcome the power of nuclear offense. And indeed, that may never occur. But as the Pentagon will tell you, the history of warfare has always prooved otherwise.

[redacted] I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news... But first.. George Bryan Doctor Paul Dudley White, the noted Boston heart specialist, put on a special show for Doctors today at Massachusetts General Hospital,..

He brought with him, Charles Thiery, a 1 hundred and 6 year old - WHO REMEMBERS General Grant and the civil war - Dr White - [redacted] the [redacted]war. [redacted]e said Thiery was in fine physical shape, although he suffered from pneumona at age two, and was given up for dead by [redacted] his family. (He worked as a gold and silversmith for 82 years, retiring when america went off the gold standard.)

Doctor White said Mr. Thiery [redacted] does not smoke or drink---but he's always suffered from "nervous indigestion."

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnight

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 11, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING:

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today...

Post master General Summerfield stuck to his guns. And so it looks as though most of the country's post offices will be closed on Saturday. Summerfield told the Senate Appropriations Committee today what he's been saying all along..that the Post Office Department must have an additional 47-million dollars to finish out this fiscal year. He told the committee the order curtailing service already is out..to take effect tomorrow midnight. "Nothing can stop it," he said, "except the availability of money. And," he added, "apparently that's not in the cards." The House Appriopriations Committee is meeting tomorrow ..and may vote to give Summerfield the money he wants. But the House itself aas adjourned until Monday. Unless it calls itself back into session, Congress cannot possible complete action on the appropriation measure by the Saturday deadline. In that case, the only mail delivered this saturday will be "Special Delivery."

A suit to restrain Summerfield from suspending almost all third-class mail service..starting April 29th..was filed this afternoon in District Court in Washington. The petition argues that such action would constitute an exercise of "unlawful authority" and cause the parties to the suit "irrevocable damage." The suit was filed by Associated Third-class Mail Users, Incorporated, of Washington D.C., and Spencer Gifts, Incorporated, of Atlantic City.

President Eisenhower told Congress today that it can cut 250-million dollars from the one and a quarter billion he requested for the soil-bank program. Secretary of Agriculture Benson was quick to add that this "in no sense" reflects a cutback in the program.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee heard testimony today against the State Department ban on travel by American newsmen in Red China. J. Russell Wiggins, executive editor of the Washington Post and Times Herald, said it is in the "interests of the people of the United States to have swift, accurate and complete information about the territory controlled by Red China." Wiggins testified as secretary of the American Society of Newspapers Editors. Frank Bartholomew, president of the United Press, said...in a statement read to the committee...that "in the long run" free access to the news, at its source, "outweights all other considerations."

There were numerous developments today in "the Norman case"..which has strained friendly relations between Canada and the United States. The Canadian ambassador to Egypt, Hermert Norman, committed suicide last week, after the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee revived charges that he had once been a Communist. The Canadian government takes the position that the charges were long since disproved. And yesterday..in a formal note...it protested the subcommittee action in making them a matter of public record. The note said Canada would have to stop giving security information to the United States if the information was passed on to Congress without Canadian consent. The first developement today was the release..by an official of the subcommittee.. of a statement signed by Chairman Eastland, and the ranking Republican member, Senator Jenner. The statement said the derogatory information against Norman not only had been cleared for publication by the State Department, but that the subcommittee was told by the State Department that the information had been corroborated by the F.B.I. This joint statement...by Eastland and Jenner ...had barely been put out before the subcommittee tried to have it withdrawn. But by then it was too late. The statement already was on the news wires. This afternoon, the State Department denied ever giving the Internal Security Subcommittee any information linking the Canadian diplomat with Communism. The State Department also denied that it cleared the charges for publication.

The department spokesman, Lincoln White, said the testimony of one witness was cleared...but that it contained "no adverse references to any Canadian official." White said the subcommittee apparently misinterpreted this...as meaning that the department had no objection to clearing the entire transcript. He declined to comment on the F.B.I. angle.

President Eisenhower conferred today with Canadian Ambassador Heeney at the White House. Heeney told reporters...afterward...that he emphasized to Mr. Eisenhower the importance which his government, and the Canadian people, attach to the Norman case. He said the President asked him to convey to Prime Minister St. Laurent his regret over the tragedy...and his hope for continuance of good relations. Heeney himself expressed confidence that "logic, good sense and fairness" would prevail...and that "ultimately" friendly relations would be restored.

In Jordan today, there were demonstrations for the return of Suleiman Nabulsi, the pro-Egyptian premier King Hussein ousted from office yesterday. But there was no violence. An attempt to form a new government...more to the liking of the young king...apparently has failed for the time being. Moscow propaganda claims the United States brought on the crisis, in order to force Jordan to accept the Eisenhower Doctrine.

The Saudi Arabian embassy in Cairo issued a strong statement tonight. It said Saudi Arabia will take "all measures" to bar Israeli shipping from the Gulf of Aqaba...all measures, it said, "to defend its legitimate historic rights."

Today....in Atlantic City...the United Auto Workers convention adopted a constitutional amendment, which may have far-reaching effects. The amendment gives office workers...belonging to the U.A.W....the right to negotiate "supplementary agreements" in the course of industry-wide bargaining. President Reuther told the convention this will help the union organize the white-collar workers in the industry ...and improve the union's bargaining position.

President Eisenhower has called for establishment of a special three-man board...to help solve the air traffic problem. Mr. Eisenhower's recommendation went to Congress today as part of an interim report on plans for modernizing the present traffic control system. The report warns that...by 1975...the scheduled airlines of the United States will be flying three times an many passenger miles as they do today...and that there will be many more military and private aircraft. The board proposed by Mr. Eisenhower would be made up of two representatives of the Commerce and Defense Departments ...and a chairman appointed by the President. And its job would be to coordinate all the research being done on the traffic control problem. Democratic Senator Monroney already has criticized the proposal as not going far enough. Such a board, he says, should have the power to order that its recommendations be put into effect...that otherwise there will be dangerous "dissention and delay." Monroney is chairman of the Senate subcommittee that will take up President Eisenhower's proposal.

To future historians, this year, 1957, may go down, not as the year in which the UN called off the invasion of Egypt and made the invaders withdraw, but the year which confirmed the end of Britain's three hundred years of world leadership.

The change, of course, was accelerated by World War Two. Despite lend-lease and the Marshall Plan, Great Britain has never recovered from her exhaustion, the shock of the Blitz, and the enforced development of industrial power throughout her former Empire, which once fed Britain with just the raw materials to fashion the finished goods.

Britain has voluntarily stepped down from its traditional position as a great power, and is accepting for the future, the role of the largest and most influential of the medium powers.

Now Britain is a most difficult country to size up, and some historians have been counting her out, ever since our revolutionary war. I remember reading a Frenchman's history of England, in an air-raid shelter during the London blitz, and how comforting it was to know that he had counted Britain out as far back as 1781 when the red-coats yielded to us at Yorktown.

But it is difficult to draw any other conclusion from the drastic cut in armed strength which Britain now plans.

The British have always been the masters of the plausible pretext, and this time the argue that their reliance on atomic retaliation, will mean "more punch for a pound" the equivalent of our "more bang for a buck." But the weak point in this reasoning, is that Russia is also equipping its army with atomic weapons, so that Britain's increase in fire - power will soon be cancelled out.

It's not easy to determine when this British decision became inevitable.. Perhaps it was in 1944 when the first German V-2 rocket landed in British soil, or perhaps in 1949, when Russia broke the western monopoly on atom Bombs . Or maybe it was way back in 1909 when Louis Bleriot piloted his propeller-driven crate across the English Channel to the White cliffs of Dover.

But an any rate, these military revolutions have climaxed into a problem which Britain acknowledges she cannot meet.

The historic British White Paper put it this way: "The impact on strategic thought" it stated," of therapid progress in scientific and technological development must be reflected. And Britain's financial and economic strength, must be maintained.

There is,at present, according to the British, no means of adequate protection for the whole country, against the consequences of attack with nuclear weapons.

Therefore, say the British, the over-riding consideration in all military planning, must be to prevent war, rather than prepare for it.

Now the British have been called lots of things, but no-one has called them fools. And their bold statement regarding the invincibility of offense, in nuclear war, and the inadequacy of defense, will have repercussions the world over...especially in Western Europe.

France presents neither so isolated nor so concentrated a target as the British Isles. But her economy is just as shaky. And Britain's uncontradicted assertions, may prove tempting to a France searching for ways to unload its own defense burdens.

Ever since the Suez Canal, mis-adventure, France and Britain have been driven closer together, if not by mutual friendship, then by their common predicament.

Science and technology do play a large role in human affairs, but psychology is still to be reckoned with. At the UN, last November, it was the United States which offered the resolution demanding the British and French withdrawal, from Suez.

And this reporter, like every UN observer, was aware of Britain's resentment. Britain realized it no longer rules the waves, but it didn't expect this country to be the first to say it couldn't waive the rules.

Events since then have marched to their inevitable conclusion. Since we wouldn't permit Britain to employ its costly armed forces against a personal enemy, they've decided to scrap them, and let us foot most of the anti-communist defense bill.

Britain has stated in effect, that it can't afford to wait until the power of defense overcomes the power of nuclear offense. And indeed, that may never occur. But as the Pentagon will tell you, the history of warfare has always proved otherwise.

I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the News. But first.. George Bryan.

LESUEUR: Doctor Paul Dudley White, the noted Boston heart specialist, put on a special show for doctors today at Massachusetts General Hospital. He brought with him, Charles Thiery, a 1 hundred and 6 year old , who remembers General Grant and the Civil War. Dr. White said Thiery was in find physical shape, although he suffered from pneumonia at age two, and was given up for dead by his family. He worked as a gold and silversmith for 82 years, retiring when America went off the gold standard. Dr. White said Mr. Thiery does not smoke or drink--but he's always suffered from "nervous indigestion."

This is Larry Lesueur. Goodnight.

Lesueur for Murrow Fri., Apr. 12, 1957

Good evening, everyone... Here's what happened today:

The Senate Finance Committee voted a sweeping investigation of the financial condition of the United States. President Eisenhower called for such a study in his State of the Union message. But he wanted the inquiry made by a commission of prominent citizens--NOT by Congress. The Senate Finance Committee proposes to make the investigation itself. One of its members... Democratic Senator Gore... said, "This is an all-out investigation of the 'tight-money' policy." The resolution... approved unanimously by the committee... authorizes a thorough study of interest rates, availability of credit, and management of the public debt. Chairman Byrd says public hearings will get underway "just as soon as the committee can assemble a competent staff." Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey will be the first witness.

While the Senate group was planning a study of monetary policy, the House Appropriations Committee was lopping another hundred million dollars off President Eisenhower's budget. This time, the ax fell heaviest on the State Department and the United States Information Agency. The 228-million dollar request for the State Department was cut 21 percent. And a 26 percent cut was voted in the 144-million requested for running the information agency in the next fiscal year. It was stipulated, however, that Voice of America broadcasts should NOT be reduced. A cut amounting to 41 percent was approved in the cultural exchange and "trade" fair programs. And funds requested for the Federal Court System were trimmed by 5 percent. In fact, of all the agencies included in the appropriations measure only the F.B.I. escaped the budget ax. The committee issued a report literally LAMBASTING the State Department for some of the ways it was spending money. The report accuses the department of "fiscal irresponsibility" in hiring 950 more people than called for in its budget for the current fiscal year... and in asking for money to hire an additional 2-thousand employes in the next fiscal year. It also described as "completely unrealistic" a request for money for embassy swimming pools and mountain retreats... and said entertainers sent abroad by the government are "paid" too much. The committee said this all amounted to "irresponsible handling of the taxpayers' money."

With Congress in such a mood, Secretary of the Army Brucker today cancelled plans for a free trip... for members of Congress... to Fort Knox, Kentucky. The Army invited the congressmen to Fort Knox, to observe a military demonstration on May third and fourth. Since the Kentucky Derby will be run-off that week-end in nearby Louisville, the Army was accused of trying... by this means... to get favorable action on its budget. Brucker said yesterday he hadn't known the Derby was that week-end. And today he called the junket off... because, he said, "its serious purpose had been so distorted."

The House Appropriations Committee voted today to let the Post Office Department have an extra 41-million dollars... to meet its expenses until July first. Postmaster General Summerfield has said repeatedly that the department must have 47-million dollars for that purpose... right away... or start closing post offices on Saturday. In voting only 41 of the 47-million today, the committee contended that the other 6-million can wait... that Summerfield wanted it for new equipment, the purchase of which can be postponed. Tonight, Summerfield called the committee action "an encouraging first step." But he said the cutback in service... scheduled for tomorrow... must go into effect. Service cannot be restored, he said, until the money actually is available. And Congress has yet to complete action on the supplementary appropriation measure. So... until further notice... there will be no mail deliveries on Saturday, except "Special Delivery." Post Offices will be closed on Saturdays. And, during the week, mail deliveries to all downtown business districts will be limited to two a day. Mail will be collected FROM street boxes tomorrow... but on the limited Sunday schedule.

Here in New York today, the United Nations issued its final progress report on the clearing of the Suez Canal. The project was completed, it said, at a cost of just under 11-million dollars. And the U.N. said it has loans from ten governments... including the United States... to cover the amount.

The Israeli ambassador... Abba Eban... conferred with Secretary General Hammarskjold today for about a half hour. Eban said, afterward, that he pressed Hammarskjold for an answer from President Nasser... on whether Egypt still considers itself technically at war with Israel. Eban said

Israel will insist on its right of free passage through the Gulf of Aqaba.

And there was a surprise development tonight at the U.N. The delegate from Communist Hungary invited Mr. Hammarskjold to visit Budapest "any time that is convenient for him." Last fall, you remember, the Kadar government refused to allow the secretary general into the country, when he wanted to investigate Russia's intervention in the bloody Hungarian revolt. So far, Hammarskjold has not said whether he will ACCEPT this invitation.

Today, eighteen of West Germany's leading scientists served notice that [redacted] they will not take part "in any way" with the production... or testing... of atomic weapons. They said, in their joint statement: "We know of no technical possibility of protecting the population against the danger of extermination by hydrogen bombs." One of the scientists signing the statement was Dr. Otto Hahn, the first man to split the uranium atom. Chancellor Adenauer said the scientists [redacted] spoke without "military and political knowledge."

In London, the representatives of five major powers are discussing disarmament, in the light of the awful danger. For a progress report on those talks... and what happened there today... we switch now to London and Howard K. Smith. (Tape runs 4:18, ends on cue: "--to CBS News in N.Y.")

General Nordstad, supreme allied commander in Europe, said today [redacted] he "does not believe" [redacted] Russia now has an intermediate range missile... posing an immediate threat to any NATO country. "We ourselves," he said, "are not bristling with such missiles. I know of no reason for giving the Russians credit for doing... with the greatest of ease... the things that other people find great difficulty in doing." Nordstad made this statement at a news conference... when a reporter asked if Russia has missiles in the 15-hundred-mile range that could be fired at Norway and Denmark. (Russia has recently been threatening [redacted] these and other countries with [redacted] atomic retaliation, in event [redacted] of war.)

There is no definite word tonight regarding [redacted] the political situation in Jordan. The extreme nationalist... Abdul halim MIRMR [redacted]... is [redacted] said still [redacted] to be [redacted] undecided as to whether he should try to form a government. Mimr was defense minister in the [redacted]-cabinet of Su-lay-mahn' Na-bul-see, [redacted] the pro-Egyptian premier King Hussein ordered out of office only last Wednesday. Thus, Hussein would still seem to be in some danger. An unconfirmed report... carried by the International News Service... says Syria has rushed more troops into Jordan. I.N.S. says the Syrian government did this [redacted] as a protective measure against what it called "the threat of an Israli invasion."

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote the News — One But two Gurge Bey

The British have announced they'll cut their armed forces and rely on nuclear weapons to keep the peace.—

16 years ago - in another time of British crisis Ed Murrow was broadcasting from an airraid shelter in London. He said then the British had come thru a hard winter and difficult times lay ahead.

The British could say of the past, said Murrow, We've lived a life, not an apology." And of the future Murrow thought most of them would say: "We shall live hard, but we shall live."

my friend Ed Murrow will be back on this broadcast on Monday.

This is Larry LeSueur...Goodnite.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

FRIDAY, APRIL 12, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

LE SUEUR: In London, the representatives of five major powers are discussing disarmament in the light of an awful danger. For a progress report on those talks and what happened there today, we switch now to London and Howard K. Smith.

SMITH: The Subcommittee, appointed in the United Nations several years ago with the purpose of seeking an agreement among the great powers on stopping the arms race, held its 102nd meeting here in London this afternoon. The meeting was pervaded by an atmosphere of modest optimism. If you have heard or read any reports from London about earlier meetings of that UN Subcommittee on Disarmament over the past two years, you will recognize that commentary like some familiar old refrain. There was an atmosphere of modest optimism back when the talks first began, though nothing substantial ever came of it, and there was still today modest optimism at meeting number 102.

In case memory needs prompting, the Subcommittee consists of America, Britain, France, Canada and Russia. The Subcommittee meets in spurts, then breaks up to report to the UN on how it has been doing. The present spurt began here in London on March the 18th. It was tentatively planned to break up on April the 18th, that is next weekend. However, so substantial was the modest optimism this afternoon that it was agreed to go on meeting indefinitely.

The current optimism is based on two special features of the conversations. First, the United States had taken a new tack. Mr. Harold Stassen, the U. S. delegate, has suggested that it would be trying too much to disarm or to reduce arms drastically. The Subcommittee should seek ways rather of just reducing arms moderately, in stages. The idea is that in signing an agreement, no power should be taking some drastic or irretrievable step that would put it at a disadvantage if the plan were shown later not to work.

The theory is that if the first step is taken on a soft featherbed to catch any falls, rather than on a bed of spikes, all will be more ready to take the first step and then the second one. That new approach is the first feature of the current series of talks.

The second feature is that Russia appears to like that approach and so far has made only constructive and encouraging remarks about American initiatives along that line. Last week, the United States proposed that all the nations should agree to a ten percent cut in conventional arms, which arms would be delivered to central depots by each power for counting and storing, with a promise that all would then agree to a 15 percent cut at some specified later period, if all went well with the first step. The Russians thought this was worth thinking about, which amounts to wild enthusiasm on the Russians past standards of behavior at conferences like this.

Today the Subcommittee moved from those conventional arms to nuclear arms. The U. S. proposed that the three who possess nuclear arms - the United States, Britain and Russia - should agree not to disarm but to stop arming. That is to keep the stockpiles that each has now but to make no more. Thus, if after a period of say a year or two, one power felt that the others were cheating and it wanted to break out of the agreement, it would not have lost anything. It would still have its former stock of nuclear weapons, which in the case of the United States and Russia is doubtless enough to destroy all ordered life in the opposing country and is therefore quite enough without any further advances or progress.

The U. S. proposal had the further attractive feature that it would ask all other nations, those who do not possess atomic weapons yet, to adopt the same standstill. That means they would never get atomic weapons. That is a very attractive feature indeed. For as it was put today, the Big Three have not been able to agree for the eleven years on this. If they are unable to agree for the next eleven years, there's no doubt whatever that by that time, 15 or so new nations will have the bomb with all the consequent increase in danger that one might use it in a crisis and trigger the world to destruction.

The Russians appeared to be impressed as did the others. So all agreed not to break up next week, but to go on talking along these lines. And the meeting broke up in modest optimism. Back now to CBS News in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

FRIDAY, APRIL 12, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

LE SUEUR: In London, the representatives of five major powers are discussing disarmament in the light of an awful danger. For a progress report on those talks and what happened there today, we switch now to London and Howard K. Smith.

SMITH: The Subcommittee, appointed in the United Nations several years ago with the purpose of seeking an agreement among the great powers on stopping the arms race, held its 102nd meeting here in London this afternoon. The meeting was pervaded by an atmosphere of modest optimism. If you have heard or read any reports from London about earlier meetings of that UN Subcommittee on Disarmament over the past two years, you will recognize that commentary like some familiar old refrain. There was an atmosphere of modest optimism back when the talks first began, though nothing substantial ever came of it, and there was still today modest optimism at meeting number 102.

In case memory needs prompting, the Subcommittee consists of America, Britain, France, Canada and Russia. The Subcommittee meets in spurts, then breaks up to report to the UN on how it has been doing. The present spurt began here in London on March the 18th. It was tentatively planned to break up on April the 18th, that is next weekend. However, so substantial was the modest optimism this afternoon that it was agreed to go on meeting indefinitely.

The current optimism is based on two special features of the conversations. First, the United States had taken a new tack. Mr. Harold Stassen, the U. S. delegate, has suggested that it would be trying too much to disarm or to reduce arms drastically. The Subcommittee should seek ways rather of just reducing arms moderately, in stages. The idea is that in signing an agreement, no power should be taking some drastic or irretrievable step that would put it at a disadvantage if the plan were shown later not to work.

The theory is that if the first step is taken on a soft featherbed to catch any falls, rather than on a bed of spikes, all will be more ready to take the first step and then the second one. That new approach is the first feature of the current series of talks.

The second feature is that Russia appears to like that approach and so far has made only constructive and encouraging remarks about American initiatives along that line. Last week, the United States proposed that all the nations should agree to a ten percent cut in conventional arms, which arms would be delivered to central depots by each power for counting and storing, with a promise that all would then agree to a 15 percent cut at some specified later period, if all went well with the first step. The Russians thought this was worth thinking about, which amounts to wild enthusiasm on the Russians past standards of behavior at conferences like this.

Today the Subcommittee moved from those conventional arms to nuclear arms. The U. S. proposed that the three who possess nuclear arms - the United States, Britain and Russia - should agree not to disarm but to stop arming. That is to keep the stockpiles that each has now but to make no more. Thus, if after a period of say a year or two, one power felt that the others were cheating and it wanted to break out of the agreement, it would not have lost anything. It would still have its former stock of nuclear weapons, which in the case of the United States and Russia is doubtless enough to destroy all ordered life in the opposing country and is therefore quite enough without any further advances or progress.

The U. S. proposal had the further attractive feature that it would ask all other nations, those who do not possess atomic weapons yet, to adopt the same standstill. That means they would never get atomic weapons. That is a very attractive feature indeed. For as it was put today, the Big Three have not been able to agree for the eleven years on this. If they are unable to agree for the next eleven years, there's no doubt whatever that by that time, 15 or so new nations will have the bomb with all the consequent increase in danger that one might use it in a crisis and trigger the world to destruction.

The Russians appeared to be impressed as did the others. So all agreed not to break up next week, but to go on talking along these lines. And the meeting broke up in modest optimism. Back now to CBS News in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 12, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone....Here's what happened today:

The Senate Finance Committee voted a sweeping investigation of the financial condition of the United States. President Eisenhower called for such a study in his State of the Union message. But he wanted the inquiry made by a commission of prominent citizens---NOT by Congress. The Senate Finance Committee proposes to make the investigation itself. One of its members..Democratic Senator Gore..said, "This is an all-out investigation of the 'tight-money ' policy". The resolution...approved unanimously be the committee authorizes a thorough study of interest rates, availability of credit, and management of the public debt. Chairman Byrd says public hearings will get underway "just as soon as the committee can assemble a competent staff." Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey will be the first witness.

While the Senate group was planning a study of monetary policy, the House appropriations Committee was lopping another hundred million dollars off President Eisenhower's budget. This time, the ax fell heaviest on the State Department and the United States Information Agency. The 228 - million dollar request for the State Department was cut 21 percent. And a 26 percent cut was voted in the 144-million requested for running the information agency in the next fiscal year. It was stipulated, however, that Voice of America broadcasts should not be reduced. A cut amounting to 41 percent was approved in the cultural exchange and trade fair programs. And funds requested for the Federal Court System were trimmed by 5 percent. In fact, of all the agencies included in the appropriations measure, only the F.B.I. escaped the budget ax. The committee issued a report literally lambasting the State Department for some of the ways it was spending money. The report accuses the department of "fiscal irresponsibility" in hiring 950 more people than called for in its budget for the current fiscal year and in asking for money to hire an additional 2-thousand employes in the next fiscal year. It also described as "completely unrealistic" a request for money for embassy swimming pools and mountain retreats...and said entertainers sent abroad by the government are paid too much. The committee said this all amounted to "irresponsible handling of the taxpayers' money."

With Congress in such a mood, Secretary of the Army Brucker today cancelled plans for a free trip..for members of Congress..to Fort Knox, Kentucky. The Army invited the congressmen to Fort Knox, to observe a military demonstration on May third and fourth. Since the Kentucky Derby will be run-off that week - end in nearby Louisville, the Army was accused of trying..by this means..to get favorable action on its budget. Brucker said yesterday he hadn't known the Derby was that week-end. And today he called the junket off...because, he said, "its serious purpose had been so distorted."

The House Appropriations Committee voted today to let the Post Office Department have an extra 41-million dollars to meet its expenses until July first. Postmaster General Summerfield has said repeatedly that the department must have 47 - million dollars for that purpose..right away...or start closing offices on Saturday. In voting only 41 of the 47 - million today, the committee contended that the other 6 - million can wait..that Summerfield wanted it for new equipment, the purchase of which can be postponed. Tonight, Summerfield called the committee action "an encouraging first step." But he said the cutback in service...scheduled for tomorrow..must go into effect. Service cannot be restored, he said, until the money actually is available. And Congress has yet to complete action on the supplementary appropriation measure. So...until further notice...there will be no mail deliveries on Saturday, except "special delivery." Post offices will be closed on Saturdays. And, during the week, mail deliveries to all downtown business districts will be limited to two a day. Mail will be collected from street boxes tomorrow..but on the limited Sunday schedule.

Here in New York today, the United Nations issued its final progress report on the clearing of the Suez Canal. Thr project was completed, it said, at a cost of just under 11-million dollars. And the U.N. said it has loans from ten governments..including the United States to cover the amount.

The Israeli ambassador...Abba Eban...conferred with Secretary General Hammarskjold today for about a half hour. Evan said, afterward, that he pressed Hammarskjold for an answer from President Nasser..on whether Egypt still considers itself tehcnically at war with Israel. Eban said Israel will insist on its right of free passage through the Gulf of Aqaba.

And there was a surprise development tonight at the U.N. The delegate from Communist Hungary invited Mr. Hammarskjold to visit Budapest "any time that is convenient for him." Last fall, you remember, the Kadar government refused to allow the secretary general into the country, when he wanted to investigate Russia's intervention in the bloody Hungarian revolt. So far, Hammarskjold has not said whether he will accept this invitation.

Today, eighteen of West Germany's leading scientists served notice that they will not take part "in any way" in the production or testing..of atomic weapons. They said, in their joint statement:"We know of no technical possibility of protecting the population against danger of extermination by hydrogen bombs." One of the scientists signing the statement was Dr. Otto Hahn, the first man to split the uranium atom. Chancellor Adenauer said the scientists spoke without "military and political knowledge."

In London. the representatives of five major powers are discussuing disarmament, in the light of the awful danger. For a progress report on those talks...and what happened there today..we switch now to London and Howard K. Smith.

SMITH: The Subcommittee, appointed in the United Nations several years ago with the purpose of seeking an agreement among the great powers on stopping the arms race, held its 102nd meeting here in London this afternoon. The meeting was pervaded by an atmosphere of modest optimism. If you have heard or read any reports from London about earlier meetings of that UN Subcommittee on Disarmement over the past two years, you will recognize that commentary like some familiar old refrain. There was an atomsphere of modest optimism back when the talks first began, though nothing substantial ever came of it, and there was still today modest optimism at meeting number 102.

In case memory needs prompting, the Subcommittee consists of American Britain, France, Canada and Russia. The Subcommittee meets in spurts, then breaks up to report to the UN on how it has been doing. The present spurt began here in London on March the 18th. It was tentatively planned to break up on April 18th, that is next weekend. However, so substantial was the modest optimism this afternoon that it was agreed to go on meeting indefinitely.

The current optimism is based on two special features of the conversations. First, the United States had taken a new tack. Mr. Harold Stassen, the U.S. delegate, has suggested that it would be trying too much to disarm or to reduce arms drastically. The Subcommittee should seek ways rather of just reducing arms moderately, in stages. The idea is that in signing an agreement, no power should be taking some drastic or irretrievable step that would put it at a disadvantage if the plan were shown later not to work.

The theory is that if the first step is taken on a soft featherbed to catch any falls, rather than on a bed of spikes, all will be more ready to take the first step and then the second one. That new approach is the first feature of the current series of talks.

The second feature is that Russia appears to like that approach and so far has hade only constructive and encouraging remarks about American initiatives along that line. Last week, the United States proposed that all the nations should agree to a ten percent cut in conventional arms, which arms would be delivered to central depots by each power for counting and storing, with a promise that all would then agree to a 15 percent cut at some specified later period, if all went well with the first step. The Russians thought this was worth thinking about, which amounts to wild enthusiasm on the Russians past standards of behavior at conferences like this.

Today the Subcommittee moved from those conventional arms to nuclear arms. The U.N. proposed that the three who possess nuclear arms -- the United States, Britain and Russia - should agree not to disarm but to stop arming. That is to keep the stockpiles that each has now but to make no more. Thus, if after a period of say a year or two, one power felt that the others were cheating and it wanted to break out of the agreement, it would not have lost anything. It would still have its former stock of nuclear weapons, which in the case of the United States and Russia is doubtless enough to destroy all ordered life in the opposing country and is therefore quite enough without any further advances or progress.

The U.S. proposal had the further attractive feature that it would ask all other nations, those who do not possess atomic weapons yet, to adopt the same standstill. That means they would never get atomic weapons. That is a very attractive feature indeed. For as it was put today, the Big Three have not been able to agree for the eleven years on this. If they are unable to agree for the next eleven yesrs, there's no doubt whatever that by that time, 15 or so new nations will have the bomb with all the consequent increase in danger that one might use it in a crisis and trigger the world to destruction.

The Russians appeared to be impressed as did the others. So all agreed not to break up next week, but to go on talking along these lines. And the meeting broke up in modest optimism. Back now to CBS News in New York.

LESUEUR: There is no definite word tonight regarding the political situation in Jordan. The extreme nationalist...Abdul halim Mimr...is said still to be undecided as to whether he should try to form a government. Mimr was defense minister in the cabinet of Sulaymahn Nabulse, the pro-Egyptian premier, King Hussein ordered out of office only last Wednesday. Thus, Hussein would still seem to be in some danger. An unconfirmed report carried by the International News Service says Syria has rushed more troops into Jordan. I.N.S. says the Syrian government did this as a protective measure against what it called "the threat of an Israeli invasion."

I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the News. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

LESUEUR: The British have announced they'll cut their armed forces and rely on nuclear weapons to keep the peace. 16 years ago...in another time of British crisis...Ed Murrow was broadcasting from an air raid shelter in London. He said then the British had come through a hard winter and difficult times lay ahead. The British could say of the past, said Murrow, "We've lived a life, not an apology." And of the future, Murrow thought most of them would say: "We shall live hard, but we shall live."

My friend Ed Murrow will be back on this broadcast on Monday. This is Larry LeSueur. Goodnight.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Apr. 15, 1957

This is the news:

Jordan has a new government. The prime minister is Dr. Khálidi, a Palestinian Arab who once served as mayor of Jerusalem. /He is assured of considerable support... since Palestinian refugees make up roughly one-third of the population of Jordan. /CBS News Correspondent Richard Kallsen reports from Amman that former Premier Nabulsi... whom King Hussein removed from office last week... is foreign minister in the new cabinet. Nabulsi is pro-Egyptian. Premier Khálidi said tonight he will follow a policy of "positive neutrality"... and that he will help other Arab countries resist colonialism. /Kallsen says it remains to be seen whether Khálidi will be less critical of the West than his predecessor... though he is described in some quarters as a moderate with definite anti-Communist sentiments. King Hussein remains on the throne, apparently because he has the backing of the Jordanian Army. The government claims the situation is normal. But correspondents are still working under censorship.. in that military subjects cannot be discussed. Kallsen quotes a government spokesman as denying that any member of the previous cabinet has been "detained". And the government of Syria denies reports that King Hussein demanded the withdrawal of Syrian troops stationed in Jordan.

Today... in Moscow... the party newspaper Pravda blamed the United States for the crisis in Jordan. Pravda claims the United States forced the resignation of the Nabulsi government in order to "break" Arab unity.

Israel was quiet tonight... as Jews began the observance of Passover.

Norway has rejected Russia's warning on the stationing of atomic weapons on Norwegian soil. The Norwegian note... published tonight... says that until there are binding disarmament agreements, Norway "must insure the defense of the country in the way it considers best." Norway again asked Russia to agree with other countries to register nuclear tests with the United Nations in advance. The note is in reply to the letter last month from Soviet Premier Bulganin... warning Norway that it risks destruction, if it allows itself to be used as an atomic base. Since then, similar warnings have gone out from Russia to countries ranging all the way from Iceland to the Middle East.

In Stockholm today, two citizens of Sweden were charged with obtaining defense secrets... with the intention of selling them to a foreign power. The "foreign power" was not named, but presumably it was Russia. One of the accused was assistant secretary for the Swedish Atomic Commission.

Moscow Radio today reiterated the Soviet proposal... to suspend nuclear tests for a definite period, if the West will agree to do the same. Last week, the United States proposed an embargo on the employment of fissionable material for military purposes after next April first. This would entail a fool-proof inspection system. And today... at the United Nations disarmament talks in London... the American plan was endorsed by Britain and France. No reply yet from Moscow.

Soviet President Voroshilov arrived in Red China today for a 20-day state visit. The Peiping radio says he was greeted at the Peiping airport by Chinese Communist Leader Mao Tse-tung.

In Bucharest today, Russia and Rumania signed an agreement for the "temporary" stationing of Soviet troops on Rumanian territory. Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko signed for Russia.

Defense Minister Strauss... of West Germany... said tonight that the United States will deliver atomic warheads to its NATO allies only after an act of aggression has been committed. Chancellor Adenauer said two weeks ago that the new West German Army needs atomic weapons. This created a political storm and... last Friday... eighteen of West Germany's top scientists served notice that they would have nothing to do with the production or testing of such weapons.

Soviet President Voroshilov arrived in Red China today for a 20-day state visit. And in Bucharest, an agreement was signed for the "temporary" stationing of Soviet troops in Roumania.

In Congress today, the House passed and sent to the Senate a bill to give the Post Office Department an extra 41-million dollars... so that it can resume normal service. The emergency appropriation measure was passed on a voice vote... after Democratic Representative Cannon had made a speech accusing Postmaster General Summerfield of taking a "public-be-damned" attitude. Summerfield suspended Saturday deliveries of mail last week-end, when Congress failed to give the department the additional 47-million dollars he said would be necessary to carry it through June 30th. And today... in another cutback of service... downtown business districts received only two deliveries of mail, instead of the customary three. And window service at post offices across the country was limited to eight and a half hours. Summerfield was defended in today's House debate by Republican Representative Martin, who said the postmaster general had told Congress as early as last July of his department's needs... and that Congress had failed to act. The Senate may pass the special appropriation measure tomorrow. And in that case, normal service could be restored within the next two or three days.

The Senate today voted to raise the interest on U.S. Savings Bonds to three and a quarter percent. The measure now goes back to the House, which voted to allow the rate to go as high as three and a half percent. The legislation was requested by the Treasury Department... and it applies to savings bonds purchased after last February first. The bonds currently pay 3 percent interest.

President Eisenhower officially opened the major league baseball season today by tossing out a couple of ceremonial "first balls" in Griffith Stadium... where the Baltimore Orioles defeated the Washington Senators in 11 innings, 7 to 6. It can thus be reported that... as of tonight... the Orioles are in first place in the American League. The other clubs play tomorrow.

Edward R. Murrow: April 15, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The political upheaval in Jordan is not only the most acute concern of the Middle East, it is the most acute concern of the United States. This is our crisis, we are saddled with it, and if it is going to be averted it will only be by our taking the responsibility for it. If it had happened a year or two ago, it would have been a British responsibility, and we could have let them bear the brunt of it. Now we have taken Britain's place in the Middle East. It is too late to discuss whether we were wise in helping push the British and French out of their place of power. The point is that we now are coming into the full consequence of our action.

So far King Hussein has staved off the loss of his throne, and averted either the secession of his country to Egypt or its partition. In doing so he has affronted both Egypt and Syria. The loyalty of his British-trained army has given him round one, but it promises to be a longer fight. The pro-Egyptians in Jordan can command the mobs which can be a decisive factor in Jordanian politics. Hussein may be able to count on his 35,000-man army, but the mobs might prove to be even stronger. And unlike the street fighters in Budapest, they would know they are not alone. Syria already has troops inside the kingdom, ready to march on the side of the mobs. And while Iraq is equally ready to march in on the side of XXXX

Hussein, that would be open war, with Israel taking a hand, along with Egypt, Syria and Iraq to slice up the doomed kingdom.

For the United States such a war would be aggression. We stopped the aggression of Britain, France and Israel against Egypt. We could do so, partly because the aggressors were our friends, who had to listen to us, but partly because the Soviet Union was against the aggression, too. Now, Egypt and Syria are not our friends, and the Soviet Union would not desert them to side with us. Moscow already is telling the world this crisis is due to our imperialism. Nobody expects the Soviet Union to pull our chestnuts out of the fire, in the Middle East or in the United Nations, not even in an issue over aggression.

We are enfeebled at this time because there is no tri-partite pact with Britain and France to stop aggression with military intervention. The State Department, when it decided some time back to play mediator between Nasser and the British and French, gave up the tri-partite pact. Now we have only the United Nations to fall back on, or our own military initiative. The United Nations, with the Afro-Asian bloc linked with the Soviet bloc, cannot be expected to be overwhelmingly on our side against Egypt and Syria. And since our military intervention is limited by the Eisenhower doctrine to

~~aggression by communists, the State Department is hardly counting on solving the crisis with military power.~~

Our policy in the Middle East is like a chair with four legs. If one of them breaks the chair may topple. Jordan is one of these legs, and has ~~quite unexpectedly~~ become the one most likely to break. Actually the other legs are also in danger. These three are the Suez settlement, the opening of the Gulf of Aqaba to Israeli commerce, and the protection of Israel from Egyptian attacks from the Gaza Strip.

The Suez settlement has been deadlocked ever since the Israeli withdrawal. We continue to insist on the insulation of the canal from Egyptian policy, but Nasser refuses to make any major concession. Here we have no bargaining power, as Nasser knows and the whole world knows.

In the Aqaba Gulf it looked for a time as though we had established the right of innocent shipping, and had won a quiet but impressive victory. An American ship chartered by Israel went through unmolested. But instead of encouraging the world to recognize this as the fruit of American leadership, we told Nasser we would not insist on use of the Aqaba Gulf while negotiating over the Suez Canal. We even stated publicly that the ship which went through did so without State Department initiative. So we repudiated what could have been a promising success.

In the Gaza Strip, the Egyptians have taken over the police functions from the U.N. emergency force, and are signally failing to prevent Egyptian night attacks over the Israeli border.

The only one of the four crises that surely would not lead to war is over the Suez Canal. But Israel might fight for its rights in the Aqaba Gulf, and to protect itself from attacks from Gaza. And the Jordan crisis might turn overnight into one of the most predatory wars of recent times. To most Americans this may seem like a far-away tempest. But it is only far away geographically. This is our immediate responsibility, and unless we shoulder it, the end result of our leadership may be to lose the region to the Communists altogether. That would be the worst defeat in power that the free world has yet suffered.

Stewart Metz

Word for Today

What happened in Griffith Stadium today shows that the world cannot be too awry... whatever is wrong with it can still be fixed. Baseball is more than escape. It is an integral part of this country. Just as Professor Jacques Barzun (BAR-ZUNN) once said, "Whoever wants to know the mind and heart of America had better learn baseball---the rules and realities of the game."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 15, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Jordan has a new government. The Prime Minister is Dr. Khalidi, a Palestinian Arab who once served as mayor of Jerusalem. He is assured of considerable support...since Palestinian refugees make up roughly one-third of the population of Jordan. CBS News Correspondent Richard Kallsen reports from Amman that former Premier Nabulsi...whom King Hussein removed from office last week...is foreign minister in the new cabinet. Nabulsi is pro- Egyptian. Premier Khalidi said tonight he will follow a policy of "positive neutrality" and that he will help other Arab countries resist colonialism. Kallsen says it remains to be seen whether Khalidi will be less critical of the West than his predecessor...though he is described in some quarters as a moderate with a definite anti-Communist sentiments. King Hussein remains on the throne, apparently because he has the backing of the Jordanian Army. The government claims the situation is normal. But correspondents are still working under censorship...in that military subjects cannot be discussed. Kallsen quotes a government spokesman as denying that any member of the previous cabinet has been "detained". And the government of Syria denies reports that King Hussein demanded the withdrawal of Syrian troops stationed in Jordan.

Today...in Moscow...the party newspaper Pravda blamed the United States for the crisis in Jordan. Pravda claims the United States forced the resignation of Nabulsi government in order to "break" Arab unity.

Israel was quiet tonight...as Jews began the observance of Passover.

Norway has rejected Russia's warning on the stationing of atomic weapons on Norwegian soil. The Norwegian note...published tonight...says that until there are binding disarmement agreements, Norway "must insure the defense of the country in the way it considers best." Norway again asked Russia to agree with other countries to registar nuclear tests with the United Nations in advance. The note is in reply to the letter last month from Soviet Premier Bulganin...warning Norway that it risks destruction, if it allows itself to be used as an atomic base. Since then, similar warnings have gone out from Russia to countries ranging all the way from Iceland to the Middle East.

Moscow Radio today reiterated the Soviet proposal to suspend nuclear tests for a definite period if the West will agree to do the same. Last week, the United States proposed an embargo on the employment of fissionable material for military purposes after next April first. This would entail a foolproof inspection system. And today...at the United Nations disarmement talks in London...the American plan was endorsed by Britain and France. No reply yet from Moscow.

Defense Minister Strauss...of West Germany...said tonight that the United States will deliver atomic warheads to its NATO allies only after an act of aggression has been committed. Chancellor Adenauer said two weeks ago that the new West German Army needs atomic weapons. This created a political storm and...last Friday...eighteen of West Germany's top scientists served notice that they would have nothing to do with the production of testing of such weapons.

Soviet President Voroshilov arrived in Red China today for a 20-day state visit. And in Bucharest, an agreement was signed for the "temporary" stationing of Soviet troops in Roumania.

In Congress today, the House passed and sent to the Senate a bill to give the Post Office Department an extra 41-million dollars...so that it can resume normal service. The emergency appropriation measure was passed on a voice vote...after Democratic Representative Cannon has made a speech accusing Postmaster General Summerfield of taking a "public be - dammed" attitude.

Summerfield suspended Saturday deliveries of mail last week-end, when Congress failed to give the department the additional 47-million dollars he said would be necessary to carry it through June 30th. And today...in another cutback of service...downtown business districts received only two deliveries of mail, instead of the customary three. And window services at post offices across the country was limited to eight and half hours. Summerfield was defended in today's House debate by Republican Representative Martin, who said the postamster general had told Congress as early as last July of his department's needs and that Congress had failed to act. The Senate may pass the special appropriation measure tomorrow. And in that case, normal service could be restored within the next two or three days.

The Senate today voted to raise the interest on U.S. Savings Bonds to three and a quarter percent. The measure now goes back to the House, which voted to allow the rate to go as high as three and a half percent. The legislation was requested by the Treasury Department...and it applies to savings bonds purchased after last February first. The bonds currently pay 3 percent interest.

President Eisenhower officially opened the major league baseball season today by tossing out a couple of ceremonial "first balls" in Griffith Stadium ...where the Baltimore Orioles defeated the Washington Senators in 11 innings, 7 to 6. It can thus be reported that..as of tonight...the Orioles are in first place in the American League. The other clubs play tomorrow.

The political upheavel in Jordan is not only the most acute concern of the Middle East, it is the most acute concern of the United States. This is our crisis, we are saddled with it, and if it is going to be averted, it will only be by our taking the responsibility for it. It it had happened a year or two ago, it would have been a British responsibility, and we could have let them bear the brunt of it. Now we have taken Britain's place in the Middle East. It is too late to discuss whether we were wise in helping push the British and French out of their place of power. The point is that we now are coming into the full consequence of our action.

So far King Hussein has staved off the loss of his throne, and averted either the secession of his country to Egypt or its partition. In doing so he has affronted both Egypt and Syria. The loyalty of his British - trained army has given him round one, but it promises to be a longer fight. The pro-Egyptians in Jordan can command the mobs which can be a decisive factor in Jordanian politics. Hussein may be able to count on his 35,000 - man army, but the mobs might prove to be even stronger. And unlike the street fighters in Budapest, they would know they are not alone. Syria already has troops inside the kingdom, ready to march on the side of the mobs. And while Iraq is equally ready to march in on the side of Hussein, that would be open war, with Israel taking a hand, along with Egypt, Syria and Iraq to slice up the doomed kingdom.

For the United States such a war would be aggression. We stopped the aggression of Britain, France and Israel against Egypt. We could do so, partly because the aggressors were our friends, who had to listen to us, but partly because the Soviet Union was against the aggression, too. Now, Egypt and Syria are not our friends, and the Soviet Union would not desert them to side with us. Moscow already is telling the world this crisis is due to our imperialism. Nobody expects the Soviet Union to pull our chestnuts out of the fire, in the Middle East or in the United Nations, not even in an issue over aggression.

We are enfeebled at this time because there is no tri-partite pact with Britain and France to stop aggression with military intervention. The State Department, when it decided some time back to play mediator between Nasser and the British and French, gave up the tri-partite pact. Now we have only the United Nations to fall back on, or our own military initiative.

Our policy in the Middle East is like a chair with four legs. If one of them breaks the chair may topple, Jordan is one of these legs, and has become the one most likely to break. Actually the other legs are also in danger. These three are the Suez settlement, the opening of the Gulf of Aqaba to Israeli commerce, and the protection of Israel from Egyptian attacks from the Gaza Strip.

The Suez settlement has been deadlocked ever since the Israeli withdrawal. We continue to insist on the insulation of the canal from Egyptian policy, but Nasser refuses to make any major concession. Here we have no bargaining power, as Nasser knows and the whole world knows.

In the Aqaba Gulf it looked for a time as though we had established the right of innocent shipping, and had won a quiet but impressive victory. An American ship chartered by Israel went through unmolested. But instead of encouraging the world to recognize the fruit of American leadership, we told Nasser we would not insist on use of the Aqaba Gulf while negotiating over the Suez Canal. We even stated publicly that the ship which went through did so without State Department initiative. Se we repudiated what could have been a promising success.

In the Gaza Strip, the Egyptians have taken over the police functions from the U.N. emergency force, and are signally failing to prevent Egyptian night attacks over the Israeli border.

The only one of the four crises that surely would not lead to war is over the Suez Canal. But Israel might fight for its rights in the Aqaba Gulf, and to protect itself from attacks from Gaza. And the Jordan crisis might turn overnight into one of the most predatory wars of recent times. To most Americans this may seem like a far-away tempest. But it is only far away geographically. This is our immediate responsibility, and unless we shoulder it, the end result of our leadership may be to lost the region to the Communists altogether. That would be the worst defeat in power that the free world has

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Apr 16, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower tonight signed an emergency measure... giving the Post Office Department an extra 41-million dollars, so normal postal service can be restored. Postmaster General Summerfield had told Congress his department must have the money in order to function normally the rest of this fiscal year. / That is, until July first. / Last week, when Congress failed to act, he ordered a series of cutbacks in postal service... including suspension of delivery of mail on Saturdays. Summerfield had said the department needed 47-million dollars. But he is going along with the 41-million-dollar appropriation. He says he is giving orders for resumption of normal service, effective within 24 hours. He says he is "gratified to have the overwhelming affirmative vote of Congress." And he promises that "every effort" will be made to give the public the best service possible. ~~The congressional action was swift. The Senate Appropriations Committee considered the emergency legislation... and passed on it... within 10 minutes. Passage by the full Senate took only about half an hour, then the measure went back to the House. The House passed a similar bill yesterday. The amount was the same -- 41 million dollars -- but there were other minor differences. The House approved the Senate version on a voice vote. And by late afternoon the measure was on the President's desk. Mr. Eisenhower signed it about an hour ago.~~

President Eisenhower told Republican congressional leaders today that the cut voted by the House in the budget for the United States Information Agency was "too deep". (The slash amounted to 26 percent of the 144-million dollars requested). Mr. Eisenhower made his feelings known at the regular weekly conference of Republican leaders at the White House. House Republican Leader Martin said afterward that he agreed with the President that the cut was too deep. But he said that... as a practical matter... he knew the House would not restore any of the curtailed funds. He was right. Late this afternoon... on a voice vote... the House approved the cut. The approval is tentative in that the appropriation is part of an omnibus bill on which a roll-call vote is yet to be taken. Also in the omnibus bill is an appropriation for the State Department. Last week, the House committee voted to reduce the request of 228-million dollars for the department by 21 percent. That represented a cut of 47-million. Tonight, the full House cut it another 7-million. The new slash was in funds to be contributed to international organizations, such as the United Nations.

The Senate rackets committee today resumed public hearings on corrupt labor practices...this time, with attention focussed on Scranton, Pennsylvania. The first witness was Paul Bradshaw, a former steward of Scranton Local 229 of the teamsters union. Bradshaw told the Senate investigators a story of beatings, rigged union elections and bribes. He said he "took the rap" for dynamiting a non-union building project in 1954 on the promise that he would be "taken care of". Bradshaw said he did not do the dynamiting... that he had not been "taken care of"... and that that is why he is talking. He testified that when he wanted to tell the true story...and implicate other union officials... Mayor Hanlon of Scranton asked him to "lay off" until after a city election. (Mayor Hanlon has sent the committee a telegram... denying he ever discussed the case with Bradshaw at any time). ~~In other testimony today, the committee heard the owner of a bakery say his children were threatened with bodily harm, unless he met union demands. And a highway contractor said pickets armed with clubs tried to force unionization of his workers. He quoted a carpenters union official as saying he was "going to get hurt and hurt bad." Chairman McClellan says, "We expect to develop what may be a classic example of force and violence in labor-management relations."~~

The executive board of the teamsters union decided today not to attend the hearing... called by the AFL-CIO ethical practices committee for May 6th. The AFL-CIO had summoned teamster leaders to attend the hearing to answer charges of domination by corrupt influences. It had also suspended Teamsters President Dave Beck from its executive council, after Beck refused to account for more than 300-thousand dollars in union funds when he appeared before the Senate rackets committee. Today, the teamsters executive board... meeting in Galveston... gave Beck its full support. It said the AFL-CIO had no authority to suspend the teamsters president and that it had made a finding without giving the union a chance to defend itself. The teamsters executive board said that although it won't attend the hearing... called by the AFL-CIO... it will name a five-man committee to look into the charges. And it invited President Meany of the AFL-CIO to appoint a similar committee with the view of holding a meeting of the two committees later on. No reaction yet from the AFL-CIO. But the teamsters action today could lead to suspension of the union from the parent organization.

Israel charged today that Arab infiltrators attacked an Israeli settlement during the night, and killed two guards. An Israeli Army spokesman said the attackers left tracks leading to the Jordanian frontier. The settlement was identified as that of Mesilot, about 50 miles north of Tel Aviv.

In Jordan today, King Hussein conferred with his new coalition cabinet. They are said to have discussed the future of General Nuwar (NOO' WAHR), former Jordanian Army chief of staff. Nuwar opposed Hussein in the government crisis, and he is variously reported as having fled to Syria, as being "on leave", or, under arrest.

The United States indicated today that it would "assist" Jordan, should it become a victim of aggression. The State Department said the United States position on aggression "has always been clear, and was exemplified by our action with regard to the recent intervention in Egypt."

Today... in Cairo... the United States ambassador continued his talks with the Egyptian foreign minister on a Suez settlement. There is still no word of progress. And the United States is said now, to have agreed with Britain and France, to take the matter to the United Nations Security Council, unless Egypt makes some concessions soon.

Edward R. Murrow: April 16, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The British House of Commons today opened debate on the White Paper setting forth a nuclear arms policy. This particular debate was to last only two days. But the discussion of this theme will keep all leaders of the Western world busy for a long time to come. Fortunately there is to be some time to learn more about the nuclear age before it is upon us. Guided missiles aren't yet ready. And the cuts in conventional military establishments, though proposed throughout Europe, aren't to be made immediately. Even the British reduction of its army in Germany is to be only 13,000 men this year, and further cuts will not be made without full consultation with all the NATO partners. So there is to be time to adjust public thinking to the new concept of warfare, and time, too, to think more of its consequences.

The House of Commons looked at some of the consequences today. Defense Minister Duncan Sandys argued that the British should have a nuclear program of their own, because, he said, the whole job of deterrence should not be left with the United States. When the inter-continental missile -- with 5,000 mile range -- was perfected, the United States, he said, might withdraw from its European bases altogether and rely on the inter-continental weapon. Britain, he said, must make sure that some of the deterrent power remained on the European side of the Atlantic.

He also argued against nuclear disarmament alone, saying that if done by itself, it would be disastrous because the Soviet Union, with its strong conventional forces, would have decisive military superiority. Prime Minister MacMillan may have squelched the idea of giving up hydrogen bomb tests by hinting that such tests can now be held without being detected abroad. If it were to be tried, he said cryptically, it would almost certainly be succesful, and added that it would not be in the public interest to say more.

The first impact of the British White Paper has been to open up the probability that other European countries will follow suit, go in for nuclear weapons and cut down their conventional forces. If this is sensible for the British, it is just as sensible for Britain's neighbors. France is officially headed that way, though not yet in a position to make nuclear weapons. West Germany made known yesterday that it had decided to reduce by half the 500,000 men promised to NATO. Chancellor Adenauer insists that this smaller army must have nuclear weapons. The revolt of Germany's leading physicists against making atomic weapons for the fatherland has riled Adenauer but not changed his policy.

France is against the German program. It had made it a condition of peace that Germany should not become an atomic power. Other West European countries also are opposed to the German policy, not because they are afraid of Germany as France is, but because they know that if Germany has nuclear weapons any European war of any magnitude would become a nuclear war.

If Britain, France and Germany all go in for nuclear weapons and reduce their ground and air forces, and if the smaller European countries give up conventional forces and rely on the United States for deterrent strength, that would be the end of NATO. Much will be heard about this possibility when the NATO Council meets next month in Bonn. Already it is beginning to dawn on European leaders that deterrence against nuclear attack may not be all there is to security. If NATO is without adequate ground and air forces, and the Soviet Union still has such forces, the Russians might go in for small wars and win them, wars that did not seem to justify unleashing the mutual and universal destruction of hydrogen bombs. One little nibbling war might not look to be serious enough to justify wiping out much of the human race. Then enough nibbling wars might be won, one after the other, to amount to victory without deterrent power even having been used. In other words, the nuclear stalemate, about which so much has been said, may not be the last word in keeping the peace.

If that is so, NATO will be told it had better work hard to survive. It is going to be a thorny problem to finance both nuclear and conventional forces. The British admit they can't manage it. The French are even less well off, and the Germans now want to slice their NATO army in two. But there is time to think and talk. The guided missile isn't ready, and the army cuts are in the blue-print stage.

But the truth remains that we are in the throes of a revolution that even national leaders are only beginning to understand. The hydrogen bomb is here. The largest one so far made had a destructive power surpassing the total of all the bombs and shells exploded in Europe in the whole of World War Two. The guided missile will soon be here, able to deliver this bomb fifteen hundred miles away, and later on, five thousand miles, and there is no defense against it. These two facts together have made the future incalculable. One cannot even say there is sure to be a future. This is the first time in human history when that could be said with so much reason.

George Bryan.

The major powers of the world are confronted with a terrible responsibility. In deciding what to do with nuclear weapons... and in developing the intercontinental missile... they still have time to think of the consequences. Facts are stubborn things — ~~They should think well.~~ For as Thomas Huxley observed, "Logical consequences are the scarecrows of fools... and the beacons of wise men."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 16, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower tonight signed an emergency measure..giving the Post Office Department an extra 41 - million dollars, so normal postal service can be restored. Postmaster General Summerfield had told Congress his department must have the money in order to function normally the rest of this fiscal year. That is, until July first. Last week, when Congress failed to act, he ordered a series of cutbacks in postal service...including suspension of delivery of mail on Saturdays. Summerfield had said the department needed 47 million dollars. But he is going along with the 41-million dollar appropriation. He says he is giving orders for resumption of normal service effective within 24 hours. He says he is "gratified to have the overwhelming affirmative vote of Congress." And he promises that "every effort" will be made to give the public the best service possible.

President Eisenhower told Republican congressional leaders today that the cut voted by the House in the budget for the United States Information Agency was "too deep". (The slash amounted to 26 percent of the 144-million dollars requested.) Mr. Eisenhower made his feelings known at the regular weekly conference of Republican leaders at the White House . House Republican Leader Martin said afterward that the agreed with the President that the cut was too deep. But he said that...as a practical matter...he knew the House would not restore any of the curtailed funds. He was right. Late this afternoon..on a voice vote..the House approved the cut. The approval is tentative in that the appropriation is part of the omnibus bill on which a roll-call vote is yet to be taken. Also in the omnibus bill is an appropriation for the State Department. Last week the House committee voted to reduce the requist of 228-million dollars for the department by 21 percent. That represented a cut of 47-million. Tonight, the full House cut it another 7 - million. The new slash was in funds to be contributed to international organizations, such as the United Nations.

The Senate rackets committee today resumed public hearings on corrupt labor practices...this time, with attention focussed on Scranton, Pennsylvania. The first witness was Paul Bradshaw, a former steward of Scranton local 229 of the teamsters union. Bradshaw told the Senate investigators a story of beatings, rigged union elections and bribes. He said he "took the rap" for dynamiting a non-union building project in 1954 on the promise that he would be "taken care of"... and that that is why he is talking. He testified that when he wanted to tell the true story...and implicate other union officials...Mayor Hanlon of Scranton asked him to "lay off" until after a city election. (Mayor Hanlon has sent the committee a telegram...denying he ever discussed the case with Bradshaw at any time.)

The executive board of the teamsters union decided today not to attend the hearing called by the AFL-CIO ethical practices committee for May 6th. The AFL-CIO had summoned taamsters leaders to attend the hearing to answer charges of domination by corrupt influences. It had also suspended Teamsters President Dave Beck from its executive council, after Beck refused to account for more than 300-thousand dollars in union funds when he appeared before the Senate rackets committee. Today, the teamsters executive board..meeting in Galveston..gave Back its full support. It said the AFL-CIO had no authority to suspend the teamsters president and that it had made a finding without giving the union a chance to defend itself. The teamsters executive board said that although it won't attend the hearing..called by the AFL_CIO ...it will name a five-man committee to look into the charges. And it invited President Meany of the AFL-CIO to appoint a similar committee with the view of holding a meeting of the two committees later on. No reaction yet from the AFL-CIO. But the teamsters action today could lead to suspension of the union from the parent organization.

Israel charged today that Arab infiltrators attacked an Israeli settlement during the night and killed two guards. An Israeli Army spokesman said the attackers left tracks leading to the Jordanian frontier. The settlement was identified as that of Mesilot, about 50 miles north of Tel Aviv.

In Jordan today, King Hussein conferred with his new coalition cabinet. They are said to have discussed the future of General Nuwar, former Jordanian Army chief of staff. Nuwar opposed Hussein in the government crisis, and he is variously reported as having fled to Syria, as being "on leave", or under arrest.

The United States indicatec today that it would "assist"Jordan, should it become a victim of aggression. The State Department said the United States position on aggression "has always been clear and was exemplified by our action with regard to the recent intervention in Egypt."

Today...in Cairo..the United States ambassador continued his talks with the Egypian foreign minister on a Suez settlement. There is still no word of progress. And the United States is said now, to have agreed with Britain and Franceto take the matter to the United Nations Security Council, unless Egypt makes some concessions soon.

The British House of Commons today opened debate on the White Paper setting forth a nuclear arms policy. This particular debate was to last only two days. But the discussion of this theme will keep all leaders of the Western world busy for a long time to come. Fortunately there is to be some time to learn more about the nuclear age before it is upon us. Guided missiles aren't yet ready. And the cuts in conventional military establishments, though proposed throughout Europe, aren't to be made immediately. Even the British reduction of its army in Germany is to be only 13,000 men this year, and further cuts will not be made without full consultation with all the NATO partners. So there is to be time to adjust public thinking to the new concept of warfare, and time, too, to think more of its consequences.

The House of Commons looked at some of the consequences today. Defense Minister Duncan Sandys argued that the British should have a nuclear program of their own, because, he said, the whole job of deterrence should not be left with the United States. When the inter - continental - missile - the 5,000 mile range - was perfected, the United States, he said, might withdraw from its European bases altogether and rely on the inter - continental weapon. Britain, he said, must make sure that some of the deterrent power remained on the European side of the Atlantic.

He also argued against nuclear disarmament alone, saying that if done by itself, it would be disastrous because the Soviet Union, with its strong conventional forces, would have decisive military superiority. Prime Minister MacMillan may have squelched the idea of giving up hydrogen bomb tests by hinting that such tests can now be held without being detected abroad. It it were tried, he said cryptically, it would almost certainly be successful, and added that it would not be in the public interest to say more.

The first impact of the British White Paper has been to open up the probability that other European countries will follow suit, go in for nuclear weapons and cut down their conventional forces. If this is sensible for the British, it is just as sensible for Britain's neighbors. France is officially headed that way, though not yet in a position to make nuclear weapons. West Germany made known yesterday that it had decided to reduce by half the 500,000 men promised to NATO. Chancellor Adenauer insists that this smaller army must nave nuclear weapons. The revolt of Germany's leading physicists against making atomic weapons for the fatherland has riled Adenauer but not changed his policy.

France is against the German program. It had made it a condition of peace that Germany should not become an atomic power. Other West European countries also are opppsed to the German policy, not because they are afraid of Germany as France is, but because they know that if Germany has nuclear weapons any European war of any magnitude would become a nuclear war.

If Britain, France and Germany wll go in for nuclear weapons and reduce their ground and air forces, and if the smaller European countries give up conventional forces and rely on the United States for deterrent strength, that would be the end of NATO. Much will be heard about this possibility when the NATO Council meets next month in Bonn. Already it is beginning to dawn on European leaders that deterrence against Nuclear attack may not be all there is to security. If NATO is without adequate ground and air forces, and the Soviet Union still has such forces, the Russians might go in for small wars and win them, wars that did not seem to justify unleashing the mutual and universal destruction of hydrogen bombs. One little nibbling war might not look to be serious enough to justify wiping out much of the human race. Then enough nibbling wars might be won, one after the other, to amount to victory without deterrent power even having been used. In other words, the nuclear stalemate, about which so much has been said, may not be the last word in keeping the peace.

But the truth remains that we are in the throes of a revolution that even national leaders are only beginning to understand. The hydrogen bomb is here. The largest one so far made had a destructive power surpassing the total of all the bombs and shells exploded in Europe in the whole of World War Two. The guided missile will soon be here, able to deliver this bomb fifteen hundred miles sway, and later on, five thousand miles, and there is no defense against it. These two facts together have made the future incalcuable. One cannot even say there is sure to be a future. This is the first time in human history when that could be said with so much reason.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The major powers of the world are confronted with a terrible responsibility. In deciding what do do with nuclear weapons...and in developing the intercontinental missile...they still have time to think of the consequences. Facts are stubborn things. For as Thomas Huxley observed, "Logical consequences are the scarecrows of fools...and the beacons of wise men."

Good night and dood luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Apr. 17, 1957

This is the news:

The British House of Commons tonight approved the government's new defense policy. / The vote was 308 to 250. A Labour motion...calling on Prime Minister Macmillan to postpone the British hydrogen bomb tests scheduled for this summer... was defeated by a vote of 309 to 258. Under the new policy, the British armed forces will be cut in half in the next five years. / And instead of basing its defense on conventional weapons, Britain will rely on the nuclear deterrent---guided missiles, and the atomic and hydrogen bomb.

Mr. Macmillan announced that the prime ministers of the British Commonwealth will meet in London on June 26th. He declined... in the face of Labour questioning... to say what subjects will be discussed.

Five-power disarmament talks continued today in London. The United States is reported to have accepted Russia's proposal for a partial "open skies" inspection program on two conditions. Moscow would have to agree to widen... considerably... the 500-mile zone on each side of the Iron Curtain, over which inspection planes would fly. Russia would also have to agree that this corridor constituted merely a first step toward a progressive expansion of territory open to air inspection. The United States is reported to made other proposals today for supervising disarmament agreements... including the creation of a 14-nation "board of control." The United States, Britain, Russia, Canada and France would be permanent members of the board. And each of them would have the veto power. In case of serious violations, the matter would be referred to the United Nations Security Council.

West Germany told Russia today that it is ready to negotiate immediately on various subjects... including repatriation of German citizens and future development of trade. The West German note... delivered in Moscow... said West Germany is also ready to negotiate a treaty for the establishment of consulates in each country. In addition to the note, Chancellor Adenauer sent Soviet Premier Bulganin a letter... calling again for reunification of Germany on the basis of free elections.

In Congress today, the House passed a bill cutting the appropriation requested for the United States Information Agency by 26 percent. / The House acted... on a voice vote... despite President Eisenhower's statement that a 26 percent cut was "too deep". The request for 228-million dollars for the State Department was reduced by about 21 percent. The bill allows for the establishment of a new Bureau of African Affairs, but it tells the State Department to get the money for it by cutting down on other expenditures. The measure now goes to the Senate.

The Senate today rewrote... and sent back to the House... a money bill carrying 275-million dollars for public assistance checks in May and June. The House then refused to accept the Senate version. And the disagreement threatens to keep Congress from quitting tomorrow for the Easter recess.

The House measure sets 17-million dollars as the maximum amount that could be used for administrative expenses by state agencies. The Senate insists that another million dollars should be available for this purpose.

President Eisenhower told his news conference today that he gave full approval to Postmaster General Summerfield... in advance... to curtail postal service, if Congress failed to vote the department new funds. ~~The President said it was "perfectly clear" Summerfield didnit have the money to maintain normal service. Congress voted the Post Office Department an extra 41-million dollars yesterday... and Saturday mail service has been restored.~~

The first question put to Mr. Eisenhower... at his news conference... concerned the statement of his brother, Edgar Eisenhower, that the Administration is spending too much money. The President laughed this off. "Edgar," he said, "has been criticizing me since I was five." And that was all he would say on the subject.

Mr. Eisenhower said the United States will defend Jordan, if it is attacked. He said America has two well established policies for coming to the aid of any Middle East country which is the victim of aggression. One is the triparte declaration of 1950, in which the United States, Britain and France pledged themselves to come to the aid of a Middle East country which is attacked. The other well established policy, the President said, is the Middle East resolution passed by Congress this year. This says the United States is prepared to help any country in the area which is attacked by international Communism. (King Hussein of Jordan made a speech today... denouncing, in his phrase, "those inspired from outside" who seek to divide the country). On the subject of Suez, Mr. Eisenhower said the United States has not given up hope for an equitable settlement. He indicated that the United States does not plan to take the question to the United States Security Council at this time. He said.. of the talks going on in Cairo between the United States and Egypt... that "we have not completely given up hope on those conversations." He conceded that the question may have to be referred to the Security Council later on.

CIO-AFL President George Meany said today that the union trial of Teamsters President Dave Beck... on corruption charges... will be held as scheduled. The teamsters executive committee decided yesterday not to attend hearings set by the AFL-CIO executive council for May 6th. The teamsters leadership accused the AFL-CIO of illegal tactics.

Communist party boss Khrushchev said in Moscow tonight that Russia has "new hope" for improved relations with the United States. Khrushchev made the statement to American Ambassador Bohlen... at a reception in the Syrian Embassy. Khrushchev told Bohlen, "Let us agree there should not be any harm to either of us... Russia or the United States."

After four years in Moscow, Bohlen is about to leave that post to become ambassador to the Philippines. My colleague, Daniel Schorr, has a report on what he believes to be Bohlen's estimate of Soviet intentions. And for that story, we switch to Moscow.

(Tape runs 5:30
Ends on cue: "--to Edward R.
Murrow in N.Y."

That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, reporting on what he considers to be the views of Ambassador Bohlen on Soviet Russia today.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

America has had no keener observer in Russia than Ambassador Bohlen. He has what I believe the Bible refers to as "the hearing ear and the seeing eye." In observing the same thing as other people, he somehow sees more. As Ralph Waldo Emerson said, "The difference between landscapes is small. But there is a great difference in the beholders."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: Communist Party boss Khrushchev said in Moscow tonight that Russia has new hope for improved relations with the United States. Khrushchev made the statement to American Ambassador Bohlen at a reception in the Syrian Embassy. Khrushchev told Bohlen "Let us agree there should not be any harm to either of us, Russia or the United States." After four years in Moscow, Bohlen is about to leave that post to become Ambassador to the Philippines. My colleague, Daniel Schorr, has a report on what he believes to be Bohlen's estimate of the Soviet intentions; and for that story, we switch to Moscow.

SCHORR: We're losing a good reporter tomorrow - Ambassador "Chip" Bohlen who's observed the Soviet scene for ten years, is leaving for Washington and after Senate confirmation, for his new assignment in Manilla. During his three weeks at home, he plans no speeches, articles or public appearances, which is a great pity. The observations of the best correspondent we have in Moscow will have only a limited circulation of our government. Because he is too loyal and cautious a foreign service officer to give an interview, and because we think his views important, tonight we're going to try some second hand reporting, to piece together from his conversations with others what we think "Chip" Bohlen thinks about Soviet Russia today. And we hope that this completely unauthorized report will not do too much violence to his thoughts.

Bohlen does not see Russia starting a war for some time to come. The most significant clue: the massive reform of industrial management now being undertaken, a process that will create confusion in industry for years. One doesn't pull up industry by its roots when one is preparing for war. Now this is bound to produce a train of events in other fields. For one thing, decentralization of industrial controls should produce a decentralization of government as well. And this raises a problem - the control of the Soviet Union's minority nationalities.

It's difficult to hold this multinational state together without a strong central government; and how this problem will be handled is one of the key things to watch for in the future.

While he doesn't expect any early war, Bohlen does not carry with him any tidings of great joy about the settlement of the big East-West issues, nor does he foresee any early summit conference, such as the one that the Kremlin is now bidding for. The big issues look insoluble at the moment, the smaller problems we'll just have to live with. There is no sign of any break in a deadlock on the division of Germany. For one reason, because any settlement would hit at the heart of Soviet ideology.

On disarmament and on the Middle East, there is some room for accomodation which doesn't necessarily mean any early agreement. This thing called ideology is tough to understand. When the Communists were fighting for power, it was their master. In power, it's their servant. It can be tailored and doctored to fit pragmatic requirements and it is. It's most iniquitous effect: ideology is a permanent dispensation for ignoring normal ethics. Or as George Cannon once put it: "Doctrine is the fig leaf of Soviet respectability."

Abroad one gets the impression of the Soviet as a great precision machine, moving by inexorable steps according to ideology. But not every move is as calculated as it seems. Often it's improvisation dressed up in ideological terms. Such an event was the repression of the rebellion in Hungary. Since Hungary, the Soviet line looks harder. Hungary checked the process of de-Stalinization. But Bohlen doesn't think it reversed it. The Soviets don't seem too happy about where the present policy is leading.

For example, there's been a revival of the Stalin-like campaign of vigilance against spies, but the Soviet leaders don't seem to have their heart in it. It doesn't have the fury of the old-time Stalin vigilance campaigns.

The recent series of threats to NATO countries also seem like an old-time Stalin tactic. But Bohlen doesn't consider them important in themselves. To him they indicate two things: that the Kremlin attaches real importance to the atomic support units which are to be stationed in NATO countries and wants to build up a psychological atmosphere to make it harder for them to accept such units; and secondly, it indicates that the Russians are on the defensive. For it is always then that they scream the loudest.

The whole process of de-Stalinization, which may take another ten years, can now be seen in better perspective. It is not a repudiation of Stalin's toughness. The Communist leaders think that was necessary to get capital from the people of Russia for swift industrial development. Many of the things that we associate with Stalinism are inherent in the Soviet system. What today's leaders are trying to do is to scrape off what they consider the excesses, the unnecessary features of Stalinism.

As to whether Stalinism will happen again, at the moment, there's no sign of it. The key element is the subordination of the police to the party. As long as no one man controls the police system, there is no fear that Khrushchev or someone else will seize absolute personal power. And aside from control of police, the thing to watch for is personal publicity, the terms in which a leader is described or describes himself. For example, Khrushchev received two decorations last week, but the citations referred only to his "outstanding services." Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Daniel Schorr reporting from Moscow, reporting on what he considers to be the views of Ambassador Bohlen on Soviet Russia today.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: Communist Party boss Khrushchev said in Moscow tonight that Russia has new hope for improved relations with the United States. Khrushchev made the statement to American Ambassador Bohlen at a reception in the Syrian Embassy. Khrushchev told Bohlen "Let us agree there should not be any harm to either of us, Russia or the United States." After four years in Moscow, Bohlen is about to leave that post to become Ambassador to the Philippines. My colleague, Daniel Schorr, has a report on what he believes to be Bohlen's estimate of the Soviet intentions; and for that story, we switch to Moscow.

SCHORR: We're losing a good reporter tomorrow - Ambassador "Chip" Bohlen who's observed the Soviet scene for ten years, is leaving for Washington and after Senate confirmation, for his new assignment in Manilla. During his three weeks at home, he plans no speeches, articles or public appearances, which is a great pity. The observations of the best correspondent we have in Moscow will have only a limited circulation of our government. Because he is too loyal and cautious a foreign service officer to give an interview, and because we think his views important, tonight we're going to try some second hand reporting, to piece together from his conversations with others what we think "Chip" Bohlen thinks about Soviet Russia today. And we hope that this completely unauthorized report will not do too much violence to his thoughts.

Bohlen does not see Russia starting a war for some time to come. The most significant clue: the massive reform of industrial management now being undertaken, a process that will create confusion in industry for years. One doesn't pull up industry by its roots when one is preparing for war. Now this is bound to produce a train of events in other fields. For one thing, decentralization of industrial controls should produce a decentralization of government as well. And this raises a problem - the control of the Soviet Union's minority nationalities.

It's difficult to hold this multinational state together without a strong central government; and how this problem will be handled is one of the key things to watch for in the future.

While he doesn't expect any early war, Bohlen does not carry with him any tidings of great joy about the settlement of the big East-West issues, nor does he foresee any early summit conference, such as the one that the Kremlin is now bidding for. The big issues look insoluble at the moment, the smaller problems we'll just have to live with. There is no sign of any break in a deadlock on the division of Germany. For one reason, because any settlement would hit at the heart of Soviet ideology.

On disarmament and on the Middle East, there is some room for accomodation which doesn't necessarily mean any early agreement. This thing called ideology is tough to understand. When the Communists were fighting for power, it was their master. In power, it's their servant. It can be tailored and doctored to fit pragmatic requirements and it is. It's most iniquitous effect: ideology is a permanent dispensation for ignoring normal ethics. Or as George Cannon once put it: "Doctrine is the fig leaf of Soviet respectability."

Abroad one gets the impression of the Soviet as a great precision machine, moving by inexorable steps according to ideology. But not every move is as calculated as it seems. Often it's improvisation dressed up in ideological terms. Such an event was the repression of the rebellion in Hungary. Since Hungary, the Soviet line looks harder. Hungary checked the process of de-Stalinization. But Bohlen doesn't think it reversed it. The Soviets don't seem too happy about where the present policy is leading.

For example, there's been a revival of the Stalin-like campaign of vigilance against spies, but the Soviet leaders don't seem to have their heart in it. It doesn't have the fury of the old-time Stalin vigilance campaigns.

The recent series of threats to NATO countries also seem like an old-time Stalin tactic. But Bohlen doesn't consider them important in themselves. To him they indicate two things: that the Kremlin attaches real importance to the atomic support units which are to be stationed in NATO countries and wants to build up a psychological atmosphere to make it harder for them to accept such units; and secondly, it indicates that the Russians are on the defensive. For it is always then that they scream the loudest.

The whole process of de-Stalinization, which may take another ten years, can now be seen in better perspective. It is not a repudiation of Stalin's toughness. The Communist leaders think that was necessary to get capital from the people of Russia for swift industrial development. Many of the things that we associate with Stalinism are inherent in the Soviet system. What today's leaders are trying to do is to scrape off what they consider the excesses, the unnecessary features of Stalinism.

As to whether Stalinism will happen again, at the moment, there's no sign of it. The key element is the subordination of the police to the party. As long as no one man controls the police system, there is no fear that Khrushchev or someone else will seize absolute personal power. And aside from control of police, the thing to watch for is personal publicity, the terms in which a leader is described or describes himself. For example, Khrushchev received two decorations last week, but the citations referred only to his "outstanding services." Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Daniel Schorr reporting from Moscow, reporting on what he considers to be the views of Ambassador Bohlen on Soviet Russia today.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The British House of Commons tonight approved the government's new defense policy. The vote was 308 to 250. A Labour motion ...calling on Prime Minister Macmillan to postpone the British hydrogen bomb tests scheduled for this summer ...was defeated by a vote of 309 to 258. Under the new policy, the British armed forces will be cut in half in the next five years. And instead of basing its defense on conventional weapons, Britain will rely on the nuclear deterrent---guided missiles, and the atomic and hydrogen bomb.

Mr. Macmillan announced that the prime ministers of the British Commonwealth will meet in London on June 26th. He declined ..in the face of Labour questioning..to say what subjects will be discussed.

Five-power disarmament talks continued today in London. The United States is reported to have accepted Russia's proposal for a partial "open skies" inspection program on two conditions. Moscow would have to agree to widen... considerably..the 500-mile zone on each side of the Iron Curtain, over which inspection planes would fly. Russia would also have to agree that this corridor constituted merely a first step toward progressive expanaion of territory open to air inspection. The United States is reported to have made other proposals today for supervising disarmament agreements..including the creation of a 14 - nation "board of control". The United States, Britain, Russia, Canada and France would be permanent members of the board. And each of them would have the veto power. In case of serious violations, the matter would be referred to the United Nations Security Council.

West Germany told Russia today that it is ready to negotiate immediately on various subjects..including repatriation of German citizens and future development of trade. The West German note..delivered in Moscow..said West Germany is also ready to negotiate a treaty for the establishment of consulates in each country. In addition to the note, Chancellor Adenauer sent Soviet Premier Bulganin a letter..calling again for reunification of Germany on the basis of free elections.

In Congress today, the House passed a bill cutting the appropriation requested for the United States Information Agency by 26 percent. The House acted...on a voice vote..despite President Eisenhower's statement that a 26 percent cut was "too deep". The request for 228-million dollars for the State Department was reduced by about 21 percent.

President Eisenhower told his news conference today that he gave full approval to Postmaster General Summerfield ..in advance..to curtail postal service, if Congress failed to vote the department new funds.

The first question put to Mr. Eisenhower..at his news conference..concerned the statement of his brother, Edgar Eisenhower, that the Administration is spending too much money. The President laughed this off. "Edgar", he said, "has been criticizing me since I was five." And that was all he would say on the subject.

Mr. Eisenhower said the United States will defend Jordan, if it is attacked. He said America has two well established policies for coming to the aid of any Middle East country which is the victim of aggression. One of the triparte declaration of 1950, in which the United States, Britain and France pledged themselves to come to the aid of a Middle East country which is attacked. The other well established policy the President said, is the Middle East resolution passed by Congress this year. This says the United States is prepared to help any country in the area which is attacked by international Communism. (King Hussein of Jordan made a speech today...denouncing, in his phrase, "those inspired from outside" who seek to divide the country.) On the subject of Suez, Mr. Eisenhower said the United States has not given up hope for an equitable settlement. He indicated that the United States does not plan to take the question to the United States Security Counbil this time.

CIO-AFL President George Meany said today that the union trial of Teamsters President Dave Back...on corruption charges...will be held as [illegible] scheduled.

Communist party boss Khrushchev said in Moscow tonight that Russia has "new hope" for improved relations with the United State. Khrushchev made the statement to American Ambassador Bohlen at a reception in the Syrain Embassy. Khrushchev told Bohlen, "Let us agree there should not be any harm to either of us...Russia or the United States."

After four years in Moscow, Bohlen is about to leave that post to become ambassador to the Phillippines. My colleague, Daniel Schorr, has a report on what he believes to be Bohlen's estimate of Soviet intentions. And for that story, we switch to Moscow.

SCHORR: We're losing a good reporter tomorrow--Ambassador "Chip" Bohlen who's observed the Soviet scene for ten years, is leaving for Washington and after Senate confirmation, for his new assignment in Manilla. During his three weeks at home, he plans no speeches, articles or public appearances, which is a great pity. The observations of the best correspondent we have in Moscow will have only a limited circulation of our government. Because he is too loyal and cautious a foreign service officer to give an interview, and because we think his views important, tonight we're going to try some second hand reporting, to piece together from his conversations with others what we think "Chip" Bohlen thinks about Soviet Russia today. And we hope that this completely unauthorized report will not do too much violence to his thoughts.

Bohlen does not see Russia starting a war for some time to come. The most significant clue: the massive reform of industrial management now being underaken, a process that will create confusion in industry for years. One doesn't pull up industry by its roots when one is preparing for war. Now this is bound to produce a train of events in other fields. For one thing, decentralization of industrial controls should produce a decentralization of government as well. And it raises a probelm - the control of the Soviet Union's minority nationalities.

It's difficult to hold this multinational state together without a strong central government; and how this problem will be handled is one of the key things to watch for in the future.

While he doesn't expect any early war, Bohlen does not carry with him any tidings of great joy about the settlement of the big East-West issues, nor does he foresee any early summit conference, such as the one that the Kremlin is now bidding for. The big issues look insoluble at the moment, the smaller problems we'll just have to live with. There is no sign of any break in a deadlock on the division of Germany. For one reason, because any settlement would hit at the heart of Soviet ideology.

On disarmament and on the Middle East, there is some room for accomodation which doesn't necessarily mean any early agreement. This thing called ideology is tough to understand. When the Communists were fighting for power, it was their master. In power, it's their servant. It can be tailored and doctored to fit pragmatic requirements and it is. It's most iniquitous effect: ideology is a permanent dispensation for ignoring normal ethics. Or as George Cannon once put it: "Doctrine is the fig leaf of Soviet respectability."

Abroad one gets the impression of the Soviet as a great precision machine, moving by inexorable steps according to ideology. But not every move is as calculated at it seems. Often it's improvisation dressed up in ideological terms. Such an event was the repression of the rebellion in Hungary. Since Hungary, the Soviet line looks harder. Hungary checked the process of de-Stalinisation. But Bohlen doesn't think it reversed it. The Soviets don't seem too happy about where the present policy is leading.

For example, there's been a revival of the Stalin-like campaign of vigilance against spies, but the Soviet leaders don't seem to have their heart in it. It doesn't have the fury of the old-time Stalin vigilance campaigns.

The recent series of threats to NATO countries also seem like an old-time Stalin tactic. But Bohlen dosn't consider them important in themselves. To him they indicate two things: that the Kremlin attaches real importance to the atomic support units which are to be stationed in NATO countries and wants to build up a psychological atmosphere to make it harder for them to accept such units; and secondly, it indicates that the Russians are on the defensive. For it is always then that they scream the loudest.

The whole process of de-Stalinization, which may take another ten years, can now be seenin better perspective. It is not a repudiation of Stalin's toughness. The Communist leaders think that was necessary to get capital from the people of Russia for swift industrial development. Many of the things that we associate with Stalinism are inherent in the Soviet system. What today's leaders are trying to do is to scrape off what they consider the excesses, the unnecessary features of Stalisism.

As to whether Stalinism will happen again, at the moment, there's no sign of it. The key element is the subordination of the police to the party. As long as no one man controls the police system, there is no fear that Khrushchev or someone else will seize absolute personal power. And aside from control of police, the thing to watch for is personal publicity, the terms in which a leader is described or describes himself. For example, Khruschev received two decorations last week, but the citation referred only to his "outstanding services." Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York

MURROW: That was my colleague Daniel Schorr reporting from Moscow, reporting on what he considers to be the views of Ambassador Bohlen on Soviet Russia today.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: America has had no keener observer in Russia than Ambassador Bohlen. He has what I believe the Bible refers to as "the hearing ear and the seeing eye." In observing the same things as other people, he somehow sees more. As Ralph Waldo Emerson said, " The difference between landscapes is small. But there is a great difference in the beholders."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., April 18, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower told Congress today how he thinks it can cut down on federal spending. Mr. Eisenhower made it clear that he was not talking about the 72-billion-dollar budget he submitted for the next fiscal year. No "substantial" reductions can be made there, he said, without weakening national defense... or cutting back, or eliminating, other programs required by law. ~~In the category of "bills that simply have to be paid" he listed veterans pensions and interest on the public debt. He defended the military and economic phases of our foreign aid, and he said bluntly that the cost of defense "presses constantly for more, not fewer, federal dollars."~~ The President then suggested ways in which appropriations in general can be cut... as distinct from actual expenditures in the next fiscal year.

—>

Some requests for appropriations, he said, can be postponed. And in this category he included a 500-million-dollar cut in the foreign military aid program, a cut of 200-million in military public works, and a slash of 254-million in the soil bank program. (This last suggestion he has made before). Congress, he said, might want to withhold 516-million for army procurement and production. But he pointed out that that would just be putting it off for another year. Altogether, Mr. Eisenhower proposed cuts totaling a billion, 800-million dollars. To help the government meet expenses, he again urged higher postal rates. But he also suggested charging airlines for the use of federal air facilities, and increasing the interest on loans made by the government. The President, he said, should be given authority to veto individual items in a money bill, without having to veto the entire measure as the present law requires. Mr. Eisenhower made these proposals in a letter to House Speaker Rayburn. He said they were submitted in response to the recent House resolution... asking him to point out where substantial reductions could be made. Rayburn has responded by predicting a tax cut, effective the first of next year. And Chairman Cannon of the House Appropriations Committee says Mr. Eisenhower's proposals "came too late to be of any great help."

Congress completed action today on a 320-million-dollar appropriations bill... providing extra money for small business loans and public assistance payments under the Social Security program. The Senate and House approved the measure by voice vote, then ~~adjourned~~ went into a 10-day Easter recess.

President Eisenhower flew to Augusta, Georgia today for his annual spring vacation. This afternoon, he got in his first round of golf.

The Air Force announced today that production of B-52 bombers will be kept at the present level of 15 a month. Earlier plans called for stepping up production of the eight-jet intercontinental bomber to 20 a month. The over-all production goal of 603 aircraft remains unchanged. It will take an additional six months to reach this goal. But the Air Force says the stretch-out will enable the Strategic Air Command to take delivery of more of the new improved model, now being developed.

Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery predicted today that the "Age of Missiles" will arrive in about ten years. And when that day comes, he said, the key to Allied strategy will be ~~then~~ "the power to destroy to an extent never before envisaged." ~~He warned that missiles will not solve all the problems of defense... and that older, more conventional weapons will continue to be used by NATO forces. Montgomery is deputy commander of NATO.~~

In Paris today, police tried to stop a demonstration of striking transport workers and were attacked with paving stones and clubs. About 20 policemen were hurt. Ten demonstrators were placed under arrest. The violence occurred in the second day of a 48-hour strike of French railroad workers for higher pay, WHICH ENDED TONIGHT. Bus and subway workers in Paris joined the walkout. And today the ground employes of Air France staged a 24-hour strike in support of their own wage demands.

Russia conducted another nuclear test on Tuesday. In announcing this today, the Atomic Energy Commission said the test was conducted at a site in Central Asia... and that the explosion was "one of the largest in the current series of tests." It was the fifth nuclear blast set off by the Russians in two weeks.

The Soviet deputy defense minister... Valerian Zorin... said today that Russia is "compelled" to continue the tests for its own security. Zorin is the Soviet representative at the five-power disarmament talks in London. And he again called for a ban on nuclear weapons of all types. The talks have recessed for six days.

Israel today reported two border incidents. It says Syrian troops pinned down an Israeli patrol with machinegun fire...near the Sea of Galilee... for more than two hours. The other action consisted of a one-hour exchange of gunfire with Jordanian forces on the Israeli frontier. There were no Israeli casualties.

~~The Baghdad radio says Iraq has protested to the United States over the passage... two weeks ago... of an American tanker through the Gulf of Aqaba to the Israeli port of Eilat. The broadcast called the action a mere violation of Arab territorial waters.~~

The Cairo radio reiterated today that Egypt will not allow Israeli shipping to use the Suez Canal... because, it said, a state of war exists. Reports from Washington say the United States will soon issue a statement... giving American vessels the green light to use the Suez Canal. But, in London, the Macmillan government says it is still advising British shipowners to avoid the waterway, until arrangements for its future operation are more clear. Twenty-one ships went through the canal today.

In Congress... the Senate rackets committee today ended its hearings on the Scranton, Pennsylvania phase of its investigation into corrupt labor practices. Chairman McClellan said, "It is pretty obvious someone has committed perjury." And he asked the Justice Department to study the conflicting evidence for the purpose of possible prosecution.

Edward R. Murrow: April 18, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

All signs point to a new Soviet peace offensive that will urge another summit meeting, and will preach in a new rhetoric the old doctrine of peaceful co-existence. At the farewell to Ambassador Bohlen last night, Nikita Khrushchev told him: "We have renewed hopes for something concrete to facilitate good relations." His statement followed a most conciliatory statement earlier in the week by Premier Bulganin. The two statements are taken to herald a specific action that will be trumpeted to the ends of the earth, as proof of the Soviet desire to meet the United States part way. At the disarmament talks in London the Russians are showing moderation. Some fresh initiative there, or somewhere else, obviously has been thought through and is ready for launching when the chosen moment comes.

When it is launched there is little doubt that it will be greeted in a chorus by the State Department and Congress alike as "propaganda." And such a judgment will be quite right. It will be propaganda. All this has happened before.

But assuming that it is propaganda, the first question is for whom is the propaganda intended. The habit in America is to assume that Soviet propaganda is meant for us, and then to assure ourselves and everybody else that we aren't fooled by it. Having done this, we seem to think we have disposed of the matter. But we are wrong. The propaganda is not meant for us, it is meant for the rest of the world. And the rest of the world isn't greatly impressed because we say it is propaganda and it doesn't fool us.

The Soviet Union right now badly needs a fresh and successful propaganda drive. It suffered the worst setback in recent years when it bludgeoned Hungary into submission. It also has been obnoxiously brutal in threatening to destroy the small countries in NATO, if they allow their territory to be used for nuclear bases. ~~But the Russians are past masters in controlling the hot and cold water faucets.~~

~~They know when to turn them on and off.~~ The Russians know they can make more of an impression by changing from bad to good, than they can by staying good. This is the proper moment to turn good, and the Kremlin is saying to the West: "We shall overlook your attack on Egypt, you overlook our treatment of Hungary." In this country we know the two cases aren't comparable. But to the rest of the world, it is going to matter a great deal if the Kremlin appears to be trying to meet us halfway. It will make Hungary easier to forget. And if we don't go part way, which we won't be tempted to do by propaganda, we shall lose in influence, and the Kremlin will gain. That is, we shall lose if we do not persistently and convincingly explain to the world, not what Russia is up to with its tricks, but what it is that we are striving for.

Obviously the only effective answer to propaganda is the truth, if it can be communicated. We must meet the Russians in their new peace offensive where the battle will be fought out, which is in the minds of the people abroad. If we lose ground in world esteem, we lose a campaign in the cold war. The favor and trust of the non-communist world are what the cold war is about.

There is nothing new in saying this. But it could not be said at a more timely moment. Just as we are coming into a most urgent need for communications with the outside world about ourselves and our motives, Congress is forbidding the expansion of the United States Information Agency. It is not doing so in disgust, to punish the agency for not being good enough. It is doing it almost wholly because the agency costs money.

A good case could be made out for a much better U.S.I.A. Our standing in the world has gone down steadily in recent years. Every sampling of foreign opinion at any level, shows that we are not understood and frequently are disliked. Probably the best U.S.I.A. organization we could set up would not be able to reverse unfavorable opinions altogether. But a better U.S.I.A. could make a great deal of difference. But this is not what Congress is thinking about. It is not interested in making U.S.I.A. better. Its ~~one interest is in making it cheap, and that it can only do by keeping it weak.~~ Wants to save money and that means a less effective agency.

~~President Eisenhower didn't belabor this point in his budget message today, but in his news conference yesterday he called the cut in the U.S.I.A. budget "the worst kind of economy."~~ It is only coincidence, but it is a most unfortunate coincidence, that this economy effort comes just at the moment when the Soviet Union sets out to win a vital campaign in the cold war.

Word for Today

Moscow has never underestimated the value of propaganda in waging cold war. Walter Bedell Smith warned in his book on Russia that propaganda as employed by the Soviets is a "full-scale aggressive device"... one, he said, "which shifts its emphasis with the greatest flexibility in the struggle for men's minds." The warning would seem to bear repeating today.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK
THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower told Congress today how he thinks it can cut down on federal spending. Mr. Eisenhower made it clear that he was not talking about the 72-billion - dollar budget he submitted for the next fiscal year. No "substantial" reduetion can be made there, he said, without weakening national defense...or cutting back, or eliminating, other programs required by law. The President then suggested ways in which appropriations in general can be cut...as distinct from actual expenditures in the next fiscal year.

Some requests for appropriations, he said, can be postponed. And in this' category he included a 500-million-dollar cut in the foreign military aid program, a cut of 200-million in military public works, and a slash of 254 - million in the soil bank program. (This last suggestion he has made before.) Congress, he said, might want to withhold 516-million for army procurement and production. But he pointed out that that would just be putting it off for another year. Altogether, Mr. Eisenhower proposed cuts totaling a billion, 800-million dollars. To help the government meet expenses, he again urged higher postal rates. But he also suggested charging airlines for the use of federal air facilities, and increasing the interest on loans made by the government. The President, he said, should be given authority to veto individual items in a money bill without having to veto the entire measure as the present law requires. Mr. Eisenhower made these proposals in a letter to House Speaker Rayburn. He said they were submitted in response to the recent House resolution ...asking him to point out where substantial reductions could be made. Rayburn has responded by predicting a tax cut, effective the first of next year. And Chairman Cannon of the House Appropriations Committee says Mr. Eisenhower's proposals "came too late to be of any great help."

Congress completed action today on a 320-million - dollar appropriations bill...providing extra money for small business loans, and public assistance payments under the Social Security program. The Senate and House approved the measure by voice vote, then went into a 10-day-Easter recess.

President Eisenhower flew to Augusta, Georgia today for his annual spring vacation. This afternoon, he got in his first round of golf.

The Air Force announced today that the production of B-52 bombers will be kept at the present level of 15 a month. Earlier plans called for stepping up production of the eight-jet intercontinental bomber to 20 a month. The over-all production goal of 603 aircraft remains unchanged. It will take an additional six months to reach this goal. But the Air Force says the stretch - out will enable the Strategic Air Command to take delivery of more of the new improved model, now being developed.

Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery predicted today that the "Age of Missiles" will arrive in about ten years. And when that day comes, he said, the key to Allied strategy will be "the power to destroy to an extent never before envisaged."

In Paris today, police tried to stop a demonstration of striking transport workers and were attacked with paving stones and clubs. About 20 policemen were hurt. Ten demonstrators were placed under arrest. The violence occurred in the second day of a 48-hour strike of French railroad workers for higher pay, which ended tonight. Bus and subway workers in Paris joined the walkout. And today the ground employes of Air France staged a 24-hour strike in support of their own wage demands.

Russia conducted another nuclear test on Tuesday. In announcing this today, the Atomic Energy Commission said the test was conducted at a site in Central Asia...and that the explosion was "one of the largest in the current series of tests." It was the fifth nuclear blast set off by the Russians in two weeks.

The Soviet deputy defense minister...Valerian Zorin...said today that Russia is "compelled" to continue the tests for its own security. Zorin is the Soviet representative at the five-power disarmament talks in London. And he again called for a ban on nuclear weapons of all types. The talks have recessed for six days.

Israel today reported two border incidents. It says Syrian troops pinned down an Israeli patrol with machine gun fire...near the Sea of Galilee...for more than two hours. The other action consisted of a one-hour exchange of gunfire with Jordanian forces on the Israeli frontier. There were no Israeli casualties.

The Cairo radio reiterated today that Egypt will not allow Israeli shipping to use the Suez Canal...because, it said, a state of war exists. Reports from Washington say the United States will soon issue a statement...giving American vessels the green light to use the Suez Canal. But, in London, the Macmillan government says it is still advising British shipowners to avoid the waterway until arrangements for its future operation are more clear. Twenty-one ships went through the canal today.

In Congress...the Senate rackets committee today ended its hearings on the Scranton, Pennsylvania phase of its investigation into corrupt labor practices. Chairman McClellan said, "It is pretty obvious someone has committed perjury." And he asked the Justice Department to study the conflicting evidence, for the purpose of possible prosecution.

All signs point to a new Soviet peace offensive that will urge another summit meeting, and will preach in a new rhetoric, the old doctrine of peaceful co-existence. At the farewell to Ambassador Bohlen last night, Nikita Khrushchev told him: "We have renewed hopes for something concrete to facilitate good relations." His statement followed a most conciliatory statement earlier in the week by Premier Bulganin. The two statemnts are taken to herald a specific action that will be trumpeted to the ends of the earth, as proof of the Soviet desire to meet the United States part way. At the disarmament talks in London the Russians are showing moderation. Some fresh initiative there, or somewhere else, obviously has been thought through and is ready for launching when the chosen moment comes.

When it is launched there is little doubt that it will be greeted in a chorus by the State Department and Congress alike as "propaganda". And such a judgement will be quite right. It will be propaganda. All this has happened before.

But assuming that it is propaganda, the first question is for whom is the propaganda intended. The habit in America is to assume that Soviet propaganda is meant for us, and then to assure ourselves and everybody else that we aren't fooled by it. Having done this, we seem to think we have disposed of the matter. But we are wrong. The propaganda is not meant for us, it is meant for the rest of the world. And the rest of the world isn't greatly impressed because we say it is propaganda and it doesn't fool us.

The Soviet Union now badly needs a fresh and successful propaganda drive. It suffered the worst sethack in recent years when it bludgeoned Hungary into submission. It also has been obnoxiously brutal in threatening to destroy the small countries in NATO if they allow their territory to be used for nuclear bases.

The Russians know they can make more of an impression by changing from bad to good than they can by staying good. This is the proper moment to turn good, and the Kremlin is saying to the West: "We shall overlook your attack on Egypt, you overlook our treatment of Hungary." In this country we know the two cases aren't comparable. But to the rest of the world it is going to matter a great deal if the Kremlin appears to be trying to meet us half way. It will make Hungary easier to forget. And if we don't go part way, which we won't be tempted to do by propaganda, we shall lose in influence, and the Kremlin will gain. That is, we shall lose if we do not persistently and convincingly explain to the world, not what Russia is up to with its tricks, but what it is that we are striving for.

Obviously the only effective answer to propaganda is the truth, if it can be communicated. We must meet the Russians in their new peace offensive where the battle will be fought out, which is in the minds of the people abroad. If we lose ground in world esteem, we lose a campaign in the cold war. The favor and trust of the non-communist world are what the cold war is about.

There is nothing new in saying this. But it could not be said at a more timely moment. Just as we are coming into a most urgent need for communications with the outside world about ourselves and our motives, Congress is forbidding the expansion of the United States Information Agency. It is not doing so in disgust, to punish the agency for not being good enough. It is doing it almost wholly because the agency costs money.

A good case could be made out for a much better U.S.I.A. Our standing in the world has gone down steadily in recent years. Every sampling of foreign opinion at any level, shows that we are not understood and frequently are disliked. Probably the best U.S.I.A. organization we could set up would not be able to reverse unfavorable opinions altogether. But a better U.S.I.A. could make a great deal of difference. But this is not what Congress is thinking about. It is not interested in making U.S.I.A. better. It wants to save money and that means a less efficient agency.

It is only coincidence, but it is an unfortunate coincidence, that this economy effort comes just at the moment when the Soviet Union sets out to win a vital campaign in the cold war.

This is Ed Murrow. I"ll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

ERM: Moscow has never underestimated the value of propaganda in waging cold war. Walter Bedell Smith warned in his book on Russia that propaganda, as employed by the Soviets, is a "full-scale aggressive device"...one, he said, "which shifts its emphasis with the greatest flexibility in the struggle for men's minds." The warning would seem to bear repeating today.

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Apr. 19, 1957

This is the news:

Russia has sent the Western powers a new note on the Middle East. What it says has not been divulged. But it is a reply to previous notes from the United States, Britain and France... rejecting Moscow's proposal for a Big Four declaration of Middle East policy. In the declaration, Russia wanted abolition of agreements like the Baghdad Pact and removal of foreign bases from the area.

A British ship passed through the Suez Canal today... for the first time since November. The Egyptian Canal Authority says it was given the same treatment as any other vessel. It went through as part of a four-ship convoy, bound for the Mediterranean, and paid the transit toll in Swiss francs. Although the ship flies the flag of the British merchant marine, it is chartered by a Chinese company, with offices in Hong Kong. It has been the policy of Britain... as well as the United States and France... to discourage shippers from using the canal, pending settlement of the canal dispute. The British government said yesterday that this is still its policy. And today... in Paris... the Foreign Ministry said it is continuing to advise French vessels to avoid the canal at this time. Any American ship using the waterway is supposed to pay its toll under protest. The "President Jackson" of the American President Lines, plans to go through the canal next week.

→

In Tel Aviv today, United States Ambassador Lawson conferred with the Israeli foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, on American policy in the Middle East. Lawson is said to be trying to allay Israel's concern over what is regarded, in Tel Aviv, as appeasement of President Nasser

Here in New York, I.N.S. reports that United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold has "actively" re-entered negotiations to break the Suez deadlock. Hammarskjold conferred at United Nations headquarters today with representatives of both Egypt and Israel.

Soviet Defense Minister Zhukov told reporters today... in Moscow... that Russia will see to it that countries of the Warsaw Pact are provided with weapons to match those supplied NATO countries by the United States. Zhukov said, "We have at our disposal adequate means to retaliate against any action of NATO." He said he does not think much of nuclear weapons as a deterrent to war. "If there are weapons," he said, "they will be used." Party Boss Khrushchev also issued a warning today. And again the occasion was a reception---this time in honor of the visiting Polish premier, Joseph Cyrankiewicz. "We want to warn the capitalist countries," he said. "Do not try to test us as you did in Hungary with the putsch. We are not saints and, if necessary, we will rap your knuckles." Then, turning to the Polish prime minister, Khrushchev said, "Comrade Cyrankiewicz, you are now being wooed like a bride, but not because you are young." He also told Cyrankiewicz, "We had difficulties last year, but that is all part of the past."

A speech---published today in Yugoslavia---quotes Marshal Tito as saying that "Stalinist tendencies" are still present in Soviet policy toward other [redacted] countries. Yugoslavia, Tito said, has "no reason" to modify its independent policy... and some day Soviet leaders will realize this. He complained that one day a Russian leader calls for improved relations with

Yugoslavia... and then another Russian leader follows it with a strong ideological attack. "Our relations would improve," Tito said, "if they would drop such methods, for whom now are we to believe?"

In Washington, the State Department says it is giving "serious attention" to the views expressed by the Canadian government in the Norman case. Last week, Canada protested the release of testimony before the Senate Internal Security Committee... to the effect that Herbert Norman, the Canadian ambassador to Egypt, was once a Communist. The charges were DISCOUNTED years ago by the Canadian government, though Canada's secretary for external affairs, Lester Pearson, says Norman did associate with Communists in his college days. Norman committed suicide after the Senate committee revived the charge of Communist membership. Canada asked... in its protest... that if it supplies the United States with security information concerning its citizens in the future, that that information be withheld from Congress, unless permission is granted by the Ottawa government. The State Department has sent Canada a note saying the matter "will be pursued vigorously... that it is being brought to the attention of the appropriate executive agencies."

Frank Newbury, assistant secretary of defense for research and engineering, is going to resign. Defense Secretary Wilson said today that Newbury asked to leave... and that the resignation will take effect "within a month." Newbury was formerly head of the engineering office at the Pentagon. Two months ago, when that office and the office of research were combined, he took charge of both operations. This caused concern in some quarters... where it was felt that, because of his bachground, he might emphasize the engineering phase to the detriment of basic research. Newbury denied any bias. And today Wilson praised his service to the government.

The Post Office Department asked the Interstate Commerce Commission today for authority to raise parcel post rates. It estimated that parcel service runs in the red about 4-million, 300-thousand dollars a year.

The United Steelworkers Union today formally announced the re-election of David J. McDonald as president. The official count shows McDonald winning over Donald Rarick, McKeesport, Pennsylvania millhand, by 181-thousand votes. But Rarick refuses to concede... because, he says, of "concrete evidence of irregularities at the local level." The union election was held last February 12th.

Teamsters President Dave Beck said today that he still "considers" himself to be a member of the AFL-CIO executive council. Beck said this in a letter to AFL-CIO President Meany. The council suspended Beck after he was implicated in charges of corruption brought against the teamsters union.

The Department of Agriculture announced today that wheat price supports, in 1958, will be reduced to an average of a dollar and 78 cents a bushel. That's 22 cents below the average for 1956 and '57.

In England, the Mayflower Second still hopes to sail tomorrow for the United States. One of its liferafts was punctured today... and has to be replaced... but it is expected that the Royal Navy, or Air Force, will come up with a substitute. For the story of this ship, we switch now to Howard K. Smith in London.

Tape runs 4 mins
Ends on cue: "--to Ed Murrow
in N.Y."

That was MY colleague, Howard K. Smith, reporting on what he called "a bright little anachronism", riding at anchor tonight off Plymouth Harbor.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. / Now here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

The second Mayflower is hoping to sail from Plymouth on tomorrow's tide. Great care has gone into the building of her, and this is a good thing. For as Mark Twain said of the prototype, "They chartered a ship called Mayflower and set sail. And I have heard it said that they pumped the Atlantic Ocean through that ship sixteen times."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, April 19, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: In England, the Mayflower II still hopes to sail tomorrow for the United States. One of its life rafts was punctured today, and has to be replaced. But it is confidently expected that the Royal Navy or perhaps the Royal Air Force will come up with a substitute. For the story of this ship, we switch now to Howard K. Smith in London.

SMITH: Off the harbor of Plymouth here in England this Good Friday night, a pot-bellied little sailing ship called Mayflower II is riding at anchor, high and erect in the water, shaped like an outsized orchid. Its master, the famous captain of many sailing ships, Allan Villiers, is studying the winds and the tides. If they are right, he hopes to hoist anchor and sail his bright little anachronism out into the Atlantic from Plymouth, England, towards Plymouth, U.S.A., hoping to duplicate the famous voyage of the original Mayflower which carried the first Pilgrims to America in the year 1620.

The little ship is loaded with commercial wares to be advertised and to be sold to pay its way. But those who thought up the idea two years ago think of the ship mainly as a demonstrative present from England to America, something like the Statue of Liberty, which was given to the United States by France. The makers of the ship have tried, as nearly as possible, to duplicate the original Mayflower. That has involved one great difficulty. The difficulty is that no one knows exactly what the original Mayflower looked like. So what the makers of the new Mayflower have done is to build a typical English sailing ship of the same period.

In the few details of the historic Mayflower that are known, the new Mayflower is authentic. It is a mere 90-feet, that is 30-yards in length. It weighs only 180-tons, which is a very small piece of decorative flotsam indeed to go over so big an ocean as the Atlantic. It is made entirely of English oak, except for its main-mast, which is a piece of tall pine from Oregon. It has no metal whatever in its hull. The pins which hold it together being cut from cider casks over a hundred years old. Where the hold in the old Mayflower was but five feet six inches high, the new Mayflower allows a hold six feet high. That, however, is not for the comfort of the present crew. It is to save thousands of head-bumpings when this new Mayflower settles in its American home and becomes a museum open to the American public, for that is to be its fate after its 3,000-mi. voyage over the Atlantic.

The new Mayflower will have no auxiliary motor on it so it will really do what the old one did - sail the entire distance. This against prevailing winds and against ocean currents. Still, the crew of the present ship expect to complete their voyage in 45-days, rather than the 67 days it took the historic Mayflower. "It can do this," Captain Villiers says, "because it will have some very great advantages; the main one being that it will, unlike the old Mayflower, at all times know where it is, where it is heading, where the ocean currents are, and it will know also what the weather is going to be like. For the British Ministry of Transport refused to give the ship a license unless it would take along a radio transmitter and all the charts that any prosaic steam-propelled ship of our time would take.

Also, the captain was required to stock the ship with a full quota of life rafts and lifebelts. Its crew, the entire manifest, lists only 30 people on board, all trained sailing ship sailors, all men. This 30 is in contrast to the old Mayflower's 122 people on board which included nearly 30 women. The new Mayflower is thus guaranteed against one drama that marked the old Mayflower's voyage. That was the birth of a baby who was christened Oceanus, to one of the passengers.

Guiding Mayflower II, Captain Villiers is unafraid of storms. He is defiant of contrary winds and adverse currents. He fears only one thing and that is a calm. "The Mayflower," he says, "can take anything that happens, but it gets tough when nothing happens."

Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

FRIDAY, APRIL 19, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

SMITH: Off the harbor of Plymouth here in England this Good Friday night a pot-bellied little sailing ship called Mayflower the Second is riding at anchor, high and erect in the water, shaped like an outsized orchid. Its master, the famous Captain of many sailing ships, Allan Villiers, is studying the winds and the tides. If they are right, he hopes to hoist anchor and sail his bright little anachronism out into the Atlantic from Plymouth, England towards Plymouth, U. S. A., hoping to duplicate the famous voyage of the original Mayflower which carried the first Pilgrims to America in the year 1620.

The little ship is loaded with commercial wares to be advertised and to be sold to pay its way. But those who thought up the idea two years ago think of the ship mainly as a demonstrative present from England to America, something like the Statue of Liberty which was given to the United States by France. The makers of the ship have tried as nearly as possible to duplicate the original Mayflower. That has involved one great difficulty. The difficulty is that no one knows exactly what the original Mayflower looked like. So what the makers of the new Mayflower have done is to build a typical English sailing ship of the same period.

In the few details of the historic Mayflower that are known, the new Mayflower is authentic. It is a mere 90 feet, that is 30 yards in length. It weighs only 180 tons, which is a very small piece of decorative flotsam indeed to go over so big an ocean as the Atlantic. It is made entirely of English oak, except for its mainmast, which is a piece of tall pine from Oregon. It has no metal whatever in its hull. The pins which hold it together being cut from cider casks over a hundred years old. Where the hold in the old Mayflower was but five feet six inches high, the new Mayflower allows a hold six feet high.

That however, is not for the comfort of the present crew. It is to save thousands of head-bumpings when this new Mayflower settles in its American home and becomes a museum open to the American public, for that is to be its fate after its 3,000 mile voyage over the Atlantic.

The new Mayflower will have no auxiliary motor on it so it will really do what the old one did - sail the entire distance. This against prevailing winds and against ocean currents. Still, the crew of the present ship expect to complete their voyage in 45 days, rather than the 67 days it took the historic Mayflower. "It can do this," Captain Villiers says, "because it will have some very great advantages; the main one being that it will, unlike the old Mayflower, at all times know where it is, where it is heading, where the ocean currents are and it will know also what the weather is going to be like." For the British Ministry of Transport refused to give the ship a license unless it would take along a radio transmitter and all the charts that any prosaic steam-propelled ship of our time would take.

Also the Captain was required to stock the ship with a full quota of life rafts and lifebelts. Its crew, the entire manifest, lists only 30 people on board, all trained sailing ship sailors, all men. This 30 is in contrast to the old Mayflower's 122 people on board which included nearly 30 women. The new Mayflower is thus guaranteed against one drama that marked the old Mayflower's voyage. That was the birth of a baby who was cristened Oceanus, to one of the passengers.

Guiding Mayflower II, Capt. Villiers is unafraid of storms. He is defiant of contrary winds and adverse currents. He fears only one thing and that is a calm. "Mayflower," he says, "can take anything that happens, but it gets tough when nothing happens." Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 19, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Russia has sent the Western powers a new note on the Middle East. What it says has not been divulged. But it is a reply to a previous notes from the United States, Britain and France...rejecting Moscow's proposal for a Big Four declaration of Middle East policy. In the declaration, Russia wanted abolition of agreements like the Baghdad Pact and removal of foreign bases from the area.

A British ship passed through the Suez Canal today...for the first time since November. The Egyptian Canal Authority says it was given the same treatment as any other vessel. It went through as part of a four-ship convoy, bound for the Mediterranean, and paid the transit toll in Swiss francs. Although the ship flies the flag of the British merchant marine, it is chartered by a Chinese company, with offices in Hong Kong. It has been the policy of Britain...as well as the United States and France...to discourage shippers from using the canal, pending settlement of the canal dispute. The British government said yesterday that this is still its policy. And today...in Paris..the Foreign Ministry said it is continuing to advise French vessels to avoid the canal at this time. Any American ship using the waterway is supposed to pay its toll under protest. The "President Jackson" of the American President Lines plans to go through the canal next week.

In Tel Aviv today, United States Ambassador Lawson conferred with the Israeli foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, on American policy in the Middle East. Lawson is said to be trying to allay Israel's concern over what is regarded, in Tel Aviv, as appeasement of President Nasser.

Here in New York, I.N.S. reports that United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold has "actively" re-entered negotiations to break the Suez deadlock. Hammarskjold conferred at United Nations Headquarters today with representatives of both Egypt and Israel.

Soviet Defense Minister Zhukov told reporters today...in Moscow..that Russia will see to it that countries of the Warsaw Pact are provided with weapons to match those supplied NATO countries by the United States . Zhukov said, "We have at our disposal adequate means to retaliate against any action of NATO." He said he does not think much of nuclear weapons as a deterrent to war. "If there are weapons," he said, " They will be used." Party Boss Khrushchev also issued a warning today. And again the occasion was a reception -- this time in honor of the visiting Polish premier, Joseph Cyrankiewicz. "We want to warn the capitalist countries, " he said. "Do not try to test us as you did in Hungary with the putsch. We are not saints and, if necessary, we will rap your knuckles." Then turning to the Polish prime minister, Khrushchev said, " Comrade Cyrankiewicz, you are now being wooed like a bride but not because you are young." He also told Cyrankiewicz, "We had difficulties last year, but that is all part of the past."

A speech published today in Yugoslavia...quotes Marshal Tito as saying that "Stalinist tendencies" are still present in Soviet policy toward other countries. Yugoslavia , Tito said, has "no reason" to modify its independent policy...and some day Soviet leaders will realize this. He complained that one day a Russian leader calls for improved relations with Yugoslavia...and then another Russian leader follows it with a strong ideological attack. "Our relations would improve," Tito said, "if they would drop such methods, for whom now are we to believe."

In Washington, the State Department says it is giving "serious attention" to the views expressed by the Canadian government in the Norman case. Canada asked...in its protest...that if it supplies the United States with security information concerning its citizens in the future, that information be withheld from Congress, unless permission is granted by the Ottawa government.

Frank Newbury, assistant secretary of defense for research and engineering, is going to resign. Defense Secretary Wilson said today that Newbury asked to leave..and that the resignation will take effect "within a month." Newbury was formerly head of the engineering office at the Pentagon. Two months ago, when that office and the office of research were combined, he dook charge of both operations. This caused concern in some quarters...where it was felt that because of his background, he might emphasize the engineering phase to the detriment of basic research. Newbury denied any bias. And today Wilson praised his services to the government.

The Post Office Department asked the Interstate Commerce Commission today for authority to raise parcel post rates. It estimated that parcel service runs in the red about 4 - million, 300-thousand dollars a year.

The United Steelworkers Union today formally announced the re-election of David J. McDonald as president. The official count shows McDonald winning over Donald Rarick, McKeesport, Pennsylvania millhand, by 181- thousand votes. But Rarick refuses to concede...because, he says, of "concrete evidence of irregularitiees at the local level." The union electon was held last February 12th.

Teamsters President Dave Beck said today that he still "considers" himself to be a member of the AFL-CIO executive council. Beck said this in a letter to AFL-CIO President Meany. The council suspended Beck after he was implicated in charges of corruption brought against the teamsters union.

The Department of Agriculture announced today that wheat price supports, in 1958, will be reduced to an average of a dollar and 78 cents a bushel. That's 22 cents below the average for 1956 and '57.

In England, the Mayflower Second still hopes to sail tomorrow for the United States. One of its liferafts was punctured today and has to be replaced ...but it is expected that the Royal Navy, or Air Force will come up with a substitute. For the story if this ship, we switch now to Howard K. Smith in London.

SMITH: Off the harbor of Plymouth here in England this Good Friday night, a pot-bellied little sailing ship called Mayflower II is riding at anchor, high and erect in the water, shaped like an outsized orchid. Its master, the famous captain of many sailing ships, Allan Villiers, is studying the winds and tides. If they are right, he hopes to hoist anchor and sail his bright little anachronism out into the Atlantic from Plymouth, England, towards Plymouth, U.S.A., hoping to duplicate the famous voyage of the original Mayflower which carried the first Pilgrims to America in the year 1620.

The little ship is loaded with commerical wares to be advertised and to be sold to pay its way. But those tho thought up the idea two years ago think of the ship mainly as a demonstrative present from England to America, something like the Statue of Liberty, which was given to the United States by France. The makers of the ship have tried, as nearly as possible, to duplicate the original Mayflower. That has involved one great difficulty. The difficulty is that no one knows exactly what the original Mayflower looked like. So what the makers of the new Mayflower have done is to build a typical English sailing ship of the same period.

In the few details of the historic Mayflower that are known, the new Mayflower is authentic. It is a mere 90- feet, that is 30-yards in length. It weighs only 180-tons, which is a very small piece of decorative flotsam indeed to go over so big an ocean as the Atlantic. It is made entirely of English oak, except for its mainmast, which is a piece of tall pine from Oregon. It has no metal whatever in its hull. The pins which hold it together being cut from cider casks over a hundred years old. Where the hold in the old Mayflower was but five feet six inches high, the new Mayflower allows a hold six feet high. That, however, is not for the comfort of the present crew. It is to save thousands of head-bumpings when this new Mayflower settles in its American home and becomes a museum, open to the American public, for that is to be its fate after its 3, 000 mile voyage over the Atlantic.

The new Mayflower will have no auxiliary motor on it so it will really do what the old one did - sail the entire distance. This against prevailing winds and against ocean currents. Still, the crew of the present ship expect to complete their voyage in 45 - days, rather than the 67 days it took the historic Mayflower. " It can do this, " Captain Villiers says, "Because it will have some very great advantages; the main one being that it will, unlike the old Mayflower, at all times know where it is, where it is heading, where the ocean currents are, and it will know also what the weather is going to be like. For the British Ministry of Transport refused to give the ship a license unless it would take along a radio transmitter and all the charts that any prosaic steam - propelled ship of our time would take.

Also, the captain was required to stock the ship with a full quota of life rafts and life belts. Its crew, the entire manifest, lists only 30 people on board, all trained sailing ship sailors, all men. The 30 is in contrast to the old Mayflower's 122 people on board which included nearly 30 women. The new Mayflower is thus guaranteed against one drama that marked the old Mayflower's voyage. That was the birth of a baby who was christened Oceanus, to one of the passengers.

Guiding Mayflower II, Captain Villiers is unafraid of storms. He is defiant of contrary winds and adverse currents. He fears only the one thing and that is a calm. "The Mayflower", he says, "can take anything that happens, but it gets tough when nothing happens."

Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Howard K. Smith, reporting on what he called "a bright little anachronism", riding at anchor tonight off Plymouth Harbor.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The second Mayflower is hoping to sail from Plymouth on tomorrow's tide. Great care has gone into the building of her, and this is a good thing. For as Mark Twain said of the prototype, "They chartered a ship called Mayflower and set sail. And I have heard it said that they pumped the Atlantic Ocean through that ship sixteen times." Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Apr. 22, 1957

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles told Russia today... in a major policy speech... that it cannot break NATO by means of threats. / "We can be confident," he said, "that such Soviet assaults will not disintegrate the free world." And he added, "Collective measures are here to stay." / Mr. Dulles said events of the past year indicate that the "pressures of liberty" are rising in Russia, as well as in the satellite states. / Soviet leaders, he said, are supposed to be hard-headed. / "How long," he asked, "will they expend their resources in combatting historic forces which are bound... ultimately... to prevail?" / He criticized those, in this country, who would slash foreign aid. Such reductions, he said, "would not be economy, but extravagance." / Mr. Dulles was speaking before the annual Associated Press luncheon, here in New York. And I should like to discuss the speech further in a few minutes.

In Washington today, reporters asked the State Department about the article that appeared yesterday in the Communist Party newspaper Pravda touching on the question of disarmament. Pravda indicated that if all American troops pulled out of Europe (and if Britain and France pulled their forces out of West Germany), Russia might withdraw all its forces from the satellite states. A department spokesman called this an old proposal, rejected many times in the past. "The Soviet Union," he said, "is offering to withdraw a few hundred miles... and expects the United States to withdraw more than 3-thousand miles." He expressed the view that such a move would "seriously weaken" West European defense.

The Soviet Foreign Ministry issued a statement today... saying it was going to publish the series of letters exchanged last fall between the leaders of Russia, Britain and France shortly before Egypt was invaded. The correspondence, it said, would appear tomorrow in the Soviet newspaper Izvestia. The letters, it claimed, would show that the invasion was engineered "by certain circles in Britain and France, encouraged by the United States." The British government did not wait for Izvestia... and released the text of the letters tonight.

The documents show that seven weeks before the Anglo-French invasion, Soviet Premier Bulganin warned Britain and France not to launch the attack. In a letter dated September 11th, Bulganin said, "The Soviet Union cannot stand aside from this question. We wish to warn you, in a friendly way, as to the dangers which might follow if necessary prudence is not shown."

[redacted] Among the "dangers", the Soviet premier listed [redacted] an uprising by the Arab peoples, damage to the Suez Canal, and the cutting off of oil deliveries to Europe. Sir Anthony Eden... who was then prime minister... replied that Bulganin seemed to have "a complete misconception of the position of the British government." The aim of the government, he said, is a peaceful solution of the problem. Eden reminded Bulganin that Russia was on record as favoring international control of the canal.

Jordan today denied a report that Iraqi troops have entered the country. The report was circulated yesterday by the Middle East News Agency, sponsored by Egypt. /The denial came from Jordanian Premier Khálidi, who said Iraqi forces will not enter Jordan "without our knowledge and consent." The report is also denied by Iraq. /Khálidi conceded that Egypt and Syria have not given Jordan the financial aid they promised... to replace the subsidy that formerly came from Britain. (Today, Saudi Arabia is said to have paid Jordan 14-million dollars under this agreement). /The Jordanian premier said his country's attitude regarding the Eisenhower Doctrine depends on what the special American envoy, James P. Richards, has to say when he reaches Amman. And he defended United States Ambassador [redacted] (MALLORY). The pro-Egyptian foreign minister... Suleiman Nabúlsi... charged yesterday that "certain foreign diplomats" were interfering in Jordan's internal affairs. And he indicated [redacted] Mallory was one of them. Today, Khálidi called the United States ambassador his friend. He doubted Mallory "would do such a thing."

Jordan says Israeli troops violated its frontier twice yesterday... and that, in both instances, the Israelis were the first to open fire. [redacted]

→

[redacted]

[redacted] /For its part, Israel accuses Jordan of starting a three-hour gunfight near a border settlement, northeast of Tel Aviv. /Israel says the action began when Jordanian troops opened fire on an Israeli patrol. It [redacted] reports no casualties on the Israeli side.

The French report more than 150 dead in scattered fighting in Algeria over the week-end. The main action took place in the Oran sector, where 101 rebels are said to have been killed. French losses are not given.

It was announced today... at the vacation White House in Augusta... that President Eisenhower will board the new Navy carrier Saratoga on June 6th, to stay for two days. The Saratoga... at that time... will be engaged in training exercises off the west coast of Florida.

Edward R. Murrow: April 22, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

Secretary Dulles's speech at the Associated Press luncheon today was the first major foreign policy speech he has made in President Eisenhower's second term, and no effort was spared to let it be known that it was an important pronouncement on American foreign policy. Mr. Dulles, early in the speech, remarked that foreign policy accepts change as the law of life. ~~But his speech did not underline any change in American policy, or mention any change in Soviet policy.~~ Significant In the past week the Kremlin has been trying to make the world think that it is ready for a change. It is conducting a campaign preaching the benefits of co-existence and representing the Soviet Union as ready to meet the West half way. This has been not only in generalities, Pravda, speaking officially for the Kremlin, proposed last week the total withdrawal of foreign troops from the territories of other countries in Europe. ~~Previously it had proposed only reductions in the~~ numbers of occupying forces. ~~Now Pravda was saying that if the United~~ States would pull all its ~~troops out of Europe, and Britain and France would~~ withdraw theirs from West Germany, ~~the Soviet Union would take its troops out~~ of East Germany, Poland, Hungary and Rumania.

The Dulles speech did not address itself to the new Soviet peace offensive. It must have been drafted before the new Kremlin campaign was far under way, and no last minute inserts were tried. So the speech was not meant to be an answer to the Kremlin. That will be clear in this country, though it may not be so clear abroad. It may look as though the United States is not budging from its past position, even though the Soviet Union wants others to think it is ready to move forward.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Dulles did deal with one change at some length, the one brought about by the crisis in the Middle East. He said it has been a hard decision not to acquiesce in the attack on Egypt by our allies, and to uphold the charter of the United Nations instead. Now, he said, we are trying to create conditions in conformity with justice and international law. And he warned: "This cannot be done quickly or all at once. We know in domestic affairs" he continued, "that it is hard to apply just solutions when racial or class passions run high." He promised that the Administration would be dedicated to patience, resolution and resourcefulness. In other and older words -- "let the dust settle".

One sentence in the speech can be identified as registering a change in policy. It came in a discussion of disarmament. Mr. Dulles was disavowing an American belief that the only way to security was through ever-mounting armaments. "We consider" he said, "that controls and reduction of arms are possible, desirable and, in the last reckoning, indispensable." Then came the significant sentence. "It is not essential, he said, "that controls should encompass everything at once. In fact, progress is likely to come by steps carefully measured and carefully taken." Those following the disarmament negotiations know this affirms our willingness to meet the Russians part way in getting started with inspection and controls on a trial basis. This is not new as of today, but it is a recent indication of flexibility on our part in the disarmament talks.

Taken by itself, this assurance might count as a point in the current debate which the Kremlin is instigating. We are saying that if the Soviet Union thinks disarmament is the key to peace we are ready to do business on a step-by-step program. But the rest of the speech hardly fits into the debate the Kremlin is trying to start. It bears with full weight on the record of the Kremlin in Hungary and other satellites.

"Let us make apparent to the Russians our real purpose" said Mr. Dulles. "We condemn their imperialism. We seek the liberation of the captive nations. We do not ourselves incite violent revolt, rather we encourage an evolution to freedom." But he added that "peace is in jeopardy and freedom is a word of mockery, until the divided nations are reunited [redacted] and the captive nations are set free."

For the American editors this was a repetition of familiar doctrine. We assure the Russians that we will do nothing to liberate the satellites, and now we assure the satellites of our encouragement and applause.

Mr. Dulles ended with stark words on the possibility of destruction by modern weapons. "We would be reckless" he said, "not to recognize that this calamity is a possibility. Indeed history suggests that a conflict as basic as that dividing the world of freedom and the world of international communism ultimately erupts in war." He at once rejected the idea, saying that "our nation did not reach a peak of power and responsibility merely to partake of the greatest and perhaps the last of all human disasters" Thereupon he closed on a note of dedication and determination; but no one - here or abroad - will say he sounded optimistic.

Mr. Dulles says the United States has reached "a new peak of power and responsibility." Senator George had this in mind when he once said, "I cannot think that Divine Providence has permitted us to become the responsible leaders of the world, only to break that hope now. If the free peoples lose confidence in us," George said, "we will have disappointed the last hope of mankind."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 22, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles told Russia today...in a major policy speech.. that it cannot break NATO by means of threats. "We can be confident", he said, "that such Soviet assaults will not disintegrate the free world." And he added, "collective measures are here to stay." Mr. Dulles said events of the past year indicate that the "pressures of liberty" are rising in Russia as well as in the satellite states. Soviet leaders, he said, are supposed to be hard-headed. "How long", he asked, "will they expend their resources in combatting historic forces which are bound...ultimately..to prevail?" He criticized those, in this country, who would slash foreign aid. Such reductions, he said, "would not be economy but extravagance." Mr. Dulles was speaking before the annual Associated Press luncheon here in New York. And I should like to discuss the speech further in a few minutes.

In Washington today, reporters asked the State Department about the article that appeared yesterday in the Communist Party newspaper Pravda, touching on the question on disarmament. Pravda indicated that if all American troops pulled out of Europe (and if Britain and France pulled their forces out of West Germany), Russia might withdraw all its forces from the satellite states. A department spokesman called this an old proposal, rejected many times in the past. "The Soviet Union," he said, "is offering to withdraw a few hundred miles..and expects the United States to withdraw more than 3-thousand miles." He expressed the view that such a move would "seriously weaken" West European defense.

The Soviet Foreign Ministry issued a statement today..saying it was going to publish the series of letters exchanged last fall between the leaders of Russia, Britain and France shortly before Egypt was invaded. The correspondence, it said, would appear tomorrow in the Soviet newspaper Izvestia. The letters, it claimed, would show that the invasion was engineered "by certain circles in Britain and France, encouraged by the United States." The British government did not wait for Izvestia and released the text of the letters tonight. The documents show that seven weeks before the Anglo-French invasion, Soviet Premier Bulganin warned Britain and France not to launch the attack. In a letter dated September 11th, Bulganin said, "The Soviet Union cannot stand aside from this question. We wish to warn you, in a friendly way, as to the dangers which might follow if necessary prudence is not shown." Among the "dangers", the Soviet premier listed an uprising by the Arab peoples, damage to the Suez Canal, and the cutting off of oil deliveries to Europe. Sir Anthony Eden..who was then prime minister..replied that Bulganin seemed to have "a complete misconception of the position of the British government." The aim of the Government, he said, is a peaceful solution of the problem. Eden reminded Bulganin that Russia was on record as favoring international control of the canal.

Jordan today denied a report that Iraqui troops have entered the country. The report was circulated yesterday by the Middle East News Agency, sponsored by Egypt. The denial came from Jordanian Premier Khalidi, who said Iraqi forces will not enter Jordan "without our knowledge and consent." The report is also denied by Iraq. Khalidi conceded that Egypt and Syria have not given Jordan the financial aid they promised..to replace the subsidy that formerly came from Britain. (Today, Saudi Arabia is said to have paid Jordan 14-million dollars under this agreement. The Jordanian premier said his country's attitude regarding the Eisenhower Doctrine depends on what the special American envoy, James P. Richards, has to say when he reaches Amman. And he defended United States Ambassador Mallory. The pro-Egyptian foreign minister..Suleiman Nabulsi...charged yesterday that "certain foreign diploaats" were interfering in Jordan's internal affairs. And he indicated Mallory was one of them.

Today, Khalidi called the United States ambassador his friend. He doubted Mallory "would do such a thing."

Jordan says Israeli troops violated its frontier twice yesterday...and that, in both instances, the Israelis were the first to open fire.. For its part, Israel accuses Jordan of starting a three-hour gunfight near a border settlement, northeast of Tel Aviv. Israel says the action began when Jordanian troops opened fire on an Israeli patrol. It reports no casualties on the Israeli side.

The French report more than 150 dead in scattered fighting in Algeria over the week-end. The main action took place in the Oran sector, where 101 rebels are said to have been killed. French losses are not given.

It was announced today at the vacation White House is Augusta, that President Eisenhower will board the new Navy carrier Saratoga on June 6th to stay for two days. The Saratoga...at that time..wil be engaged in training exercises off the west coast of Florida.

Secretary Dulles's speech at the Associated Press luncheon today was the first major foreign policy speech he has made in President Eisenhower's second term, and no effort was spared to let it be known that it was an important pronouncement on American foreign policy. Mr. Dulles, early in the speech, remarked that foreign policy accepts change as the law of life. In the past week the Kremlin has been trying to make the world think that it is ready for a change. It is conducting a campaign preaching the benefits of co-existence and representing the Soviet Union as ready to meet the West half way. This has been not only in generalities, Pravda, speaking officially for the Kremlin, proposed last week the total withdrawal of foreign troops from the territories of other countries in Europe.

The Dulles speech did not address itself to the new Soviet peace offensive. It must have been drafted before the new Kremlin campaign was far underway, and no last munute inserts were tried. So the speech was not meant to be an answer to the Kremlin. That will be clear in this country, though it may not be clear abroad. It may look as though the United States is not budging from its past position, even though the Soviet Union wants others to think it is ready to move forward.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Dulles did deal with one change at some length, the one brought about by the crisis in the Middle East. He said it has been a hard decision not to acquiesce in the attack on Egypt by our allies, and to uphold the charter of the United Nations instead. Now, he said, we are trying to create conditions in conformity with justice and international law. And we warned: "This cannot be done quickly or all at once. We know in domestic affairs" he continued, "that it is hard to apply just solutions when racial or class passions run high." He promised that the Administration would be dedicated to patience, resolution and resourcefulness. In other and older words - " let the dust settle."

One sentence in the speech can be identified as registering a change in policy. It came in a discussion of disarmament. Mr. Dulles was disavowing an American belief that the only way to security was through ever-mounting armaments. "We consider", he said, "that controls and reduction of arms are possible, desirable, and, in the last reckoning, indespensible". Then came the significant sentence. "It is not essential, he said, "that controls should emcompass everything at once. In fact, progress is likely to come by steps carefully measured and carefully taken." Those followning the disarmement negotiations know this affirms our willingness to meet the Russians part way in getting started with inspection and controls on a trial basis. This is not new as of today, but it is a recent indication of flexibility on our part in the disarmament talks.

Taken by itself, this assurance might count as a point in the current debate which the Kremlin is instigating. We are saying that if the Soviet Union thinks disarmament is the key to peace we are ready to do business on a step-by-step program. But the rest of the speech hardly fits into the debate the Kremlin is trying to start. It bears with full weight on the record of the Kremlin in Hungary and other satellites.

"Let us make apparent to the Russians our real purpose" said Mr. Dulles. "We condemn their imperialism. We seek the liberation of the captive nations. We do not ourselves incite violent revolt, rather we encourage an evolution to freedom." But he added that "peace is an jeopardy and freedom is a work of mockery, until the divided nations are reunited, and their captive nations set free."

For the American editors this was a repetition of familiar doctrine. We assure the Russians that we will do nothing to liberate the satellites, and now we assure the satellites, of our encouragement and applause.

Mr. Dulles ended with stark words on the possibility of destruction by modern weapons. "We would be reckless" he said, "not to recognize that this calamity is a possibility. Indeed history suggests that a conflict as basic at that dividing the world of freedom and the world of international communism ultimately erupts in war." He at once rejected the idea, saying that "our nation did not reach a peak of power and responsibility merely to partake of the greatest and perhaps the last of all human disasters". Thereupon he closed on a note of dedication and determination; but no one - here or abroad - will say he sounded optimistic.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: Mr. Dulles says the United States has reached "a new peak of power and responsibility". Senator George had this in mind when he once said, "I cannot think that Divine Providence has permitted us to become the responsible leaders of the world, only to break that hope now. If the free peoples lose confidence in us," George said, " we will have disappointed the last hope of mankind."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Apr. 23, 1957

This is the news:

Living costs went up two-tenths of a percent in March... setting a new record for the seventh consecutive month. And a government spokesman says still higher costs are indicated for April. During March, prices went up in all major categories, except food. Clothing, housing, services all cost more. Because of the higher cost-of-living index, a million 400-thousand workers will get pay increases ranging from one to three cents an hour. These are workers in the railroad, aircraft, electrical, construction and textile industries whose wages are geared to living costs. According to the Labor Department, March was the first month in more than two and a half years in which "real" earnings of factory workers showed no gain from a year before.

The government issued its quarterly report today on the state of the nation's business. Americans in the first three months of 1957 earned and spent more money than in any comparable period in history. Employment was high, and there was increasing consumer demand. Steel production was down 2 percent from the last quarter of 1956, but over-all industrial production is about the same. Personal income is up 6 percent over a year ago.

Secretary of Welfare Folsom said today that it is wrong to regard President Eisenhower's budget as "an economic catastrophe". Folsom declared himself as concerned as anybody about high taxes. But it is only natural, he said, that the growth of the country should be reflected in government spending. Folsom defended the Administration school program. He said there is nothing to the argument that school aid would mean control of education from Washington.

President Eisenhower has asked Secretary of Labor Mitchell to confer with him at the vacation White House in Augusta on Thursday. News Secretary Hagerty says they will discuss possible legislation for preventing misuse of union funds... in the light of disclosures by the Senate rackets committee. Today, Mr. Eisenhower conferred with Harold Stassen, his special adviser on disarmament. Stassen has been attending the five-power disarmament talks in London and flew back to make a first-hand report. He saw the President this morning for about an hour and a half. Hagerty issued a statement afterwards... saying Mr. Eisenhower had received a review of the London talks and had "encouraged" the American delegation... headed by Mr. Stassen... "to follow through thoroughly" when negotiations resume tomorrow. Hagerty said the President reaffirmed the United States policy, as stated yesterday by Secretary Dulles in his New York speech---that we consider arms reduction indispensable [~~and that it is "not essential that controls encompass everything at once." Rather, that progress is most likely to come by steps "carefully measured and carefully taken." Stassen himself made no statement. He is flying back to London tonight.~~]

3

The United States will report to the United Nations Security Council this week on its negotiations with Egypt over operation of the Suez Canal. Mr. Dulles told his news conference ~~Monday that it may not be ready~~ the report may be submitted as early as tomorrow or Thursday. But the United States, he said, is not requesting United Nations action at this time. He declined to say what steps the United States will take if Egypt rejects... outright... the western demand that the canal be "insulated from the politics of any country." Dulles said the next move is for Egypt to publish its final plan for operating the canal... and he indicated that that announcement may come soon. (In Cairo today, secret talks ~~discussions~~ between United States Ambassador Hare and the Egyptian foreign minister were resumed).

Mr. Dulles indicated an easing of the State Department ban on sending American newsmen to Red China. He said the United States would favor letting "a strictly limited number" of correspondents visit China, if the policy against travel there by other Americans could still be maintained. So far, he said, no formula for doing this has been found. Mr. Dulles emphasized that such a trip as he envisaged would be an experiment... a one-shot affair... and he made plain that Chinese Communist reporters would not be admitted to the United States.

Dulles voiced American support for King Hussein of Jordan. The king, he said, "is striving to maintain the independence of his country in the face of very great difficulties. It is our desire to assist, to the extent that he thinks we can be helpful."

Egypt is continuing to wage its "war of nerves" against Jordan. The Cairo radio today announced the fall of the Jordanian government, headed by Premier Khalidi. Three hours later, Khalidi officially denied the story. But there is no question his government is under pressure to resign. Khalidi is reported to have met repeatedly with his cabinet during the day... and the leaders of all of Jordan's political parties are said to have called upon him to quit. Pro-Egyptian elements are reported to have called a general strike.

Tonight, the Moscow radio broadcast the text of a letter that Soviet Premier Bulganin sent British Prime Minister Macmillan three days ago. Bulganin expressed hope for agreement on all issues in the Middle East, "given good will on the part of the governments of all states concerned." He said, "Although one may differ, it is impermissible that disputed issues should be settled by armed force... that reckless actions by some states, still brandishing arms, should imperil the peace of the area." There should be, Bulganin said, "thorough talks and sober consideration of the fair interests of all parties." On the subject of disarmament, he again proposed the immediate banning of atomic weapons tests for a definite period. He said this should be separated from the general problem of disarmament and settled separately. Bulganin also declared Russia's readiness to resume consideration of the so-called "Eden Plan", under which a demilitarized zone would be created across Europe, stretching on both sides of the Iron Curtain.

Edward R. Murrow: April 23, 1957. 7:45 p.m.

The disarmament talks in London have made a little tentative progress. Mr. Zorin, the Russian representative, went back to Moscow for new instructions. Mr. Harold Stassen, our representative, came back to talk with Mr. Dulles and President Eisenhower - his report to the State Department was sufficiently interesting for him to make a visit to the play-and-work White House in Augusta. Now Mr. Stassen returns to London. Mr. Dulles said today he does not go with any new instructions -- has been told by the President to "follow through thoroughly" when the talks are resumed.

Mr. Dulles was encouraged because the Soviet spokesman had not used the talks for propaganda attacks against the West. Specifically, the Russians have shown some willingness to divide disarmament into separate headings and discuss them separately. In the past the Russians have offered a sort of package deal on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. For example, we were to give up nuclear weapons altogether before the Soviet Union would agree to an effective inspection system.

The Russians haven't yet said outright that they are prepared to work on a step-by-step basis, but they did agree to the agenda for the London talks, which listed the subjects separately. That agenda had seven headings. So far exploratory talks have been held on three of them. No progress was made on the matter of giving up nuclear tests. Some progress was made on the reduction of conventional arms. It now appears likely that there will be a ten percent cut in conventional arms in the first year of the agreement -- if there is an agreement. But this won't mean very much. Nuclear weapons are already producing an automatic reduction in conventional arms. We cut our manpower a couple of years ago; the Soviets announced a manpower cut last year; and the British have announced that they are going far below what would be allowed them under the present formula.

But hope is held that if the Russians will agree to a reduction in one category, it may be possible to get them to agree in others.

The real test of disarmament is in nuclear weapons, and the effectiveness of international controls. When the London meeting recessed, the United States had put forward a proposal that no fissionable material should be used for weapons after a deadline in 1958. The Russians haven't answered this one. They may do so when Zorin comes back to London from Moscow.

Our offer was first made by Ambassador Lodge last January. He proposed a freeze of nuclear stockpiles, and international control of all fissionable materials, to assure their being used exclusively for peaceful purposes. Under this program the nations could go on making nuclear weapons this year and part of next. It wouldn't end the race to get a bigger bang for a buck." But it would stop the race to pile up fissionable materials for nuclear weapons. If international inspection showed that the agreement was in fact being kept, then the next step would be to reduce the stockpiles and use them for peaceful purposes. That's part of the American proposal.

The United States has also shown flexibility in London. The Open Skies inspection proposal first made by President Eisenhower has been modified. We are now ready to do it piecemeal, start with inspection over a limited territory on a trial basis; and the Russians have accepted it in these terms.

American policy regarding further talks on disarmament in London was carefully stated by Mr. Dulles yesterday. He said that it was not essential that controls should encompass everything at once -- that progress must come by steps carefully measured and carefully taken. In Moscow ~~Mr.~~ Khrushchev has also said that the best way to reach disarmament is by taking one step at a time.

So it would seem that limited progress towards disarmament is theoretically possible. The two major powers have demonstrated a little more flexibility than they have in the past. But the possibility of any real disarmament must remain purely theoretical so long as there is no mutual confidence, no adequate foolproof system of inspection, and no willingness to live in the same kind of world. Maybe a little bit of disarmament is a good thing. In any event it looks as though that's all that even the optimists can hope for.

Word for Today

In discussing the problem of nuclear disarmament, I am reminded of these words by E.B. White. "Do not be confused by the noise of the atom bomb," he said. "The bomb is the pea-shooter come home to roost. But when you dream, dream of essential matters---of (mass-energy) relationships, of relationships of man to man. The scientists have outdreamed you, so dream well."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 23, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Living costs went up two-tenths of a percent in March..setting a new record for the seventh consecutive month. And a government spokesman says still higher costs are indicated for April. During March, prices went up in all major categories, except food. Clothing, housing, services all cost more. Because of the higher cost - of - living index, a million 400-thousand workers will get pay increases ranging from one to three cents an hour. These are workers in the railroad, aircraft, electrical, construction and textile industries whose wages are geared to living costs. According to the Labor Department, March was the first month in more than two and a half years in which "real" earnings of factory workers showed no gain from a year before.

The government issued its quarterly report today on the state of the nation's business. Americans in the first three months of 1957 earned and spent more money than in any comparable period in history. Employment was high and there was increasing consumer demand. Steel production was down two percent from the last quarter of 1956, but over-all industrial production is about the same. Personal income is up 6 percent over a year ago.

Secretary of Welfare Folsom said today that it is wrong to regard President Eisenhower's budget as "an economic catastrophe". Folsom declared himself as concerned as anybody about high taxes. But it is only natural, he said, that the growth of the country should be reflected in government spending. Folsom defended the Administraionn school program. He said there is nothing to the argument that school aid would mean control of education from Washington.

President Eisenhower has asked Secretary of Labor Mitchell to confer with him at the vacation White House in Augusta on Thursday. News Secretary Hagerty says they will discuss possible legislation for preventing misuse of union funds..in the light of disclosures by the Senate rackets committee. Today, Mr. Eisenhower conferred with Harold Stassen, his special adviser on disarmament. Stassen has been attending the five - power disarmament talks in London and flew back to make a first - hand report. He saw the President this morning for about an hour and a half. Hagerty issued a statement afterward saying Mr. Eisenhower had received a review of the London talks and had "encouraged" the American delegation...headed by Mr. Stassen.."to follow through thoroughly" when negotiations resume tomorrow. Hagerty said the President reaffirmed the United States policy, as stated yesterday by Secretary Dulles in his New York speech -- that we consider arms reduction . . . . indispensable.

The United States will report to the United Nations Security Council this week on its negotiations with Egypt over operation of the Suez Canal. Mr. Dulles told his news conference the report may be submitted as early as tomorrow or Thursday. But the United States, he said, is not requesting United Nations action at this time. He declined to say what steps the United States will take if Egypt rejects..outright..the western demands that the canal be "insulated from the politics on any country." Dulles said the next move is for Egypt to publish its final plan for operating the canal...and he indicated that the announcement may come soon. (In Cairo today, secret talks between United States Ambassador Hare and the Egyptian foreign minister were resumed.)

Mr. Dulles indicated an easing of the State Department ban on sending American newsmen to Red China. He said the United States would favor letting "a strictly limited number" of correspondents visit China, if the policy against travel there by other Americans could still be maintained. So far, he said, no formula for doing this has been found. Mr. Dulles emphasized that such a trip as he envisaged would be an experiment...a "one shot affair" and he made plain that Chinese Communist reporters would not be admitted to the United States.

Dulles voiced American support for King Hussein of Jordan. The king, he said, "is striving to maintain the independence of his country in the face of very great difficulties. It is our desire to assist, to the extent that he thinks we can be helpful."

Egypt is continuing to wage its "war of nerves" against Jordan. The Cairo radio today announced the fall of the Jordanian government, headed by Premier Khalidi. Three hours later, Khalidi officially denied the story. But there is not question his government is under pressure to resign. Khalidi is reported to have met repeatedly with his cabinet during the day..and the leaders of all of Jordan's political parties are said to have called upon him to quit. Pro-Egyptian elements are reported to have called a general strike.

Tonight, the Moscow Radio broadcast the text of a letter that Soviet Premier Bulganin sent British Prime Minister Macmillan three days ago. Bulganin expressed hope for agreement on all issues in the Middle East, "given good will on the part of the governments of all states concerned." He said, Although one may differ it is impermissible that disputed issues should be settled by armed force..that reckless actions by some states, still brandishing arms, should imperil the peace of the area." There should be, Bulganin said, "thorough talks and sober consideration of the fair interests of all parties." On the subject of disarmament, he again proposed the immediate banning of atomic weapons tests for a definite period. He said this should be separated from the general problem of disarmament and settled separately. Bulganin also declared Russia's readiness to resume consideration of the so-called "Eden Plan", under which a demilitarized zone would be created across Europe, stretching on both sides of the Iron Curtain.

The disarmament talks in London have made a little tentative progress. Mr. Zorin, the Russian representative, went back to Moscow for new instructions. Mr. Harold Stassen, our representative, came back to talk with Mr. Dulles and President Eisenhower - his report to the State Department was sufficiently interesting for him to make a visit to the play - and- work White House in Augusta. Now Mr. Stassen returns to London. Mr. Dulles said today he does not go with any new instructions - has been told by the President to "follow through thoroughly" when the talks are resumed.

Mr. Dulles was encouraged because the Soviet spokesman had not used the talks for propaganda attacks against the West. Specifically, the Russians have shown some willingness to divide disarmament into separate headings, and discuss them separately. In the past the Russians have offered a sort of package deal on th take -it - or - leave - it basis. For example, we were to give up nuclear weapons altogether before the Soviet Union would agree to an effective inspection system.

The Russians haven't yet said outright that they are prepared to work on a step-by-step basis, but they did agree to the agenda for the London talks, which listed the subjects separately. That agenda had seven headings. So far exploratory talks have been held on three of them.No.. progress was made on the matter of giving up nuclear tests. Some progress was made on the reduction of conventional arms.It now appears likely that there will be a ten percent cut in conventional arms in the first year of the agreement - if there is an agreement. But this won't mean very much. Nuclear weapons are already producing an automatic reduction in conventional arms. We cut our manpower a couple of years ago; the Soviets announced a manpower cut last year; and the British have announced that they are going far below that would be allowed them under the present formula.

But hope is held that if the Russians will agree to a reduction in one category, it may be possible to get them to agree in others.

The real test of disarmament is in nuclear weapons, and the effectiveness of international controls. When the London meeting recessed, the United States had put forward a proposal that no fissionable material should be used for weapons after a deadline in 1958. The Russians haven't answered this one. They may do so when Zorin comes back to London from Moscow.

Our offer was first made by Ambassador Lodge last January. He proposed a freeze of nuclear stockpiles, and international control of all fissionalbe materials, to assure their being used exclusively for peaceful purposes. Under this program the nations could bo on making nuclear weapons this year and part of next. It wouldn't end the race to get a "bigger bang for a buck." But it would stop the race to pile up fissionable materials for nuclear weapons. If international inspection showed that the agreement was in fact being kept, then the next step would be to reduce the stockpiles and use them for peaceful purposes. That's part of the American proposal.

The United States has also shown flexibility in London. The Open Skies inspection proposal first made by President Eisenhower had been modified. We are now ready to do it piecemeal, start with inspection over a limited territory on a trial basis; and the Russians have accepted it in these terms.

American policy regarding further talks on disarmament in London was carefully stated by Mr. Dulles yesterday. He said that it was not essential that controls should encompass everything at once - that progress must come by steps carefully measured and carefully taken. In Moscow Khrushchev has also said that the West way to reach disarmament is by taking one step at a time.

So it would seem that limited progress towards disarmament is theoretically possible. The two major powers have demonstrated a little more flexibility than they have in the past. But the possibility of any real disarmament must remain purely theoretical so long as there is no mutual confidence, no adequate foolproof system of inspection, and no willingness to live in the same kind of world. Maybe a little bit of disarmament is a good thing. In any event it looks as though that's all that even the optimists can hope for.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: In discussing the problem of nuclear disarmament, I am reminded of these words by E.B. White. "do not be confused by the noise of the atom bomb", he said. "The bomb is the pea-shooter come home to roost. But when you dream, dream of essential matters -- of mass - energy relationships, of relationships of man to man. The scientists have outdreamed you, so dream well."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edw. R. Murrow Wed., Apr. 24, 1957

This is the news:

Reports from Jordan say that Premier Khalidi and his cabinet have resigned. / The fall of the Khalidi government has not been announced officially by King Hussein... but at least two members of the cabinet say the resignation has taken place. / The government fell after another day of demonstrations. / In Amman, a general strike... called by politicians friendly to Egypt and Syria... brought business to a standstill, while mobs shouting "Down with the Eisenhower Doctrine" and "Down with Khalidi" roamed the streets. Hussein met reporters this afternoon and blamed the trouble on "international communism and its followers." "This campaign," he said, "was forced on us, and we are going to fight for what we believe to be our honor / and our responsibilities." Hussein thought he could handle the situation without outside help. The army, he said, was on his side.

→

In Syria, the Damascus radio says Jordan has sealed its border. An Israeli broadcast says Iraq has warned Syria and Egypt that it will not stand by and see Jordan dismembered. The king of Iraq is a cousin of King Hussein.

In this country, Secretary of State Dulles and President Eisenhower conferred on the Jordan crisis by telephone. The vacation White House in Augusta issued a statement that the United States regards as "vital to the national interest and world peace the preservation of the independence and integrity of the nations of the Middle East."

It was also announced... in Washington... that Mr. Dulles will fly to Europe next week to attend the NATO meeting scheduled to be held in Bonn.

~~This is the news:~~

Egypt today published its final terms for operation of the Suez Canal. The canal will be administered by the Egyptian Canal Authority. All transit fees are to be paid to the authority in advance... with 5 percent of the receipts going to the Egyptian government and 25 percent to a special fund for maintenance and development of the waterway. The remaining 70 percent of gross receipts presumably would be earmarked for current operations. Egypt promises not to raise canal tolls by more than 1 percent in one year without the consent of user nations. It also promises "to maintain free and uninterrupted navigation for all nations within the limits of the 1888 Convention." This would indicate the continued boycott of Israeli ships... since Egypt ~~hmm~~ argues it is at war with Israel and that the convention guarantee of freedom of passage therefore does not apply. Egypt says complaints as to administration of the canal shall be submitted first to the canal authority... and then, if no settlement is reached, to a three-man arbitration committee. Differences over interpretation... or application... of the 1888 Convention are to be submitted to the International Court of Justice at the Hague. It appears, under these conditions, that Israel would have to complain of discrimination and submit the issue to arbitration with the possibility that its case might eventually go to the International Court.

→

Cairo Radio says Egypt's terms have been forwarded to United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold in the form of a memorandum. Egypt took the action as the United States requested a meeting of the Security Council tomorrow afternoon "or as soon thereafter as may be convenient" to resume discussion of the Suez question. A meeting was then scheduled for Friday. Last October, the Security Council approved six basic principles for settlement of the canal dispute. One of these was that operation of the canal should be "insulated from the politics of any country." There is nothing in the Egyptian memorandum to suggest that this is about to be done.

~~The State Department says it had no advance word from Egypt on the~~ conditions for running the canal announced today in Cairo. Secretary of State Dulles told reporters yesterday that he believed the announcement would come soon. American Ambassador Hare has been negotiating with the Egyptian government for some weeks on behalf of the canal users. Mr. Dulles said the United States had decided to report to the Security Council on the progress made in these talks. Today, in requesting a council meeting, Henry Cabot Lodge said, "The United States believes that the council should now meet to take note of the situation." Western sources are quoted as saying... off the record... that although the Egyptian plan falls short of what was wanted, it will be accepted on a trial basis as "the best we can get at this time."

-7

An American ship passed through the Suez Canal today for the first time since November. The President Jackson paid a 10-thousand-dollar toll to the Egyptian Canal Authority under protest... as recommended by the Department of State.

Today... in Israel... the first oil reached Beersheba after flowing 144 miles through the new pipeline connecting that city with the port of Eilat. The oil was delivered at Eilat 18 days ago by the American tanker Kern Hills, after navigating the Straits of Tiran.

Russia accused the United States tonight of conducting a "hostile campaign" against the Soviet Embassy in Washington. The Russian memorandum said "slanderous allegations" are being made against the Soviet ambassador---George Zaroubin---but it gave no particulars.

Edward R. Murrow: April 24, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

On October 6, 1949, the Communist Chinese government banned American newsmen from the country. The State Department at once protested. "The effect of this order" it said, "is to blot out completely the objective reporting of developments in the communist-occupied territory of China. It is evident" it said, "that this order is a crude effort on the part of the Chinese Communists to force recognition of their newly established regime."

This was the State Department's first thinking on the subject of getting the news out of Communist China. It upheld the right of objective reporting and rejected limiting this right in the interest of political policy. But this thinking has gone through bewildering changes since then. So has the State Department's own policy of allowing the United States newsmen to work from mainland China.

The first change came when the Peiping regime lifted the ban on American newsmen. The State Department already had changed its bearings. It did not welcome the reversal of the Chinese decision. It condemned it for the identical reason it gave for condemning the decision in the first place. It said the intention of lifting the ban was to force recognition.

When the Chinese communists later became actively interested in getting American journalists to visit the country, the State Department enforced a ban of its own. One reason it gave was the existence of a rule on all travel into countries whose governments have not been recognized. Where we had no diplomatic mission, Americans are without the protection of official American representatives, and their entry was forbidden. But this reason assumes that American newsmen want, or should want, the protection accorded to citizens generally. They vigorously deny it. Their vocation is to get the news. They have been brought up to believe that the public is entitled to know, whatever the cost to the newsmen personally.

The State Department got around this argument with another reason for keeping our newsmen out of China. It said that the Red regime was holding Americans in prison, and so long as this was true, our newsmen could not enter. The inference was that if the prisoners were freed the newsmen could get in. By this time the State Department had completely reversed the stand of 1949. It was doing precisely what it had condemned the Chinese communists for doing. It was forbidding the right to know for a political purpose.

But the Department was to reverse itself again in an even more startling way. Mr. Dulles announced that the Chinese communists were trying to blackmail the United States by offering to release prisoners if the newsmen were allowed to enter. He was not, he said, going to yield to blackmail or barter for human lives. In other words, the newsmen who had not been allowed to go to China so long as the prisoners were held, couldn't go, even if by so doing, the prisoners obtained their freedom.

Now another change is reported in the thinking and policy in the State Department. Mr. Dulles told his news conference yesterday he would be glad to have American newsmen working in Red China if some way could be found of opening the door to them without letting a lot of non-journalists get through. But the number of journalists was to be limited, he said, their going was to be a one-shot experiment, and the news organizations had better pool the news they received. Mr. Dulles complained that there is no clear-cut line between news-gathering and other activities. He spoke of the photographers, and the students of such subjects as culture and medicine. If someone would draw the line clearly, he promised that the State Department would be glad to consider it.

Today this proposal was rejected by President William Dwight of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. He said bluntly: "There is no such thing as limiting the right to know". Other comment among publishers was that the proposed pool might run into legal difficulties, since it might violate the anti-monopoly laws.

The problem of dividing men legitimately entitled to cover the news from those simply wanting the ride, or having other interests, is not new, and has been solved over and over again. American armies at war have no trouble in accrediting newsmen and keeping other civilians out. President Eisenhower knows all about that as a former field general and commander-in-chief.

But Mr. Dulles's qualms about too many people getting into Red China should not disguise the fact that he is coming around to the State Department's thinking of 1949. He upholds again the right to objective reporting and does not propose his limits for reasons of political policy. If that is to be the fixed policy for a while, the little problem of weeding out the non-newsmen should offer no difficulties.

On one aspect of the question of sending reporters to Red China there is no argument... and that is the importance of knowing what is going on. As Henry Townley Heald once said, "The possession of factual information is the beginning of understanding. Understanding is the prerequisite of intelligent action. And intelligent action is what makes democracy work."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Reports from Jordan say that Premier Khalidi and his cabinet have resigned. The fall of the Khalidi government has not been announced officially by King Hussein. But at least two members of the cabinet say the resignation has taken place. The government fell after another day of demonstrations. In Amman, a general strike..called by politicians friendly to Egypt and Syria... brought business to a standstill, while mobs shouting "Down with the Eisenhower Doctrine" and "Down with Khalidi" roamed the streets. Hussein met reporters this afternoon and blamed the trouble on "international communism and its followers." This campaign", he said, "was forced on us, and we are going to fight for what we believe to be our honor and our responsibilities." Hussein thought he could handle the situation without outside help. The army, he said, was on his side.

In Syria, the Damascus radio says Jordan has sealed its border. An Israeli broadcast says Iraq has warned Syria and Egypt that it will not stand by and see Jordan dismembered. The king of Iraq is a cousin of King Hussein.

In this country, Secretary of State Dulles and President Eisenhower conferred on the Jordan crisis by telephone. The vacation White House in Augusta issued a statement that the United States regards as "vital to the national interest and world peace the preservation of independence and integrity of the nations of the Middle East. "

It was also announced...in Washington..that Mr. Dulles will fly to Europe next week to attend the NATO meeting, scheduled to be held in Bonn.

Egypt today published its final terms for operation of the Suez Canal. The canal will be administered by the Egyptian Canal Authority. All transit fees are to be paid to the authority in advance...with 5 percent of the receipts going to the Egyptian government and 25 percent to a special fund for maintenance and development of the waterway. The remaining 70 percent of gross receipts presumably would be earmarked for current operations. Egypt promises not to raise canal tolls by more than 1 percent in one year, without the consent of user nations. It also promises "to maintain free and uninterrupted navigation for all nations within the limits of the 1888 Convention." This would indicate the continued boycott of Israeli ships..since Egypt argues it is at war with Israel and that the convention guarantee of freedom of passage therefore does not apply. Egypt says complaints as to the administration of the canal shall be submitted first to the canal authority ..and then..if no settlement is reached, to a three-man arbitration committee. Differences over interpretation...or application..of the 1888 Convention are to be submitted to the International Court of Justice at the Hague. It appears, under these conditions, that Israel would have to complain of discrimination and submit the issue to arbitration with the possibility that its case might eventually go to the International Court.

Cairo Radio says Egypt's terms have been forwarded to United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold in the form of a memorandum. Egypt took the action as the United States requested a meeting of the Security Council tomorrow afternoon "or as soon thereafter as may be convenient" to resume discussion of the Suez question. A meeting was then scheduled for Friday. Last October, the Security Council approved six basic principles for settlement of the canal dispute. One of these was that operation of the canal should be "insulated from the politics of any country." There is nothing in the Egyptian memorandum to suggest that this is about to be done. Mr. Dulles said the United States had decided to report to the Security Council on the progress made in these talks. Today, in requesting a council meeting, Henry Cabot Lodge said, "The United States believes that the council should now meet to take note of the situation." Western sources are quoted as saying...off the record..that although the Egyptian plan falls short of what was wanted, it will be accepted on a trial basis as "the best we can get at this time."

An American ship passed through the Suez Canal today for the first time since November. The President Jackson paid a 10-thousand-dollar toll to the Egyptian Canal Authority under protest..as recommended by the Department of State.

Today..in Israel..the first oil reached Beersheba after flowing 144 miles through the new pipeline connecting that city with the port of Eilat. The oil was delivered at Eilat 18 days ago by the American tanker Kern Hills, after navigating the Straits of Tiran.

Russia accused the United States tonight of conducting a "hostile campaign " against the Soviet Embassy in Washington. The Russian memorandum said "slanderous allegations" are being made against the Soviet ambassador--Goerge Zaroubin -- but it gave no particulars.

On October 6, 1949, the Communist Chinese government banned American newsmen from the country. The State Department at once protested. "The effect of this order" it said, "is to blot out completely the objective reporting of developments in the communist - occupied territory of China. It is evident" ht said, "that this order is a crude effort on the part of the Chinese Communists to force recognition of their newly established regime."

This was the State Department's first thinking on the subject of getiing the news out of Communist China. It upheld the right of objective reporting and rejected limiting this right in the interest of political policy. But this thinking has gone through bewildering changes since then. So has the State Department's own policy of allowing the United States newsmen to work from mainland China.

The first change came when the Peiping regime lifted the ban on American newsmen. The State Department already had changed its bearings. It did not welcome the reversal of the Chinese decision. It condemned it and for the identical reason it gave for condemning the decision in the first place. It said the intention of lifting the ban was to force recogntiion.

When the Chinese Communists later became actively interested in getting American journalists to visit the country, the State Department enforced a ban of its own. One reason it gave was the existence of a rule on all travel into countries whose governments have not been recognized. Where we had no diplomatic mission, Americans are without the protection of official American representatives, and their entry was forbidden. But this reason assumes that American newsmen want, or should want, the protection accorded to citizens generally. They vigorously deny it. Their occupationis to get the news. They have been brought up to believe that the public is entitled to know, whetever the cost to the newsmen personally.

The State Department got around this argument with another reason for keeping our newsmen out of China. It said that the Red regime was holding Americans in prison, and so long as this is true, our newsmen could not enter. The inference was that if the prisoners were freed the newsmen could get in. By this time the State Department had completely reversed the stand of 1949. It was doing precisely what it had condemned the Chinese Communists for going. It was forbidding the right to know, for a political purpose.

But the Department was to reverse itself again in an even more startling way. Mr. Dulles announced that the Chinese Communists were trying to blackmail the United States by offering to release prisoners if the newsmen were allowed to enter. He was not, he said, going to yield to blackmail or barter for human lives. In other words, the newsmen who had not been allowed to go to China so long as the prisoners were held, couldn't go, even if by so doing, the prisoners obtained their freedom.

Now another change is reported in the thinking and policy in the state department. Mr. Dulles told his news conference yesterday he would be glad to have American newsmen working in Red China if some way could be found of opening the door to them without letting a lot of non-journalists get through. But the number of journalists was to be limited, he said, their going was to be a one-shot experiment,and the news organizations had better pool the news they received. Mr. Dulles complained that there is no clear-cut line between news-gathering and other activities. He spoke of the photographers, and the students of such subjects as culture and medicine. If someone would draw the line clearly, he promised that the State Department would be glad to consider it.

Today this proposal was rejected by President William Dwight of the American Newspsper Publishers' Association. He said bluntly: "There is no such thing as limiting the right to know." Other comment among publishers was that the proposed pool might run into legal difficulties, since it might violate anti-monopoly laws.

The problem of dividing men legitimately entitled to cover the news from those simply wanting the ride, or having other interests, is not new, and has been solved over and over again. American armies at war have no trouble in accrediting newsmen and keeping other civilians out. President Eisenhower knows all about that as a former field general and commander - in - chief.

But Mr. Dulles's qualms about too many people getting into Red China should not disguise the fact that he is coming around to the State Depatment's thinking of 1949. He upholds again the right to objective reporting and does not propose his limits for reasons of political policy. If that is to be the fixed policy for a while, the little problem of weeding out the non-newsmen should offer no difficulties.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: On one aspect of the question of sending reporters to Red China there is no argument,.thd that is the importance of knowing what is going on. As Henry Townley Heald once said, "The possession of factual information is the beginning of understanding. Understanding is the prerequisite of intelligent action. And intelligent action is what makes democracy work."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Apr. 25, 1957

This is the news:

Late reports say Jordan is calm. The whole country is under martial law. The streets of the capital city of Amman are deserted, except for troops. /A day-and-night curfew is in force... so during the day there were no demonstrations. /And the new government headed by elder statesman Ibrahim Hashem has been installed. /King Hussein chose Hashem to be prime minister last night, when the old cabinet of Premier Khalidi resigned. Former Premier Nabulsi... who was foreign minister under Khalidi... was dropped. Nabulsi was pro-Egyptian. And the Israel radio says he has been placed under arrest. There is no confirmation of this from Amman. In a speech today, Hussein accused Nabulsi of giving the Communists a free hand. /The Communists in Jordan, he said, are brothers of the Communists in Israel. And he called Israel the center of Communism in the Middle East. Hussein accused all parties in Jordan of conspiring against him, and he ordered them dissolved.

→

All Americans, as a precautionary move, have been evacuated from the part of Jerusalem controled by Jordan.

In Washington, the State Department said the "independence and integrity" of Jordan are threatened by international communism. The department spokesman, Lincoln White, noted President Eisenhower's statement yesterday that the United States regards the independence of Jordan as "vital to the national interest, and world peace." White said the President's "reminder is appropriate, because of the threat to the independence and integrity of Jordan by international communism, as King Hussein has stated." The Eisenhower Doctrine says the United States is prepared to help any Middle East country resist aggression by international communism, if help is requested. Jordan, so far, has made no such request. White read a prepared statement on the movement of the United States 6th Fleet to the Eastern Mediterranean. (For the past 10 days, units of the fleet... including the supercarrier Forrestal... have been visiting French and Italian ports. This morning, they were suddenly ordered into East Mediterranean waters... closer to Jordan). White said the Eastern Mediterranean is the "normal place" for the fleet to be stationed. When a reporter wanted to know why 150 sailors were left stranded in Paris... if it was so normal... the department spokesman had no answer.

Members of Congress are showing concern over the events in Jordan. Democratic Senator Mansfield said the situation presents "all the ingredients of a major war." He said responsibility rests with the President to make the necessary decisions. ~~Mansfield, who is a member of the Senate Foreign~~ Relations Committee, and Republican SENATE ~~Leader Knowland conferred for 40 minutes this afternoon with Secretary of State Dulles~~. The situation is serious, Senator Knowland said, but the government contemplates no emergency action at this time.

In London today, the British Foreign Office joined the United States in declaring the independence of Jordan essential to peace in the Middle East.

The Moscow radio tonight accused the United States of "blatant interference" in the internal affairs of Jordan. Another Moscow broadcast... in Arabic... attacked King Hussein's statement, that international communism is trying to destroy Jordan. Hussein, it said, is repeating false propaganda used by the United States.

President Kuwatly of Syria flew to Cairo today to discuss the Jordan situation with President Nasser. Their first meeting lasted three hours. And it was joined by the chiefs of the Egyptian and Syrian armed forces.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold said here in New York today that he has accepted Egypt's declaration on operation of the Suez Canal... and that he has registered it as "an international engagement." Hammarskjold said it can be superceded by a new declaration, or agreement, but that... until then... Egypt is bound to abide by its terms. He made it plain that Egypt can revoke the present declaration at any time.

~~Hammarskjold said the United Nations committee studying into the effects of nuclear radiation feels "a very strong sense of urgency" in its task. He sharply criticized uninformed statements on the subject.~~

President Eisenhower called today for a study... to determine whether oil imports are threatening the national security. He said there is "reason for belief" that foreign crude oil is entering the country in sufficient volume to threaten the healthy condition of the domestic industry. Mr. Eisenhower issued the statement at the vacation White House in Augusta, where he also conferred today with Secretary of Labor Mitchell on the possible need for new labor legislation. Mr. Eisenhower said racketeering in the labor movement is "an abomination which must be eliminated."

Five-power disarmament talks resumed in London today after a six-day Easter recess. The United States proposed that research on intercontinental ballistic missiles be stopped in the first stage of any disarmament agreement. The proposal would also apply to development of nuclear weapons employed in outer space. Russia suggested that research on all missiles capable of mounting atomic warheads be included in such a ban.

Britain today announced progress in its guided missile program. The Air Ministry said... in a 10-page memorandum... that acceptance trials of Britain's first air-to-air guided missile have been "encouraging", and that a more advanced missile... based on the infra-red homing principle... will soon undergo acceptance tests. Ballistic missiles, it said, will play an increasingly important role. ~~And it disclosed that the first R.A.F. missile station is now being built. The memorandum said the missiles will at first carry a conventional, high-explosive punch.~~ "~~But~~ The natural development," it said, "is to fit missiles with atomic warheads." And it added, "We intend to do this." ~~The memorandum said Britain's stockpile of nuclear weapons is being increased.~~

Edward R. Murrow: April 25, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The small and artificial kingdom of Jordan has suddenly become a major concern of the United States. A natural question is what does Jordan mean to this country. Is it a democracy bravely struggling for survival? Do its people overwhelmingly support King Hussein? Is it an isolated pro-Western country promoting Western value in the midst of Arab extremism? The answer to all these questions is No. Jordan is not democratic. Its king is kept in power by the Arab Legion, not by popular support. It is not a pro-Western country, but a member of a federation with Egypt, Syria and Saudi-Arabia, obliged to side with these allies in event of war. ~~Syrian and Saudi troops are stationed in Jordan today in fulfilment of XXX~~ federation pledges that became ~~operative when Egypt was attacked. And~~ King Hussein boasted today that he ~~wanted to fight~~ on Nasser's side ~~when that~~ attack was made and was ~~prevented by his Premier Nabulsi, whom he ultimately ousted.~~ ~~Furthermore he said that Nabulsi had invited Mr. Richards~~ to come to Jordan to discuss the Eisenhower doctrine, ~~which he, the King,~~ would not do before Egypt and ~~Syria did it.~~ And while the King said his troubles were due to international communism he went on to identify Tel Aviv as the center of communism.

Moreover Jordan can only survive if somebody else foots the bill. The British who created the state and built up its Arab Legion, subsidized it at a cost of about thirty million dollars a year. Egypt, Syria and Saudi Arabia now are pledged to provide the subsidy. King Hussein boasted today that he was the one who terminated the British treaty. All told, nothing could be more plain than that Jordan can mean little to the United States on its own account.

All the same it means something on another account. And that is why President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles, after Jordan's day of rioting and cabinet resignations, sponsored a solemn declaration that we regard the independence and integrity of Jordan as vital. That is why, without quite saying so, we are letting the world believe that we think that the Eisenhower doctrine may be applicable or indeed enforceable. That may be why King Hussein said that international communism was at the bottom of his troubles. For our aid can only be given against an aggressor state under communist domination. Now our Sixth Fleet has been ordered back to the Eastern Mediterranean in a flurry of headlines and news bulletins. All these are the tensings of muscles in a power struggle. They may not lead to the use of force. Indeed the hope is that showing the muscles may make resort to force unnecessary.

The reason Jordan is important is not Jordan itself, but what would happen if the government of King Hussein should vanish overnight, as it might easily do. The agents and adherents of Egypt and Syria might set up a regime of their own, which would immediately provoke both Iraq and Israel. Then a war for the partition of Jordan might grow till it shook the world.

Hussein has held on so far because he has two props, close by props that is, closer than the Eisenhower doctrine and the Sixth Fleet. One is King Feisal of Iraq, the other is King Saud of Saudi Arabia. King Feisal has troops on Jordan's border waiting for an invitation to oust the Syrian troops now in the country. That has helped keep both Syria and Egypt from being too impulsive.

But King Saud seems to be the biggest local factor in the complicated Arab picture right now. If Nasser has not unloosed the Jordan mobs to overthrow Hussein it is due more to Saud than Feisal. Saud has his troops in Jordan in the Aqaba region and they are under orders to support Hussein if needed. Saud has reasons of his own for not wanting a showdown in Jordan. For one thing he is a king himself and doesn't like the precedent of a king being dethroned by an army upstart like Nasser. Another reason is that Jordan is a land of transit for part of his oil, and he doesn't want the pipeline to fall into communist hands. But his biggest reason may be that he can be most powerful by staying on the fence. If he falls in behind Nasser, then Nasser eclipses him in the Arab world. But if he sides openly with the West, Saudi Arabia will be no better off than Iran or Iraq.

It throws light on the plot against Hussein to learn that he is three weeks in arrears in paying the Arab Legion. This is because Egypt and Syria have not contributed their share of the subsidy, which can hardly be an oversight. The news today is that King Saud has just come through with a quarter of a million dollars. This may keep the Arab Legion faithful to Hussein for a while.

Actually a quarter of a million spent in this way may do more to keep Hussein on the throne at this juncture than the movements of the Sixth Fleet or State Department pronouncements about international communism in Jordan. But this is the kind of crisis where most of the facts and some of the motives are alike confusing. ~~The simplest truth about it is that it may quite easily lead to war. That being so, any actions - Hussein's, Saud's or our own - however contradictory they are, become understandable if they go to avert the war.~~

Word for Today

The situation in Jordan once more reminds us of the difficult time in which we live. There seems to be one crisis after another. ~~[illegible]~~ ~~time~~ years ago, Trotsky said, "The Twentieth Century is the most disturbed century in the history of humanity. Any contemporary of ours who wants peace and security above all else has chosen a bad time to be born."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 25, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Late reports say Jordan is calm. The whole country is under martial law. The streets of the capital city of Amman are deserted, except for troops. A day - and - night curfew is in force...so during the day there were no demonstrations. And the new government headed by elder statesman Ibrahim Hashem has been installed. King Hussein chose Hashen to be prime minister last night, when the old cabinet of Premier Khalidi resigned. Former Premier Nabulsi ..who was foreign minister under Khalidi was dropped. Nabulsi was pro-Egyptian. And the Israel radio says he has been placed under arrest. There is no confirmation of this from Amman. In a speech today, Hussein accused Nabulsi of giving the Communists a free hand. The Communists in Jordan, he said, are brothers of the Communists in Israel. And he called Israel the center of Communism in the Middle East. Hussein accused all parties in Jordan of conspiring against him, and he ordered them dissolved.

All Americans as a precautionary move have been evacuated from the part of Jerusalmm controled by Jordan.

In Washington, the State Department said the "independence and integrity of Jordan are threatened by international communism. The department spokesman, Lincoln White, noted President Eisenhower's statement yesterday that the United States regards the independence of Jordan as "vital to the national interest nnd world peace." White said the President's "reminder is appropriate because of the threat to the independence and integrity of Jordan by international communism, as King Hussien has stated." The Eisenhower Doctrine says the United States is prepared to help any Middle East country resist aggression by international commusism, if help is requested. Jordan so far, has made no such request. White read a prepared statement on the movement of the United States 6th Fleet to the Eastern Mediterranean. (For the past 10 days, units of the fleet ...including the supercarrier Forrestal.. have been visiting French and Italian ports. This morning, they were suddenly ordered into East Mediterranean waters..closer to Jordan.) White said the Eastern Mediterranean is the "normal place" for the fleet to be stationed. When a reporter wanted to know why 150 sailors were left stranded in Paris..if it was so normal..the department spokesman had no answer.

Members of Congress are showing concern over the events in Jordan. Democratic Senator Mansfield said the situation presents "all the ingredients of a major war." He said responsibility rests with the President to make the necessary decisoons. The situation is serious, Senator Knowland said, but the government contemplates no emergency action at this time.

In London today, the British Foreign Office joined the United States in declaring the independence of Jordan essential to peace in the Middle East.

The Moscow radio tonight accused the United States of "blatant interference" in the internal affairs of Jordan. Another Moscow broadcast...in Arabic.. attacked King Hussein's statement that international communism is trying to destroy Jordan. Hussein, it said, is repeating false propaganda used by the United States.

President Kuwatly of Syria flew to Cairo today to discuss the Jordan situation with President Nasser. Their first meeting lasted three hours. And it was joined by the chiefs of the Egyptian and Syrian armed forces.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold said here in New York today that he has accepted Egypt's declaration on operation of the Suez Canal..and that he has registered it as "an international engagement." Hammarskjold said it can be superceded by a new declaration, or agreement, but that...until then,.Egypt is bound to abide by its terms. He made it plain that Egypt can revoke the present declaration at any time.

President Eisenhower called today for a study ...to determine whether oil imports are threatening the national security. He said there is "reason for belief" that foreign crude oil is entering the country in sufficient Volume to threaten the healthy condition of the domestic industry. Mr. Eisenhower issued the statement at the vacation White House in Augusta, where he also conferred today with Secretary of Labor Mitchell on the possible need for new labor legislation. Mr. Eisenhower said racketeering in the labor movement is "an abomination which must be eliminated."

Five-power disarmament talks resumed in London today after a six-day Easter recess. The United States proposed that research on intercontinental ballistic missiles be stopped in the first stage of any disarmament agreement. The proposal would also apply to development of nuclear weapons employed in outer space. Russia suggested that research on all missiles capable of mounting atomic warheads be included in such a ban.

Britain today announced progress in its guided missile program. The Air ministry said..in a 10-page memorandum..that acceptance trials of Britain's first air-to-air guided missile have been "encouraging" and that a more advanced missile..based on the infra-red homing principle..will soon undergo acceptance tests. Ballistic missiles, it said, will play an increasingly important role. The natural development", it said, "is to fit missiles with atomic warheads." And it added, "We intend to do this."

The small and artificial kingdom of Jordan has suddenly become a major concern of the United States. An natural question is what does Jordan mean to this country. Is it a democracy bravely struggling for survival? Do its people overwhelmingly support King Hussein? Is it an isolated pro-Western country promoting Western value in the midst of Arab extremism? The answer to all these questoons is No. Jordan is not democratic. Its king is kept in power by the Arab Legion, not by popular support. It is not a pro-Western country, but a member of a federation with Egypt, Syria and Saudi-Arabia, obliged to side with these allies in event of war. And while the King said his troubles were due to international communism he went on to identify Tel Aviv as the center of communism.

Moreover Jordan can only survive if somebody else foots the bill. The British who created the state and built up its Arab Legion, subsidized it at a cost of about thirty million dollars a year. Egypt, Syria and Saudi Arabia now are pledged to provide the subsidy. King Hussein boasted today that he was the one who terminated the British treaty. All told, nothing could be more plain than that Jordan can mean little to the United States on its own account.

All the same it means something on another account. And that is why President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles, after Jordan's day of rioting and cabinet resignations, sponsored a solemn declaration that we regard the independence and integrity of Jordan as vital. That is why, without quite saying so, we are letting the world believe that we think that the Eisenhower doctrine may be applicable or indeed enforceable. That may be why King Hussein said that international communsim is, at the bottom of his troubles. For our aid can only be given against an aggressor state under communist domination Now our Sixth Fleet has been ordered back to the Eastern Mediterranean in a flurry of headlines and news bulletins. All these are the tensings of muscles in a power struggle. They may not lead to the use of force. Indeed the hope is that showing the muscles may make resort to force unnecessary.

The reason Jordan is important is not Jordan itself, but what would happen if the government of King Hussein should vanish overnight, as it might easily do. The agents and adherents of Egypt and Syria might set up a regime of their own, which would immediately provoke both Iraq and Israel. Then a war for the partition of Jordan might grow till it shook the world.

Hussein has held on so far because he has two props, close by props that is, closer than the Eisenhower doctrine and the Sixth Fleet. One is King Feisal of Iraq; the other is King Saud of Saudi Arabia. King Feisal has troops on Jordan's border waiting for in invitation to oust the Syrain troops now in the country. That has helped keep both Syria and Egypt from being too impulsive.

But King Saud seems to be the biggest local factor in the complicated Arab picture right now. If Nasser has not unloosed the Jordan mobs to overthrow Hussein it is due more to Saud that Feisal. Saud has his troops in Jordan in the Aqaba region and they are under orders to support Hussein if needed. Saud has reasons of his own for not wanting a showdown in Jordan. For one thing he is a king himself and doesn't like the precedent of a king being dethroned by an army upstart like Nasser. Another reason is that Jordan is a land of transit for part of his oil, and he doesn't want the pipeline to fall into communist hands. But his biggest reason may be that he can be most powerful by staying on the fence. If he falls in behind Nasser, then Nasser eclipses him in the Arab world. But if he sides openly with the West, Saudi Arabia will be no better off than Iran or Iraq.

It throws light on the plot against Hussein to learn that he is three weeks in arrears in paying the Arab legion. This is because Egypt and Syria have not contributed their share of the subsidy, which can hardly be an oversight. The news today is that King Saud has just come through with a quarter of a million dollars. This may keep the Arab Legion faithful to Hussein for a while.

Actually a quarter of a million spent in this way may do more to keep Hussein on the throne at this juncture than the movements of the Sixth Fleet or State Department pronouncements about international communism in Jordan. But this is the kind of crisis where most of the facts and some of the motives are alike confusing.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a monent with wht Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The situation in Jordan once more reminds us of the difficult time in which we live. There seems to be one crisis after another. Years ago, Trotsky said, "The Twentieth Century is the most disturbed century in the history of humanity. Any contemporary of ours who wants peace and security above all else has chosen a bad time to be born."

This is Ed Murrow. Good night and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Apr. 26, 1957

This is the news:

The United Nations Security Council today debated Egypt's terms for operating the Suez Canal. The American delegate, Henry Cabot Lodge, accepted the Egyptian declaration on "a provisional basis." He acknowledged that the declaration "does not fully meet the six requirements laid down by the Security Council last October." He noted... especially... the lack of any provision for "organized cooperation" in the operation and control of the canal. But he asked that the plan be accepted "until it has been tried out in practice." It is "assumed", Lodge said, that there will be "free and non-discriminatory use of the canal at all times by the ships of all nations." The United States is said to have brought this "assumption" to the attention of the Israeli delegation. The proposal to accept Egypt's plan on a trial basis was supported immediately by Colombia and the Philippines. France, on the other hand, denounced the Egyptian declaration as "unilateral"... and said that Egypt, by its terms, had reserved its right to bar Israeli shipping from the waterway. (I should like to discuss this whole question further in a few minutes).

There have been these developments with regard to Jordan. The United States has urged the countries of the Middle East to exercise "caution and prudence" so as to keep the situation from getting out of hand. State Department Spokesman Lincoln White today identified three of the countries... to whom the United States has been appealing for restraint... as Syria, Egypt and Israel. The United States, he said, is making it "abundantly clear" through its diplomatic representatives in those countries that we regard Jordan's independence as vital. He said King Hussein still has made no request for American aid. Today, Hussein tightened his control of the country by appointing a military governor and giving him extraordinary power. Former Premier Nabulsi is again reported under arrest... and again the report is officially denied. Other reports say hundreds of opponents of Hussein have been arrested. Hussein is said to have received a cable from King Saud, of Saudi Arabia, congratulating him on the steps he has taken to maintain security. Martial law is still in force throughout Jordan. ~~But it is expected that if order is maintained,~~ the ~~24-hour curfew in the capital~~ city of Amman may be ~~gradually relaxed.~~ It ~~was suspended for three hours today because of the Moslem Sabbath.~~

President Kuwatly of Syria flew to Saudi Arabia today to confer with King Saud. Kuwatly had a long talk with President Nasser yesterday... and when he went to see Saud, he was accompanied by one of Nasser's top aides.

Today, the Soviet News Agency Tass said the situation in Jordan "and in particular the movement of the United States 6th Fleet to the Eastern Mediterranean creates a serious threat to peace in the Middle East."

Syria charged today that Israeli torpedo boats on the Sea of Galilee opened fire on a Syrian outpost. It also accused Israel of temporarily occupying two villages in the demilitarized zone, near the Sea of Galilee. Israel says Syrian troops fired on an Israeli patrol on its side of the frontier. ~~An Israeli spokesman says the patrol returned the fire and "extricated itself" without casualties.~~

President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles conferred again today by telephone on the Jordan crisis. And from the vacation White House in Augusta Mr. Eisenhower gave a telephone talk to a meeting of Republican Party workers in Providence, Rhode Island. "Our never-ending task," he said, "is to make the Republican Party responsive to modern-day needs."

In a speech tonight, Republican Senator Knowland again called for a three-billion-dollar cut in President Eisenhower's budget. Knowland said continuance of taxes at their present high level threatens to destroy the free enterprise system. And taxes can be reduced, he said, only if federal expenditures are held in check.

Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey commented today on reports that he may soon resign to take a job in private industry. "It is well known," he said in a formal statement, "that I have been in the cabinet much longer than I originally planned. But as long as I am secretary of the treasury, I will have no other interest." Close associates of Humphrey take the statement to mean he plans to leave the government in the "not too distant future."

Here in New York today, Jacob Albam pleaded guilty to charges of spying for Russia. Albam was arrested last February with Jack and Myra Soble in what was described as the most important crackdown on Soviet espionage in this country since the Rosenberg case. The Sobles entered guilty pleas earlier this month and are said to have been cooperating with the government. Like Albam, they admitted conspiring to obtain defense secrets for Russia. They did not plead guilty to the count charging them with conspiring to transmit these secrets to Russia. Conviction on that count could have carried the death penalty. On the lesser count... to which the three have pleaded guilty... the maximum penalty is 10 years in prison and a 10-thousand-dollar fine. Sentencing is now set for May 3rd.

A New York federal jury today convicted Harry Lev, former Chicago hat manufacturer, and four other defendants of conspiring to defraud the government on military contracts. Lev's company once sold caps to the Army.

Radio reports from the Mayflower Second say the ship is making good progress before a freshening wind. It is now nearly 500 miles southwest of England and doing six to seven knots.

In London today, the Admiralty revealed plans for the new British Navy... as anticipated in the recent White Paper. Four of the navy's five battleships, now in use, will be scrapped. Orders were placed for four guided-missile destroyers. And aircraft carriers are to be modernized and re-equipped.

Edward R. Murrow: April 26, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

With the registration of Egypt's statement on the Suez Canal with the United Nations, Colonel Nasser completed one of the most dazzling diplomatic victories of our era. First he survived military attack by Britain, France and Israel. Then he withstood the steady pressure of the United States, which together with Russia had rescued him from military disaster ~~and the patient persuasion of Secretary General Hammarskjold.~~ He steadfastly disregarded the claims of the nations that use the canal. Now he has clinched his victory with a document that has no substance whatever as an international undertaking. It is not an agreement. In it Colonel Nasser does not say: "I agree". He says: "I declare". If he had agreed to something, the other parties to the agreement would have rights. Since he simply declares, they have no rights, he can change his mind whenever he pleases, ~~and if he does it will be nobody's business but his own.~~

Mr. Hammarskjold allowed this unilateral declaration to be registered with the United Nations under Article 102 of the charter. This article says simply that every treaty and every international agreement is to be registered with the secretariat, and until this is done no treaty or agreement can be invoked before any organ of the U.N.

Mr. Hammarskjold told newsmen that the Nasser declaration is an "engagement of international character," and hence entitled to be registered. He explained that it is binding on Egypt until Egypt revokes it, which of course is so. But this truth could be put just as truthfully, if much less happily, by saying that the declaration is not binding at all. For if Egypt revokes it, Egypt cannot be made to live up to its terms.

So Colonel Nasser has finished off the seizure of the canal by spelling out his program for controlling the canal, and like a stage magician, produced the illusion that this is the result of international agreement. The State Department, no doubt more disillusioned than illusioned, has accepted the statement as the best to be had at this time. And Colonel Nasser, watching the stars and stripes on the first American vessel going through the canal on his terms, knows that the Arab world, at any rate, will see that he hasn't budged an inch. This was what he set out to do. Now he has done it.

The art of the document is not simply in its having no status as an agreement. It contains what appear to be concessions resulting from negotiation and compromise. But even these apparent concessions do not ring true. The best one, the offer to arbitrate all disputes, should open the door to arbitrate the right of access to the canal for Israel. But in fact Israel does not have any appeal to arbitration. Appeal is allowed only to the eight original signatories of the Constantinople Convention of 1888. Israel is not one of these, and neither are we.

It is being suggested that the right of Israel to use the canal might be appealed by one of the original signatories. We do not know if Nasser would stand for that. Authoritative statements from Cairo insist that Egypt has no intention of letting Israel use the canal, and will continue to claim belligerent rights, regardless of the Security Council's ruling that these no longer exist. If someone crossed Nasser up and tried to carry the issue of Israeli shipping to arbitration, Egypt still could refuse to accept arbitration. That is the beauty -- for Nasser - of a unilateral declaration.

What appears to be another big concession is the pledge not to raise canal tolls more than one percent in any year. This would look like compliance with the principle laid down by the Security Council that the canal is to be isolated from national policies. But the pledge is not ironclad. The declaration says that the tolls can be raised more than one percent after negotiation. Then it carefully omits saying negotiation with whom. That would seem to make it possible to raise the tolls after negotiation with some but not all the parties concerned.

One sentence was added to the declaration in the last month of strenuous pressure from Washington and the U.N. Secretariat. They sought the recognition of the "Canal Users' Association" as the agency to deal with the canal Authority. But all that Colonel Nasser was ready to say was this: "The Government of Egypt would welcome and encourage co-operation between the Suez Canal Authority and representatives of shipping and trade." This may leave the way open to establish an advisory unit to deal with the canal authority, as proposed by India earlier in the crisis.

But nobody, not even Secretary Dulles, expects the Canal Users' Association, which was his particular brain child, to play any role in the future of the canal. Colonel Nasser has said in no uncertain terms that the only role in the canal is to be played by one country, Egypt, and by one man, Nasser. And that is the fact that has been registered — and accepted — by the United Nations and by the United States.

George Ryan

Word for Today

In the past year, the United States has acquired no little experience in dealing with problems of the Middle East. Ambrose Bierce defined experience as "the wisdom that enables us to recognize as an undesirable old acquaintance the folly we have already embraced." But H.L. Mencken said, "What really teaches man is not experience but observation."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 26, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The United Nations Security Council today debated Egypt's terms for operating the Suez Canal. The American delegate, Henry Cabot Lodge, accepted the Egyptian declaration on "a provisional basis." He acknowledged that the declaration "does not fully meet the six requirements laid down by the Security Council last October." He noted...especially...the lack of any provision for "organized cooperation" in the operation and control of the canal. But he asked that the plan be accepted "until it has been tried out in practice." It is "assumed", Lodge said, that there will be "free and non-discriminatory use of the canal at all times by the ships of all nations." The United States is said to have brought this "assumption" to the attention of the Israeli delegation. The proposal to accept Egypt's plan on a trial basis was supported immediately by Colombia and the Philippines. France, on the other hand, denounced the Egyptian declaration an "unilateral" and said that Egypt, by its terms, has reserved its right to bar Israeli shipping from the waterway. (I should like to discuss this whole question further in a few minutes.)

There have been these developments with regard to Jordan. The United States has urged the countries of the Middle East to exercise "caution and prudence" so as to keep the situation from getting out of hand. State Department Spokesman Lincoln White today identified three of the countries... to whom the United States has been appealing for restraint...as Syria, Egypt and Israel. The United States, he said, is making it "abundantly clear" through its diplomatic representatives in those countries that we regard Jordan's independence as vital. He said King Hussein still has made no request for American aid. Today, Hussein tightened his control of the country by appointing a military governor and giving him extraordinary power. Former Premier Nabulsi is again reported under arrest..and again the report is officially denied. Other reports say hundreds of opponents of Hussein have been arrested. Hussein is said to have received a cable from King Saud of Saudi Arabia, congratulating him on the steps he has taken to maintain security. Martial law is still in force throughout Jordan.

President Kuwatly of Syria flew to Saudi Arabia today to confer with King Saud. Kuwatly had a long talk with President Nasser yesterday,,and when he went to see Saud, he was accompanied by one of Nasser's top aides.

Today, the Soviet News Agency Tass said the situation in Jordan "and in particular the movement of the United States 6th Fleet to the Eastern Mediterranean creates a serious threat to peace in the Middle East."

Syria charged today that Israeli torpedo boats on the Sea of Galilee opened fire on a Syrian outpost. It also accused Israel of temporarily occupying two villages in the demilitarized zone, near the Sea of Galilee. Israel says Syrian troops fired on an Israeli patrol on its side of the frontier.

President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles conferred again today by telephone on the Jordan crisis.

In a speech tonight, Republican Senator Knowland again called for a three - billion dollar cut in President Eisenhower's budget. Knowland said continuance of taxes at their present high level threatens to destroy the free enterprise system. And taxes can be reduced, he said, only if federal expenditures are held in check.

Secretary of the Tressury Humphrey commented today on reports that he may soon resign to take a job in private industry. "It is well known", he said, in a formal statement), "that I have been in the cabinet much longer than I originally planned. But as long as I am secretary of the treasury, I will have no other interest." Close associates of Humphrey take the statement to mean he plans to leave the government in the "not too distant future."

Here in New York today, Jacob Albam pleaded guilty to charges of spying for Russia. Albam was arrested last February with Jack and Myra Soble in what was described as the most important crackdown on Soviet espionage in this country since the Rosenberg case. The Sobles entered guilty pleas earlier this month and are said to have been cooperating with the government.

Radio reports from the Mayflower Second say the ship is making good progress before a freshening wind. It is now nearly 500 miles southeast of England and doing six to seven knots.

In London today, the Admiralty revealed plans for the new British Navy.. as anticipated in the recent White Paper. Four of the navy's five battleships now in use will be scrapped. Orders were placed for four guided-missile destroyers. And aircraft carriers are to be modernized and re-equipped.

With the registration of Egypt's statement on the Suez Canal with the United Nations, Colonel Nasser completed one of the most dazzling diplomatic victories of our era. First he survived military attack by Britain, France and Israel. Then he withstood the steady pressure of the United States, which together with Russia had rescued him from military disaster. He steadfastly disregarded the claims of the nations that use the canal. Now he has clinched his victory with a document that has no substance whatever as an international undertaking. It is not an agreement. In it Colonel Nasser does not say: "I agree". He says:" I declare". If he had agreed to something, the other parties to the agreement would have rights. Since he simply declares, they have no rights, he can chance his mind whenever he pleases.

Mr. Hammarskjold allowed this unilateral declaration to be registered with the United Nations under Article 102 of the charter. This article says simply that every treaty and every international agreement is to be registered with the secretariat, and until this is done, no treaty or agreement can be invoked before any organ of the U.N.

Mr. Hammarskjold told newsmen that the Nasser declaration is an "engagement of international character," and hence entitled to be registered. He explained that it is binding on Egypt until Egypt revokes it, which of course is so. But this truth could be put just as truthfully, if much less happily, by saying that the delcaration is not binding at all. For if Egypt revokes it, Egypt cannot be made to live up to its terms.

So Colonel Nasser has finished off the siezure of the canal by spelling out his program for controlling the canal, and he like a stage magician, produced the illusion that this is the result of international agreement. The State Department, no doubt more disillusioned than illusioned has accepted the statement as the best to be had at this time. And Colonel Nasser, watching the stars and stripes on the first American vessel gonng through the canal on his terms, knows that the Arab world, at any rate, will see that he hasn't budged an inch. This was what he set out to do. Now he has done it.

The art of the document is not simply in its having no status as an agreement. It contains what appear to be concessions resulting from negotiation and compromise. But even these apparent concessions do not ring true. The best one, the offer to arbitrate all disputes, should open the door to the right of access to the canal for Israel. But in fact, Israel does not have any appeal to arbitration. Appeal is allowed only to the eight original signatories of the Constantinople Convention of 1888. Israel is not one of these, and neither are we.

It is being suggested that the right of Israel to use the canal might be appealed by one of the original signatories. We do not know if Nasser would stand for that. Authoritative statements from Cairo insists that Egypt has no intention of letting Israel use the canal, and will continue to claim belligerent rights, regardless of the Security Council's ruling that these no longer exist. If someone crossed Nasser up and tried to carry the issue of Israeli shipping to arbitration, Egypt still could refuse to accept arbitration. That is the beauty - for Nasser - of a unilateral declaration.

What appears to be another big concession is the pledge not to raise canal tolls more than one percent in any year. This would look like compliance with the principle laid down by the Security Council that the canal is to be isolated from national policies. But the pledge is not ironclad. The declaration says that the tolls can be raised more than one percent after negotiation. Then it carefully omits saying negotiation with whom. That would seem to make it possible ro raise the tolls after negotiation with some but not all the parties concerned.

One sentence was added to the declaration in the last month of strenuous pressure from Washington and the U.N. Secretariat. They sought the recognition of the "Canal Users' Association" as the agency to deal tith the canal authority. But all that Colonel Nasser was ready to say was this:"The Government of Egypt would welcome and encourage co-operation between the Suez Canal Authority and representatives of shipping and trade." This may leave the way open to establish an advisory unit to deal with the canal authority, as proposed by India earlier in the crisis.

But nobody, not even Secretary Dulles, expects the Canal Users' Association, which was his particular brain child, to play any role in the future of the canal. Colonel Nasser has said in no uncertain terms that the only role in the canal it so be played by one country, Egypt, and by one man, Nasser. And that is the fact that has been registered - and accepted - by the United Nations and the United States.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with The Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:
MURROW: In the past year, the United States has acquired no little experience in dealing with problems of the Middle East. Ambrose Bierce defined experience as "the wisdom that enables us to recognize as an undesirable old acquaintance, the folly we have already embraced." But H.L. Mencken said, "What really teaches man is not experience but observation." Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Apr. 29, 1957

This is the news:

Russia today accused the Western powers of "gross interference" in the Middle East. The West, it said, wants "to split the unity of the Arab people, reimpose the yoke of colonial oppression and loot their wealth." The charge was contained in a formal statement... issued by the Soviet Foreign Ministry. It said, "The new deterioration of the situation connected with events in Jordan could lead to grave consequences. The responsibility for the possible consequences," it said, "lies with the Western powers and primarily with the United States." The statement called the movement of the U.S. Sixth Fleet to the Eastern Mediterranean "an open military demonstration against the Arab countries." It said military preparations are "openly and demonstratively" taking place on the frontiers of Jordan. And in these, it claimed, "Israel is playing a particularly unfortunate part."

The foreign minister of Jordan said today that it is "not the intention" of his country to invite Special Ambassador James P. Richards to Jordan to explain the Eisenhower Doctrine. The foreign minister made the statement shortly after King Hussein returned to Jordan from a flying visit to Saudi Arabia to see King Saud. The Jordan radio says the two kings declared the Jordanian crisis "an internal affair." Cairo says they reaffirmed their adherence to a national Arab policy.

The United States today offered Jordan 10-million dollars in economic aid. The aid is offered outside the framework of the Eisenhower Doctrine... and indications are that Jordan will accept it. According to the American announcement of the offer, the money would be used "to assist in economic development and the maintenance of political stability."

President Eisenhower has invited congressional leaders to confer with him at the White House on [redacted] May 9th... in an effort to restore cuts in his foreign aid program.

Congress reconvened today, as determined to cut President Eisenhower's budget, as it was before the Easter recess. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said, on his return from Texas: "I have never seen such strong demands for economy in the government." Senate Republican Knowland told reporters he had found no relaxation of the public demand for less federal spending. "If anything," he said, "I found it accentuated." ~~Both Knowland and Johnson indicated the Senate will take a long look before restoring House cuts in any substantial amount.~~

Vice President Nixon spoke out today against when he called "short-sighted attempts to cut costs." Nixon told the annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce that the Administration is not "gleefully giving away" money under the foreign aid program. "I can assure you," he said, "that not one dollar has been approved, unless it meets this test--- Is this program in the interests of American security, as well as that of the country receiving the aid?" Democratic Senator Kennedy told the Chamber of Commerce meeting that "reckless" reductions in foreign assistance would in the end cost the taxpayers money.

Former President Truman told a House foreign affairs subcommittee today that a sharp cut in foreign aid spending would be "a bad thing." He said, "It is not possible for us to let down our guard." ~~Another witness was John T. Barker, former attorney general of Missouri. Barker said, "Russia is laughing at us. You've got to quit giving away America's resources."~~ ~~Today's subcommittee hearing was held in Kansas City.~~

The Senate Judiciary Committee has voted to make civil rights legislation its pending business the next time it meets... which probably will be next Monday. Democratic Senator McClellan proposed today to amend the civil rights measure, by adding a so-called "right to work" provision. The amendment would, in effect, outlaw the union shop... since it would forbid arrangements under which a worker may be forced to join a union, in order to hold a job. The amendment is opposed by many members of Congress who support the civil rights bill, and is calculated to impede passage.

The Supreme Court ruled today that Negroes must be admitted to the Girard College for Orphans, in Philadelphia. The court said that to refuse to admit Negroes to the school, constitutes violation of the 14th Amendment guaranteeing equal rights. The order reverses a decision of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. The school (it is not really a college, in the usual sense) was founded more than a hundred years ago by Stephen Girard, a philantrophist, who stipulated in his will, that white orphan children were to benefit from the bequest. The state court based its decision on this provision of the will... arguing that an individual has the right to dispose of his own property as he sees fit. The Supreme Court said, however, that its 1954 anti-segregation decision applies because the board which operates the school is an agency of the state.

→

Bethesda Naval Hospital said today that Senator McCarthy of Wisconsin is seriously ill with hepatitis, an ailment of the liver. McCarthy entered the hospital yesterday. His condition tonight is reported slightly improved.

Sir Anthony Eden was discharged today from New England Baptist Hospital in Boston. Eden underwent surgery two weeks ago for removal of an obstruction of the bile duct. He will convalesce in this country for another week.

The Chinese Communist government tonight announced an immediate rise in the price of many basic foods. It is necessary, Peiping radio said, "to secure a balance in the budget and in the relationship between purchasing power and supply."

President Eisenhower today designated the flood-stricken region of Texas as a major disaster area. The main flood threat tonight is for towns located along the Upper Sabine River. Throughout Texas, 74 roads are closed.

West Germany today rejected Russia's protest over the possible arming of West German military forces with atomic weapons. Foreign Minister Von Brentano says Russia acted on the false assertion that West Germany intends to equip its armed forces with such weapons.

Edward R. Murrow: April 29, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

Both President Eisenhower and George Meany, head of A.F.L.-C.I.O., are now on record as favoring legislation to protect labor welfare funds, and to require public access to union financial records. Mr. Meany even says he would support stronger legislation on welfare funds than the Administration proposes. So the prospect of the legislation being enacted in this Congress should be good.

These two approaches are not by any means all that is being advocated in Washington, or in many state legislatures. The exposure of racketeering, and of high finance by top teamster officials, has stirred up anti-union feeling across the country. A drive is on to curtail the political activity of unions, and to outlaw the union shop.

It may be too early to say that the present wave of anti-labor feeling will not rise still further. The testimony before the McClellan committee is by no means all in. But the result so far, is that the Administration, and the central body of the labor movement, are backing the same major steps of reform. And Labor Secretary Mitchell has cautioned against a headlong rush, impelled by hysteria, to secure punitive legislation.

President Eisenhower has recommended, that beyond the problem of union funds, each situation be studied carefully to see whether remedial legislation is necessary, or whether it cannot be dealt with by voluntary action, by law enforcement, administration steps, or by legislation, or by a combination of these means. This was his way of advising against purely punitive laws.

The troubles of union labor are of the kind that come from prosperity, rather than adversity. The unions never had so many members, such large incomes, such large funds to administer, or so much power. Complaints have been rising for some time over the administration of some welfare funds. Complaints against racketeering may have been louder in the days of rampant gangsterism, but they have been rising again too.

National labor leaders may not have worked as persistently as possible to expose corruption in their affiliates. But union labor is not centrally governed, and the merger of A.F.L. and C.I.O. did not weaken the autonomy of the large unions. That has been the chief difficulty of dealing effectively with the teamsters. Dave Beck could be suspended as vice president and member of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. council, but not as head of the union. This was pointed out in Mr. Meany's correspondence with the teamsters' union, published today. Beck was suspended as a person whose actions were injuring labor as a whole, not as head of an affiliate who ~~had~~ is alleged to have betrayed his own members. And when he appears for trial before the Council on May 20 - if he attends - the charge will be that he has brought the labor movement into disrepute.

The union as such also faces expulsion, on the charge that it is dominated by corrupt influences. The teamsters' executive board has insisted that it must have special assurances of fair play before appearing at a hearing set for next Monday. But Mr. Meany replied that the hearing will be held without special assurances, whether the union shows up or not.

There are cross currents in the situation that befuddle some people. One is, that some union spokesmen think Senator McClellan is anti-labor, which explains the present investigation. Another is still more confusing. It is that Beck was an Eisenhower supporter both in '52 and '56, and had at least some slight personal contact with the President. So the McClellan committee, with its democratic majority, is sometimes suspected of being out to "get" "a Republican labor union". But this is chit-chat. The result of the investigation so far has been to bring Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Meany together, to back the same outline of reform measures.

The hearings of the McClellan committee have turned up evidence that has stirred local law enforcement agencies into action, which is not, strictly speaking, the function of a congressional committee. Sometimes the hearings have sounded more like trials than inquiries. That seems to be one of the difficulties of such investigations that has still to be solved. Witnesses have run to the cover of the Fifth Amendment with monotonous frequency, but the witnesses also have not been without the normal protection of the rules of evidence.

But since a congressional inquiry is held to study the need for legislation, and since about everybody - the teamsters excepted - agrees that some labor legislation is necessary, the justification of the hearings cannot well be challenged. If they can end in leaving union members in closer control of their finances, and their welfare funds better protected, they will have done a distinct service to workers as well as the public.

Word for Today

It is in the nature of Congress to conduct investigations...to determine the need for possible legislation. And... already... the results of the McClellan Committee hearings show this inquiry was justified. The fact that there has been some wrong-doing... in some instances... does not call for rash action. Better to observe the ancient proverb: "Hasten slowly and ye shall soon arrive."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Apr. 30, 1957

This is the news:

The United States today rejected Russia's charge that it has been guilty of "gross interference" in Jordan. The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, told reporters: "There has indeed been foreign intervention in Jordan---namely, as King Hussein said on April 24th, the intervention of international communism." The "fountainhead" of international communism, he said, is the Soviet Union. White said this is a matter in which the record of the United States and Russia since World War Two "speaks for itself." He noted that while the United States was encouraging independence movements leading to the creation of 19 new states, Moscow was "subjecting 10 once independent states to its rule." And the kind of rule it has been, he said, is exemplified by what happened in Hungary.

King Hussein told a news conference in Amman today that "the spread of Communism is a threat to our national and spiritual well-being." He said he declined a visit from the special American envoy, James P. Richards, because Jordan has no interest in the Eisenhower Doctrine. At the same time, he rejected Russia's claim that the United States is interfering in Jordan's internal affairs. The claim, he said, has "no basis whatsoever." Hussein said the Arab-Israeli dispute cannot be settled "until the right of people to live in their own country... and to stay there... is restored." And Jordan, he said, "will never depart from the principles of Arab nationalism", laid down by Egypt, Syria, Saudi Arabia and Jordan last February. ~~Regarding the American grant of 10-million dollars to Jordan, Hussein said his country accepted it "for no particular reason."~~ The crisis in Jordan, he said, is ending. But martial law will be continued "as long ~~as it is necessary~~."

Secretary of State Dulles is flying to West Germany tonight for a NATO council meeting that is being held in Bonn. Before he left, Mr. Dulles appealed to a Senate appropriations subcommittee for a restoration of at least 29 of the 47-million dollars cut from the State Department budget by the House. Without this restoration, he said, the country would... in the opinion of President Eisenhower and himself... be done "real and grievious harm." Secretary of Agriculture Benson told another subcommittee that the budget for his department can be trimmed only by postponing, slowing up or eliminating necessary programs. And the director of the United States Information Agency... Arthur Larson... said the activities of his agency should be expanded, not curtailed. Larson spoke at a National Press Club luncheon. 1957, he said, is his agency's year of "greatest opportunity" in the struggle with the Communists to reach men's minds.

Senate Republican Leader Knowland told the United States Chamber of Commerce meeting in Washington today that the Senate will make "no blanket restoration" of cuts voted by the House. Knowland referred to the Administration school program as "unwise". He said, "I have never seen the federal government contribute money without wanting to exercise control."

Democratic Leader Johnson said today that the Senate will not act on the school program.... or consider the civil rights, gas or immigration bills... until the House has acted on them. And House Speaker Martin predicted that Congress will take no action at this session on the Administration proposal for succession in case of presidential disability.

President Eisenhower returned to Washington today from his two-week vacation in Augusta. The White House physician... General Snyder... says Mr. Eisenhower's cough has been "virtually eliminated."

Russia made a new proposal today at the five-power disarmament talks in London. It offered to open Siberia to "sky inspection", if the United States would allow aerial inspection of Alaska and the area west of the Mississippi. The United States delegate, Harold Stassen, made no immediate comment on the Soviet proposal. But Jules Moch, of France, voiced strong disapproval. He said, "They offer to show us the ice and snow of Siberia in return for opening up the greater part of the United States."

British Prime Minister Macmillan has made an interim reply to Soviet Premier Bulganin's letter of April 20. The letter proposed a world-wide ban on nuclear weapons tests, an agreement renouncing force in the Middle East, and more Anglo-Soviet trade. Macmillan told the House of Commons today that he would made a full reply later. He said he told Bulganin the letter raised so many important issues, he would have to give them more careful study.

Denmark today formally rejected Moscow's charge that it is a "springboard for attack" against Russia. A Danish note to Premier Bulganin said Denmark will continue its membership in NATO... that NATO is a defensive alliance... and that Soviet fears are "without foundation in actual fact."

The Atomic Energy Commission... in Washington... said today that American newsmen may observe nine of the series of atomic tests to be run off, starting May 15th. It said the nine "open" shots will be "low-yield detonations of fission devices," as contrasted with the fusion process used in the hydrogen bomb. At least two of the devices will be set off from balloons.

Today... at the White Sands proving grounds... an Aerobee-Hi rocket soared to an altitude of 190 miles, a new record for missiles of the single-stage type. The old record was 164 miles, set by an Aerobee last summer.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today unanimously approved the nomination of Charles E. Bohlen as ambassador to the Philippines. Action on the nomination of Scott McLeod as ambassador to Ireland was put off until tomorrow, when he will be subjected to further questioning. He was questioned today for more than two hours.

~~The Senate Interior Committee approved a Democratic-sponsored bill~~ providing ~~for federal construction of a high dam in Hellis Canyon. The vote~~ was divided ~~along party lines. The Federal Power Commission already has~~ licensed ~~a private utility~~... the Idaho Power Company... to proceed with the ~~Hell's Canyon~~ project.

A federal judge today convicted Dr. Otto Nathan, of New York, of contempt of Congress. Dr. Nathan is executor of the Albert Einstein estate. A year ago, he refused to tell a House committee if he had ever been a Communist... on grounds that under the First Amendment he did not have to answer questions concerning his political beliefs. No date for sentencing was set. Nathan's attorney says the case will be appealed.

Edward R. Murrow: April 30, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The United States is using both cash and power to avert a calamity in Jordan, and is doing it with success so far. But there is an unexpected casualty in the operation. It is the Eisenhower Doctrine. The doctrine hasn't been nullified or abridged. But Jordan is ostentatiously snubbing it while taking our money. And the doctrine is being distorted by statements about the possibility of our intervention in Jordan.

The cash we are giving Jordan is ten million dollars to start with, with more to follow if desired. But it is not Eisenhower Doctrine money. It is not part of the two hundred millions voted for aid under the doctrine. It comes out of State Department funds. King Hussein's foreign minister underscored that this is an unconditional grant, and that King Hussein is not concerned with the Eisenhower doctrine at all. Ambassador Richards, who toured the Middle East to explain the doctrine and recommend plans for aid, is not being invited to Jordan. Inasmuch as the doctrine was devised to cover just such an emergency, either it is very much beside the point, or it is very seriously misunderstood.

If it is misunderstood, the misunderstanding is not confined to Jordan. Congress and the American public also misunderstand. Army Secretary Brucker said flatly in an interview last night, that if Egypt and Syria invade Jordan, President Eisenhower would intervene with force under the doctrine. Mr. Brucker may be altogether right to say that the United States would intervene. He is on the inside, and should know what the policy is. But the intervention would not be under the Eisenhower doctrine. The resolution that passed Congress and embodies the doctrine, limited intervention to cases where an aggression is committed by a country under control of international communism. Neither Egypt nor Syria can be so described. Communist infiltration and influence are considerable in both countries. But the communists do not run them.

Obviously Secretary Brucker was thinking about the possibilities of effective military intervention. Many people in Washington have been wondering how we could apply our force if intervention became necessary. We have atomic weapons and we have bombers. But trouble in Jordan would hardly call for their use. What Mr. Brucker was saying is, that we have divisions of paratroopers, and we have the airlift to deliver them to the area, and he said it could be done in days, rather than weeks or months.

But we have more than paratroopers. We have marines, and they don't have to be airlifted to the Middle East. Six hundred of them went ashore in Beirut, Lebanon, today. Lebanon happens to be a supporter of the Eisenhower doctrine, and the marines went ashore for a good time. But there they are, in the Middle East, and they might be called highly visible. The language of power is being vigorously spoken without mere words being necessary. [But to leave no doubt about their meaning, the executive officer of the Mount McKinley, heading the marine flotilla, said: "We were prepared to shoot our way into a trouble spot if necessary." What he said, what Secretary Brucker said, and what the Sixth Fleet is doing, all add up to a convincing show of power. Another marine battalion is scheduled to sail for the Meditterranean this week.]

Correspondents on the scene are not sure who is supposed to be impressed by our power. They point out that Egypt cannot invade Jordan without crossing Israel. They consider Colonel Nasser unable to do this, and certainly not likely to try. Syria cannot do anything without clashing with Iraqi troops that are far superior. But Washington observers think our warning is meant for the Kremlin, and that the Administration wishes to discourage active Soviet intrigues in the Middle East. The Moscow newspapers are sending up piercing protests against our show of power. But what may be the clinching factor, they don't even mention the use of Soviet volunteers.

King Hussein's visit to King Saud yesterday, following Saud's conference with Egyptian and Syrian leaders, has not led to disclosures about a new line-up of Arab power. It may be that Saud now considers himself head of a faction consisting of Saudi Arabia, Iraq and Jordan, balanced against Egypt and Syria. This would be much to Washington's liking. But there is no open ruptrue of the Arab Federation. And the ten million dollars from Washington was accepted yesterday in almost the same breath that the Jordan foreign minister announced that the federation remains the basis of Jordan policy.

So what we are seeing is an inscrutable test of policy and influence, and what we need for it is money and power. + Wisdom ~~It is no criticism of Washington leadership to say that it is behaving pretty much as the circumstances in Jordan require at this moment. And is about as it would have behaved if the Eisenhower doctrine had never been written.~~

George Bryson

Word for Today

In the dispatch of the United States 6th Fleet to the Eastern Mediterranean, this country was speaking the language of power. Charles B. Marshall said truly, "The problems of power are endless. Wars only occur. Politics endures." He was referring to international politics, ~~which can be most troublesome.~~ Because as Bismarck said, "Politics is not an exact science."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., May 1, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower may defend his budget in a radio and television address. / The possibility was discussed today at the regular weekly meeting of Republican congressional leaders at the White House. / Senator Knowland said it was the "general concensus" of those present, that Mr. Eisenhower should make such a talk. And News Secretary Hagerty said later that the President "definitely has the matter under consideration." No final decision has been made.

Mr. Eisenhower defended his foreign aid program today... in a brief talk to representatives of the League of Women Voters. He said he sympathizes with the desire of Congress to reduce federal spending... that he would like to go out of office with "an even bigger tax cut than in 1954." / But the foreign aid program, he said, is essential. It is needed to preserve the independence of small countries which would turn to Russia for help, if they cannot get help from us. Mr. Eisenhower said, "In my opinion, you can't take freedom and allow it to be pushed back to the shores of the United States and keep freedom here." The sacrifice of money, he warned, is not "nearly so great as the sacrifice of our sons."

→

Democratic Leader Johnson said today... in a speech on the Senate floor... that Congress has "a clear mandate" from the American people to cut President Eisenhower's budget. Johnson referred to Secretary of State Dulles' testimony yesterday that peace is jeopardized... if more than half of the 47-million-dollar cut voted by the House in State Department funds is not restored. The senator said he does not want to see peace jeopardized. "But," he said, "neither do I want my hair curled by Secretary Humphrey's depression." Johnson complained that on the subject of economy, Administration leaders fail to agree.

Democratic Senator Byrd proposed today that government spending be slashed by eight to nine billion dollars. Byrd, who is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, conceded this cannot all be done now. "But next year," he said, "we may be so fortunate as to have another budget director---a budget director dedicated to economy instead of apparently dedicated to finding new ways to spend money." Budget Director Brundage declined to comment on Byrd's remarks... which were made before the annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce. (Late today, the Chamber passed resolutions favoring a complete cut-off of federal appropriations for "public subsidized housing"... and opposing the Administration school program).

The House Education Committee went into closed session today to start work on the school construction bill. Chairman Barden denied reports he was holding up writing of the measure. He said that as far as he is concerned, the committee will meet every day for the next two weeks to get the job done.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today completed its questioning of Scott McCleod, the former security officer in the State Department, whom President Eisenhower nominated to be ambassador to Ireland. Chairman Green said that... speaking for himself... he does not feel that McCleod "measures up" to the assignment. For McCleod, it was the second day of questioning behind closed doors. He told reporters the questions had been "very searching" but that he "hoped" to be confirmed. The committee vote on his nomination was put off until tomorrow.

The Senate rackets committee announced today that it will [redacted] call Teamsters President Dave Beck for more questioning on May 8th. The committee says it has "further derogatory evidence". Beck has notified the A.F.L.-C.I.O. that he will attend the labor organization's hearing next Monday to answer charges that his union is dominated by corrupt influences.

Secretary of State Dulles arrived in West Germany today... to attend the NATO Council meeting which opens tomorrow. The secretary-general of NATO... Lord Ismay... told a news conference in Bonn today that refusal of any major western country to accept atomic weapons might endanger the whole alliance. But each member of the alliance, he said, has the right to decide for itself whether it wants to equip its armed forces with these weapons. Lord Ismay made the statement when a reporter asked about West Germany's apparent reluctance to accept nuclear armaments.

As usual, Russia observed May Day with a military parade in Moscow's Red Square. The demonstration included heavy artillery and tanks... and about 170 of Russia's latest aircraft. But nothing radically new was displayed. Soviet Defense Minister Zhukov charged... in a speech... that American policies had created "the danger of atomic war." Russia, he said, will strengthen its armed forces and beef up the forces of the Warsaw Pact.

A Marine outfit sailed from Morehead City, North Carolina today for the Mediterranean area. It was the First Battalion of the Second Marine Division, and it was fully equipped... and it will relieve the Second Battalion of the First Marines. A United Press correspondent with the United States 6th Fleet reports that American fighter planes are flying interceptor practice missions over the Eastern Miditerranean with live ammunition. The aircraft are jets based on the carrier Forrestal.

In Jordan today, King Hussein ordered the dissolution of all trade unions. Reports from Amman say several Communist leaders were placed under arrest. [redacted] A correspondent for the Middle East News Agency is also reported arrested. The agency is sponsored by the Egyptian government.

Edward R. Murrow: May 1, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The NATO ~~council~~ meeting in Bonn, which starts tomorrow, whatever it does or says in public, will be thinking how to keep the alliance in full force, and maintain its present military strength. It will be thinking about this because the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance is going through what might be described as a kind of premature old age. It is losing some of its vigorous faith in its mission. More than one of its members wants to cut down its military contribution. Themilitary experts agree that nuclear weapons, in time, will change the entire strategic concept of NATO, and the nature of its forces. But they also agree the time hasn't come yet. But somehow, in anticipating the time, the zeal for full military preparedness is ebbing. NATO exists all right, and continues to be a vital factor in the security of the free world. But it isn't what it used to be.

The situation can't be explained away with the cliche that the old order changes. NATO is not the old order. It was only nine years old on April 4th. Not only is it the new order, it took an upheaval in American tradition to bring it into existence. It was the first military alliance we ever entered in peace time, and the first time we committed ourselves in advance to military participation in Europe.

Nine years ago the future of Western civilization seemed to depend on our accepting the new order, and our responsibilities in it. The communist coup in Czechoslovakia brought that country under Communist rule in February 1948. The Soviet blockade of Berlin began five weeks later. Nobody with eyes to see could fail to recognize the Soviet threat. NATO was the answer, and the treaty was signed the following April, in 1949. It took a still worse aggression to waken NATO members to the need for swift action. The invasion of Korea in 1950 produced a NATO army and a NATO command for it. Now, only seven years later, that army is shrinking, and the spiritual fervor of NATO is cooling down.

The main reasons for the change are not hard to identify. NATO was the answer to the Soviet menace, and it took the form the menace called for at the time. It put military forces into Europe, so that Soviet aggression could not subdue any free country before the United States could bring its atomic power to bear.

The system worked. As Lord Ismay said today: "I never tire of repeating, peace has been kept. Soviet expansion westward in Europe has been halted. Not a square inch of territory in Europe has fallen beneath the Soviet heel since the treaty was signed."

The menace of Soviet domination is still there, but Soviet methods have changed. The Kremlin, having literally created the alliance against itself, set out to see if it couldn't make it appear unnecessary, so that the alliance would come apart. It did not go in for coups, as in Prague, or blockades, as in Berlin, or flagrant aggressions as in Korea. It took to speaking persistently of peace. It posed as the pioneer of nuclear disarmament. It offered friendly relations, increased trade, reduction of defense budgets, peaceful co-existence.

It has made no secret that its first immediate purpose is to disarm NATO, above all to keep Germany from being armed. Just now, undoubtedly with the NATO council meeting in view, the Kremlin has come up with a new disarmament proposal. It accepts the Eisenhower "open skies" plan on a half-and-half basis. It offers to throw open about half its territory for aerial photography, if the United States does the same, and Europe does still more. The offer is only nominally half-and-half, for the Soviet territory that would be opened doesn't contain a fraction of the defense centers that are in the American half. But NATO countries are supposed to react by saying gratefully that the Kremlin is willing to negotiate.

~~The one way to keep NATO together is as a shield against the Soviet Union. But the idea of a shield is itself out-of-date.~~ There is no shield against the hydrogen bomb, and a shield against guided missiles, and even against ground troops equipped with nuclear weapons, may be non-existent. That is what complicates the problem the NATO council members face in Bonn. NATO, though born only nine years ago, needs to be modernized.

The trouble isn't that the people of NATO countries are so frightened by the threat of nuclear destruction that they want to disband NATO to save their skins. Denmark proved that this week with its defiant refusal to the Kremlin to get out of NATO. Denmark spoke with the self-assurance of a great power. Actually the only strength it had was its own courage.

The troubles of NATO aren't ~~XXXXXXX~~ moral. They rise partly ~~in~~ from the fact that we still don't know what modern science is going to make of modern war. And the rest of the difficulty is in knowing how to help all men to be free who want to be free, and to have peace in doing it.

Word for Today

President Eisenhower said there are times when money must be sacrificed for freedom.... that it is a matter of priorities. Somerset Maugham once wrote, "If a nation values anything more than freedom, it will lose its freedom. And the irony of it," he said, "is that if it is comfort or money that it values more, it will lose that, too."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 1, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower may defend his budget in a radio and television address. The possibility was discussed today at the regular weekly meeting of Republican congressional leaders at the White House. Senator Knowland said it was the "general concensus" of those present that Mr. Eisenhower should make such a talk. And News Secretary Hagerty said later that the President "definitely has the matter under consideration". No final decision has been made.

Mr. Eisenhower defended his foreign aid program today..in a brief talk to representatives of the League of Women Voters. He said he sympathizes with the desire of Congress to reduce federal spending..that he would like to go out of office with "an even bigger tax cut than in 1954." But the foreign aid program, he said, is essential. It is needed to preserve the independence of small countries, which would turn to Russia for help, if they cannot get help from us. Mr. Eisenhower said, "In my opinion, you can't take freedom and allow it to be pushed back fo the shores of the United States and keep freedom here." The sacrifice of money, he warned, is not "nearly so great as the sacrifice of sons."

Democratic Leader Johnson said today .. in a speech on the Senate floor... that Congress has "a clear mandate" from the American people to cut President Eisenhower's budget. Johnson referred to Secretary of State Dulles' testimony yesterday that peace is jeopardized..if more than half of the 47-million-dollar cut voted by the House in State Department funds is not restored. The Senator said he does not want to see peace jeopardized. "But", he said, "neither do I want my hair curled by Secretary Humphrey's depression." Johnson complained that on the subject of economy, Administration leaders fail to agree.

Democratic Senator Byrd proposed today that government spending be slashed by eight to nine billion dollars. Byrd, who is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, conceded this cannot all be done now. "But next year", he said, "we may be so fortunate as to have another budget director--a budget director dedicated to economy instead of apparently dedicated to finding new ways to spend money." Budget Director Brundage declined to comment on Byrd's remarks...which were made before the annual meeting of the United States Chamber of commerce. (Late today, the Chamber passed resolutions favoring a complete cut-off of federal appropriations for "public subsidized housing"...and opposing the Administration school program.)

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today completed its questioning of Scott McCleod, the former security officer in the State Department whom President Eisenhower nominated to be ambassador to Ireland. Chairman Green said that...speaking for himself...he does not feel that McCleod "measures up" to the assignment. For McCleod it was the second day of questioning behind closed doors. He told reporters the questions had been "very searching but that he "hoped" to be confirmed. The committee vote on his nomination was put off until tomorrow.

The Senate rackets committee announced today that it will call Teamsters President Dave Beck for more questioning on May 8th. The committee says it has "further derogatory evidence." Beck has notified the A.F.L.-C.I.O. that he will attend the labor organization's hearing next Monday to answer charges that his union is dominated by corrupt influences.

Secretary of State Dulles arrived nn West Germany today...to attend the NATO Council meeting which opens tomorrow. The secretary - general of NATO... Lord Ismay...told a news conference in Bonn today that refusal of any major Western country to accept atomic weapons might endanger the whole alliance. But Each member of the alliance, he said, has the rignt to decide for itself whether it wants to equip its armed forces with these weapons. Lord Ismay made the statement whan a reporter asked about West Germany's apparent reluctance to accept nuclear armaments.

As usual, Russia observed May Day with a military parade in Moscow's Red Square. The demonstration included heavy artillery and tanks...and about 170 of Russia's latest aircraft. But nothing radically new was displayed. Soviet Defense Minister Zhukov charged...in a speech...that American policies has created "the danger of atomic war." Russia, he said, will strengthen its armed forces and beef up the forces of the Warsaw Pact.

A Marine outfit sailed from Morehead City, North Carolina today for the Mediterranean area. It was the first Battalion of the Second Marine Division, and it was fully equipped...and it will relieve the Second Battalion of the First Marines. A United Press correspondent with the United States 6th Fleet reports that American fighter planes are flying interceptor practice missions over the Eastern Mediterranean with live ammunition. The aircraft are jets based on the carrier Forrestal.

In Jordan today, King Hussein ordered the dissolution of all trade unions. Reports from Amman say several Communist leaders were placed under arrest. A correspondent for the Middle East News Agency is also reported arrested. The agency is sponsored by the Egyptian government.

The NATO meeting in Bonn, which starts tomorrow, whatever it does or says in public, will be thinking how to keep the alliance in full force, and maintain its present military strength. It will be thinking about this, because the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance is going through what might be described as a kind of premature old age. It is losing some of its vigorous faith in its mission. More than one of its members wants to cut down its military contribution. The military experts agree that nuclear weapons, in time, will change the entire strategic concept of NATO, and the nature of its forces. But they also agree that time hasn't come yet. But somehow, in anticipating the time, the zeal for full military preparedness is ebbing. NATO exists all right, and continues to be a vital factor in the security of the free world. But it isn't what it used to be.

The situation can't be explained away with the cliche that the old order changes. NATO is not the old order. It was only nine years old on April 4th. Not only is it the new order, it took an upheavel in American tradition to bring it into existence. It was the first military alliance we ever entered in peace time, and the first time we committed ourselves in advance to military prrticipation in Europe.

Nine years ago the future of Western civilization seemed to depend on our accepting the new order, and our responsiblitiies in it. The communist coup in Czechoslovakia brought that country under Communist rule in February 1948. The Soviet blockade of Berlin began five weeks later. Nobody with eyes to see could fail to recognize the Soviet threat. NATO was the answer, and the treaty was signed the following April, in 1949. It took a still worse aggression to waken NATO members to the need for swift action. The invasion of Korea in 1950 produced a NATO army and a NATO command for it. Now, only seven years later, that army is shrinking, and the spiritual fervor of NATO is cooling down.

The main reasons for the change are not hard to identify. NATO was the answer to the Soviet menace, and it took the form the menace called for at the time. It put military forces into Europe, so that Soviet aggression could not subdue any free country before the United States could bring its atomic power to bear.

The system worked. As Lord Ismay said today: "I never tire of repeating, peace has been kept. Soviet expansion westward in Europe has been halted. Not a square inch of territory in Europe has fallen beneath the Soviet heel since the treaty was signed.

The menace of Soviet domination is still there, but Soviet methods have changed. The Kremlin, having literally created the alliance against itself, e set out to see if it couldn't make it appear unnecessary, so that the alliance would come apart. It did not go in for coups, as in Prague, or blockades, as in Berlin, or flagrant aggressions as in Korea. It took to speaking persistently of peace. It posed as the pioneer of nuclear disarmament. It offered friendly relations, increased trade, reductions of defense budgets, peaceful co-existence.

It has made no secret that its first immediate purpose is to disarm NATO, above all to keep Germany from being armed. Just now, undoubtedly with the NATO council meeting in view, the Kremlin has come up with a new disarmament proposal. It accepts the Eisenhower "open skies" plan on a half-and-half basis. It offers to throw upen about half its territory for aerial photography, if the United States does the same, and Europe does still more. The offer is nnly nominally half-and-half, for the Soviet territory that would be opened doesn't contain a fraction of the defense centers that are in the American half. But NATO countries are supposed to react by saying gratefully that the Kremlin is willing to negotiate.

The trouble isn't that the people of NATO countries are so frightened by the threat of nuclear destruction that they want to disband NATO to save their skins. Denmark proved that this week with its defiant refusal to the Kremlin to get out of NATO. Denmark spoke with the self-assurance of a great power. Actually the only strength it had was its own courage.

The troubles of NATO aren't moral. They rise partly from the fact that we still don't know what modern science is going to make of modern war. And the rest of the difficulty is in knowing how to help all men to be free who want to be free, and to have peace in doing it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: President Eisenhower said there are times when money must be sacrificed for freedom...that it is a matter of priorities. Somerset Maugham once wrote, "If a nation values anything more than freedom, it will lose its freedom. And the irony of it", he said, "is that if it is comfort or money that it values more, it will lose that, too."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., May 2, 1957

This is the news:

Senator Joseph R. McCarthy died tonight at Bethesda Naval Hospital at the age of 47. The hospital announced that he succumbed to acute hepatitis, a disease of the liver, at 6:02 P.M., Washington time. The senator was admitted to the hospital last Sunday, when his condition was reported "serious". ~~McCarthy had been a Republican senator from Wisconsin since 1946. His death reduces the Republican membership of the Senate to 46.~~ He is survived by his wife, and an infant daughter they adpoted ~~adopted~~ early this year. McCarthy had been a Republican senator from Wisconsin since 1946.

~~maximum sentence of five years' imprisonment, or a 10-thousand-dollar fine... or both, on each of the two counts.~~

Secretary of Agriculture Benson told Congress today that the nation's farm laws have to be overhauled. Benson made no specific recommendations but said present price support and acreage allotment programs are becoming obsolete. This is especially true, he said, of programs pertaining to the so-called basic crops---corn, rice, peanuts, cotton, tobacco and wheat. Benson said that in the last 15 years production per farm worker has doubled. "This," he said, "creates a new dimension in farm policy and makes it virtually impossible to curtail output with the type of controls acceptable in our society." He proposed that the Administration be given freer rein in fixing price supports, so that... for basic crops... they can be set at less than 75 percent of parity. Supports, he said, should be set at rates that would guarantee adequate income but not encourage farmers to overproduce. Benson also cautioned against extending the present soil bank program, when it expires with the 1959 crops.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the nomination of Scott McCleod as ambassador to Ireland. The vote after two days of intensive questioning was 9 to 6. Two Democratic senators... Mansfield of Montana and Long of Louisiana... joined the seven Republican members in voting for the appointment. On a voice vote, the committee approved the nomination of Henry J. Taylor as ambassador to Switzerland.

→

President Eisenhower today nominated Wilson Flake, a career diplomat, as ambassador to the new African republic of Ghana.

The House Education Committee made some progress today on the school bill. It voted... tentatively... to recommend expenditure of 2-billion dollars for school construction over a five-year period. The government would match state funds in a maximum ratio of two to one.

The State Department said today that Special Ambassador James P. Richards is breaking off his mission to the Middle East. Richards has been explaining the Eisenhower Doctrine to countries in the area. The department said he is being recalled to Washington to confer with the President on new foreign aid legislation. Congress has threatened to cut foreign aid funds. Richards is due back ~~in Washington~~ next Wednesday... in time to join congressional leaders when they attend a White House conference on foreign aid the following day. This means that in his tour of the Middle East, Richards will not visit Egypt, Syria or Jordan. King Hussein of Jordan has publicly disavowed interest in the Eisenhower Doctrine. 1k Richards today flew to Israel. And he plans to visit Tunisia and Morocco on his way home. He will have visited 15 countries in all... including Greece, which today gave the doctrine its full support.

Secretary of Defense Wilson today defended the spending policies of his department. Wilson told a news conference it gives him "a pain" to hear his friends in the United States Chamber of Commerce "squawk" about the high level of defense spending. "Security," he said, "cannot be cheap." And as evidence that the Defense Department already is economizing, he pointed to a reduction of overtime payments. Wilson said overtime is being cut down on all but the highest priority projects, such as guided missiles.

Testimony by two of this country's top military leaders was released today, (three to four months after it was given to a committee of Congress.) Secretary of the Air Force Quarles warned, in his testimony, that a single hydrogen missile... launched by an aircraft... is capable of knocking our an entire naval task force. General Twining testified that a high-level attack by a single squadron of heavy or medium jet bombers could produce the same result. Naval Spokesmen said the big carriers would be hard to find & to hit

The NATO Council meeting opened today in Bonn, Germany. The foreign ministers of the 15 NATO countries are said to have agreed that the West must base its defense on a balance between weapons of the conventional and nuclear types. The ministers also took up the Middle East problem. But the briefing officer refused to report what was said.

A federal grand jury in Tacoma, Washington, today indicted Teamsters President Dave Beck on charges of income tax evasion. The indictment was returned on two counts. The first count charges that in filing a joint return for 1950, Beck and his wife failed to report 89-thousand dollars of their income. Thus he allegedly evaded payment of 56-thousand dollars in federal tax. In the second count, Beck is accused of helping to prepare a fraudulent return for a real estate association operated by the teamsters union. The Justice Department says the indictment marks the "culmination of intensive investigations begun early in 1954 by the Internal Revenue Service." Federal Judge George Boldt, of Tacoma, has ordered a warrant issued for Beck's arrest. If convicted, he faces a possible maximum sentence of five years' imprisonment, or a 10-thousand-dollar fine... or both... on each of the two counts.

Edward R. Murrow: May 2, 1957. 7:45 p.m.

Two aspects of the new Soviet open skies proposal have caught the attention of Washington observers. Quite apart from its being timed to coincide with the NATO Council meeting for its usefulness as propaganda, the offer does show changes in Soviet thinking. One change is considered favorable to progress in the disarmament negotiations. The other is not.

The favorable change is not only in the acceptance of the open skies idea but the territory the Kremlin is willing to have photographed from the air. This is Western Siberia. While it is true that there are far fewer military objectives in Western Siberia than in the Western United States, Western Siberia would be the take-off for bombing attacks on the United States over the North Pole. If the purpose of the inspection is to ward off surprise attack - and it certainly was when President Eisenhower first proposed it - then the Kremlin seems to be accepting his concept and not evading it.

That by itself is noteworthy. The Kremlin had ridiculed open skies inspection for two years. But it has linked its conversion to a backward step in regard to ground inspection. It made the stationing of inspectors at air ports and other military centers conditional on an undertaking by the United States not to use nuclear weapons at all. And one might almost say that "this is where we came in". This is the old round-about as to which comes first, disarmament or inspection.

The United States is ready to give up nuclear weapons, but not until disarmament has gone forward in conventional weapons and forces, and been checked and proved by the most thorough inspection system. Then there must come a series of stages on nuclear disarmament. First there must be an agreement not to make nuclear weapons,and inspection must demonstrate that it is being lived up to. Then the nuclear materials that now go into weapons must go to peacetime uses under international control. And only when this stage is reached are we willing to begin reducing the stockpile of nuclear weapons by turning the energy of weapons into peacetime uses. This reduction of the stockpile then can go on till there are no nuclear weapons left.

The Kremlin knows quite well that this is our program - but when it agrees to open skies inspection it gets the headlines, and when it back-tracks by making inspection contingent on our giving up the use of nuclear weapons, that does not make the headlines, and the maneuver to accept open skies has paid off. It is not being cynical to put it this way. Disarmament negotiations are bound to be the most cautious probings that governments are capable of. There will be many shifts and counter-shifts as the negotiations proceed, and obviously what matters, first of all, is that they proceed. Actually it may be more important that the Kremlin changed its mind about open skies inspection than that it regressed in the matter of ground inspection. The gambit about ground inspection was an old one, and can be reversed again. But the range of the negotiations was widened when the Kremlin supplied maps of Soviet territory it is willing to have photographed from the air.

Some American officials have a modest confidence that the disarmament talks can get somewhere. They argue that the United States and Soviet Union alike have the most urgent interest in keeping nuclear weapons from expanding from what they are. Neither country wants to see anybody follow Britain's example and go in for Hydrogen bombs. A fourth country in the nuclear race would be the end of such control as the two governments now have. And that might be the end of everything. Since there has to be a stop, the place to stop is where we are now. We can go on later to still more disarmament, but first we must have a standstill of some kind. And an added factor is that the guided missile race may be going against the Russians. Instead of gambling on being the first to get the 5,000 mile missile, they may be willing to settle for a compromise now.

There is some slight encouragement in such speculation. But it may be that it is just such encouragement that the London Economist meant to blast when it warned that too much should not be read into the Russian disarmament moves. "This fall-out of fallacies" it said, "seems to have been set off by a fusion of hopes and fears."

Word for Today

There are times when trying to reach agreement on disarmament seems a well nigh hopeless task. Spinoza said, "All noble things are as difficult as they are rare." To accept Soviet proposals without close scrutiny would be as mistaken as to despair. Thoreau said, "There is ruin in want of calculation." And that is literally true today.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 2, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Senator Joseph R. McCarthy died tonight at Bethesda Naval Hospital at the age of 47. The hospital announced that he succumbed to acute hepatitis, a disease of the liver, at 6:02 P.M., Washington time. The Senator was admitted to the hospital last Sunday, when his condition was reported "serious". He is survived by his wife and an infant daughter they adopted early this year. McCarthy had been a Republican senator from Wisconsin since 1946.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson told Congress today that the nation's farm laws have to be overhauled. Benson made no specific recommendations but said present price support and acreage allotment programs are becoming obsolete. This is expecially true, he said, of programs pertaining to the so-called basic crops--corn, rice, peanuts, cotton, tobacco and wheat. Benson said that in the last 15 years production per farm worker has doubled. "This", he said, "creates a new dimension in farm policy and makes it virtually impossible to curtail output with the type of controls acceptable in our society." He proposed that the Administration be given freer rein in fixing price supports, so that.. for basic crops..they can be set at less than 75 percent of parity. Supports, he said, should be set at rates that would guarantee adequate income but not encourage farmers to overproduce. Benson also cautioned against extending the present soil bank program, when it expires with the 1959 crops.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the nomination of Scott McCleod as ambassador to Ireland. The vote after two days of intensive questioning was 9 to 6. Two democratic senators...Mansfield of Montana and Long of Louisiana..joined the seven Republicans members in voting for the appointment. On a voice vote, the committee approved the nomination of Henry J. Taylor as ambassador to Switzerland.

President Eisenhower today nominated Wilson Flake, a career diplomat, as ambassador to the new African republic of Ghana.

The House Education Committee made some progress today on the school bill. It voted...tentatively..to recommend expenditure of 2-billion dollars for school construction over a five-year period. The government would match state funds in a maximum ratio of two to one.

The State Department said today that Special Ambassador James P. Richards is breaking off his mission to the Middle East. Richards has been explaining the Eisenhower Doctrine to countries in the area. The department said he is being recalled to Washington to confer with the President on new foreign aid legislation. Congress has threatened to cut foreign aid funds. Richards is due back next Wednesday...in time to join congressional leaders when they attend a White House conference on foreign aid the following day. This means that in his tour of the Middle East, Richards will not visit Egypt, Syria or Jordan. King Hussein of Jordan has publicly disavowed interest in the Eisenhower Doctrine.

Richards today flew to Israel. And he plans to visit Tunisia and Morocco on his way home. He will have visited 15 countries in all ..including Greece, which today gave the doctrine its full support.

Secretary of Defense Wilson today defended the spending policies of his department. Wilson told a news conference it gives him "a pain" to hear his friends in the United States Chamber of Commerce "squawk" about the high level of defense spending. "Security", he said, "cannot be cheap." And as evidence that the Defense Department already is economizing, he pointed to a reduction of overtime payments. Wilson said overtime is being cut down on all but the highest priority projects, such as guided missiles.

Testimony by two of this country's top military leaders was released today, three to four months after it was given to a committee of Congress. Secretary of the Air Force Quarles warned in his testimony that a single hydrogen missile...launched by an aircraft..is capable of knocking our entire naval task force. General Twining testified that a high-level attack by a single squadron of heavy or medium jet bombers could produce the same results. Naval spokesman said the big carriers would be hard to find and to hit.

The NATO Council meeting opened today in Bonn, Germany. The foreign ministers of the 15 NATO countries are said to have agreed that the West must base its defense on a balance between weapons of the conventional and nuclear types. The ministers also took up the Middle East problem. But the briefing officer refused to report what was said.

A federal grand jury in Tacoma, Washington, today indicted Teamsters President Dave Beck on charges of income tax evasion. The indictment was returned on two counts. The first count charges that in filing a joint return for 1950, Beck and his wife failed to report 89-thousand dollars of their income. Thus he allegedly evaded payment of 56-thousand dollars in a federal tax. In the second count, Beck is accused of helping to prepare a fraudulent return for a real estate association operated by the teamsters union. The Justice Department says the indictment marks the "culmination of intensive investigations begun early in 1954 by the Internal Revenue Service." Federal Judge Geroge Boldt, of Tacoma, has ordered a warrant issued for Beck's arrest. If convicted, he faces a possible maximum sentence of rive years' imprisonment, or a 10-thousand - dollar fine..or both..on each of the two counts.

Two aspects of the new Soviet open skies proposal have caught the attention of Washington observers. Quite apart from its being timed to coincide with the NATO Council meeting, for its usefulness as propaganda, the offer does show changes in Soviet thinking. One change is considered favorable to progress in the disarmament negotiations. The other is not.

The favorable change is not only in the acceptance of the open skies idea but the territory the Kremlin is willing to have photographed from the air. This is Western Siberia. While it is true that there are far fewer military objectives in Western Siberia than in the Western United States, Western Siberia would be the take-off for bombing attacks on the United States over the North Pole. If the purpose of the inspection is to ward off surprise attack - and it certainly was when President Eisenhower first proposed it - then the Kremlin seems to be accepting his concept and not evading it.

That by itself is noteworthy. The Kremlin had ridiculed open skies inspection for two years. But it has linked its conversion to a backward step in regard to ground inspection. It made the stationing of inspectors at air ports and other military centers conditional on an undertaking by the United States not to use nuclear weapons at all. And one might almost say that "this is where we came in." This is the old round-about as to which comes first, disarmament or inspection.

The United States is ready to give up nuclear weapons, but not until disarmament has gone forward in conventional weapons and forces, and been checked and proved by the most thorough inspection system. Then there must come a series of stages on nuclear disarmament. First there must be an agreement not to make nuclear weapons, and inspection must domonstrate that it is being lived up to. Then the nuclear materials that now go ingo weapons must go to peacetime uses under international control. And only when this state is reached are we willing to begin reducing the stockpile of nuclear weapons by turning the energy of weapons into peacetime uses.This reduction of the stockpile then can go on till there are no nuclear weapons left.

The Kremlin knows quite well that this is our program - but when it agrees to open skies inspection to gets the headlines and when it back-tracks by making inspection contingent on our giving up the use of nuclear weapons, so that does not make the headlines, and the maneuver to accept open skies has paid off. It is not being cynical to put it this way. Disarmament negotiations are bound to be the most cautious probings that governments are capable of. There will be many shifts and counter-shifts as the negotiations proceed, and obviously what matters, first of all, is that they proceed. Actually it may be more important that the Kremlin changed its mind about open skies inspection that that it regressed in the matter of ground inspection. The gambit about ground inspection was an old one, and can be reversed again. But the range of the negotiations was widened when the Kremlin supplied maps of the Soviet territory it is willing to have photographed from the air.

Some American officials have a modest confidence that the disarmament talks can get somewhere. They argue that the United States and Soviet Union alike have the most urgent interest in keeping nuclear weapons from expanding from what they are. Neither country wants to see anybody follow Britain's example and go in for Hydrogen bombs. A fourth country in the nuclear race would be the end of such control as the two governments now have. And that might be the end of everything. Since there has to be a stop, the place to stop is where we are now. We can go on later to still more disarmament, but first we must have a standstill of some kind, And an added factor is, that the guided missile race may be going against the Russians. Instead of gambling on being the first to get the 5,000 mile missile they may be willing to settle for a compromise now.

There is some slight encouragement in such speculation. But it may be that it is just such encouragement that the London Economist meant to blast when it warned that too much should not be read into the Russian disarmament moves. "This fall-out of fallacies", it said, "seems to have been set off by a fusion of hopes and fears."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: There are times when trying to reach agreement on disarmament seems a well nigh hopeless task. Spinoza said, "All noble things are as difficult as they are rare." To accept Soviet proposals without close scrutiny would be as mistaken as to despair. Thoreau said, "There is ruin in want of calculation." And that is literally true today.

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., May 3, 1957

This is the news:

The NATO Council tonight ended its two-day meeting in Bonn. A final communique says the Atlantic Alliance "must be in a position to use all available means to meet any attack." It says: "The council noted that Soviet leaders have launched a campaign designed to induce public opinion in various member countries to oppose the modernization of defense forces. The council agreed," the communique continues, "that one of the objects of this campaign was to insure for Soviet forces a monopoly of nuclear weapons on the European Continent." This is a situation, it says, that NATO clearly cannot accept. "Pending an acceptable agreement on disarmament, no power can claim the right to deny to the alliance the possession of the modern arms needed for its defense." In a few minutes, we will switch to Bonn for a direct, first-hand report.

12

President Eisenhower tried today to speed up the congressional action necessary to make the United States a member of the new international atomic energy agency./ Senate ratification is required, and the Foreign Relations Committee is due to take up the treaty on May 10th. Mr. Eisenhower summoned two Republican members of that committee... Knowland of California and Hickenlooper of Iowa... to the White House today [redacted] to urge speedy action. After [redacted] the meeting, Knowland told reporters it is too early to predict the outcome./ It may be necessary, he said, to attach some reservations./ The President himself proposed establishment of the atoms-for-peace agency in a speech before the United Nations General Assembly in December, 1953. Russia already has ratified its membership.

In Congress today, the House Agriculture Committee approved the Administration program for disposal of farm surpluses abroad. But it rejected President Eisenhower's request for authority [redacted] to let Communist satellite states have surplus farm products in exchange for strategic goods. Chairman Cooley indicated Congress may [redacted] finally give Mr. Eisenhower some of the barter authority he wants.

29

The House Appropriations Committee refused to approve an allotment of 50-million dollars for federal flood insurance... although Congress approved the program at its last session. Opponents contended the plans were "too indefinite and costly." The vote to deny the money was 19 to 14.

Yesterday, the nomination of Scott McLeod as ambassador to Ireland was approved by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee... after two days of questioning behind closed doors. The vote to approve was 9 to 6. Today, that secret testimony was released. It shows McLeod told the committee that, four years ago, Secretary of State Dulles almost fired him as a "security risk." McLeod said Dulles called him into his office to ask him about a "leak" in a Washington newspaper, the old Times-Herald. The newspaper reported that McCleod, as security officer in the State Department, had misgivings about the then pending nomination of Charles Bohlen as ambassador to Moscow. The transcript quotes McLeod as testifying, "Mr. Dulles said he had been authorized to discharge me as a security risk because of this leak that appeared, obviously from me. But he decided not to." The term security risk... in this connotation...

46

does not involve Communist ties. It could apply to anyone in several categories who talks too much.

47

President Eisenhower told a regional conference of Republican leaders in Salt Lake City today that the best hope for victory in the 1958 congressional campaign lies in "spreading the gospel of modern Republicanism." As a guide, he recommended the 1956 Republican platform. "In my opinion," he said, "~~that~~ is the kind of Republicanism which, in this day, represents the best interests of our party and of the people of our country." He said there was no point trying to "gloss over" Republican losses in the West in 1956. And the party, he said, needs to find out why these losses took place. Mr. Eisenhower spoke to the meeting by telephone before flying from Washington to his Gettysburg farm.

Former President Truman attacked the Administration today in an off-the-cuff speech. Mr. Truman told an organization favoring public power development... meeting in Washington... that the "tight money" policy, with its high interest rates, is forcing the "little fellow" out of business. And, he said, it contributed to President Eisenhower's record peacetime budget. Mr. Truman said that if atomic power is developed "like the secretary of the treasury has controlled money, they will choke it to death." He said development of atomic energy by private interests is (in his phrase) "the most dangerous thing this country faces."

66

And he denounced Administration handling of the Hell's Canyon project. Mr. Truman charged that licensing a private utility to develop the power of the Snake River amounted to "plunder of a great natural resource that belongs to the people." And allowing that utility a quick tax write-off, he called "an outrageous giveaway---right in line with the Dixon-Yates grab."

The Democratic National Committee opened a three-day meeting today in Washington. Its treasurer... Matthew McCluskey... reported that the Democratic Party is now 660-thousand dollars in the red. If all states met their quotas, he said, the party would have more than enough money to pay all its debts. The committee approved a resolution... calling for statehood for Hawaii and Alaska. But it put off a decision on whether to endorse President Eisenhower's civil rights program.

78

Funeral services for Senator McCarthy will be held Monday in the Senate chamber. Burial will be in Appleton, Wisconsin, on Tuesday. The Senate will meet briefly at noon Monday... following the funeral service... and then adjourn out of respect. Both houses are in recess until Monday.

82

Governor Thomson of Wisconsin... and State Republican Chairman Philip Kuehn...will not decide until after the funeral whether to call a special election to fill the Senate vacancy caused by McCarthy's death. They are expected to meet next Wednesday or Thursday to discuss whether to call the special election, or wait until the regular congressional election in 1958.

Teamsters President Dave Beck surrendered voluntarily today on a charge of income tax evasion... and was released on 5-thousand dollars bond.

The carrier force... attached to the United States 6th Fleet... left Eastern Mediterranean waters and headed for the Central Mediterranean to engage in NATO maneuvers.

85

Winston Churchill today criticized the United Nations attitude toward the Anglo-French invasion of Egypt last fall. The attitude adopted, he said, has not been helpful "either to the free world, or to the cause of peace and prosperity in the Middle East." He said those who opposed the action "may now perhaps have reason to reconsider their opinions." ~~And he praised Sir Anthony Eden's service to his country.~~ He made no direct mention of the United States. Churchill spoke at the annual meeting of the Primrose League, in London. It was his first public address in about a year.

into tape
7:52:15

Now... ~~From~~ For that report on the NATO Council meeting which ended tonight, we switch to my colleague, Ernest Leiser, in Bonn.

Tape runs 4:30
Ends on cue: "--to Edw. R. Murrow
in N.Y."

That was my colleague, Ernest Leiser, reporting ~~on the first~~ from Bonn NATO ~~mm~~ meeting to be held in West Germany.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. ~~Now~~ Now, here is George Bryan.

Obviously, no settlement with Russia is going to be reached overnight. Walter Bedell Smith once said on this score: "We dare not allow ourselves any false sense of security. We must anticipate that the Soviet tactic will be to attempt to wear us down. And we must cultivate firmness and patience to a degree we have never before required."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, May 3, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Now for that report on the NATO Council meeting, which ended tonight, we switch to my colleague, Ernest Leiser in Bonn.

LEISER: Lord Ismay, the wise old Englishman who's now quitting his job as the Secretary General of NATO, offered a warning and an assurance here two days ago, just before this blitz meeting of the Atlantic alliance opened in Bonn. "Don't expect that the fifteen foreign ministers will take far-reaching decisions at this session," he said. "Do expect though that the necessary decisions will be taken by the permanent representatives of NATO in their day-in day-out work at headquarters in Paris." Well, the first part of his admonition, at least, was justified tonight when the NATO Council session ended abruptly after the ministers talked themselves out in only two days instead of the scheduled three. The only decision taken here, so far as we can learn, was the decision not to decide. The most critical item of discussion before NATO was whether or not to arm the continental members of the alliance with atomic weapons, in the face of Soviet threats that Russia would then annihilate them in a war. On this item tonight's communique says only that the "Council will await the results of the studies now in hand by the NATO military authorities, before making up its mind." This negative decision very probably postpones until the year-end session of the Council any action on atomic armament of countries like Western Germany. It does not justify the pessimism of those who expected the NATO allies would be stampeded into abandoning the idea of giving nuclear weapons to the non-atomic powers. But it also far from satisfies those who had argued that if the atom is the only way to deter war, the whole alliance should have it fast.

For the rest, this conference consisted mostly of published pronouncements in favor of, well, peace, harmony, strength, justice. After yesterday's session the ministers had promised to conduct the rest of their talks in secrecy. After about ten minutes this morning, they changed their minds. They were talking about German reunification and, perhaps having come to the conclusion that they couldn't do anything about it, they decided to make public their feelings on the subject. They are all in favor of German unity.

Going down their agenda, the fifteen ministers talked briefly - and on this point secretly - about general disarmament. But their briefs, we hear, were totally inconclusive, and they decided to drop the whole thing pending some word from the disarmament talks with Russia, now going on in London.

They also talked for a short time about the Middle East, but didn't even come close to any concerted decision about what, if anything, they should do on that critical flank of the alliance.

They talked in their communique tonight of the "useful and concrete results," as they put it, obtained by the new machinery of consultation among the allies. But there was no direct discussion of the unilateral action taken by the British in transforming the whole concept of their armed forces in a way that radically affects the whole alliance.

It would be an exaggeration to say that this meeting had been time wasted. There were the usual private talks away from the conference table, conversations between two ministers at a time, of the kind that're almost invariably useful. There were a few productive interchanges, however brief, at the conference table. And as one proud member of the German delegation said "The ministers here could see at first hand the impressive economic vitality of Western Germany," which indeed has to be seen to be fully believed.

However, if as almost all of the ministers seem to say in their set speeches, they met in a time of crisis, they did nothing to resolve the crisis. The day-to-day plotters in the NATO staff in Paris, the ones Lord Ismay was talking about, may come up with something to strengthen the alliance before the next meeting of its top political brass. But it wasn't done here.

Before this session began, the people hereabouts were exuberantly calling this the biggest international meeting in Germany since the Berlin conference of 1878. Amateur historians tonight recollect that the Berlin conference took brilliant diplomatic action, carved up the Balkans, avoided war, and made history. It can be doubted whether the Bonn conference of 1957 will do the same.

This is Ernest Leiser - now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Ernest Leiser, reporting from Bonn.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, May 3, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Now for that report on the NATO Council meeting, which ended tonight, we switch to my colleague, Ernest Leiser in Bonn.

LEISER: Lord Ismay, the wise old Englishman who's now quitting his job as the Secretary General of NATO, offered a warning and an assurance here two days ago, just before this blitz meeting of the Atlantic alliance opened in Bonn. "Don't expect that the fifteen foreign ministers will take far-reaching decisions at this session," he said. "Do expect though that the necessary decisions will be taken by the permanent representatives of NATO in their day-in day-out work at headquarters in Paris." Well, the first part of his admonition, at least, was justified tonight when the NATO Council session ended abruptly after the ministers talked themselves out in only two days instead of the scheduled three. The only decision taken here, so far as we can learn, was the decision not to decide. The most critical item of discussion before NATO was whether or not to arm the continental members of the alliance with atomic weapons, in the face of Soviet threats that Russia would then annihilate them in a war. On this item tonight's communique says only that the "Council will await the results of the studies now in hand by the NATO military authorities, before making up its mind." This negative decision very probably postpones until the year-end session of the Council any action on atomic armament of countries like Western Germany. It does not justify the pessimism of those who expected the NATO allies would be stampeded into abandoning the idea of giving nuclear weapons to the non-atomic powers. But it also far from satisfies those who had argued that if the atom is the only way to deter war, the whole alliance should have it fast.

For the rest, this conference consisted mostly of published pronouncements in favor of, well, peace, harmony, strength, justice. After yesterday's session the ministers had promised to conduct the rest of their talks in secrecy. After about ten minutes this morning, they changed their minds. They were talking about German reunification and, perhaps having come to the conclusion that they couldn't do anything about it, they decided to make public their feelings on the subject. They are all in favor of German unity.

Going down their agenda, the fifteen ministers talked briefly - and on this point secretly - about general disarmament. But their briefs, we hear, were totally inconclusive, and they decided to drop the whole thing pending some word from the disarmament talks with Russia, now going on in London.

They also talked for a short time about the Middle East, but didn't even come close to any concerted decision about what, if anything, they should do on that critical flank of the alliance.

They talked in their communique tonight of the "useful and concrete results," as they put it, obtained by the new machinery of consultation among the allies. But there was no direct discussion of the unilateral action taken by the British in transforming the whole concept of their armed forces in a way that radically affects the whole alliance.

It would be an exaggeration to say that this meeting had been time wasted. There were the usual private talks away from the conference table, conversations between two ministers at a time, of the kind that're almost invariably useful. There were a few productive interchanges, however brief, at the conference table. And as one proud member of the German delegation said "The ministers here could see at first hand the impressive economic vitality of Western Germany," which indeed has to be seen to be fully believed.

However, if as almost all of the ministers seem to say in their set speeches, they met in a time of crisis, they did nothing to resolve the crisis. The day-to-day plotters in the NATO staff in Paris, the ones Lord Ismay was talking about, may come up with something to strengthen the alliance before the next meeting of its top political brass. But it wasn't done here.

Before this session began, the people hereabouts were exuberantly calling this the biggest international meeting in Germany since the Berlin conference of 1878. Amateur historians tonight recollect that the Berlin conference took brilliant diplomatic action, carved up the Balkans, avoided war, and made history. It can be doubted whether the Bonn conference of 1957 will do the same.

This is Ernest Leiser - now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Ernest Leiser, reporting from Bonn.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., May 6, 1957

This is the news:

Premier Segni of Italy resigned tonight, after being in office for 22 months. The resignation came after the Social Democrats quit the coalition cabinet... leaving Segni's Christian Democratic Party without a majority in Parliament. Tomorrow, President Gronchi will start the usual round of conferences with political leaders in search of a new prime minister. Segni and the old cabinet have agreed to serve as caretakers until a new government can be formed.

Secretary of State Dulles conferred in Paris today with French Premier Mollet. Foreign Minister Pineau said a wide range of topics was discussed. Dulles declined to issue a statement... but Pineau said, "We think the present Suez solution is bad."

~~President Eisenhower's special envoy... James P. Richards... arrived in Morocco today for a two-day visit. Richards, who has been explaining the Eisenhower Doctrine to countries of the Middle East, is due back in Washington this week.~~

Israel today celebrated the ninth anniversary of its independence. In Tel Aviv, Prime Minister Ben Gurion reviewed a military parade that included Russian-made tanks, captured in the Sinai campaign. Thirty-six Mystere jet aircraft flew overhead. Ben Gurion told the people of Israel in a radio speech that they must expect 100-thousand new immigrants in the next year. "Bringing in and absorbing this mass immigration," he said, "is now Israel's biggest job."

~~Warsaw newspapers told today of a riot in Jaroslaw, a garrison town in Southeast Poland, in which an undisclosed number of security troops and militiamen were beaten up. A police station was stormed and windows smashed. The newspapers blamed the trouble on "local hooligans", who demonstrated after a soldier was arrested for drunkenness. They indicated the soldier was Polish... and that the incident occurred late last week.~~

In Budapest, it's announced that the Hungarian National Assembly will meet on Thursday for the first time since the October revolt. The puppet premier... Janos Kadar... will give a report. Persons who quit the Assembly or fled the country may also be replaced.

Soviet President Voroshilov was threatened with mob action today when he arrived in Jakarta, the capital of Indonesia, for a two-week state visit. A crowd of anti-Communist demonstrators gathered outside the palace... where Voroshilov was being received... and began throwing stones. Police used tear gas to restore order.

Troops are still patroling the streets of Bogota, the capital of Colombia, where students are protesting the reported plan of President Rojas to succeed himself in defiance of law. The government acknowledges that two persons were killed in rioting yesterday. Today... apparently... the city was quiet. But students at the Jesuit colleges are refusing to go back to school.

Britain today formally proposed advance registration of nuclear test explosions with the United Nations. Britain made the proposal at the five-power disarmament talks in London. It suggested that the Big Three powers start negotiating along this line at once.

In Congress today, the House Education Committee refused to attach an anti-segregation amendment to the school bill. The amendment... offered by Republican Representative Wainwright of New York... would withhold federal money from school districts that refuse to abide by the Supreme Court decision against racial segregation in the public schools. It was rejected by a 16-to-10 vote behind closed doors. Another attempt to tack on the amendment may be made when the measure reaches the House floor.

Funeral services for Senator McCarthy were held today in the Senate chamber. This afternoon, the body was flown to Wisconsin for burial. TOMORROW.

The Supreme Court ruled today that a lawyer may not be forbidden to practice before a state court... either because he was once a Communist, or because of refusal to say whether he had ever been a member of the Communist Party. The ruling was handed down in two opinions affecting the so-called "good moral character" qualification required for the licensing of attorneys in most states.

President Dave Beck and other teamster union officials appeared today before the AFL-CIO ethical practices committee on charges that the union is dominated by corrupt influences. Beck said... at the outset... that he and other members of the teamsters executive board were attending the hearing not to defend themselves but to find out of what precisely they are accused. The ethical practices committee then submitted a 22-page statement detailing the charges. These included Beck's refusal to tell the Senate...on grounds of possible self-incrimination...how he used more than 300-thousand dollars ~~in~~ of union funds. The AFL-CIO committee recognized Beck's constitutional right to invoke the Fifth Amendment, but said, "It does not appear that the union has undertaken, or proposes to undertake, any investigation into whether its president was in fact guilty of personal corruption in the handling of union funds and in the conduct of union affairs." It was also noted in the committee bill of particulars that Sidney Brennan, a union vice president, still held office... although he had been convicted of accepting a 5-thousand-dollar bribe. The hearing was recessed until May 24th to give the union time to prepare an answer. Beck described the charges today as "malicious and unfounded slander."

A Pulitzer Prize was awarded posthumpusly today to Eugene O'Neill for his autographical play, "Long Day's Journey into Night". The biography award went to Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts for his book, "Profiles in Courage". No award was made in the category of the novel. The Pulitzer Prize in journalism went to the Chicago Daily News for exposing fraud in the office of the Illinois state auditor, Orville Hodge.

The prize for international reporting was awarded to Russ Jones of the United Press. James Reston of the New York Times got the prize for national reporting.

Edward R. Murrow: May 6, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

A very considerable part of President Eisenhower's prestige abroad rests on the atoms-for-peace program which he laid before the United Nations Assembly in December 1953. This came to be accepted abroad as proof that this country, the pioneer in the atomic field, is fully alive to its responsibilities for the peaceful development of atomic energy. The statute for the proposed International Atomic Energy Agency was signed by eighty governments last October. The Agency will begin functioning when eighteen of these eighty ratify the statute, if three of the eighteen are among the five atomic powers, that is, the United States, Soviet Union, Britain, France and Canada.

The Soviet Union already has ratified the statute, doing so before our Senate has even got around to discussing it. The hearings on the treaty are not to begin before the Foreign Relations Committee until Friday. As they draw near there is ~~comes the~~ news that Senate ratification is by no means sure, and if it comes may be linked with crippling reservations. Either failure to ratify, or crippling reservations, would be repudiation of President Eisenhower's program.

The failure of the Senate to ratify would not bury the agency. It not only could come into existence without our support, it probably would do so. Then the way would be left open for the Soviet Union to take the lead in providing atoms for peace under international controls.

Presumably the speed with which the Soviet Union ratified the statute has aroused suspicions on the hill. Some Senators think we are giving away too much, or favoring communists too much, and they want a close look at the statute. There is nothing objectionable in a close look. But it should include the fact that if the Senate fails to ratify, that will be handing a victory to the Kremlin. At first the Soviet Union would have nothing to do with the Eisenhower plan. Then it discovered it was losing influence through its hostility and reluctance. Now it is making up for lost time by prompt ratification. Things like that can be done quickly in the Soviet system, where public debate is forbidden and opposition is stifled. ~~But now~~ The very fact that opponents in the Senate can talk and vote against the treaty naturally slows down action. A majority in the Senate and the country may be eager for us to keep world leadership in the field of atoms for peace. But we can turn this leadership over to the Kremlin simply by failing to muster a three-fourths majority for the treaty in the Senate. Singly the opposing elements are not numerous, and added together are undoubtedly still a minority. But they can be enough to beat the treaty.

The opposition comes from a number of factions. It includes extreme isolationists who do not like an international agency with rights of international inspection. It numbers the leading enemies of foreign aid, who think atoms-for-peace is just another gigantic give-away. It also includes some of the leading foes of Communist China, who are afraid that the Chinese Reds will worm their way into the U.N. through the Agency. Probably the best argument for caution is that reactors using atoms for peaceful purposes will be making a by-product of materials useful for war, and in time might be turning out these by-products at unprecedented speed.

The answer to these viewpoints will come out in the course of the hearings. As to international control and inspection, the Administration will count this a gain. Anything that creates the inspection habit, and teaches the practicality of international controls, will help to bring ultimate disarmament, since it hinges on effective inspection. The Administration will show that the atoms supplied by the United States will be leased or sold, not given away. The ultimate cost of the program to this country will be no more than its share of administrative expense. As to the fact that atomic reactors will turn out by-products, ~~under the~~ These ~~statute~~, are to be turned over to the international agency and be stored by the agency. If a nation breaks the rules, it can be punished by withholding all its atomic supplies, which would be a heavy penalty if it relies on atomic power for its industry. As to the Chinese Reds, the Administration doubts that they will be applying for membership now that the Nationalist Chinese have signed the statute. That would be recognizing the existence of "two Chinas", to which the Peiping regime is strongly opposed.

The most telling Administration argument undoubtedly will be that the failure to ratify would be a stinging Eisenhower defeat, opening the way to a big Kremlin victory. And this would be in a field in which President Eisenhower is entitled to most of the credit, and the Kremlin to none of it.

The proposal for an atoms-for-peace agency was made first by President Eisenhower. If it is not ratified by the Senate... and Russia is allowed to take credit... it would be a defeat for American leadership in the world. One would be reminded of George Eliot's line. "And hope," she wrote, "folding its wings, looked backward and became regret."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 6, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.S.T.

This is the ndws:

Premier Segni of Italy resigned tonight, after being in office for 22 months. The resignation came after the Social Democrats quit the coalition cabinet..leaving Segni's Christian Democratic Party without a majority in Parliament. Tomorrow, President Gronchi will start the usual round of conferences with political leaders in search of a new prime minister. Segni and the old cabinet have agreed to serve as caretakers until a new government can be formed.

Secretary of State Dulles conferred in Paris today with French Premier Mollet. Foreign Minister Pineau said a wide range of topics was discussed. Dulles declined to issue a statement..but Pineau said, " We think the present Suez solution is bad."

Israel today celebrated the ninth anniversary of its independence. In Tel Aviv, Prime Minister Ben Gurion reviewed a military parade that included Russian - made tanks, captured in the Sinai campaign. Thirty - six Mystere jet aircraft flew overhead. Ben Gurion told the people of Israel in a radio speech that they must expect 100-thousand new immigrants in the next year. "Bringing in and absorbing this mass immigration", he said, "is now Israel's beggest job."

Soviet President Voroshilov was threatened with mob action today when he arrived in Jakarta, the capital of Indonesia, for a two-week state visit. A crowd of anti-Communist demonstrators gathered outside the palace..where Voroshilov was being received ..and began throwing stones. Police used tear gas to restore order.

Troops are still patroling the streets of Bogota, the capital of Colombia, where students are protesting the reported plan of President Rojas to succeed himself, in defiance of law. The government acknowledges that two persons were killed in rioting yesterday. Today...apparently..the city was quiet. But students at the Jesuit colleges are refusing to go back to school

Britain today formally proposed advance registration of nuclear test explosions with the United Nations. Britain made the proposal at the five-power disarmament talks in London. It suggested that the Big Three powers start negotiation along this line at once.

In Congress today, the House Education Committee refused to attach an anti-segretation amendment to the school bill. The amendment..offered by Republican Representative Wainwright of New York..would withhold federal money from school districts that refuse to abide by the Supreme Court decision against racial segregation in the public schools. It was rejected by a 16 to 10 vote behind closed doors. Another attempt to tack on the amendment may be made when the measure reaches the House floor.

Funeral services for Senator McCarthy were held today in the Senate chamber. This afternoon, the body was flown to Wisconsin for burial, tomorrow.

The Supreme Court ruled today that a lawyer may not be forbidden to practice before a state court...either because he was once a Communist, or because of refusal to say whether he had ever been a member of the Communist Party. The ruling was handed down in two opinions affecting the so-called "good moral character" qualifications required for the licensingof attorneys in most states.

President Dave Beck and other teamster union officials appeared today before the AFL-CIO ethical practices committee on charges that the union is dominated by corrupt influences. Beck said..at the outset..that he and other members of the teamsters executive board were attending the hearing not to defend themselves but to find out of what precisely they are accused. The ethical practices committee then submitted a 22 - page statement detailing the charges. These included Beck's refusal to tell the Senate..on grounds of possible self - incrimination...how he used more than 300-thousand dollars of union funds. The AFL-CIO committee recognized Beck's constitutional right to invoke the Fifth Amendment, but said, " It does not appear that the union has undertaken, or proposes to underdake, any investigation into whether its president was in fact guilty of personal corruption in the handling of union funds and in the conduct of union affairs." It was also noted in the committee bill of particulars that Sidney Brennan, a union vice president, still held office ..although he had been convicted of accepting a 5 - thousand - dollar bribe. The hearing was recessed until May 24th to give the union time to prepare an answer. Beck described the charges as "malicious and unfounded slander. "

A Pulitzer Prize was awarded posthumously today to Eugene O'Neil for his autobiographical play, "Long Day's Journey into Night". The biography award went to Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts for his book, "Profiles in Courage." No award was made in the category of the novel. The Pulitzer Prize in journalism went to the Chicago Daily News for exposing fraud in the office of the Illinois state auditory, Orville Hodge. The prize for international reporting was awarded to Russ Jones of the United Press. James Reston of the New York Times got the prize for national reporting.

A very considerable part of President Eisenhower's prestige abroad rests on the atoms-for-peace program which he laid before the United Nations Assembly in December 1953. This came to be accepted abroad as proof that this country, the pioneer in the atomic field, is fully alive to its responsibilities for the peaceful development of atomic energy. The statute for the proposed International Atomic Energy Agency was signed by eighty governments last October. The Agency will begin functioning when eighteen of these eighty ratify the statute, if three of the eighteen are among the five atomic powers, that is, the United States, Soviet Union, Britain, France and Canada.

The Soviet Union already has ratified the statute, doing so before our Senate has even got around to discussing it. The hearings on the treaty are not to begin before the Foreign Relations Committee until Friday. As they draw near there is news that Senate ratification is by no means sure, and if it comes may be linked with crippling reservations. Either failure to ratify, or crippling reservations, would be repudiation of President Eisenhower's program.

The failure of the Senate to ratify would not bury the agency. It not only could come into existence without our support, it probably would do so. Then the way would be left open for the Soviet Union to take the lead in providing atoms for peace under international controls.

Presumably the speed with which the Soviet Union ratified the statute has aroused suspicions on the hill. Some Senators think we are giving away too much, or favoring communists too much, and they want a close look at the statute. There is nothing objectionable in a close look. But it should include the fact that if the Senate fails to ratify, that will be handing a victory to the Kremlin. At first the Soviet Union would have nothing to do with the Eisenhower Plan. Then it discovered it was losing influence through its hostility and reluctance. Now it is making up for lost time by prompt ratification. Things like that can be done quickly in the Soviet system, where public debate is forbidden and opposition is stifled. The very fact that opponents in the Senate can talk and vote against the treaty naturally slows down action. A majority in the Senate and the country may be eager for us to keep world leadership in the field of atoms for peace. But we can turn this leadership over to the Kremlin simply by failing to muster a three-fourths majority for the threaty in the Senate. Singly the opposing elements are not numerous, and added together are undoubtedly still a minority. But they can be enough to beat the treaty.

The opposition comes from a number of factions. It includes extreme isolationists who do not like an international agency with rights of international inspection. It numbers the leading enemies of foreign aid, who think atoms- for - peace is just another gigantic give-away. It also includes some of the leading foes of Communist China, who are afraid that the Chinese Reds will work their way into the U.N. through the Agency. Probably the best argument for caution is that reactors using atoms for peaceful purposes will be making a by-product of marteriels usefulfor war, and in time might be turning out these by-products at unprecedented speed.

The answer to these viewpoints will come out in the course of the hearings. As to international control and inspection, the Administratdn will count this a gain. Anything that creates the inspection habit, and teaches the practicality of international controls, will help to bring ultimate disarmament, since its hinges on effective inspection. The Administration will show that the atoms supplied by the United States will be leased or sold, not given away. The ultimate cost of the program to this country will be no more than its share of administrative expense. As to the fact that atomic reactors will turn out by - broducts, these are to be turned over to the international agency and be stored by the agency. If a nation breaks the rules, it can be punished by with holding all its atomic supplies, which would be a heavy penalty if it relies on atomic power for its industry. As to the Chinese Reds, the Administration doubts that they will be applying for membership now that the Nationalist Chinese have signed the statute. That would be recognizing the extistence of "two Chinas", to which the Peiping regime is strongly opposed.

The most telling Administration argument undoubtedly will be that the failure to ratify would be a stinging Eisenhower defeat, opening the way to a big Kremlin victory. And this would be in a field in which President Eisenhower is entitled to most of the credit, and the Kremlin to none of it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan,

BRYAN:

MURROW: The proposal for an atoms - for - peace agency was made first by President Eisenhower. If it is not ratified by the Senate..and Russia is allowed to take credit..it would be a defeat for American leadership in the world. One would be reminded of George Eliot's line. "And hope," she wrote, "folding its wings, looked backward and became regret."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., May 7, 1957

This is the news:

Russia today expelled an American diplomat assigned to Moscow. The State Department identified him as Martin Bowe, Jr., second secretary of the United States Embassy. The Soviet Foreign Ministry accused Bowe of "activities incompatible with his status as an accredited diplomat." It gave no details. Last month, the United States expelled a Russian official attached to the Soviet embassy in Washington. Bowe's expulsion is believed to have been in retaliation.

A ~~program for decentralizing Russia's economy~~ was outlined to the Supreme Soviet ~~today by Communist~~ Party Boss ~~Khrushchev. The plan~~ calls for the abolishment ~~of 20 industrial ministries~~ in Moscow... and the setting up of 92 new ~~regional economic~~ councils ~~scattered throughout~~ the

→

~~Soviet Union. (In a few minutes, we will switch to Moscow for a first-hand report).~~

The United States today offered to join other countries in giving advance notice of international movement of troops, as part of an over-all disarmament agreement. The United States also called on Russia to accept a system of control over the export and import of armaments. These proposals were made at the five-power talks in London.

Secretary of State Dulles returned to Washington today from the NATO Council meeting in Bonn. And he immediately reported to the President. Dulles said the NATO countries are willing to accept a "balanced" arms limitation... but only if agreements are verified and backed by adequate inspection and control.

~~British Prime Minister Macmillan conferred with West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer today in Bonn. Their two-and-a-half-hour meeting is said to have concerned problems of Western defense. Tomorrow, their talks will turn to the subject of European unity.~~

White House News Secretary Hagerty said today that President Eisenhower will make a public appeal on behalf of his budget and the foreign aid program. But Hagerty said "no final decision" has been made on how the appeal will be made or when. The decision, he said, probably will be put off until after the President confers with congressional leaders ~~on behalf of his foreign aid program~~ on Thursday. ~~Hagerty told reporters last week that the President was considering the possibility of a radio and television address to the American people.~~ Mr. Eisenhower is expected to defend the aid program... as well as his budget... tomorrow at his news conference. And he plans to send Congress a foreign aid message in about a week.

The House of Representatives today refused to vote 14-million dollars to initiate President Eisenhower's flood insurance program.

Budget Director Brundage advised Congress today not to raise salaries of federal workers this year. Such action, he said, would be inflationary.

And Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey said the quick tax write-off program for industry... if left as it is... will eventually cost the government about 3-billion dollars. Humphrey told the Senate Finance Committee he favors the legislation sponsored by Senator Byrd which would limit the program to industries directly related to national defense. He said he knew nothing about a quick tax write-off for the Idaho Power Company, until he read about it in the newspapers. The company has been licensed to carry out the Hell's Canyon power project.

The Administration today announced qualified approval of the new natural gas bill. The measure would relax federal price controls on natural gas sold in interstate commerce. Charles Kendall, general counsel for the Office of Defense Mobilization, advocated more latitude for the Federal Power Commission in setting a reasonable market price. Kendall testified on behalf of the Administration before the House Commerce Committee.

The House Post Office Committee voted today to raise the cost of mailing a first-class letter to four cents. It also voted to raise the air mail letter rate to seven cents... and the rate for post cards to three cents. In each case, the increase is one cent over the present rate. The committee will meet tomorrow to take action on the Administration request for higher rates on second and third-class mail. Postmaster General Summerfield predicts his department will go more than 600-million dollars in the red in the next fiscal year if increases are not approved.

The AFL-CIO ethical practices committee today began hearings on alleged corruption in the bakery and confectionary workers union. The hearings were held behind closed doors. But charges and counter-charges reportedly were exchanged between officials of the union accused. The hearings have been recessed until May 25th.

General Motors today declined the invitation of United Auto Workers President Walter Reuther for a joint study of plans for a shorter work-week. Reuther suggested such a study to General Motors and five other auto companies, including Ford and Chrysler. G.M. rejected the invitation as a device for seeking to begin contract talks "nearly a year ahead of time." The U.A.W. convention... last winter... set a shorter work-week and increased take-home pay as its next major goal.

In New York tonight, gambler Frank Costello was sentenced to serve 30 days in jail... after he refused to testify before a grand jury investigating an attempt on his life.

Jim Ryan.

A program for decentralizing Russia's economy was outlined to the Supreme Soviet today by Communist Party Boss Khrushchev. For that story, we switch now to my colleague, Daniel Schorr, in Moscow.

Tape runs 5:28
Ends on cue: "Now back to Edw. R. Murrow in Detroit."

That was the account of my colleague, Daniel Schorr, on Khrushchev's three-hour speech today before the Supreme Soviet, which is Russia's version of parliament. ~~I believe he said~~ Khrushchev referred to what happened today as "a striking example of Soviet democracy." ~~This may or may not be,~~ ~~but~~ the reference to automation ~~was enough to show that although the~~ Russians may be decentralizing their economy, they mean to leave no ~~slack.~~

Remains to be proved.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

This program originated tonight at WJR, Detroit, which is celebrating its 35th year on the air. Detroit has been called the capital of the auto industry. And, as such, it has done much to revolutionize the American way of life. William Allen White described the production line as bringing "a kind of democracy to transportation, without marching cohorts, or banners, or Congress passing a single law."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, May 7, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... A program for decentralizing Russia's economy was outlined to the Supreme Soviet today, by Communist party boss Khrushchev. For that story we switch now to my colleague, Daniel Schorr, in Moscow.

SCHORR: This is about as close to a special session as the Supreme Soviet, Russia's version of a parliament, has ever come. On the agenda one main item: party chief Khrushchev's proposal for a decentralization of Soviet industry, abolishing about thirty of the ministries that represent almost self-contained industrial empires, moving from a vertical to a geographical organization, vesting the main economic power in ninety-two special regions. No one can say that it hasn't been thoroughly discussed. Since Khrushchev first propounded the outlines of the new plan, a little more than a month ago, more than half a million meetings have been held, attended by almost forty-one million persons who listened to more than two million speeches. And while all the speeches, as far as I know, were devoted to how to carry out the plan, with none challenging the promises of the plan, Khrushchev boasted today that this was a striking example of Soviet democracy.

Be that as it may, the thirteen hundred deputies, gathered in joint session, listened quietly and respectfully while Khrushchev spoke for something more than three hours, spelling out how the plan will work. Before them was a draft bill to carry it out, which they will undoubtedly approve unanimously before this session is finished, although the discussion will probably take the rest of this week.

It was a sober, business-like Khrushchev, who appeared today in a gray suit on the rostrum of the Kremlin. No rumbling or garrulity. He stuck close to his prepared text. Only once or twice did he permit himself an ad lib. Once, when the deputies applauded the idea of moving the coal ministry from Moscow to the mining center of Kemalevel, he said "I think the people applauding this are not from the ministry."

Khrushchev was at pains to deny the interpretation by some western observers that the reorganization signified an economic crisis. Said Khrushchev, "The Soviet economy will never go through any crisis. Crises just aren't allowed under socialism." The picture he painted was of a buoyant Soviet economy, which has made tremendous advances but which now needs a new form of organization for greater efficiency.

But he discussed frankly what's wrong with the Soviet economy now. The thirty industrial ministries have built their own empires, each trying to be self-contained; each ministry tries to make everything it needs, sometimes by semi-artisan methods. Russia built a more modern factory for China than it built for itself in one case. One ministry imports pre-fab housing elements into Krasnojask, while Krasnojask makes pre-fab elements to be sent elsewhere. Two factories on the same terrains built walls between them because they're under separate ministries. And over all this a huge and wasteful army of inspectors watching production, producing nothing. The danger, as each ministry duplicates the work and research of the other, Russia may lag behind in development. The goal, to catch up with the United States, the most advanced capitalist power. But this needs specialization and industrial cooperation. This is the age of automation and Russia will lag in automation if each little industrial empire acts like a country unto itself. The cure, thirty industrial ministries will be broken up. Those retained - like aircraft construction and shipbuilding and chemicals - will shift from operating to staff functions and they'll have to move closer to the production centers. Georgi

Malenkov's Ministry of Electric Power Stations will be retained. So will Mikhail Pervukhin's Ministry of Medium Machine Building. Both will absorb functions of other ministries. For the rest, management of production will be shifted to economic regions, ninety-two of them. Factories will be able to make contracts with other factories instead of first going through massive correspondence with Moscow. Factory managers will be encouraged to show initiative. But while production will be decentralized, there will still be centralized planning. At the apex of the pyramid stands the State Planning Commission with its newly-appointed chief, Joseph Kuzmin, the unknown who suddenly catapulted to one of the topmost positions in the Soviet hierarchy.

But if vertical concentration has produced abuses, geographical concentration has its dangers too. And Khrushchev warned against them today. He said the State Planning Commission must nip in the bud any attempt to use capital investment to build a closed economy.

Lest anyone think that all this is a sign of weakness Khrushchev ended his speech with a bold perception. He said "a new Communist world is arising that makes the world of capitalist vultures quiver with fear." One thing tonight is clear: the future of communism will be decided not by maneuvers over Jordan or Egypt, not by peace offensives, but in the factories of Russia.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in Detroit.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, May 7, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... A program for decentralizing Russia's economy was outlined to the Supreme Soviet today, by Communist party boss Khrushchev. For that story we switch now to my colleague, Daniel Schorr, in Moscow.

SCHORR: This is about as close to a special session as the Supreme Soviet, Russia's version of a parliament, has ever come. On the agenda one main item: party chief Khrushchev's proposal for a deconcentration of Soviet industry, abolishing about thirty of the ministries that represent almost self-contained industrial empires, moving from a vertical to a geographical organization, vesting the main economic power in ninety-two special regions. No one can say that it hadn't been thoroughly discussed. Since Khrushchev first propounded the outlines of the new plan, a little more than a month ago, more than half a million meetings have been held, attended by almost forty-one million persons who listened to more than two million speakers. And while all the speeches, as far as I know, were devoted to how to carry out the plan, with none challenging the promises of the plan, Khrushchev boasted today that this was a striking example of Soviet democracy.

Be that as it may, the thirteen hundred deputies, gathered in joint session, listened quietly and respectfully while Khrushchev spoke for something more than three hours, spelling out how the plan will work. Before them was a draft bill to carry it out, which they will undoubtedly approve unanimously before this session is finished, although the discussion will probably take the rest of this week.

It was a sober, business-like Khrushchev, who appeared today in a gray suit on the rostrum of the Kremlin. No rambling or garrulity. He stuck close to his prepared text. Only once or twice did he permit himself an ad lib. Once, when the deputies applauded the idea of moving the coal ministry from Moscow to the mining center of Kenelovel, he said "I think the people applauding this are not from the ministry."

Khrushchev was at pains to deny the interpretation by some Western observers that the reorganization signified an economic crisis. Said Khrushchev, "The Soviet economy will never go through any crisis. Crises just aren't allowed under socialism." The picture he painted was of a buoyant Soviet economy, which has made tremendous advances but which now needs a new form of organization for greater efficiency.

But he discussed frankly what's wrong with the Soviet economy now. The thirty industrial ministries have built their own empires, each trying to be self-contained; each ministry tries to make everything it needs, sometimes by semi-artisan methods. Russia built a more modern factory for China than it built for itself in one case. One ministry imports pre-fab housing elements into Krasnojask, while Krasnojask makes pre-fab elements to be sent elsewhere. Two factories on the same terrains built walls between them because they're under separate ministries. And over all this a huge and wasteful army of inspectors watching production, producing nothing. The danger, as each ministry duplicates the work and research of the other, Russia may lag behind in development. The goal, to catch up with the United States, the most advanced capitalist power. But this needs specialization and industrial cooperation. This is the age of automation and Russia will lag in automation if each little industrial empire acts like a country unto itself. The cure, thirty industrial ministries will be broken up. Those retained - like aircraft construction and shipbuilding and chemicals - will shift from operating to staff functions and they'll have to move closer to the production centers. Georgi

Malenkov's Ministry of Electric Power Stations will be retained. So will Mikhail Pervukhin's Ministry of Medium Machine Building. Both will absorb functions of other ministries. For the rest, management of production will be shifted to economic regions, ninety-two of them. Factories will be able to make contracts with other factories instead of first going through massive correspondence with Moscow. Factory managers will be encouraged to show initiative. But while production will be deconcentrated, there will still be centralized planning. At the apex of the pyramid stands the State Planning Commission with its newly-appointed chief, Joseph Kuznin, the unknown who suddenly catapulted to one of the topmost positions in the Soviet hierarchy.

But if vertical concentration has produced abuses, geographical concentration has its dangers too. And Khrushchev warned against them today. He said the State Planning Commission must nip in the bud any attempt to use capital investment to build a closed economy.

Lest anyone think that all this is a sign of weakness, Khrushchev ended his speech with a bold peroration. He said "a new Communist world is arising that makes the world of capitalist vultures quiver with fear." One thing tonight is clear: the future of communism will be decided not by maneuvers over Jordan or Egypt, not by peace offensives, but in the factories of Russia.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in Detroit.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 7, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Russia today expelled an American diplomat assigned to Moscow. The State Department identified him as Martin Bowe, Jr., second secretary of the United States Embassy. The Soviet Foreign Ministry accused Bowe of "activities incompatible with his status as an accredited diplomat." It gave no details. Last month, the United States expelled a Russian official attached to the Soviet embassy in Washington. Bowe's expulsion is believed to have been in retaliation.

The United States today offered to join other countries in giving advance notice of international movement of troops as part of an over-all disarmament agreement. The United States also called on Russia to accept a system of control over the export and import of armaments. These proposals were made at the five-power talks in London.

Secretary of State Dulles returned to Washington today from the NATO Council meeting in Bonn. And he immediately reported to the President. Dulles said tha NATO countries are willing to accept a "balanced" arms limitation.. but only if agreements are verified and backed by adequate inspection and control.

White House News Secretary Hagerty said today that President Eisenhower will make a public appeal on behalf of his budget and the foreign aid program. But Hagerty said "no final decision" has been made on how the appeal will be made or when. The decision, he said, probably will be put off until after the President confers with Congressional leaders on Thursday. Mr. Eisenhower is expected to defend the aid program,.as well as his budget,.tomorrow at his news conference. And he plans to send Congress a foreign aid message in about a week.

The House of Representatives today refused to vote 14 - million dollars to initiate President Eisenhower's flood insurance program.

Budget Director Brundage advised Congress today not to raise salaries of federal workers this year. Such action, he said, would be inflationary.

And Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey said the quick tax write - off program for industry..if left as it is..will eventually cost the government about 3 - billion dollars. Humphrey told the Senate Finance Committee he favors the legislation sponsored by Senator Byrd which would limit the program to industries directly related to national defense. He said he knew nothing about a quick tax write - off for the Idaho Power Company, until he read about it in the newspapers. The company has been licensed to carry out the Hell's Canyon power project.

The Administration today announced qualified approval of the new natural gas bill. The measures would relax federal price controls on natural gas sold in interstate commerce. Charles Kendall, general counsel for the Office of Defense Mobilization, advocated more latitude for the Federal Power Commission in setting a reasonable market price. Kendall testified on behalf of the Administration before the House Commerce Committee.

The House Post Office Committee voted today to raise the cost of mailing a first - class letter to four cents. It also voted to raise the air mail letter rate to seven cents..and the rate for post cards to three cents. In each case, the increase is one cent over the present rate. The committee will meet tomorrow to take action on the Administration request for higher rates on second and third - class mail. Postmaster General Summerfield predicts his department will go more than 600-million dollars in the red in the next fiscal year if increases are not approved.

The AFL-CIO ethical practices committee today began hearings on alleged corruption in the bakery and confectionary workers union. The hearings were held behind closed doors. But charges and counter - charges reportedly were exchanged between officials of the union accused. The hearings have been recessed until May 25th.

General Motors today declined the invitation of the United Auto Workers President Walter Reuther for a joint study of plans for a shorter work -week. Reuther suggested such a study to General Motors and five other auto companies, including Ford and Chrysler. G.M. rejected the invitation as a device for seeking to begin contract talks "nearly a year ahead of time." The U.A.W. convention..last winter..set a shorter work- week and increased take-home pay as its mext major goal.

In New York tonight, gambler Frank Costello was sentenced to serve 30 days in jail..after he refused to testify before a grand jury investigating an attempt on his life.

A program for decentralizing Russia's economy was outlined to the Supreme Soviet today by Communist Paryy Boss Khrushchev. For that story, we switch now to my colleague, Daniel Schorr, in Moscow.

SCHORR: This is about as close to a special session as the Supreme Soviet, Russia's version of parliament, has ever come. On the agenda one main item: party chief Khrushchev's proposal for a deconcentration of Soviet industry, abolishing about thirty of the ministries that represent almost self-contained industrial empires, moving from a vertical to a geographical organization, vesting the main economic power in ninety - two special regions. No one can say that it hadn't been thoroughly discussed. Since Khrushchev first propounded the outlines of the new plan, a little more than a month ago, more than half a million meetings have been held, attended by almost forty - one million persons wholistened to more than two million speakers. And while all the speeches, as far as I know, were devoted to how to carry out the plan, with none challenging the promises of the plan, Khrushchev boasted today that this was a striking example of Soviet democracy.

Be that as it may, the thirteen hundred deputies, gathered in joint session, listened quietly and respectfully while Khrushchev spoke for something more than three hours, spelling out how the plan will work. Before them was a draft bill to carry it out, which they will undoubtedly approve unanimously before this session is finished, although the discussion will probably take the rest of this week.

It was a sober, business - like Khrushchev, who appeared today in a gray suit on the rostrum of the Kremlin. No rambling or garrulity. He stuck close to his prepared text. Only once or twice did he permit himself an ad lib. Once, when the deputies applauded the idea of moving the coal ministry from Moscow the the mining center of Kenelovel, he said, "I think the people applauding this are not from the ministry."

Khrushchev was at pains to deny the interpretation by some Western observers that the reorganization signified an economic crisis. Said Khrushchev, "The Soviet economy will never go through any crisis. Crises just aren't allowed under socialism." The picture he painted was of a buoyant Soviet economy, which was made tremendous advances but which now needs a new form of organization for greater efficiency.

But he discussed frankly what's wrong with the Soviet economy now. The thirty industrial ministries have built their own empires, each trying to be self - contained; each ministry tries to make everything it needs, sometimes by semi-artisan methods. Russia build a more modern factory for China than it built for itself in one case. One ministry imports pre-fab housing elements to be sent elsewhere. Two factories on the same terrains built walls between them because they're under separate ministries. And over all this a huge and wasteful army of inspectors watching production, producing nothing. The danger, as each ministry duplicates the work and research of the other, Russia may lag behind in development. The goal, to catch up with the United States the most advanced captialist power. But this needs specialization and industrial cooperation. This is the age of automation and Russia will lag in automation if each little industrial empire acts like a country unto itself. The cure, thirty industrial ministries will be broken up. Those retained - like aircraft construction and shipbuilding and chemicals - will shift from operating to staff functions and they'll have to move closer to the production centers. Georgi Malenkov's Ministry of Electric Power Stations will be retained. So will Mikhail Pervukhin's Ministry of Medium Machine Building. Both will absorb functions of other ministries. For the rest, management of production will be shifted to economic regions, ninety -two of them. Factories will be able to make contracts with other factories instead of first going through massive correspondence with Moscow. Factory managers will be encouraged to show initiative. But while production will be deconcentrated, there will still be centralized planning. At the apex of the pyramid stands the State Planning Commission with its newly - appointed chief, Joseph Kuznin, the unknown who suddenly catapulted to one of the topmost positions in the Soviet hierarchy.

But if vertical concentration has produced abuses, geographical concentration has its dangers too. And Khrushchev warned against them today. He said the State Planning Commission must nip in the bud any attempt to use capital investment to build a closed economy.

Lest anyone think that all this is a sign of weakness, Khrushchev ended his speech with a bold peroration. He said " a new Communist world is arising that makes the world of capitalist vultures quiver with fear." One thing tonight is clear: the future of communism will be decided not by maneuvers over Jordan of Egypt, not by peace offensives but in the factories of Russia.

And now back to Edward R. Murrow in Detroit.

MURROW: That was the account of my colleague, Daniel Schorr, on Khrushchev's three - hour speech today before the Supreme Soviet, which is Russia's version of Parliament.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: This program originated tonight at WJR, Detroit, which is celebrating its 35th year on the air. Detroit has been called the capital of the auto industry. And, as such, it has done much to revolutionize the American way of live. William Allen White described the production line as bringing "a kind of democracy to transportation, without marching cohorts, or banners, or Congress passing a single law."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., May 8, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that world tension will have to ease "very, very greatly", before any deep cuts can be made in federal spending. He told his news conference, that present expenditures for defense are necessary... and that money spent on foreign aid, and the State Department, is no less vital in waging peace. Mr. Eisenhower told reporters that he and Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey agree on financial policy. He indicated Humphrey may soon leave the cabinet... but noted this is something he has been trying to do for two years. When asked whether Humphrey's successor might ease the "tight-money" policy, Mr. Eisenhower stated bluntly: "The monetary policy of this country is mine." He said he is still planning to discuss the budget on radio and television... but that it may be necessary for him to make two talks, instead of one, because of the complicated nature of the problem.

→

Before the news conference, Mr. Eisenhower met with Republican congressional leaders at the White House. Postmaster General Summerfield warned the Republican leaders that his department needs more than the three and a quarter billion dollars requested. And, he said, if Congress fails to restore the 58-million-dollar cut voted by the House, it will be necessary to start cutting down on service on July first. This afternoon, a Senate appropriations subcommittee voted to restore 32-million dollars of the cut. And the House Post Office Committee approved higher rates on third-class mail... consisting mostly of advertising circulars and catalogs. ~~Yesterday, it approved a one-cent increase for regular first-class and air mail letters and post cards.~~

The House Education Committee voted today to slash half a billion dollars from the Administration school construction program. As the measure now stands, it provides one and a half billion dollars in federal aid over the next five years. ~~The vote today dealt only with the amount of money. A committee vote on the entire bill is due tomorrow.~~

Russia today rejected the Western proposal that the United Nations be given advance notice of all nuclear weapons tests. The Soviet delegate at the London disarmament meeting said he could not support the proposal because... in his words... "it takes us no closer to a suspension of hydrogen bomb tests." President Eisenhower said today... at his news conference... that the United States is studying Russia's latest plan for mutual air inspection. Russia offered to allow air inspection of Siberia, if the United States would allow inspection of Alaska and the Western United States.

British Prime Minister Macmillan and West German Chancellor Adenauer tonight ended their private talks in Bonn. So far, no communique has been issued. A German source says Macmillan showed "great understanding" of the problem of German unification... and that he and Macmillan reached full agreement on the significance of Russia's latest diplomatic moves. ~~The problems of European defense and integration also were discussed.~~

The government announced today that it is establishing 12 new routes for airliners flying non-stop between the East and West coasts. The plan is designed to improve air safety. Under it, transcontinental planes would... in effect... be placed in "controlled air space." They would fly specially designated routes, monitored by federal air traffic control centers, and be equipped with electronic navigation aids.

Secretary of Defense Wilson today ordered pay raises for about 350-thousand technicians in the armed forces. Wilson acted on the recommendation of a special manpower committee... headed by Ralph J. Cordiner, president of General Electric. The pay-increases range from 12 to 50 dollars a month. No authorization is required from Congress to put them in effect. Other committee recommendations do call for congressional action, including payment of lump-sum bonuses to reserve officers, who stay on active duty. The purpose of the "proficiency pay" program is to keep technical personnel... such as radar experts... from leaving the armed forces for private industry. Wilson says ~~it will make for a more efficient operation within the military budget proposed for the next fiscal year.~~ A further reduction ~~in the size of the armed forces is also~~ contemplated.

Teamsters President Dave Beck returned to the Senate rackets hearing today, and again refused to testify on grounds of possible self-incrimination. A more cooperative witness was Stewart Krieger, a Seattle accountant. Krieger said Beck used union funds, to pay him for working for two liquor distributing firms. He said he "understood" that Beck, or his family, had an interest in the two companies.

~~In Detroit today, the Chrysler Corporation filed a 5-million-dollar damage suit against Local 212 of the United Auto Workers Union. The suit is the outgrowth of a series of work stoppages in Chrysler's body stamping division. The company accuses the local of trying to interfere with the movement of equipment from Detroit to a new plant in Ohio. And it has appealed to U.A.W. President Reuther to direct the local "to cease its obstructive and illegal activities."~~

President Diem of Vietnam arrived in Washington today for high-level talks. President Eisenhower met Diem at the airport and praised his "great courage and statesmanship." Diem said most of the credit for what he called "the miracle of Vietnam" belongs to the Vietnamese people. "The history of the last 30 months," he said, "is a shining example of what faith, determination and solidarity can do to strengthen freedom in the world."

Vice Admiral Ingersoll, commander of the U.S. 7th Fleet, told a news conference today that "advance elements" of a Matador guided-missile unit already have arrived on Formosa. The Matador has a range of several hundred miles and can carry an atomic warhead. Ingersoll said the unit is being stationed on Formosa "to deter Communist aggression and increase our defense capabilities in case aggression does occur." ~~Red Chinese official newspaper, Peiping People's Daily, says guided missiles will not deter the Communists from "peaceful liberation" of the island.~~

Edward R. Murrow: May 8, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

27782

Two developments that affect our relations with Communist China are in the news. One is that the air force has established a unit on Formosa capable of firing a guided atomic missile several hundred miles inside the China mainland. The other is that the American concessions to our allies for an increase in their trade with Communist China have fallen short of their desires and may lead to the breakdown of the present control system.

The timing of the two developments certainly suggests a sharpening of our policy toward Red China. But the two developments do not necessarily belong together and may have fallen in the same week by coincidence. As to trade, we have not sharpened our policy. We already allow no American trade with Red China and will continue to allow none. But our Allies want to increase their trade, notably Britain and Japan. They want the business, and they also want to see Far Eastern tensions relaxed. We had given them to understand that we would agree to an expansion of their trade. But the notes we sent to the governments in the voluntary control system gave some of them quite a shock. We did propose that 160 items now on the forbidden list be transferred to the free list. But we also proposed to tighten the restricted list, and the net effect of our proposals would not be to allow much more trade. The issue is to be debated at the meeting of the fourteen governments involved, to be held in a few days in Paris, and our note may be stiffer than what we are prepared to take in negotiations. But Britain and Japan are reported to be in a mood to quit the control system and go their own way, which would be a serious setback to Allied unity. But that, too, may be said to influence negotiations.

But if our trade policy toward Red China is no stiffer, the stationing of an atomic missile unit on Formosa does step up our military strength. And it can be argued either way, that this is an increase in defensive power, or an increase in striking power. The Pentagon has been quoted as saying that we are doing no more than extending to the Chinese Nationalists the advantages offered to Britain. Britain regards the guided missiles it is going to get as no more than a deterrent force.

The analogy is not one to press too far. Britain is within guided missile range of the Soviet Union and its East Europen satellites, also from missiles fired from submarines. If Britain can retaliate in kind, it believes the chances of being attacked are greatly reduced. But the Chinese Communists, so far as we know, do not have guided missiles for attack on Formosa, and probably do not have atomic weapons for such an attack. They do have the policy of uniting Formosa to the mainland.

The missile unit now stationed in Formosa is the Matador, with a range of five hundred miles. The mainland is about 100 miles off, and the weapon can be regarded first of all as capable of knocking out the Communist airfields along the coast, from which an attack on Formosa would be staged, and this would be a defensive operation. But the missile could go much further and do terrible damage to Chinese cities, so the Communists are sure to regard it as an offensive weapon.

The Chinese Nationalists have never given up publicly their purpose of going back to the mainland and overthrowing the communist regime. On March 2, Chiang Kai Shek told visiting American newsmen: "All American aid I put to one use - to liberate our people on the mainland." He said "Yes" when asked whether his military forces, weapons, air power and landing craft would be able to launch an invasion. And he called his forces "at a peak for the invasion of the mainland."

Washington tolerantly understands that Chiang has to say things like that to appear consistent and keep his power. But Washington carefully keeps Chiang under wraps. He cannot invade the mainland without our consent, and could accomplish nothing there without our far-reaching assistance. Peiping knows that. It also has been convinced that President Eisenhower does not have a policy of building up Chiang for a major war. Now the Matador missile is raising doubts, and the doubts may bring military counter-measures. The Matador certainly will not lessen tensions. Already the guided missiles are being used in Peiping's propaganda, not aimed at us, but at our friends in Southeast Asia, where it will have some effect. Peiping again asserts its policy is to regain Formosa, but it again says "with peaceful means". Certainly Peiping -- and others in that area -- feel that things are again warming up, not cooling off.

Word for Today

The United States regards the stationing of the Matador missile on Formosa as a defensive measure. And the Chinese Communists, on the other side of the channel, are bound to regard the action as offensive. ~~Much depends on the point of view.~~ Mohammed said actions will be judged according to intentions. In this instance, the United States seeks to write out its intent for all to see.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 8, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said today that world tension will have to ease "very,very greatly" before any deep cuts can be made in federal spending.

He told his news conference that present expenditures for defense are necessary...and that money spend on foreign aid and the State Department is no less vital in waging peace. Mr. Eisenhower told reporters that he and Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey agree on financial policy. He indicated Humphrey may soon leave the cabinet...but noted this is something he has been trying to do for two years. When asked whether Humphrey's successor might ease the "tight money" policy, Mr. Eisenhower stated bluntly" The monetary policy of this country is mine." He said he is still planning to discuss the budget on radio and television...but that it may be necessary for him to make two talks instead of one, because of the complicated nature of the problem.

Before the news conference, Mr. Eisenhower met with Republican congressional leaders at the White House. Postmaster General Summerfield warned the Republican leaders that his department needs more than the three and a quarter billion dollars requested. And, he said, if Congress fails to restore the 58-million - dollar cut voted by the House, it will be necessary to start cutting down on service on July first. This afternoon, a Senate appropriations subcommittee voted to restore 32 - millondollars of the cut. And the House Post Office Committee approved higher rates on third - class mail...consisting mostly of the advertising circulars and catalogs.

The House Education Committee voted today to slash half a billion dollars from the Administration school construction program. As the measure now stands,it provides one and a half billion dollars in federal aid for the next five years.

Russia today rejected the Western proposal that the United Sations be given advance notice of all nuclear weapons tests. The Soviet delegate at the London disarmament meeting said he could not support the proposal because.. in his words..."it takes us no closer to a suspension of the hydrogen bomb tests." President Eisenhower said today..at his news conference..that the United States is studying Russia's latest plan for mutual aid inspection. Russia offered to allow air inspection of Siberia, if the United States would allow inspection of Alaska and the Western United States.

British Prime Minister Macmillan and West German Chancellor Adenauer tonight ended their private talks in Bonn. So far, no communique has been issued. A German source says Macmillan showed "great underatanding" of the problem of German unification...and that he and Macmillan reached full agreement on the significance of Russia's latest diplomatic moves.

The government announced today that it is establishing 12 new routes for airliners flying non-stop between the East and West coasts. The plan is designed to improve air safety. Under it, transcontinental planes would..in effect. ...be placed in "controlled air space." They would fly specially designated routes monitored by federal air traffic control centers and be equipped with electronic navigation aids.

Secretary of Defense Wilson today ordered pay raised for about 350-thousand technicians in the armed forces. Wilson acted on the recommendation of a special manpower committee headed by Ralph J. Cordiner, president of General Electric. . The pay - increases range from 12 to 50 dollars a month. No authorization is required from Congress to put them in effect. Other committee recommendations do call for congressional action, including payment of lump-sum bonuses to reserve officers who stay on active duty. The purpose of the "proficiency pay" program is to keep technical personnel..such as radar experts ..from leaving the aremd forces for private industry.

Teamsters President Dave Back returned to the Senate rackets hearing today and again refused to testify on grounds of possible self - incrimination. A more cooperative witness was Stewart Krieger, a Seattle accountant. Krieger said Beck used union funds to pay him for working for two liquor distributing firms. He said he "understood" that Beck or his family had an interest in the two companies.

President Diem of Vietnam arrived in Washington today for high-level talks. President Eisenhower met Diem at the airport and praised his "great courage and statesmanship." Diem said most of the credit for what he called "the miracle of Vietnam" belongs to the Vietnamese people. "The history of the last 30 months", he said, "is a shining example of what faith, determination and solidarity can do to strengthen freedom in the world."

Vice Admiral Ingersoll, commander of the U.S. 7th Fleet, told a news conference today that "advance elements" of a Matador guided - missile unit already have arrived on Formosa. The Matador has a range of several hundred miles and can carry an atomic warhead. Ingersoll said the unit is being stationed on Formosa "to deter Communist aggression and increase our defense capabilities in case aggression does occur."

Two developments that affect our relations with Communist China are in the news. One is that the air force has established a unit on Formosa capable of firing a guided atomic missile several hundred miles inside the China mainland. The other is that the American concessions to our allies for an increase in their trade with Communist China have fallen short of their desires and may lead to the breakdown of the present control system.

The timing of the two developments certainly suggests a sharpening of our policy toward Red China. But the two developments do not necessarily belong together, and may have fallen in the same week by coincidence. As to trade, we have not sharpened our policy. We already allow no American trade with Red China and will continue to allow none. But our allies want to increase their trade, notably Britain and Japan. They want the business, and they also want to see Far Eastern tensions relaxed. We had given them to understand that we would agree to an expansion of their trade. But the notes we sent to the governments in the voluntary control system gave some of them quite a shock. We did propose that 160 items now on the forbidden list be transferred to the free list. But we also proposed to tighten the restricted list, and the net effect of our proposals would not be to allow much more trade. The issue is to be debated at the meeting of the fourteen governments involved, to be held in a few days in Paris, and our note may be stiffer than what we are prepared to take in negotiations. But Britain and Japan are reported to be in a mood to quit the control system and go their own way, which would be a serious setback to Allied unity. But that, too, may be said to influence negotiations.

But if our trade policy toward Red China is no stiffer, the stationing of an atomic missile unit on Formosa does step up our military strength. And it can be argued either way, that this is an increase in defensive power or an increase in striking power. The Pentagon has been quoted as saying that we are doing no more than extending to the Chinsse Nationalists the advantages offered to Britain. Britain regards the guided missiles it is going to get as no more than a deterrent force.

The analogy is not one to press too far. Britain is within guided missile range of the Soviet Union and its East European satellites, also from missiles fired from submarines. If Britain can retaliate in kind, it believes the chances of being attacked are greatly reduced. But the Chinese Communists, so far as we know, do not have guided missiles for attack on Formosa, and probably do not have atomic weapons for such an attack. They do have the policy of uniting Formosa to the mainland.

The missile unit now stationed in Formosa is the Matador, with a range of five hundred miles. The mainland is about 100 miles off, and the weapon can be regarded first of all as capable of knocking out the Communist airfields along the coast, from which an attack on Formosa would be staged, and this would be a defensive operation. But the missile could go much further and do terrible damage to Chinese cities, so the Communists are sure to regard it as an offensive weapon.

The Chinese Nationalists have never given up publicly their purpose of going back to the mainland and overthrowing the communist regime. On March 2, Chiang Kai Shek told visiting American newsmen: "All American aid I put to one use.- to liberate our people on the mainland." He said "Yes" when asked whether his military forces, weapons, air power and landing craft would be able to launch the invasion of the mainland."

Washington tolerantly understands that Chiang has to say things like that to appear consistent and keep his power. But Washington carefully keeps Chiang under wraps. He cannot invade the mainland without our consent, and could accomplish nothing there without our far-reaching assistance. Peiping knows that. It also has been convinced that President Eisenhower does not have a policy of building up Chiang for a major war. Now the Matador missile is raising doubts, and the doubts may bring military counter - measures. Certainly Peiping - and others in that area - feel that things are again warming up, not cooling off.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The United States regards the stationing of the Matador missile on Formosa as a defensive measure. And the Chinese Communists, on the other side of the channel, are bound to regard the action as offensive. Mohammed said actions will be judged according to intentions. In this instance, the United States seeks to write out its intent for all to see.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., May 9, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower cut his foreign aid program today by 520-million dollars. / This reduces the foreign aid budget to 3-billion, 880-million dollars for the next fiscal year, starting July first. / Mr. Eisenhower announced the cut, at a special meeting of congressional leaders at the White House. He is quoted... by those present... as saying the 520-million dollars will be saved through "better management and screening." / Any cut beyond that, he warned, could seriously threaten world peace. / Representative Cannon, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said after the hour and a half meeting, that the President "spoke more decisively, more convincingly, than I have ever heard him." But Chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services Committee told reporters he thought 2-billion, 400-million dollars for foreign aid would be "wholly adequate". (That's more than a billion dollars under President Eisenhower's rock-bottom figure). And Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said if better management and screening could save 520-million dollars, perhaps other savings can be found. Republican Leader Knowland said he expects the revised program to be approved "substantially" in its present form. But he said this doesn't mean Congress may not come up with a different figure.

→

The White House conference was attended by former Representative Richards, who recently returned from explaining the Eisenhower Doctrine to 15 countries in the Middle East. Tonight, Richards will give a report on his trip on radio and television. His talk will be carried by most of these CBS Radio stations at ~~10:15 p.m.,~~ 11:10 p.m., Eastern Time.

The White House today asked the major radio and television networks for time early next week... preferably Tuesday night... in which the President can talk to the American people "on the cost of their government." Time was also requested for a night during the week of May 19th, when Mr. Eisenhower will speak on the subject: "Why Mutual Aid is so Essential in Winning the Peace." Both talks will run half an hour.

The House passed a compromise housing bill today and sent it to the Senate. The measure calls for lower down-payments on F.H.A.-financed homes. It prohibits the start of any new government-insured public housing---except for persons displaced in the course of slum clearance.

The House Education Committee approved a one-and-a-half-billion-dollar school construction program. The money would be spent over a period of five years, and would be matched by the states. The measure must still pass the House Rules Committee before reaching the House floor.

The Senate Appropriations Committee refused today to restore any of the 58-million dollars slashed from the Post Office budget by the House. It rejected the recommendation of its subcommittee that 32-million dollars of the House cut be restored. Postmaster General Summerfield said yesterday that he would again have to reduce postal service if full restoration was not made.

The Senate today confirmed the nomination of Scott McLeod as ambassador to Ireland. The vote for confirmation was 60 to 20. In the debate preceding the vote, Democratic Senator Morse charged that in 1953, McLeod had tried to give the impression that the department was "honeycombed with Communists." Actually, he said, McLeod found none. Republican Senator Javits of New York spoke on behalf of McLeod. He said a vote against the confirmation would be "a vote of no confidence in the President." The nomination of Henry J. Taylor as ambassador to Switzerland was approved without debate.

The government today dismissed a four-year-old indictment against Ben Gold, former president of the fur and leather workers union. Gold was accused... and later convicted...of filing a false non-Communist oath. Last January, the Supreme Court reversed the conviction... on grounds that members of the jury had been contacted improperly by F.B.I. agents.

The United States Court of Appeals today upheld the so-called "hot-cargo" clause written in some union contracts. Under a hot-cargo agreement, a union refuses to handle struck goods. Today's ruling was made in a case involving two locals of the teamster and machinist unions in Oklahoma City and the American Iron and Machine Works Company. The court held...in a split 2-to-1 decision...that the hot-cargo provision does not violate the secondary boycott ban contained in the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Senate rackets committee continued its hearings today in the Beck case. It was stated in today's testimony that Teamsters President Dave Beck had a financial interest in a mortgage firm handling the investment of union funds. The witness, Fred Loomis, once served Beck as investment counsellor. He said he warned Back "not to compromise himself" by going into the mortgage business.

President Diem of Vietnam today thanked congress in person for "the generous and unselfish assistance" given his country by the United States. Vietnam, he said, is still threatened by Communism because of its strategic position in Southeast Asia... yet it has "good reason for confidence and hope."

In London, the Canal Users Association today rejected Egypt's terms for running the Suez Canal. It called the safeguards for user countries "insufficient". But... at the same time... it freed its fifteen member states to use the waterway. Only France refused to go along.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold arrived in Israel today for two days of talks.

The Hungarian parliament met today for the first time since the October revolt. The Budapest radio said 30 members of parliament "resigned".. and that one of those "resigning" was Matyas Rakosi, former first secretary of the Communist Party in Hungary. A shake-up in the cabinet was also announced with an increase in the number of cabinet posts from 12 to 21.

The joint communique issued today by British Prime Minister Macmillan and West German Chancellor Adenauer reveals that no formal agreements were reached at their two-day meeting in Bonn. Britain again pledged full support for German reunification. ~~And although Britain is not a member, it endorsed the European common market project. The communique said that the West German defense minister will soon visit London "to discuss defense questions of mutual interest." Macmillan told reporters that Britain will maintain a "mobile, highly trained force" in Western Europe, despite its planned withdrawal of 13-thousand troops from Germany this year.~~

Edward R. Murrow: May 9, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The first hearings on the dangers of radiation and fall-out are to be held by the joint committee on atomic energy the end of this month. / These might well be among the most important hearings, a congressional committee has ever held. The air ~~is not only full of radio activity, it also~~ is full of terrifying and contradictory statements about ~~its~~ Radio active dangers. / Atomic tests continue to add an unmeasured peril to the entire population of the world. The Russians have just finished seven tests. / United States tests are to be resumed in Nevada this month, and last till September. / The British are to explode their first hydrogen bomb this summer. At the same time the plans for peaceful uses of atomic energy are burgeoning. / The international agency for distribution and control of atomic materials may come into existence this summer. / Europe is forging ahead with a program to establish a supra-national atomic energy community, for a vast exploitation of atomic power in industry. We are beginning to know a little about the dangers of fall-out from atomic weapons. But we still need to learn more about the perils of peacetime uses of atomic energy. / It isn't that the reactors of an atom-powered Europe will blow up and wipe out untold millions by blasts and burns. But the making of atomic power unavoidably means the making of waste by-products, that remain highly radio-active for years, and have to be disposed of. No way has yet been found to get rid of them quickly enough. It seems that the peaceful use of atomic energy may be only less hazardous than its wartime use.

A typical statement about the dangers of the current atomic tests is one by Dr. Linus Pauling, Nobel Prize winner at the California Institute of Technology. He said that the British hydrogen bomb test will in time cause a thousand deaths from leukemia around the world, and that 200,000 more feeble-minded children will be born in the next generation because of gene mutations. The British Government responded promptly by saying it knows of no deaths caused by the American and Russian hydrogen bomb tests, and calls the evidence insufficient to justify Dr. Paulings conclusions. That may be literally so, but still not disprove what Dr. Pauling said. And there is one of the big problems for responsible people in this field. Science has a good deal of knowledge about the effects of radiation, and some about the effects of recent tests. But neither scientists nor government officials know enough to state beyond challenge the limits of safety, and therefore to plan for complete safety.

So without knowing the limits of safety the use of radiation goes on, and the nuclear tests continue. This of course is gambling, and gambling with ~~incalculable~~ unmeasured hazards that may run on for decades and even centuries. One has to say centuries, because any injury done through gene mutations cannot be repaired. The injured never are cured, they and their injured descendants have to die out.

But one does not have to look into the dim future to get an idea of the dangers of radiation from current tests. The first careful study of the results of our own tests in Nevada is now being published. It takes up most of the ~~forthcoming~~ current issue of The Reporter magazine. The editor calls it "an oppressive, nightmarish story. Yet" he remarks, "we can be sure they were the best, the most responsibly supervised tests ever. No evil men were involved. The thing itself is evil."

The account lacks horrifying details such as are associated with atomic explosions in Hiroshima and Nagasaki. But it is a disturbing fact that the residents of St. George, Utah, were continually exposed to atmospheric contamination for sixteen days in 1953, and in one 24-hour period it was 1,260 more than the permissible concentrations established for radiation workers by the Bureau of Standards. The A.E.C. did warn St. George residents to stay indoors for 2½ hours on the worst of the days, but did not give a similar warning to all communities in the area, though in some the fall-out was heavier than in St. George. Some schools were warned to keep children indoors, but not all. Evidently the A.E.C. did not have workers enough. During this same test, more than one hundred motor vehicles, including a Greyhound bus, had to be decontaminated.

Martin Bardoli, an eight-year-old boy, died of leukemia in a Reno hospital last year. The hospital physician who attended him says death may have resulted from the atomic explosions. The A.E.C. denies it, saying that leukemia could only be caused by larger doses of radiation than the boy received. But the fact is that the A.E.C. does not know how much dosage Martin Bardoli did receive.

A book called "Radiation", by Dr. Jack Schubert, a world authority on radiation poisoning, and Dr. Ralph Lapp, a nuclear physicist, is being published this month by Viking Press. It is not an angry or controversial book, but a not-too-technical statement of what is known and what is not known about radiation. What is not known seems to be as formidable as what is, and that certainly is frightening enough. Such a book might well be required reading for anyone having remotely to do with making national policy.

Word for Today

Man's ignorance on the subject of atomic radiation has led to the issuing of contradictory statements by experts and much debate. The limits of safety must be found. But this knowledge in itself will not be enough. Einstein said, "Science brought forth this danger, but the real problem is in the minds and hearts of men."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 9, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower cut his foreign aid program today by 520-million dollars. This reduces the foreign aid budget to 3 - billion, 880 million dollars for the next fiscal year, starting July 1st. Mr. Eisenhower announced the cut at a special meeting of a congressional leaders at the White House. He is quoted..by those present..as saying the 520 - million dollars will be saved through "better management and screening." Any cut beyond that, he warned, could seriously threated world peace. Representative Cannon, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said after the hour and a half meeting that the President "spoke more decisively, more convincingly, than I have ever heard him." But chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services Committee told reporters he thought 2 - billion, 400 - million dollars for foreign aid would be "wholly adequate." (That's more than a billion dollars under President Eisenhower's rock-botton figure.) And Senate Democrttic Leader Johnson said if better management and screening could save 520-million dollars, perhaps other savings can be found. Republican Leader Knowland said he expects the revised pogram to be approved "substantially" in its present form. But he said this doesn't mean Congress may not come pp with a different figure.

The White House conference was attended by former Representative Richards, who recently returned from explaining the Eisenhower Doctrine to 15 countries in the Middle East. Tonight, Richards will give a report on his trip on radio and Television . His talk will be carried by most of these CBS Radio stations at 11:10 p.m., Eastern Time.

The White House today asked the major radio and televsion networks for time early next week..preferably Tuesday night..in which the President can talk to the American people " on the cost of their government." Time was also requested for a night during the week of May 19th, when Mr. Eisenhower will speak on the subject: "Why Mutual Aid is so Essential in Winning the Peace." Both talks will run half an hour.

The House passed a compromise housing bill today, and sent it to the Senate. The measure calls for lower down-payments on F.H.A. homes. It prohibits the start of any new government - insured public - housing ---except for persons displaced in the course of slum clearance.

The House Education Committee approved a one - and - a - half - billion - dollar school construction program. The money would be spent over a period of five years, and would be matched by the states. The measure must still pass the House Rules Committee before reaching the House floor.

The Senate today confirmed the nomination of Scott McLeod as ambassador to Ireland. The vote for confirmation was 60 to 20. The nomination of Henry J. Taylor as ambassador to Switzerland was approved without debate.

The government today dismissed a four - year - old indictment against Ben Gold, former president of the fur and leather workers union. Gold was accused...and later convicted...of filing a false non-Communist oath. Last January, the Supreme Court reversed the conviction...on grounds that members of the Jury had been contacted improperly by F.B.I.agents.

The Senate rackets committee continued its hearings today in the Beck case. It was stated, in today's testimony, that Teamsters President Dave Beck had a financial interest in a mortgage firm handling the investment of union funds. The witness, Fred Loomis, once served Beck as investment counsellor. He said he warned Beck "not to compromise himself" by going into the mortgage business.

In London, the Canal Users Association today rejected Egypt's terms for running the Suez Canal. It called the safeguards for user countries "inusfficient". But...at the same time...it freed its fifteen member states to use the waterway. Only France refused to go along. United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold arrived in Israel today for two days of talks.

The Hungarian parliament met today for the first time since the October revolt. The Budapest radio said 30 members of parliament "resigned" and that one of these "resigning" was Matyas Rakoski, former first secretary of the Communist Party in Hungary. A shake-up in the cabinet was also announced with an increase in the number of cabinet posts from 12 to 21.

A joint communique issued today by British Prime Minister Macmillan and West German Chancellor Adenauer reveals that no formal agreements were reached at their two - day meeting in Bonn. Britain again pledged full support for German reunification.

The first hearings on the dangers of radiation and fall - out are to be held by the joint committee on atomic energy the end of this month. These might well be among the most important hearings a congressional committee has ever held. The air is full of terrifying and contradictory statements about radio active dangers. Atomic tests continue to add an unmeasured peril to the entire population of the world. The Russians have just finished seven tests. Unites States tests are to be resumed in Nevada this month, and last till September. The British are to explode their first hydrogen bomb this summer. At the same time the plans for peaceful uses of atomic energy are burgeoning n The internatoonal agency for distribution and control of atomic materials may come into existence this summer. Europe is forging ahead with a program to establish a supra - national atomic energy community for a vast exploitation of atomic power in industry. We are beginning to know a little about the dangers of fall - out from atomic weapons. But we still need to learn more about the perils of peacetime uses of atomic energy. It isn't that the reactors of an atomic powered Europe will blow up and wipe out untold millions by blasts and burns. But the making of atomic power unavoidably means the making of waste by-products that remain highly radio - active for years and have to be disposed of. No way has yet been found to get rid of them quickly enough. It seems that the peaceful use of atomic energy may be only less hazardous than its wartime use.

A typical statement about the dangers of the current atomic tests is one by Dr. Linus Pauling, Nobel Prize winner at the California Institute of technology. He said that the British hydrogen bomb test will in time cause a thousand deaths from leukemia around the world, and that 200,000 more feeble-minded children will be born in the next generation because of gene mutations. The British Government responded promptly by saying it knows of no deaths caused by the American and Russian hydrogen bomb tests, and calls the evidence insufficient to justify Dr. Pauling's conclusions. That may be literally so, but still not disprove what Dr. Pauling said. And there is one of the big problems for responsible people in this field. Science has a good deal of knowledge about the effects of radiation, and some about the effects of recent tests. But neither scientists nor government officials know enough to state beyond challenge the limits of safety, and therefore to plan for complete satety.

So without knowing the limits of safety, the use of radioation goes on, and the nuclear tests continue. This of course is gambling, and gambling with unmeasured hazards, that may run on for decades and even centuries. One has to say centuries, because any injury done through gene mutations cannot be repaired. The injured never are cured and their injured descendants die out.

But one does not have to look into the dim future to get an idea of the dangers of radiation from current tests. The first careful study of the results of our own tests in Nevada is now being published. It takes up most of the current issue of the Reporter magazine. The editor calls it "an oppressive, nightmarish story. Yet" he remarks, "we can be sure they are the best, the most responsibly supervised tests ever. No evel men were involved. The thing itself is evil."

The account lacks horrifying details such as are associated with atomic explosions in Hiroshima and Nagasaki. But it is a disturbing fact that the residents of St. George, Utah, were continually exposed to atmospheric contamination for sixteen days in 1953, and in one 24-hour period it was 1,260 more than the permissible concentrations established for radiation workers by the bureau of Standards. The A.E.C. did warn St. George residents to stay indoors for 2½ hours on the worst of the days, but did not give a similar warning to all communities in the area, though in some the fall - out area was heavier than in St. George. Some schools were warned to keep children indoors, but not all. Evidently the A.E.C. did not have workers enough. During this same test, more than one hundred motor vehicles, including a Greyhound bus, had to be decontaminated.

Martin Bardoli an eight - year - old boy, died of leukemia in a Reno hospital last year. The hospital physician who attended him says death may have resulted from the atomic explosions. The A.E.C. denies it, saying that leukemia could only be caused by larger doses of radiation than the boy received. But the fact is that the A.E.C. does not know how much dosage Martin Bardoli did receive.

A book called "Radiation", by Dr. Jack Schubert, a world authority on radiation poisining, and Rr. Ralph Lapp, a nuclear physicist, is being published this month by Viking Press. It is not an angry or controversial book, but a not-too technical statement of what is known and what is not known about radiation. What is not known seems to be as formidable as what is, and that certainly is frightening enough. Such a book might well be required reading for anyone having remotely to do with making national policy.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

MURROW: Man's ingorance on the subject of atomic radiation has led to the issuing of contradictory statements by experts and much debate. The limits of safety must be found. But this knowledge in itself will not be enough. Einstein said, "Science brought forth this danger, but the real problem is in the minds and hearts of men."

Goodnight and bood luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., May 10, 1957

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles appealed to the Senate today to approve American participation in the international atoms-for-peace agency. He assured the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the agency provides an effective system of safeguards...and that the atomic fuel distributed "will not be of the kind useable for nuclear weapons." Dulles said that if the United States joins the organization...first proposed by President Eisenhower...it would have "a constructive impact on negotiations for the regulation and reduction of armaments." Failure to join, he said, would have "disastrous effects on the prestige and influence of the United States in the world." Six nations, including Russia, already have joined.

The House Appropriations Committee today cut the budget request for the Agriculture Department by nearly 273-million dollars. At the same time, the committee issued a report on the farm situation...calling it "not good". "Four years' experience," it said, "has shown that reduced acreage, reduced prices and rising costs lead only to reducing farm income to a disaster level." More than half the cut voted today was in money requested for the "acreage reserve" provision of the soil-bank program. The committee proposed that this provision... by which farmers are paid for reduced plantings of certain crops...be "gradually eliminated". What is needed, it said, is "an entirely new legislative approach."

President Eisenhower told a group of Southern Republican leaders today that his budget was not "recklessly or carelessly thrown together." He conceded it costs "a lot of money" to preserve the security of the United States and wage peace. "But the price," he said, "is inconsequential compared to the cost of waging war." Mr. Eisenhower called on southern party workers to make a concerted effort in next year's congressional campaign. "The Republican Party," he said, "is in the South to stay."

The government said today that the "over-all" job situation in April showed "further seasonal improvement." Total civilian employment in April reached 64-million, 261-thousand---a gain of about 400-thousand for the month.

Special Ambassador James P. Richards told reporters today that he committed about 120-million dollars in American aid during his recent tour of the Middle East. Richards said last night...in a nationwide broadcast...that he had promised economic and military assistance but mentioned no amount. ~~On his trip, Richards explained the Eisenhower Doctrine to 15 Middle East countries.~~ He declined to say to which countries aid is being sent.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold conferred for more than three hours today with Prime Minister Ben Gurion in Jerusalem. A communique...after the meeting... reported "a full and frank exchange of views." It said, "The prime minister and the secretary general reaffirmed their determination to spare no effort to advance the cause of peace in the area." An Israeli spokesman says Ben Gurion again brought up Egypt's continued state of belligerency and the Egyptian boycott of Israeli shipping in the Suez Canal.

President Rojas of Colombia was deposed today in an Army coup... and a five-man military junta has taken over control. It promises free elections in the near future and has called on the country to remain calm. Two days ago, Rojas succeeded in getting himself re-elected in the National Assembly, despite the fact that the constitution of Colombia prohibits a second term. The maneuver was strongly opposed by university students, business and labor leaders and the Roman Catholic Church. Dispatches passed through censorship today say an estimated 100 persons died in anti-government riots in the past week. ~~Yesterday, church leaders accused Rojas of "murder". Troops trying to break up a victory demonstration in Bogata today are reported to have stampeded the crowd... causing 30 deaths. Rojas himself is said to have fled the country. But this is not confirmed.~~

The Chinese Communists today subjected three Nationalist-held islands of the Quemoy group to the heaviest shelling in months. The Nationalist government on Formosa said Communist shore batteries fired 600 rounds in two hours. It reported, "No casualties."

The West German Bundestag tonight called on the United States, Britain and Russia to suspend nuclear weapons tests "for a limited period." The Bundestag is West Germany's lower house of parliament. The motion for suspension of tests was submitted by all the parties making up Chancellor Adenauer's coalition government. And it was passed by a show of hands. Another motion...introduced by the opposition parties...was rejected. That motion asked that the United States be prohibited from stationing atomic weapons on West German soil. It also opposed the equiping of West Germany's armed forces with such weapons.

In Moscow today, Russia's rubber-stamp legislature...the Supreme Soviet... approved a resolution dealing with this subject. The resolution passed without a single dissenting vote appealed to the British Parliament and the United States Congress for an immediate cessation of nuclear tests. It proposed that the three bodies join in a three-power parliamentary commission to study the best means of halting future tests. In his maiden speech as foreign minister, Andrei Gromyko blamed the West for failure to reach agreement at the disarmament talks in London. And he said Russia will go on producing and testing hydrogen bombs until agreement is reached.

In Washington, Congress is cool to the suggestion that it join a three-power parliamentary commission to work out means for ending nuclear tests.

It may not have been planned that way, but the appearance of President Diem of South Vietnam in Washington at this time is giving the Administration unexpected help in the fight to save its foreign aid program in Congress. President Diem is proving to be the classic example of what can be done to stop communism.

Not long ago Diem seemed doomed and his chances of holding off the communists were small. His country was divided by factions and sects with their own armies that ruled locally, collected the taxes and flouted the central government. Its own police were gangsters who operated the gambling and vice in the cities. His difficulties seemed insurmountable, communists were everywhere, particularly in the rural districts. If Diem failed, South Vietnam was sure to fall to the communists, and there would be little promise of saving any of Southeast Asia for the free world.

Today Diem is established. His authority prevails in the country. The local factions have either been beaten or absorbed. The police have been re-organized and purified. The rural districts, once so friendly to communist infiltrators, now are backing the Diem regime. Not only has Diem probably saved his own country, he may have saved Southeast Asia in the process.

Obviously the hero of the story is Diem, and not the aid program. But his heroism would not have been enough by itself. That is the lesson of all successful aid programs. There must be men of ability and faith who want the aid and know how to use it.

Diem won through in South Vietnam, primarily because he is an incorruptible and dedicated man of enormous administrative ability. It is hard to exaggerate the easy-going corruption that thrived in his country both before and after the war. Anyone in government took care of himself first of all. The country had no national consciousness. Emperor Bao Dai certainly set no example of public service.

But President Diem worked tirelessly at introducing government. When he was defied by the police, who shelled him in his palace, he took the gamble of ordering the army into battle. Both the French and Americans advised against it, but the army won and that was the turning point. Since then the army has beaten all the local armies that did not disband and take the oath of loyalty to Diem. The President, who is not a politician by temperament, has overcome his shyness and gone out into the country to explain his policies and make friends. He is now a national figure to his own people.

He told Congress yesterday that the country has absorbed 800,000 refugees, that it is now paying taxes into the national treasury, and it is opening its doors to outside industries. In other words, the war days are over and the time has come to build up a peacetime economy. It has been costing us $250,000,000 a year to help Diem. Most of it has been military aid and it has paid off. Now economic aid has the first call.

There is a certain logic in the fact that President Diem in coming to Washington right now is helping the aid program that has helped him. But there is more significance than that in the visit. Americans may want to know what kind of democracy will emerge from their aid program. President Diem quoted to Congress the doctrine he laid down before his constituent assembly a year ago.

"We affirm" he had said, "our faith in the absolute value of the human being whose dignity ante-dates society and whose destiny is greater than time.

"We affirm that the sole legitimate object of the state is to protect the fundamental rights of human beings to the free development of their intellectual, moral and spiritual lives.

"We affirm that democracy is neither material happiness nor the supremacy of numbers. Democracy is essentially a permanent effort to find the right political means, to assure all its citizens, the right of free development and of maximum initiative, responsibility and spiritual life."

It is too soon to say that South Vietnam already is safe, and that Southeast Asia will stay in the free world. That depends on greater forces than President Diem. But if one of the results of the foreign aid program, has been to implant the kind of democracy President Diem so eloquently defined, those who are responsible for it need not worry about the verdict of history.

South Vietnam has shown what a country can do to stop Communism with American aid. Aid alone would not have been enough. It also required a dedicated man... like Diem. [redacted] Nor is the fact that he was there to be wondered at. Nitzsche said, "The highest type of free man must be sought where the greatest resistance has to be overcome---five paces away from tyranny."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 10, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.D.S.T.

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles appealed to the Senate today to approve American participation in the international atoms - for - peace agency. He assured the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the agency provides an effective system of safeguards ...and that the atomic fuel distributed "will not be of the kind useable for nuclear weapons." Dulles said that if the United States joins the organization..first proposed by President Eisenhower.. it would have "a constructive impact on negotiations for the regulation and reduction of armaments." Failure to join, he said, would have "disastrous effects on the prestige and influence of the United States in the world." Six nations, including Russia, already have joined.

The House Appropriations Committee today cut the budget request for the Agriculture Department by nearly 273 million dollars. At the same time, the committee issued a report on the farm situation..calling it "not good." "Four years' experience," it said, "has shown that reduced acreage, reduced prices and rising costs lead only to reducing farm income to a disaster level." More than half the cut voted today was in money requested for the "acreage reserve" provision of the soil - bank program. The committee proposed that this provision ..by which farmers are paid for reduced plantings of certain crops..be "gradually eliminated." What is needed, it said, is "an entirely new legislative approach."

President Eisenhower told a group of Southern Republican leaders today that his budget was not "recklessly or carelessly thrown together." He conceded it costs "a lot of money" to preserve the security of the United States and wage peace. "But the price," he said, "is inconsequential compared to the cost of waging war." Mr. Eisenhower called on southern party workers to make a concerted effort in next year's congressional campaign. "The Republican Party," he said, "is in the South to stay."

The Government said today that the "over-all" job situation in April showed "further seasonal improvement." Total civilian employment in April reached 64-million, 261 - thousand -- a gain of about 400-thousand for the month.

Special Ambassador James P. Richards told reporters today that he committed about 120 -million dollars in American aid during hs recent tour of the Middle East. Richards said last night ...in a nationwide broadcast...that he had promised economic and military assistance but mentioned no amount. He declined to say to which countries aid is being sent.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold conferred for more than three hours doday with Prime Minister Ben Gurion in Jerusalem. A communique ...after the meeting...reported "a full and frank exchange of views." It said, "The prime minister and the secretary general reaffirmed their determination to spare no effort to advance the cause of peace in the area." An Israeli spokesman says Ben Gurion again brought up Egypt's continued state of belligerency and the Egyptian boycott of Israeli shipping in the Suez Canal.

President Rojas of Colombia was deposed today in an Army coup...and a five - man junta has taken over control. It promises free elections in the near future and has called on the country to remain calm. Two days ago, Rojas succeeded in getting himself re-elected in the National Assembly, despite the fact that the constitution of Colombia prohibits a second term. The maneuver was strongly opposed by the university students, business and labor leaders and the Roman Catholic Church. Dispatches passed through censorship today say an estimated 100 persons died in anti-government riots in the past week.

The Chinese Communists today subjected three Nationalist - held islands of the Quemoy group to the heaviest shelling in months. The Nationalist government on Formosa said Communist shore batteries fired 600 rounds in two hours.

It reported , "No casualties."

The West German Bundestag tonight called on the United States, Britain and Russia to suspend nuclear weapons tests "for a limited period." The Bundestag is West Germany's lower house of parliament. The motion for suspension of tests was submitted by all the parties making up Chancellor Adenauer's coalition government. And it was passed by a show of hands. Another motion... introduced by the opposition parties...was rejected. That motion asked that the United States be prohibited from stationing atomic weapons on West German soil. It also opposed the equiping of West Germany's armed forces with such weapons.

In Moscow today Russia's rubber - stamp legislature...the Supreme Soviet... approved a resolution dealing with this subject. The resolution passed without a single dissenting vote appealed to the British Parliament and the United States Congress for an immediate cessation of nuclear tests. It proposed that the three bodies join in a three - power parliamentary commission to study the best means of halting future tests. In his maiden speech as foreign minister, Andrei Gromyko blamed the West for failure to reach agreement at the disarmament talks in London. And he said Russia will go on producing and testing hydrogen bombs until agreement is reached.

In Washington, Congress is cool to the suggestion that it join a three power parliamentary commission to work out means for ending nuclear tests.

It may not have been planned that way, but the appearance of President Diem of South Vietnam in Washington at this time is giving the Administration unexpected help in the fight to save its foreign aid program in Congress. President Diem is proving to by the classic example of what can be done to stop communism.

Not long ago Diem seemed doomed andhis chances of holding off the communists were small. His country was divided by factions and sects with their own armies that ruled locally, collected the taxes, and flouted the central government. Its own police were gangsters who operated the gambling and vice in the cities. His difficultirs seemed insurmountable, communists were everywhere, particularly in the rural districts. If Diem failed, South Vietnam was sure to fall to the Communists, and there would be little promise of saving any of Southeast Asia for the free world.

Today Diem is established. His authority prevails in the country. The local factions have either been beaten or absorbed. The police have been re-organized and purified. The rural districts, once so friendly to communist infiltrators, now are backing the Diem regime. Not only has Diem probably saved his own country, he may have saved Sothheast Asia in the process.

Obviously the hero of the story is Diem, and not the aid program. But his heroism would not have been enough by itself. That is the lesson of all successful aid programs. There must be men of ability and faith who want the aid and know how to use it.

Diem won through in South Vietnam, primarily because he is an incorruptible and dedicated man of enormous administrative ability. It is hard to exaggerate the easy - going corruption that thrived in his country both before and after the war. Anyone in the government took care of himself first of all. The country had no national consiciousness. Emperor Bao Dai certainly set no example of public service.

But President Diem worked tirelessly at introducing governmnet. When he was defied by the police, who shelled him in his palace, he took the gamble or ordering the army into battle. Both the French and Americans advised - against it, but the army won and that was the turning point. Since then the army has beaten all the local armies that did not disband and take the oath of loyalty to Diem. The President, who is not a politician by tempermant, has overcome his shyness and gone out into the country to explain his policies and make friends. He is now a national figure to his own people.

He told Congress yesterday that the country has absorbed 800,000 refugees, that it is now paying taxes into the national treasury, and it is opening its doors to outside industries. In other words, the war days are over and the time has come to build up a peacetime economy. It has been costing us $250,000,000 a year to help Diem. Most of it has been military aid and it has paid off. Now economic aid has the first call.

There is a certain logic in the fact that President Diem in coming to Washington right now is helping the aid program that has helped him. But there is more significance than that in the visit. Americans may want to know what kind of democracy will emerge from their aid program. President Diem quoted to Congress the doctrine he laid down before his constituent assemnly a year ago.

"We affirm", he sad said, "our faith in the absolute value of the human being whose dignity ante - dates society and whose destiny is greater than time.

"We affirm that the sole legitimate object of the state is to protect the fundamental rights of human beings to the free development of their intellectual, moral and spiritual lives.

"We affirm that democracy is neither material happiness nor the supremacy of numbers. Democracy is essentially a permanent effort to find the right political means to assure all its citizens the right of free development and maximum initiative, responsibility and spiritual life."

It is too soon to say that South Vietnam already is safe and that Southeast Asia will stay in the free world. That depends on greater forces than President Diem. But if one of the results of the foreign aid program has been to implant the kind of democracy President Diem so eloquently defieed, those who are responsible for it need not worry about the verdict of history.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: South Vietnam has shown what a country can do to stop Communism with American aid. Aid alone would not have been enough. It also required a dedicated man..like Diem. Nor is the fact that he was there to be wondered at. Nitzsche said, "The highest type of free man must be sought where the greatest resistance has to be overcome -- five paces away from tyranny."

Goddnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, N.Y.

[redacted]

WESTERN UNION
AP - New York

May 13, 1957

(VIA WESTERN UNION)

1795 Dl Pd Chg Lowell Thomas acct for Ed Murrow - Blast [redacted]

This is the news:

Prime Minister Macmillan told the House of Commons today that British shippers may [redacted] use of the Suez Canal on Egypt's terms. Toll payments, he said, will be made to Egypt in pounds sterling. But Egyptian accounts [redacted] blocked last summer...when the canal was nationalized... will remain frozen until "satisfactory arrangements covering all claims against Egypt have been made." Macmillan said the tolls will be paid through a new special account opened by the Bank of England in the name of the National Bank of Egypt. And there was a suggestion that the [redacted] account might be used later to allow [redacted] resumption of trade. Hugh Gaitskell, leader of the Labour opposition, attacked the [redacted] government policy... charging that Britain was now forced to accept terms "substantially worse" than those existing before the Anglo-French intervention in October. Macmillan would not [redacted] concede the point. And it will be taken up later this week in formal debate. [redacted]

2414

156

(more)

LT/Ke 1771

In Jerusalem, an Israeli foreign office spokesman said today that Israel "now feels freer" to send a test ship through the Suez Canal. A reporter had requested comment on the majority decision of the canal users' association last week to resume use of the waterway. The spokesman declined to say when Israel would make the test. But Israel, he said, delayed action... in order not to predudice the deliberations of the users association. Egypt contends that it has the right to bar Israeli shipping, on grounds that a state of belligerency with Israel still exists. Of the 15 members of the users' association, only France is still advising its shippers not to use the canal. The Israeli spokesman said his government is "keeping in touch" with France on the Suez question.

(more)

130

LT/4 5mp

The United States today protested the "severe" travel restrictions placed on American embassy personnel in Russia. The protest noted that restrictions on Soviet embassy personnel in this country are not so severe. And it asked Russia to say what steps it will take to bring the treatment more in balance. The United States suggested that travel regulations in both countries might be liberalized. But right now, it said, Soviet authorities are imposing more restrictions than their own rules call for.

(more)

80

H/Lestod

Dr. Milton Eisenhower said today that the main obstacle to progress in the peaceful use of nuclear energy is manpower---not uranium or money. American educators, he said, are "worried" over the scarcity of teachers and students in the atomic field. And he cited the fact that, each year, Russia is graduating more scientists and engineers than the United States. Dr. Eisenhower spoke at the opening of the Inter-American Symposium on Peaceful Application of Nuclear Energy. The five-day meeting...at the Brookhaven Laboratory in New York... is being attended by the United States and 21 Latin American countries. Another [redacted] speaker, Dr. Willard F. Libby of the Atomic Energy Commission, predicted new discoveries in application of the atom for peace. He said nuclear energy, if handled wisely, can give the world material benefits "almost without end."

(more) 136

[redacted] THINK PIECE....

LT/Ce 5311

5:20

Tales of plots and counterplots in the Middle East are almost routine news [redacted] but a charge that now comes from Jordanian sources that Egypt plotted with communist help to overthrow four Arab kings and the government of Lebanon is out of the ordinary. It was splurged yesterday by the Amman newspaper Al Urdon, and then broadcast by the Jordan radio, which gives it indirect sanction by King Hussein. It also is given a certificate of credibility by State Department sources. And it fills in details of a report that has been circulating for weeks in Arab countries, and was recently published in Al Hayat in [redacted] Beirut.

¶ The story is that early last year the envoys of Egypt to all Arab countries met in Cairo and concerted plans to overthrow the [redacted] Kings of Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Libya and the liberal regime of Lebanon. A military board was set up to master-mind the campaign, headed by Lt.Colonel Abdul Hamid Serraj, at that time the [redacted] pro-communist chief of intelligence in the Syrian army . He has since been relieved of his post and sent to Egypt as military attache. Others on the board were Lt.Col.Hassan Ali Khalil of Egypt, some [redacted] unidentified officers of the Jordanian army, and two Soviet officials who are named, one a vice-consul, the other an assistant military attache in the Soviet embassy in Beirut.

(more)

LT/LPS 381

¶ The first objective of the campaign was to go [redacted] after King Feisal of Iraq as an Arab openly supporting the West, and then to overthrow King Hussein of Jordan. In the meantime, King Saud of Saudi Arabia and King Sayed Mohammed Idris of Libya, were to be undermined. The report goes on to say that a few days before the recent crisis in Jordan, General Nuwar, chief of staff of the Jordanian army, received a large sum of money from the Egyptian embassy in Amman as the price for the assassination of King Hussein. When King Hussein cracked down on the conspirators, [redacted] Nuwar fled to Damascus. The Amman newspaper calls this "a most dangerous Egyptian-communist plot to swallow the Arab world." ¶ When Hussein first talked about the conspiracy, he said it was [redacted] a communist plot engineered from headquarters in Tel-Aviv, as though [redacted] Israel was at the root of his troubles. Now [redacted] he is letting Egypt and the Soviet Union be named as [redacted] the principals.

¶ The story, whether true or false, has special timeliness because of the current meeting between King Feisal and King Saud in Bagdad, which King Hussein is scheduled to join on Wednesday. This is Saud's first visit to Bagdad, and the open gesture of friendliness to Feisal is itself a new development. The meeting is not likely to end in an open breach of the Arab Federation, as it is being held to arrange the subsidy (that is to) keep King Hussein in power. Egypt and Syria are in default on the 21 million dollars they were going to contribute. Apparently Feisal will be asked to help make up the purse. But even if the meeting ends with the usual protestations on Arab unity, the fact is that Nasser's Arab Federation is warped, perhaps beyond repair.

205

(more)

LT/a

¶ It is noteworthy that Soviet complicity in the conspiracy is being charged (this time) by the Arabs themselves, and not by us. This may mean that a more cordial reception of the Eisenhower doctrine will lie ahead. However, the mission of Ambassador Richards is still shrouded with a good deal of mystery, some of which hardly seems necessary. Mr. Richards says that the mission committed 120 million dollars, about half of it for military aid. But he has not said what went to whom. The only figure that has been used in the newspapers is 5 million dollars for military aid for Libya. Presumably some went to Iraq and other Bagdad pact countries. Mr. Richards is to fill in details when he reports to Congress in about two weeks.

(more)

L T.

But so long as the disbursements are obscure, they are likely to arouse local suspicions and jealousies, which won't make the Eisenhower doctrine any more popular.

It is too much to say that the report of the Egyptian-Soviet conspiracy is going to hurt Nasser's prestige, or discredit the Soviet government very much with rank and file Arabs. Nasser and the Kremlin alike tell the area that it is the United States that is trying to dominate it. Nasser wraps himself in innocence and blames us for everything that goes wrong. In propaganda, the offense is the best defense. Nasser probably is losing ground in the Arab federation. But that does not mean that we are gaining what he is losing. King Saud probably is gaining, and perhaps King Feisal. King Hussein has been saved for a while. But it is an odd fate that the American democracy has to be content with the benefits gained by these kings.,

-5

Word to come....

Bliss

162

May 13, 1957

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, N.Y.

LD/Re 6 5 36

Add hard news....

Defense Secretary Wilson says he has ordered William Holladay, his special assistant for guided missiles, to take over general supervision of the earth satellite program. The Navy will continue to manage the project under Holladay.

(more)

40

LT 6 58

Six Air Force jets flew non-stop today from London, England, to Jamestown, Virginia, in seven hours and 33 minutes. The flight of the F-100C Super-Sabres was in commemoration of the founding of Jamestown by British colonists 350 years ago. Three of the aircraft continued to Los Los Angeles.

[redacted]

Secretary of Agriculture Benson predicted today that farm income in 1957 will exceed last year's level by about five percent. He said farm surpluses are on the decline. "And more farmers, proportionately," he said, own their farms than ever before." Benson made these statements in reporting to President Eisenhower on the operation of his department in 1956.

112

[redacted]

[redacted] by 10 [redacted]

And the House Rules Committee agreed to vote May 21st... on whether to clear President Eisenhower's civil rights program for debate on the House floor.

The Supreme Court today reversed the conviction of three persons accused of concealing a fugitive Communist leader in a California mountain hide-out four years ago. [redacted] The Communist leader was Robert G. Thompson, who jumped bail in 1950, after being convicted of conspiring to teach and advocate the violent overthrow of the government. The three found guilty of concealing him are Mrs. Shirley Kremen, [redacted] Sidney Steinberg and Samuel Coleman. The Supreme Court ...in a 6 to 2 decision... ruled that [redacted] their arrest and the seizure of evidence in the mountain cabin without a search warrant was illegal.

The Senate rackets committee today questioned the head of the Fruehauf Trailer Company about a 175-thousand-dollar loan his firm made indirectly to Teamsters President Dave Beck in 1954. Roy Fruehauf, head of the company, said the transaction took place a year after Beck had come to his rescue with a loan of one and a half million dollars in union funds. Fruehauf said he was engaged in a proxy fight at the time. He [redacted] denied that the loan to Beck was [redacted] [redacted] "a pistol at your head [redacted] sort of thing.

(more)

LT at TOW

JJ

[redacted]

May 13, 1957

Edward R. Murrow

Pawling, N.Y.

LT Re 71P

Word for today.....

The Middle East has always been a land of INTRIGUE. [redacted] The latest report of a conspiracy has Russia and Egypt plotting the overthrow of no less than five Arab states. There is no DIRECT proof of this. But as Thoreau said, "Some circumstantial evidence is very strong...as when you find a trout in the milk."

Goodnight and good luck!

[redacted]

Suggest following paragraph be inserted ahead of civil rights story...

The Senate today refused to restore any of the 58-million dollars cut from the budget for running the Post Office Department in the next fiscal year.

This is late story. Script now runs eight lines over.

Bliss

110

Edw. R. Murrow Mon., May 13, 1957

This is the news:

Prime Minister Macmillan told the House of Commons today that British shippers may resume use of the Suez Canal on Egypt's terms. Toll payments, he said, will be made to Egypt in pounds sterling. But Egyptian accounts [redacted] blocked last summer...when the canal was nationalized... will remain frozen until "satisfactory arrangements covering all claims against Egypt have been made." Macmillan said the tolls will be paid through a new special account opened by the Bank of England in the name of the National Bank of Egypt. And there was a suggestion that the [redacted] account might be used later to allow a resumption of trade. Hugh Gaitskell, leader of the Labour opposition, attacked the [redacted] government policy... charging that Britain was now forced to accept terms "substantially worse" than those existing before the Anglo-French intervention in October. Macmillan would not [redacted] concede the point. And it will be taken up later this week in formal debate. ~~British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd expressed the view...in answer to further questioning...that Israeli ships are entitled to use of the canal. He said it is an issue which should be "legally determined as quickly as possible."~~

14

In Jerusalem, an Israeli foreign office spokesman said today that Israel "now feels free" to send a test ship through the Suez Canal. A reporter had requested comment on the majority decision of the canal users' association last week to resume use of the waterway. The spokesman declined to say when Israel would make the test. But Israel, he said, delayed action... in order not to prejudice the deliberations of the users' association. Egypt contends that it has the right to bar Israeli shipping, on grounds that a state of belligerency with Israel still exists. Of the 15 members of the users' association, only France is still advising its shippers not to use the canal. The Israeli spokesman said his government is "keeping in touch" with France on the Suez question.

25

The United States today protested the "severe" travel restrictions [redacted] placed on American embassy personnel in Russia. The protest noted that restrictions on Soviet embassy personnel in this country are not so severe. And it asked Russia to say what steps it will take to bring the treatment more in balance. The United States suggested that travel regulations in both countries might be liberalized. [redacted]

33

Dr. Milton Eisenhower said today that the main obstacle to progress in the peaceful use of nuclear energy is manpower---not uranium or money. American educators, he said, are "worried" over the scarcity of teachers and students in the atomic field. And he cited the fact that, each year, Russia is graduating more scientists and engineers than the United States. Dr. Eisenhower spoke at the opening of the Inter-American Symposium on Peaceful Application of Nuclear Energy. The five-day meeting...at the Brookhaven Laboratory in New York... is being attended by the United States and 21 Latin American countries. [redacted] Another speaker, Dr. Willard F. Libby of the Atomic Energy Commission, predicted new discoveries in application of the atom for peace. He said nuclear energy, if handled wisely, can give the world material benefits "almost without end."

May 13, 1957

~~Edward R. Murrow~~
~~Pentagon, N.Y.~~

~~Add hard news...~~

Defense Secretary Wilson says he has ordered William Holladay, his special assistant for guided missiles, to take over general supervision of the earth satellite program. The Navy will still manage the project under ~~Holladay's guidance~~ Holladay.

-18

(more)

Six Air Force jets flew non-stop today from London, England, to Jamestown, Virginia, in seven hours and 33 minutes. The flight of the F-100-C Super-sabres was in commemoration of the founding of Jamestown by British colonists 350 years ago. Three of the aircraft continued non-stop to Los Angeles...to set a record for single-engine planes.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson predicted today that farm income in 1957 will exceed last year's level by about 5 percent. He said farm surpluses are on the decline. "And more farmers proportionately," he said, "own their own farms than ever before." Benson made these statements in reporting to President Eisenhower on the operation of his department in 1956.

The Senate today refused to restore any of the 58-million dollars cut from the budget for running the Post Office Department in the next fiscal year.

And the House Rules Committee agreed to vote May 21st... on whether to clear President Eisenhower's civil rights program for debate on the House floor.

The Supreme Court today reversed the conviction of three persons accused of concealing a fugitive Communist leader in a California mountain hide-out four years ago. The Communist leader was Robert G. Thompson, who jumped bail in 1950, after being convicted of conspiring to teach and advocate the violent overthrow of the government. The three found guilty of concealing him are Mrs. Shirley Kremen, Sidney Steinberg and Samuel Coleman. In a 6 to 2 decision... The Supreme Court ruled that their arrest and the seizure of evidence in the mountain cabin without a search warrant was illegal.

The Senate rackets committee today questioned the head of the Fruehauf Trailer Company about a 175-thousand-dollar loan his firm made INDIRECTLY to Teamsters President Dave Beck in 1954. Roy Fruehauf, head of the company, said the transaction took place a year after Beck had come to his rescue with a loan of one and a half million dollars in union funds. Fruehauf said he was engaged in a proxy fight at the time. He denied that the loan to Beck was "a pistol at your head" sort of thing.

74

(more)

Swing May 13

Tales of plots and counterplots in the Middle East are almost routine news ~~for the area~~, but a charge that now comes from Jordanian sources that Wgypt plotted with communist help to overthrow four Arab kings and the government of Lebanon is out of the ordinary. It was splurged yesterday by the Amman newspaper Al Urdon, and then broadcast by the Jordan radio, which gives it indirect sanction by King Hussein. It also is given a certificate of credibility by State Department sources. And it fills in details of a report that has been circulating for weeks in Arab countries, and was recently published in Al Hayat in Beirut.

The story is that early last year the envoys of Egypt to all Arab countries met in Cairo and concerted plans to overthrow the Kings of Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Libya and the liberal regime of Lebanon. A military board was set up to master-mind the campaign, headed by Lt.Colonel Abdul Hamid Serraj, at that time the procommunist chief of intelligence in the Syrian army . He has since been relieved of his post and sent to Egypt as military attache. Others on the board were Lt.Col.Hassan Ali Khalil of Egypt, some unidentified officers of the Jordanian army, and two Soviet officials who are named, one a vice-consul, the other an assistant military attache in the Soviet embassy in Beirut.

The first objective of the campaign was to go first after King Feisal of Iraq as an Arab openly supporting the West, and then to overthrow King Hussein of Jordan. In the meantime, King Saud of Saudi Arabia and King Sayed Mohammed Idris of Libya, were to be undermined. The report goes on to say that a few days before the recent crisis in Jordan, General Nuwar, chief of staff of the Jordanian army, received a large sum of money from the Egyptian embassy in Amman as the price for the assassination of King Hussein. When King Hussein cracked down on the conspirators, Nuwar fled to Damascus. The Amman newspaper calls this "a most dangerous Egyptian-communist plot to swallow the Arab world." When Hussein first talked about the conspiracy, he said it was a communist plot engineered from headquarters in Tel-Aviv, as though Israel was at the root of his troubles. Now he is letting Egypt and the Soviet Union be named as the principals.

The story, whether true or false, has special timeliness because of the current meeting between King Feisal and King Saud in Bagdad, which King Hussein is scheduled to join on Wednesday. This is Saud's first visit to Bagdad, and the open gesture of friendliness to Feisal is itself a new development. The meeting is not likely to end in an open breach of the Arab Federation, as it is being held to arrange the subsidy ~~which is needed to~~ that is to keep King Hussein in power. Egypt and Syria are in default on the 21 million dollars they were going to contribute. Apparently Feisal will be asked to help make up the purse. But even if the meeting ends with the usual protestations on Arab unity, the fact is that Nasser's Arab Federation is warped perhaps beyond repair.

It is noteworthy that Soviet complicity in the conspiracy is being charged ~~openly~~ this time by the Arabs themselves, and not by us. This may mean that a more cordial reception of the Eisenhower doctrine will lie ahead. However, the mission of Ambassador Richards is still shrouded with a good deal of mystery, some of which hardly seems necessary. Mr. Richards says that the mission commited ~~160~~ 120 million dollars, about half of it for military aid. But he has not said what went to whom. The only figure that has been used in the newspapers is 5 million dollars for military aid for Libya. Presumably some went to Iraq and other Bagdad pact countries. Mr. Richards is to fill in details when he reports to Congress in about two weeks.

But so long as the disbursements are obscure, they are likely to arouse local suspicions and jealousies, which won't make the Eisenhower doctrine any more popular.

It is too much to say that the report of the Egyptian-Soviet conspiracy is going to hurt Nasser's prestige or discredit the Soviet government very much with rank and file Arabs. Nasser and the Kremlin alike tell the area that it is the United States that is trying to dominate it. Nasser wraps himself in innocence and blames us for everything that goes wrong. In propaganda, the offense is the best defense. Nasser ~~may be~~ probably is losing ground in the Arab federation. But that does not mean that we are gaining what he is losing. King Saud probably is gaining, and perhaps King Feisal. King Hussein has been saved for a while. It is an odd fate that the American democracy has to be content with the benefits gained by these kings.

[redacted]

Edward R. Murrow

Pawling, N.Y.

May 13, 1957

Word for today.....

The Middle East has always been a land of intrigue. The latest report of a conspiracy has Russia and Egypt plotting the overthrow of no less than five Arab states. There is no proof of this. But as Thoreau said, "Some circumstantial evidence is very strong...as when you find a trout in the milk."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 13, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Prime Minister Macmillan told the House of Commons today that British shippers may resume use of the Suez Canal on Egypt's terms. Toll payments, he said, will be made to Egypt in pounds sterling. But Egyptian accounts blocked last summer..when the canal was nationalized..will remain frozen until "satisfactory arrangements covering all claims against Egypt have been made." Macmillan said the tolls will be paid through a new special account opened by the Bank of England in the name of the National Bank of Egypt. And there was a suggestion that the account might be used later to allow resumption of trade. Hugh Gaitskell, leader of the Labour opposition attacked the government policy ...charging that Britain was now forced to accept terms "substantially worse" than those existing before the Anglo - French intervention in October. Macmillan would not concede the point. And it will be taken up later this week in formal debate.

In Jerusalem, an Israeli foreign office spokesman said today that Israel "now feels freer" to send a test ship through the Suez Canal. A reporter had requested comment on the majority decision of the canal users' association last week to resume use of the waterway, The spokesman declined to say when Israel would make the test. But Israel, he said, delayed action..in order not to prejudice the deliberations of the users association. Egypt contends that it has the right to bar Israeli shipping on grounds that a state of belligerency with Israel still exists. Of the 15 members of the users' association, only France is still advising its shippers not to use the canal. The Israeli spokesman said his government is "keeping in touch" with France on the Suez question.

The United States today protested the "severe" travel restrictions placed on American embassy personnel in Russia. The protest noted that restrictions on Soviet embassy personnel in this country are not so severe. And it asked Russia to say what steps it will take to bring the treatment more in balance. The United States suggested that travel regulations in both countries be liberalized.

Dr. Milton Eisenhower said today that the main obstacle to progress in the peaceful use of nuclear energy is manpower -- not uranium or money. American educators, he said, are "worried" over the scarcity of teachers and students in the atomic field. And he cited the fact that, each year, Russia is graduating more scientists and engineers than the United States. Dr. Eisenhower spoke at the opening of the inter - American Symposium on Peaceful Application of Nuclear Energy. The five-day meeting...at the Brookhaven Laboratory in New York...is being attended by the United States and 21 Latin American countries.

Defense Secretary Wilson says he has ordered William Holladay, his special assistant for guided missiles, to take over general supervision of the earth satellite program. The Navy will still manage the project under Holladay.

Six Air Force jets flew non - stop today from London, England to Jamestown, Virginia, in seven hours and 33 minutes. The flight of the F-100-C Super-sabres was in commemoration of the founding of Jamestown by British 350 years ago. Three of the aircraft continued non - stop to Lon Angeles ... to set a record for single - engine planes.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson predicted today that farm income in 1957 will exceed last year's level by about 5 percent. He said farm surpluses are on the decline. "And more farmers proportionately," he said, "own their own farms than ever before." Benson made these statements in reporting to President Eisenhower on the operation of his department in 1956.

The Senate today refused to restore any of the 58-million dollars cut from the budget for running the Post Office Department in the next fiscal year.

And the House Rules Committee agreed to vote May 21st..on whether to clear President Eisenhower's civil rights program for debate on the House floor.

The Supreme Court today reversed the conviction of three persons accused of concerning a fugitive Communist leader in a California mountain hide - out, four years ago. The Communist leader was Robert G. Thompson, who jumped bail in 1950, after being convicted of conspiring to teach and advocate the violent overthrow of the government. The three found guilty of concealing him are Mrs. Shirlen Kremen, Sidney Steinberg and Samuel Coleman. The Supreme Court ruled in a 6 to 2 decision that their arrest and the seizure of evidence in the mountain cabin without a search warrant was illegal.

The Senate rackets committee today questioned the head of the Fruehauf Trailer Company about a 175-thousand - dollar loan his firm made indirectly to Teamsters President Dave Beck in 1954. Roy Fruehauf, head of the company said the transaction took place a year after Beck had come to his rescue with a loan of one and a half million dollars in union funds. Freuhauf said he was engaged in a proxy fight at the time. He denied that the loan to Beck was "a pistol at your head" sort of thing.

Tales of plots and counter plots in the Middle East are almost routine news, but a charge that now comes from Jordanian sources that Egypt plotted with Communist help to overthrow four Arab kings and the government of Lebanon is out of the ordinary. It was splurged yesterday by the Amman newspaper Al Urdon, and then broadcast by the Jordan radio, which gives it indirect sanction by King Hussein. It also is given a certificate of credibility by State Department sources. And it fills in details of a report that has been circulating for weeks in Arab countries and was recently published in Al Hayat in Beirut.

The story is that early last year the envoys of Egypt to all Arab countries met in Cairo and concerted plans to overthrow the kings of Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Libya and the liberal regime of Lebanon. A military board was set up to master - mind the campaign, headed by Lt. Colnel Abdul Mamid Serraj, at the time the pro-communist chief of intelligence in the Syrian army. He has since been relieved of his post and sent to Egypt as military attache. Others on the board were Lt. Col Hassan Ali Khalil of Egypt some unidentified officers of the Jordanian army, and two Soviet officials who are named, one a vice-consul, the other an assistant military attache in the Soviet embassy in Beirut.

The first objective of the campaign was to go after Keng Feisal of Iraq as an Arab openly supporting the West, and then to overthrow King Hussein of Jordan. In the meantime, King Saud of Saudi Arabia and King Sayed Mohammed Idris of Libya, were to be undermined. The report goes on to say that a few days before the recent crisis in Jordan, General Nuwar, chief of staff of the Jordanian army, recieved a large sum of money from the Egyptian embassy in Amman as the price for the assassination of King Hussein. When King Hussein cracked down on the conspirators, Nuwar fled to Damascus. Tha Amman newspsper calls this "a most dangerous Egyptian communist plot to swallow the Arab world.

When Hussein first talked about the conspiracy, he said it was a communist plot engineered from headquarters in Tel-Aviv, as though Israel was at the root of his troubles. Now he is letting Egypt and the Svviet Union be named as the principals.

The story, whether true of false, has special timeliness because of the current meeting between King Feisal and King Saud in Baghdad, which King Hussein is scheduled to join on Wednesday. This is Saud's first visit to Baghdad, and the open gesture of friendliness to Feisal is itself a new development. The meeting is not likely to end in an open breach of the Arab Federation, as it is being held to arrange the subsidy that it to keep King Hussein in power. Egypt and Syria are in default on the 21 million dollars they were going to contribute. Apparently Feisal will be asked to help make up the purse. But if the meeting ends with the usual protestations on on Arab unity, the fact is that Nasser's Arab Federation is warped perhaps beyond repair.

It is noteworthy that Soviet complicity in the conspiracy is being charged this time by the Arabs themselves, and not by us. This may mean that a a more cordial reception of the Eisenhower doctrine will lie ahead. However, the mission of Ambassador Richards is still shrouded with a good deal of mystery some of which hardly seems necessary. Mr. Richards says that the mission committed 120 million dollars, about half of it for military aid. But he has not said what went to whom. The only figure that has been used in newspapers is 5 million dollars for military aid for Libya. Presumably some went to Iraq and other Baghdad pact countries. Mr. Richards is to fill in details when he reports to Congress in about two weeks.

But so long as the disbursements are obscure, they are likely to arouse local suspicions and jealousies, which won't make the Eisenhower doctrine any more popular.

It is too much to say that the report of the Egyptian - Soviet conspiracy is going to hurt Nasser's prestige or discredit the Soviet government very much with rank and file Arabs. Nasser and the Kremlin alike tell the area that it is the United States that is trying to dominate it. Nasser wraps himself in innocense and blames us for everything that goes wrong. In propaganda, the offense is the best defense. Nasser probably is losing ground in the Arab federation. But that does not mean that we are gaining what he is losing. King Saud probably is gaining, and perhaps King Feisal. King Hussien has been saved for a while. It is an odd fate that the American democracy has to be content with the benefits gained by these kings.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is our announcer.

ANNOUNCER:

MURROW: The Middle East has always been a land of intrigue. The latest report of a conspiracy has Russia and Egypt plotting the overthrow of no less than five Arab states. There is no proof of this. But as Thoreau said, "Some circumstantial evidence is very strong...as when you find a trout in the milk."

Goodnight and good luck.

1150 DL PD | CHG LOWELL THOMAS ACCT FOR
ED MURROWS BDCAST.
May 14, 1957

(VIA WESTERN UNION)

WESTERN UNION
AP - New York
MAY 14 1957

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, N.Y.

2 LT Dulles
1950

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles made an important statement today on the subject of disarmament. For a first-hand report, we switch to Bill Downs in Washington. / Downs runs about five and a half minutes, returns on cue, "Now back to Ed Murrow." / That was my colleague, Bill Downs, reporting from Washington.

The United Nations disarmament subcommittee has resumed its work in London after a four-day recess. The American delegate, Harold Stassen, told the five-power conference today that the United States will not agree to any disarmament treaty involving forces of another country without first consulting that country and obtaining its consent. The statement apparently was aimed at refuting reports that the United States is considering a demilitarized zone in Germany. Mr. Dulles also reassured West Germany on that score at his news conference.

(more)

142

The United States today lifted its embargo on shipment of heavy weapons to Yugoslavia. The State Department announcement said that arms deliveries will go forward at "a more modest rate" than planned before the embargo a year ago. The decision to resume shipment, it said, is based on President Eisenhower's decision that Yugoslavia "is and firmly intends to remain independent."

HT/August

6W

President Eisenhower expressed concern today over reports that Congress may cut vital defense spending. Mr. Eisenhower voiced his anxiety at the weekly meeting of Republican congressional leaders at the White House. Representative Martin quoted him as saying that he "would not want to assume any responsibility for the safety of the country, if cuts of any substantial nature were made in missiles and aircraft." A House appropriations subcommittee has recommended a slash in the Defense Department budget. But its members said today...after the President's statement became known... that none of the cuts would cripple either the aircraft or missile programs. One subcommittee source says that contrary to what Mr. Eisenhower heard, the programs received preferential treatment. And Representative Taber of New York, senior Republican member of the full appropriations committee, told reporters he saw no reason for concern. He said, "I do not believe the committee will bring in a bill which will hurt any legitimate, profitable activity of the Defense Department. And by profitable," he said, "I mean effective." Republican Senate Leader Knowland... who attended the White House conference...says he agrees with the President on the need for "maintaining muscle in our national defense." He said he also agreed that "some" of the cuts voted by the House in appropriations for the State Department and the United States Information Agency should be restored. Knowland said the President gave Republican leaders a broad outline of the radio and television speech he will make tonight in defense of his budget. /They say text of speech will be available about an hour before airtime. Will have to update. /

(more)

186

LT Re 54 20

The Senate Appropriations Committee voted an additional cut today in funds for the United States Information Agency. It approved only 90-million dollars for the information agency, compared to the 106-million voted by the House. The Administration had requested 144-million dollars.

105

LT/Cesyd

In London, the Conservative government has announced the end of gasoline rationing, starting tomorrow. Gasoline was rationed in December, due to the sabotage of oil pipelines in Syria and blockage of the Suez Canal. A 10 percent cut in fuel oil for heavy industry remains in force. Prime Minister Macmillan said yesterday that his government could no longer advise British shippers not to use the canal. A two-day debate on Suez starts in the House of Commons tomorrow, and government leaders express confidence that the revolt of eight Conservative members will not spread.

The French cabinet decided today to increase the gasoline tax to help pay for the war in Algeria. The cabinet also called for higher postal rates and a five and a half percent increase in the sales tax on "non-essential goods". ~~The new austerity program must be approved by the National Assembly, which reconvened today after a one-month recess.~~

133

LT/Jordan

King Hussein of Jordan today declined an invitation to confer in Baghdad with the kings of Saudi Arabia and Iraq. A palace statement said Hussein is unable to attend the meeting due to "present circumstances." [redacted] King Faisal of Iraq and King Saud of Saudi Arabia have been holding joint talks in Baghdad for the past several days. ~~The Jordanian foreign minister said today that Jordan's policy will, in his words, "never deviate from Arab national directions."~~

~~Russia and Iran signed an agreement today settling their frontier dispute. Moscow calls the agreement "a substantial step forward in the development of mutual understanding and confidence between the two countries." Details of the agreement..., reported by the Soviet news agency Tass.. were not immediately released.~~

The White House ~~today~~ announced today that the Sultan of Morocco has accepted an invitation to visit Washington for three days, starting November 25th, as a guest of the President. American military operations in Morocco are expected to be discussed.

More hard news and word to come....

Bliss

97

May 14, 1957

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, N.Y.

RRP

This is the news:

The text of President Eisenhower's radio and television speech in defense of his budget has been released. "There is," he will say, "no cutrate price for security. The price of peace is high." Mr. Eisenhower will say, "I can see no immediate relaxation of international tensions to provide the basis now for substantial reductions. No great reductions are possible unless Congress eliminates or curtails existing federal programs, or unless we are willing to gamble with the safety of our country." The President's speech---the first of two such talks---will be broadcast by these CBS Radio stations later tonight.

Pickup.... Republican Senate Leader Knowland said today that he agrees with the President on the need, etc.

124

Edward R. Murrow

Pawling, N.Y.

Add [illegible]news....

Chairman Strauss today urged American membership in the International Atomic Energy Agency. Strauss told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the safeguards proposed are sound and adequate. Senate ratification is necessary before the United States can join.

The public relations firm serving the international teamsters union is reported to have recommended the suspension of Dave Beck as teamsters president... pending disposition of the charges against him. George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, has agreed to meet tomorrow with a five-man committee representing the teamsters union. The meeting is said to concern the possible resignation of Beck, but this is not confirmed.

A federal grand jury today indicted teamsters vice president James Hoffa on charges of conspiring to tap the telephone line at teamster union headquarters in Detroit. Also indicted...on the same charge...are Bernard Spindel, a professional wire tapper, and Bernard Brennan, president of teamsters Local 337.

(more)

Hoffa already is under indictment on charges of bribery in connection with the Senate rackets investigation.

Word...

Both the United States and Russia would seem [redacted] sincere in trying to find a first step toward disarmament on which they can agree. The [redacted] development of modern weapons[redacted] makes disagreement almost out of the question. President Eisenhower said, "For their own salvation, men are under a compulsion to turn this furious power from the devastation of war." Goodnight and good luck.

RIGHT LENGTH.

Script as stands is [redacted]

Bliss

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, May 14, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

ANNOUNCER: CBS News presents Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time, with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. In his summary of the news, and in his analysis of its meaning, Mr. Murrow frequently uses the exclusive reports of CBS News correspondents in this country and overseas. By short wave radio, by telegraph and cable, from news centers around the world, their on-the-spot reports provide first-hand coverage of the news as it happens. Each of these correspondents is a specialist, with a specialist's knowledge of the country to which he has been assigned, and each of them makes a habit of reporting the small, often unpublicized, but no less important detail which give added significance to the news of the day. From their reports you learn not only what is happening but why it is happening. The result is the complete authoritative coverage for which CBS News is noted. Now, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, May 14, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

This is the news:

MURROW: Secretary of State Dulles made an important statement today on the subject of disarmament. For a first-hand report, we switch to Bill Downs in Washington.

DOWNS: Secretary of State Dulles revealed an exciting new proposal to the Soviet Union today, which may be the first step toward rational and safe disarmament in this cold war world nervously contemplating the possibility of nuclear war.

At his news conference, Mr. Dulles also said that the United States is considering introduction of more modern and effective weapons into South Korea, that this Government would not oppose a move by Israel to send a test ship through the Suez Canal, and that if Congress refuses to approve American membership in the UN's atoms-for-peace international organization, it would be a serious blow to America's leadership.

But always the questioning returned to the Secretary's suggestion that perhaps the best place to start an international disarmament program would be a kind of open skies inspection system over the Arctic. The idea appeared to develop as the State Secretary answered increasingly-probing questions. Mr. Dulles said that the London disarmament conference appears to have reached the stage where serious consideration of concrete proposals may be possible. And he revealed that this Government is not proposing an inspection zone over Germany or Europe at all. So a reporter asked - just what is the disarmament thinking going on on our side? The following is Secretary Dulles's edited reply: it is an important proposal and worth listening to carefully.

DULLES: What we are thinking of is the possibility of developing zones which would be subjected to aerial inspection and we're not thinking primarily in terms of Europe in that respect, but rather in terms of the Arctic area, Alaska and Siberia and the like. It could be done there pretty much on a bi-lateral basis with Canada, and Canada has already indicated that it is sympathetically disposed to moving along those lines. Furthermore, those are the areas which involve - to a very considerable extent - the potential launching sites which might be used in atomic war. Now, the President put forward his atoms ... his aerial inspection proposal to be accompanied by ground patrols, and blueprints. That was originally rejected as a matter of principle by the Soviet rulers, who said it would be merely a - intelligence, a spying operation. Now at least there has been a change to the extent that instead of discussing whether or not there would be such inspection, they accept it in principle and the debate now is where will there be such inspection? That, I think, marks a certain major purpose. It still may be merely a diversionary exercise on the part of the Soviet. But there's some evidence to suggest that it does involve a genuine change on their part.

So now we get into the question of discussing areas where that can be tried out. As I indicated, we've reached no governmental decision yet at all as to areas that could be acceptable to us, nor do we know what would be acceptable to Soviet except that we inferred from the proposal which they made a little while ago - April 30th, I think.

In general, it would seem to me - and this is, you might say, a State Department viewpoint, it has not yet been coordinated with that of all the other departments, but it's primarily our responsibility to watch the political aspects of this matter - and we see a good many political pitfalls in trying to start out this experiment in Europe, where you run into a great many problems such as the unification of Germany, problems of NATO, the neutralization of some states such as Austria, Switzerland and so forth, and if we're going to take the steps as I said in my speech, small steps, carefully measured and carefully taken, carefully calculated. If we're going to do it in that way, that the most likely place to get started is in areas which are sparsely separated and don't involve many countries and no great political complications. Now, that's just the line of our thinking. We have not yet reached any conclusion as to drawing lines on a map as to just what the area would be under that test, nor do we have any reason to believe that the Soviets would accept our ideas. But we are, I think, at a point where there could be a fruitful discussion of what is an essential element of the matter. And I believe that if you could get inspection of certain areas that worked, if those were the areas which were likely to be a principal staging area for an atomic attack, that there would be a relaxation of fear in this matter which would then make it easier, almost inevitable, that there should be some reduction of other types of armament.

DOWNS: The Secretary of State talks about small steps carefully taken in these delicate negotiations to lessen the danger of war, But in the field of disarmament and international inspection, the first step is always a giant one - and Secretary Dulles may have taken it today.

This is Bill Downs in Washington. Now, back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: That was my colleague Bill Downs reporting from Washington.

The United Nations Disarmament sub-committee has resumed its work in London after a four-day recess. The American delegate, Harold Stassen, told the five-power conference today that the United States will not agree to any disarmament treaty involving forces of another country, without first consulting that country and obtaining its consent. The statement apparently was aimed at refuting reports that the United States is considering a demilitarized zone in Germany. Mr. Dulles also reassured West Germany on that score at his news conference.

The United States today lifted its embargo on shipment of heavy weapons to Yugoslavia. The State Department announcement said that arms deliveries will go forward at a more modest rate than planned before the embargo a year ago. The decision to resume shipment, it said, is based on President Eisenhower's decision that Yugoslavia is and firmly intends to remain independent.

President Eisenhower expressed concern today over reports that Congress may cut defense spending. Mr. Eisenhower voiced his anxiety at the weekly meeting of Republican Congressional leaders at the White House. Representative Martin quoted him as saying that he would "not want to assume any responsibility for the safety of the country if cuts of any substantial nature were made in missiles and aircraft."

A House Appropriations sub-committee has recommended a slash in the Defense Department budget. But its members said today, after the President's statement became known, that none of the cuts would cripple either the aircraft or missile programs. One sub-committee source says that contrary to what Mr. Eisenhower heard, the programs received preferential treatment. And Representative Taber of New York, senior Republican member of the full Appropriations Committee, told reporters he saw no reason for concern. He said "I do not believe the committee will bring in a bill which will hurt any legitimate profitable activity of the Defense Department, and by "profitable," he said "I mean effective."

Republican Senate leader Knowland says he agrees with the President on the need for maintaining muscle in our national defense. He said he also agreed that some of the cuts, voted by the House, in appropriations for the State Department and the United States Information Agency, should be restored. Knowland said the President gave Republican leaders a broad outline of the radio and television speech he will make tonight in defense of his budget. The text of President Eisenhower's ~~radio and television~~ speech~~, in defense of his budget,~~ has been released. There is, he will say, no cut rate price for security. The price of peace is high. Mr. Eisenhower will say "I can see no immediate relaxation of international tensions to provide the basis now for substantial reduction. No great reductions are possible unless Congress eliminates or curtails existing Federal programs or unless we're willing to gamble with the safety of our country."

The President's speech, the first of two such talks, will be broadcast by the CBS Radio stations later tonight.

The Senate Appropriations Committee voted an additional cut today in funds for the United States Information Agency. It approved only $90-million for the information agency, compared to the one hundred and six million voted by the House. The Administration had requested $144-million.

In London - the Conservative government has announced the end of gasoline rationing starting tomorrow. Gasoline was rationed in December due to the sabotage of oil pipelines in Syria and blockage of the Suez Canal. A ten per cent cut in fuel oil for heavy industry remains in force.

Prime Minister Macmillan said yesterday that his government could no longer advise British shippers not to use the canal. A two-day debate on Suez starts in the House of Commons tomorrow, and Government leaders express confidence that the revolt of eight Conservative members will not spread.

The French Cabinet decided today to increase the gasoline tax to help pay for the war in Algeria. The Cabinet also called for higher postal rates and a five and a half per cent increase in the sales tax on non-essential goods.

King Hussein of Jordan today declined an invitation to confer in Baghdad with Kings of Saudi Arabi and Iraq. A palace statement said Hussein is unable to attend the meetings due to present circumstances.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Now, here is George Bryan.

ANNOUNCER: (C O M M E R C I A L)

Now, here's Ed Murrow with the word for today.

MURROW: Both the United States and Russia would seem sincere in trying to find the first step toward disarmament on which they can agree. The development of modern weapons makes disagreement almost out of the question. President Eisenhower said for their own salvation, men are under a compulsion to turn this furious power from the devastation of war.

Good night and good luck.

ANNOUNCER: You have been listening to Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. Later this evening, CBS Radio will bring you a special address by President Dwight D. Eisenhower speaking in defense of his budget. This address will take the place of the nightly review of current events program, The World Tonight. Following the President's speech - over many of these stations - the special programming designed to give new insights into vital topics of the day, will continue with five minutes of the latest news by Allan Jackson, and the regular Tuesday night feature, Do You Know. The topic under discussion on Do You Know this evening is the relationship between mental attitudes and disease, how much do we think ourselves sick, and conversely, how do various physical ailments reflect themselves in mental disorders. Dr. Harold C. Wolfe, Associate Professor of psychiatry and professor of neurology at New York Hospital, will be Lyman Bryson's guest in discussing the subject, over most of these stations - here on the CBS ... RADIO NETWORK.

Ed. trans. P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, May 14, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

ANNOUNCER: CBS News presents Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time, with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. In his summary of the news, and in his analysis of its meaning, Mr. Murrow frequently uses the exclusive reports of CBS News correspondents in this country and overseas. By short wave radio, by telegraph and cable, from news centers around the world, their on-the-spot reports provide first-hand coverage of the news as it happens. Each of these correspondents is a specialist, with a specialist's knowledge of the country to which he has been assigned, and each of them makes a habit of reporting the small, often unpublicized, but no less important detail which give added significance to the news of the day. From their reports you learn not only what is happening but why it is happening. The result is the complete authoritative coverage for which CBS News is noted. Now, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, May 14, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Secretary of State Dulles made an important statement today on the subject of disarmament. For a first-hand report, we switch to Bill Downs in Washington.

DOWNS: Secretary of State Dulles revealed an exciting new proposal to the Soviet Union today, which may be the first step toward rational and safe disarmament in this cold war world nervously contemplating the possibility of nuclear war.

At his news conference, Mr. Dulles also said that the United States is considering introduction of more modern and effective weapons into South Korea, that this Government would not oppose a move by Israel to send a test ship through the Suez Canal, and that if Congress refuses to approve American membership in the UN's atoms-for-peace international organization, it would be a serious blow to America's leadership.

But always the questioning returned to the Secretary's suggestion that perhaps the best place to start an international disarmament program would be a kind of open skies inspection system over the Arctic. The idea appeared to develop as the State Secretary answered increasingly-probing questions. Mr. Dulles said that the London disarmament conference appears to have reached the stage where serious consideration of concrete proposals may be possible. And he revealed that this Government is not proposing an inspection zone over Germany or Europe at all. So a reporter asked - just what is the disarmament thinking going on on our side? The following is Secretary Dulles's edited reply: it is an important proposal and worth listening to carefully.

DULLES: What we are thinking of is the possibility of developing zones which would be subjected to aerial inspection and we're not thinking primarily in terms of Europe in that respect, but rather in terms of the Arctic area, Alaska and Siberia and the like. It could be done there pretty much on a bi-lateral basis with Canada, and Canada has already indicated that it is sympathetically disposed to moving along those lines. Furthermore, those are the areas which involve - to a very considerable extent - the potential launching sites which might be used in atomic war. Now, the President put forward his atoms ... his aerial inspection proposal to be accompanied by ground patrols, and blueprints. That was originally rejected as a matter of principle by the Soviet rulers, who said it would be merely a - intelligence, a spying operation. Now at least there has been a change to the extent that instead of discussing whether or not there would be such inspection, they accept it in principle and the debate now is where will there be such inspection? That, I think, marks a certain major purpose. It still may be merely a diversionary exercise on the part of the Soviet. But there's some evidence to suggest that it does involve a genuine change on their part.

So now we get into the question of discussing areas where that can be tried out. As I indicated, we've reached no governmental decision yet at all as to areas that could be acceptable to us, nor do we know what would be acceptable to Soviet except that we inferred from the proposal which they made a little while ago - April 30th, I think.

In general, it would seem to me - and this is, you might say, a State Department viewpoint, it has not yet been coordinated with that of all the other departments, but it's primarily our responsibility to watch the political aspects of this matter - and we see a good many political pitfalls in trying to start out this experiment in Europe, where you run into a great many problems such as the unification of Germany, problems of NATO, the neutralization of some states such as Austria, Switzerland and so forth, and if we're going to take the steps as I said in my speech, small steps, carefully measured and carefully taken, carefully calculated. If we're going to do it in that way, that the most likely place to get started is in areas which are sparsely separated and don't involve many countries and no great political complications. Now, that's just the line of our thinking. We have not yet reached any conclusion as to drawing lines on a map as to just what the area would be under that test, nor do we have any reason to believe that the Soviets would accept our ideas. But we are, I think, at a point where there could be a fruitful discussion of what is an essential element of the matter. And I believe that if you could get inspection of certain areas that worked, if those were the areas which were likely to be a principal staging area for an atomic attack, that there would be a relaxation of fear in this matter which would then make it easier, almost inevitable, that there should be some reduction of other types of armament.

DOWNS: The Secretary of State talks about small steps carefully taken in these delicate negotiations to lessen the danger of war. But in the field of disarmament and international inspection, the first step is always a giant one - and Secretary Dulles may have taken it today.

This is Bill Downs in Washington. Now, back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: That was my colleague Bill Downs reporting from Washington.

The United Nations Disarmament sub-committee has resumed its work in London after a four-day recess. The American delegate, Harold Stassen, told the five-power conference today that the United States will not agree to any disarmament treaty involving forces of another country, without first consulting that country and obtaining its consent. The statement apparently was aimed at refuting reports that the United States is considering a demilitarized zone in Germany. Mr. Dulles also reassured West Germany on that score at his news conference.

The United States today lifted its embargo on shipment of heavy weapons to Yugoslavia. The State Department announcement said that arms deliveries will go forward at a more modest rate than planned before the embargo a year ago. The decision to resume shipment, it said, is based on President Eisenhower's decision that Yugoslavia is and firmly intends to remain independent.

President Eisenhower expressed concern today over reports that Congress may cut defense spending. Mr. Eisenhower voiced his anxiety at the weekly meeting of Republican Congressional leaders at the White House. Representative Martin quoted him as saying that he would "not want to assume any responsibility for the safety of the country if cuts of any substantial nature were made in missiles and aircraft."

A House Appropriations sub-committee has recommended a slash in the Defense Department budget. But its members said today, after the President's statement became known, that none of the cuts would cripple either the aircraft or missile programs. One sub-committee source says that contrary to what Mr. Eisenhower heard, the programs received preferential treatment. And Representative Taber of New York, senior Republican member of the full Appropriations Committee, told reporters he saw no reason for concern. He said "I do not believe the committee will bring in a bill which will hurt any legitimate profitable activity of the Defense Department, and by "profitable," he said "I mean effective."

Republi... Republican Senate leader Knowland says he agrees with the President on the need for maintaining muscle in our national defense. He said he also agreed that some of the cuts, voted by the House, in appropriations for the State Department and the United States Information Agency, should be restored. Knowland said the President gave Republican leaders a broad outline of the radio and television speech he will make tonight in defense of his budget. The text of President Eisenhower's radio and television speech, in defense of his budget, has been released. There is, he will say, no cut rate price for security. The price of peace is high. Mr. Eisenhower will say "I can see no immediate relaxation of international tensions to provide the basis now for substantial reduction. No great reductions are possible unless Congress eliminates or curtails existing Federal programs or unless we're willing to gamble with the safety of our country."

The President's speech, the first of two such talks, will be broadcast by the CBS Radio stations later tonight.

The Senate Appropriations Committee voted an additional cut today in funds for the United States Information Agency. It approved only $90-million for the information agency, compared to the one hundred and six million voted by the House. The Administration had requested $144-million.

In London - the Conservative government has announced the end of gasoline rationing starting tomorrow. Gasoline was rationed in December due to the sabotage of oil pipelines in Syria and blockage of the Suez Canal. A ten per cent cut in fuel oil for heavy industry remains in force.

Prime Minister Macmillan said yesterday that his government could no longer advise British shippers not to use the canal. A two-day debate on Suez starts in the House of Commons tomorrow, and Government leaders express confidence that the revolt of eight Conservative members will not spread.

The French Cabinet decided today to increase the gasoline tax to help pay for the war in Algeria. The Cabinet also called for higher postal rates and a five and a half per cent increase in the sales tax on non-essential goods.

King Hussein of Jordan today declined an invitation to confer in Baghdad with Kings of Saudi Arabi and Iraq. A palace statement said Hussein is unable to attend the meetings due to present circumstances.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

Now, here is George Bryan.

ANNOUNCER: (C O M M E R C I A L)

Now, here's Ed Murrow with the word for today.

MURROW: Both the United States and Russia would seem sincere in trying to find the first step toward disarmament on which they can agree. The development of modern weapons makes disagreement almost out of the question. President Eisenhower said for their own salvation, men are under a compulsion to turn this furious power from the devastation of war.

Good night and good luck.

ANNOUNCER: You have been listening to Edward R. Murrow with the news. Mr. Murrow is heard Monday through Friday at this time with his report and analysis of the latest news developments. Later this evening, CBS Radio will bring you a special address by President Dwight D. Eisenhower speaking in defense of his budget. This address will take the place of the nightly review of current events program, The World Tonight. Following the President's speech - over many of these stations - the special programming designe to give new insights into vital topics of the day, will continue with five minutes of the latest news by Allan Jackson, and the regular Tuesday night feature, Do You Know. The topic under discussion on Do You Know this evening is the relationship between mental attitudes and disease, how much do we think ourselves sick, and conversely, how do various physical ailments reflect themselves in mental disorders. Dr. Harold C. Wolfe, Associate Professor of psychiatry and professor of neurology at New York Hospital, will be Lyman Bryson's guest in discussing the subject, over most of these stations - here on the CBS ... RADIO NETWORK.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 14, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles made an important statement today on the subject of disarmament. For a first - hand report, we switch to Bill Downs in Washington.

DOWNS: Secretary of State Dulles revealed an exciting new proposal to the Soviet Union today, which may be the first step toward rational and safe disarmament in this cold war world nervously contemplating the possibility of nuclear war.

At his news conference, Mr. Dulles also said that the United States is considering introduction of more modern and effective weapons into South Korea, that this Government would not oppose a move by Israel to send a test ship through the Suez Canal, and that if Congress refuses to approve American membership in the UN's atoms-for-peace international organization, it would be a serious blow to America's leadership.

But always the questioning returned to the Secretary's suggestion that perhaps the best place to start an international disarmament program would be a kind of open skies inspection system over the Arctic. The idea appeared to develop as the State Secretary answered incresingly - probing questions. Mr. Dulles said that the London disarmament conference appears to have reached the state where serious consideration of concrete proposals may be possible. And he revealed that this givernment is not proposing an inspection zone over Germany or Europe at all. So a reporter asked - just what is the disarmament thinking going on on our side? The following is Secretary Dulles's edited reply: it is an important proposal and worth listening to carefully.

DULLES: What we are thinking of is the possibility of developing zones which would be subjected to aerial inspection and we're not thinking primarily in terms of Europe in that respect, but rather in terms of the Arctic area, Alaska and Siberia and the like. It could be done there pretty much on a bi-lateral basis with Canada, and Canada has already indicated that it is sympathetically disposed to moving along those lines. Furthermore, those are the areas which involve - to a very considerable extent - the potential launching sites which might be used in atomic war. Now, the President put forward his atoms ...his aerial inspection proposal to be accompanied by ground patrols, and blueprints. That was originally rejected as a matter of principle by the Soviet rulers, who said it would be merely a - intelligence, a spying operation. Now at least there has been a change to the extent that instead of discussing whether or not there would be such inspection, they accept it in principle and the debate now is where will there be such inspection? That, I think, makes a certain major purpose. It still may be merely a diversionary exercise on the part of the Soviet. But there's some evidence to suggest that it does involve a genuine change on their part.

So now we get into the question of discussing areas where that can be tried out. As I indicated, we've reached no governmental decision yet at all as to areas that could be acceptable to us, nor do we know what would be acceptable to Soviet except that we inferred from the proposal which they made a little while ago - April 30th, I think.

In general, it would seem to me - and this is, you might say, a State Department viewpoint, it has not yet been coordinated with that of all the other departments, but it's primarily our responsibility to watch the political aspects of this matter and we see a good many political pitfalls in trying to start out this experiment in Europe, where you run into a great many problems such as the unification of Germany, problems of NATO, the neutralization of some states such as Austria, Switzerland and so forth, and if we're going to take the steps as I said in my speech, small steps, carefully measured and carefully taken, carefully calculated. If we're going to do it in that way, that the most likely place to get started is in areas which are sparsely separated and don't involve many countries and no great political complications. Now, that's just the line of our thinking. We have not yet reached any conclusion as to drawing lines on a map as to just what the area would be under that test, nor do we have any reason to believe that the Soviets would accept our ideas. But we are, I think, at a point where there could be a fruitful discussion of what is an essential element of the matter. And I believe that if you could get inspection of certain areas that worked if those were the areas which were likely to be a principal staging area for an atomic attack, that there would be a relaxation of fear in this matter which would then make it easier, almost inevitable, that there should be some reduction of other types of armament.

DOWNS: The Secretary of State talks about small steps carefully taken in these delicate negotiations to lessen the danger of war. But in the field of disarmament and international inspection, the first step is always a giant one - and Secretary DUlles may have taken it today.

This is Bill Downs in Washington. Now, back to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: That was my colleague Bill Downs reporting from Washington.

The United Nations Disarmament sub-committee has resumed its work in London after a four - day recess. The American delegate, Harold Stassen, told the five - power conference today that the United States will not agree to any disarmament treaty involving forces of another country, without first consulting that country and obtaining its consent. The statement apparently was aimed at refuting reports that the United States is considering a demilitarizes zone in Germany. Mr. Dulles also reassured West Germany on that score at his news conference.

The United States today lifted its embargo on shipment of heavy weapons to Yugoslavia. The State Department announcement said that arms deliveries will go forward at a more modest rate than planned before the embargo a year ago. The decision to resume shipment, it said, is based on President Eisenhower's decision that Yugoslavia is and firmly intends to remain independent.

President Eisenhower expressed concern today over reports that Congress may cut defense spendng. Mr. Eisenhower voiced his anxiety at the weekly meeting of Republican Congressional leaders at the White House. Represntative Martin quoted him as saying that he would "not want to assume any responsibility for the safety of the country if cuts of any substantial nature were made in missiles and aircraft."

A House Appropriations sub-committee has recommended a slash in the Defense Department budget. But its members said today, that the President's statement became known, that none of the cuts would cripple either the aircraft or missile programs,. One sub-committee source says that contrary to what Mr Eisenhower heard, the program received preferential treatment. And Representative Taber of New York, senior Republican member of the full Appropriations Committee, told reporters he saw no reason for concern. He said "I do not believe the committee will bring in a bill which will hurt any legitimate profitable activity of the Defense Department, and by "profitable", he said "I mean effective."

Republican Senate leader Knowland says he agrees with the President on the need for maintaining muscle in our national defense. He said he also agreed that some of the cuts, voted by the House, in appropriations for the State Department and the United States Information Agency, should be restored. Knowland said the President gave Republican leaders a broad outline of the radio and television speech he will make tonight in defense of his budget. The test of President Eisenhower's speech has been release. There is, he will say, no cut rate price for security. The price of peace is high. Mr. Eisenhower will say "I can see no immediate relaxation of international tensions to provide the basis now for substantial reduction. No great reductions are possible unless Congress eliminated or curtails existing Federal programs or unless we're willing to gamble with the safety of our country."

The President's speech, the first of two such talks, will be broadcast by the CBS Radio stations later tonight.

The Senate Appropriations Committee voted an additional cut today in funds for the United States Information Agency. It approved only $90-million for the information agency, compared to the one hundred and six million voted by the House. The Administration had requested $144-million.

In London - the conservative government has announced the end of gasoline rationing starting tomorrow. Gasoline was rationed in December due to the sabotage of oil pipelines in Syria and blockage of the Suez Canal. A ten percent cut in fuel oil for heavy industry remains in force.

Prime Minister Macmillan said yesterday that his government could no longer advise British shippers nottouse the canal. A two-day debate on Suez starts in the House of Commons tomorrow, and Government leaders express confidence that the revolt of eight Conservative membess will not spread.

The French Cabinet decided today to increase the gasoline tax to help pay for the war in Algeria. The cabinet also called for higher postal rates an five and a half per cent increase in the sales tax on non-essential goods.

King Hussein of Jordan today declined an invitation to confer in Baghdad with Kings of Saudi Arabia and Iraq. A palace statement said Hussein is unabl to attend the meetings due to present circumstances.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:
MURROW: Both the United States and Russia would seem sincere in trying to find the first step toward disarmament on which then can agree. The development of modern weapons makes disagreement almost out of the question. President Eisenhower said for their own salvation, men are under a compulsion to turn this furious power from the devastation of war.... Good night and good luck.

1140 DL Pd Chg Lowell Thomas
Acct for Ed Murrow's bdcast

May 15, 1957

(VIA WESTERN UNION)

WESTERN UNION
AP - New York

MAY 15 1957

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, N.Y.

2 LT / C Steele

1989

This is the news:

Britain today tested its first hydrogen bomb. The British announcement said, "The first explosion of a nuclear device in the present series took place today at a high altitude in the Central Pacific. Scientific records are being collected for accurate evaluation. A further statement will be made in due course."

Premier Mollet of France submitted his resignation today... then withdrew it when President Coty persuaded him to stay in office. Mollet said he wanted to resign because he felt deserted by the United States and Britain in the Suez dispute. For the full story, we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris. / Schoenbrun spot to run approx two and half minutes/.

(more)

118

LT/65431

That was my colleague, David Schoenbrun, reporting from Paris.

The announcement that France will again refer the Suez question to the Security Council took diplomats at United Nations headquarters by surprise. An Egyptian spokesman called the action "a propaganda move designed to divert attention from Algeria." He accused France of "plotting" with Israel.

A two-day debate on Suez opened today in the British House of Commons. For that story we switch now to London and my colleague, Howard K. Smith. / Smith tape runs two and half minutes and ends on cue "Now back to Ed Murrow in New York."/

In Rome, President Gronchi today asked Adone Zoli, a Christian Democrat, to try to form a new government. Zoli is described as a "moderate progressive." He was budget minister in the Segni government, which fell on May sixth.

(more)

180

The central committee of the Polish Communist Party met in Warsaw today for the first time since the "democratization" of the regime last October. Communist Leader Gomulka told the committee...in its opening session...that the road to socialism can vary in different countries so long as "universal principles" are adhered to, including the dictatorship of the proletariat and socialization of the means of production. Gomulka said this is "an historically new situation." And he suggested that Communism in Poland would have taken a different form, even if it had not been for Stalin and what he called "the wrongs and distortions of the cult of the individual." Gomulka appealed for support of the Roman Catholic Church in matters concerning national interest. He apparently made no direct reference to the behind-the-scene struggle in Poland between the so-called party conservatives and those who favor more independence from Moscow.

Soviet Premier Bulganin made a bid today for new high-level talks. He said, "There are many things the leaders of the western and eastern countries can talk about---provided, of course, that the meetings are properly prepared." Party Boss Khrushchev made a similar statement last week...in an interview with Turner Catledge, managing editor of the New York Times. Bulganin said in today's speech that Russia's only "special" interest in the Middle East is peace and Arab independence. He again attacked the Eisenhower Doctrine.

(more)

HT/G 5536

Representatives of the United States and Red China met in Geneva today for the 67th time since August, 1955. The talks have concerned repatriation of nationals (eight Americans are still held in China) and relaxation of tension in the Formosa area. Today's meeting lasted an hour and 35 minutes, and resulted in no apparent progress. The American representative, Alexis Johnson, is returning to Washington tomorrow on home leave.

110

LT/ Aug

Word as follows...

In Suez, the need for coordination of policy was clearly demonstrated. Petroleum Nasby said, "I wunst attendid a cirkus and beheld with astonishment wun rider who thot he cood ride two horses, each goin a diffrent way. Tying his feet to the spirited steeds, he started em. But alas, in a second he was ript in two pieces and the arena wuz drencht with his goar." Goodnight and good luck.

Alternate word as follows...

With regard to Suez, the United States, Britain and France all made mistakes. This is a time for profiting from the experience, not for looking back and fixing blame. For as Churchill said in another critical time, "If the present now engages in a quarrel with the past, then surely the future will be lost." Goodnight and good luck.

I couldn't resist Nasby. London piece is recorded. Still no word from Paris.

Bliss

152

May 15, 1957

(VIA WESTERN UNION)

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, N.Y.

2 LT / Ger 101 P

Add hard news....

President Eisenhower warned Congress today not to "trifle" with the military budget. The President...at his news conference...followed up what he said in his broadcast last night---that there is no cut-rate price for peace. He referred to reports that a House subcommittee is thinking of cutting two and a half billion dollars from the defense budget. He doubted such a cut could be "honestly" made. But if it is made, he said, "we are going to be in trouble somewhere along the line." Mr. Eisenhower denied that he had become more liberal since taking office in 1952. "If anything," he said, "I think I have grown more conservative." At the same time, he said that if "any modern political philosophy fails to study the needs of the people today---not of 1860---then in the long run we are sunk." The President said Russia is feeling the arms burden the same as the United States, and that this may be why the Russians seem to be more interested in disarmament. He supported Israel's plan to send a test ship through the Suez Canal. But to use force, he said, would be "reprehensible".

(more)

160

In Congress, the House today voted to kill the Administration's soil bank program...after subsidies are paid to farmers on this year's crops. The vote to eliminate the program was 192 to 187.

The Senate Appropriations Committee added 62-million dollars to a supplemental money bill passed by the House. Part of the increase would go for a flood insurance program.

The Justice Department today outlined its policy for admitting additional Hungarian refugees to the United States. In general, admission will be limited to refugees who already have relatives in this country, or who possess unusual skills or talents, or whose entry would be "in the national interest."

The Senate rackets committee has decided to call teamsters president Dave Beck back for more questioning, after hearing an additional witness tomorrow.

(more)

175

LT/Guidell

Committee counsel, Robert Kennedy, says the committee has evidence indicating that the 322-thousand dollars Beck claims he "borrowed" from the teamsters union actually was stolen. Five vice presidents of the union conferred for more than an hour today with President Meany of the AFL-CIO. There are reports...which are not confirmed...that Beck may step down as head of the teamsters, pending determination of his innocence or guilt.

A chemical explosion injured four persons today at the atomic research center at Brookhaven, Long Island. One of the injured is reported in serious condition. Six other persons were exposed to acid vapors and required medical attention. The Atomic Energy Commission says no nuclear radiation was involved.

/This winds up script. Schoenbrun is recording his piece at seven fifteen. We are eight lines over if David keeps his piece to two and half minutes. Elinination of Bulganin story would make lineage exactly right.

Bliss

Edward R. Murrow Wed., May 15, 1956

[redacted]

This is the news:

Britain today tested its first hydrogen bomb. The British announcement said, "The first explosion of a nuclear device in the present series took place today at a high altitude in the Central Pacific. Scientific records are being collected for accurate evaluation. A further statement will be made in due course."

Premier Mollet of France submitted his resignation today... then withdrew it when President Coty persuaded him to stay in office. Mollet said he wanted to resign because he felt deserted by the United States and Britain in the Suez dispute. For the full story, we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris. [redacted]

8 (more)

That was my colleague, David Schoenbrun, reporting from Paris. The announcement that France will again refer the Suez question to the Security Council took diplomats at United Nations headquarters by surprise. An Egyptian spokesman called the action "a propaganda move designed to divert attention from Algeria." He accused France of "plotting" with Israel.

A two-day debate on Suez opened today in the British House of Commons. For that story we switch now to London and my colleague, Howard K. Smith. / ~~Smith tags [illegible] back to Ed Murrow in New York.~~ /

In Rome, President Gronchi today asked Adone Zoli, a Christian Democrat, to try to form a new government. Zoli is described as a "moderate progressive." He was budget minister in the Segni government, which fell on May sixth.

(more)

18

The central committee of the Polish Communist Party met in Warsaw today for the first time since the "democratization" of the regime last October. Communist Leader Gomulka told the committee...in its opening session...that the road to socialism can vary in different countries so long as "universal principles" are adhered to, including the dictatorship of the proletariat and socialization of the means of production. Gomulka said this is "an historically new situation." And he suggested that Communism in Poland would have taken a different form, even if it had not been for Stalin and what he called "the wrongs and distortions of the cult of the individual." Gomulka appealed for support of the Roman Catholic Church in matters concerning national interest. He apparently made no direct reference to the behind-the-scene struggle in Poland between the so-called party conservatives and those who favor more independence from Moscow.

[redacted]

(more)

~~last week...in an interview with Turner Catledge, managing editor of the New York Times. Bulganin said in today's speech that Russia's only "special" interest in the Middle East is peace and Arab independence. He again attacked the Eisenhower Doctrine.~~

Representatives of the United States and Red China met in Geneva today for the 67th time since August, 1955. The talks have concerned repatriation of nationals (eight Americans are still held in China) and relaxation of tension in the Formosa area. Today's meeting lasted an hour and 35 minutes, and resulted in no apparent progress. The American representative, Alexis Johnson, is returning to Washington tomorrow on home leave.

45

[redacted]

President Eisenhower warned Congress today not to "trifle" with the military budget. The President...at his news conference...followed up what he said in his broadcast last night---that there is no cut-rate price for peace. He referred to reports that a House subcommittee is thinking of cutting two and a half billion dollars from the defense budget. He doubted such a cut could be "honestly" made. But if it is made, he said, "we are going to be in trouble somewhere along the line."

Mr. Eisenhower denied that he had become more liberal since taking office in 1952. "If anything," he said, "I think I have grown more conservative." At the same time, he said that if "any modern political philosophy fails to study the needs of the people today---not of 1860---then in the long run we are sunk." The President said Russia is feeling the arms burden the same as the United States, and that this may be why the Russians seem to be more interested in disarmament. He supported Israel's plan to send a test ship through the Suez Canal. But to use force, he said, would be "reprehensible".

(more) 57

In Congress, the House today voted to kill the Administration's soil bank program...after subsidies are paid to farmers on this year's crops. The vote to eliminate the program was 192 to 187.

The Senate Appropriations Committee added 62-million dollars to a supplemental money bill passed by the House. Part of the increase would go for a flood insurance program.

The Justice Department today outlined its policy for admitting additional Hungarian refugees to the United States. In general, admission will be limited to refugees who already have relatives in this country, or who possess unusual skills or talents, or whose entry would be "in the national interest."

The Senate rackets committee has decided to call Teamsters president Dave Beck back for more questioning, after hearing an additional witness tomorrow.

(more) 72

The committee counsel, Robert Kennedy, says the committee has documentary evidence indicating that the 322-thousand dollars Beck claims he "borrowed" from the teamsters union actually was stolen. Five vice presidents of the union conferred for more than an hour today with President Meany of the AFL-CIO. There are reports...which are not reconfirmed...that Beck may step down as head of the teamsters, pending determination of his innocence or guilt.

A chemical explosion injured four persons today at the atomic research center at Brookhaven, Long Island. One of the injured is reported in serious condition. Six other persons were exposed to said vapors and required medical attention. The Atomic Energy Commission says no nuclear radiation was involved in the accident.

~~This winds up script. Schneeman is receiving this piece of sense shortly~~

Bliss

~~Word on reviews...~~

~~In Suez, the need for consideration of policy was already demonstrated. Petroleum Nasby said, "I cannot attend a circus and behold with astonishment two wild men that have consumed twenty horses, each gain a diffrent way. Tying his feet to the spinning steeds, he shouted on. But alas, in a second he was torn in two pieces and the arena was drenched with his gore." Goodnight and good luck.~~

Word for Today...

~~Alternate - Extended~~

With regard to Suez, the United States, Britain and France all made mistakes. ~~But~~ This is a time for profiting from the experience, not for looking back and fixing blame. For as Churchill said in another critical time, "If the present now engages in a quarrel with the past, then surely the future will be lost." Goodnight and good luck.

~~I couldnit resist Nasby. London piece is recorded. Still no word from Paris.~~

~~Mike~~

QR-15360

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD RO MURROW WITH THE NEWS

WEDNESDAY, MAY 15, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: ... Premier Mollet of France submitted his resignation today, then withdrew it when President Coty persuaded him to stay in office. Mollet said he wanted to resign because he felt deserted by the United States and Britain in the Suez dispute. For the full story, we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: This is Paris in the spring. The chestnuts are blooming and so are crises - Cabinet crises and an international crisis. A new kind of crisis erupted here today when Prime Minister Guy Mollet, in a towering rage, went to see the President of the Republic to offer him his resignation because, he said, "France was not being supported by its allies and because the United Nations had no respect for international law." The President of the Republic congratulated the Premier on his high-minded defense of French interest, but refused to accept his resignation. Mr. Mollet then withdrew it and agreed to stay in office as a patriot doing his duty. Why then did he resign in the first place? And why has he also called for a UN Security Council meeting on Suez? The answer is very obvious here in Paris. This country is in the most desparate of all crises, alone and isolated, way out on a limb in international affairs - a limb that's over a deep pit. The limb - the Suez Canal.

French policy on Suez has been a complete failure. The military invasion of last November had to be called off and the troops withdrawn. The Users Association has backfired. At first, it refused to pay tolls to Egypt or accept Egyptian control, but now the Users have capitulated and are going along pretty much on Nasser's terms, or so it looks over here. So the French are furious. They feel humiliated and betrayed by their best friends, left out on the end of that lonely limb.

The deep pit is North Africa, the endless, almost hopeless war in Algeria. The French will not grant independence there, particularly under duress, but the rebels, being aided and abetted by Nasser, won't quit. So, the deep pit is right there under the lonely limb. France cannot jump off and will not crawl back. There's a kind of mad logic in all this, Ed. Something stirring about it. You can't help but admire someone who will not quit under fire. It's the kind of spirit that might just prevail against heavy odds, but the odds are loaded against France in this new North African and international adventure. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris. The announcement that France will again refer the Suez question to the Security Council took diplomats at the United Nations headquarters by surprise. An Egyptian spokesman called the action "a propaganda move, designed to divert attention from Algeria." He accused France of "plotting" with Israel.

A two-day debate on Suez opened today in the British House of Commons. For that story, we switch now to London and my colleague, Howard K. Smith.

SMITH: Reporters in the House of Commons this afternoon witnessed one of the most distinguished anticlimaxes of recent times - the opening of a two-day debate on the Suez Canal crisis. Sir Winston Churchill, who is rarely seen in Parliament nowadays, was present this afternoon, automatically marking it as a special occasion. The House of Commons was filled to overflowing with lesser members of Parliament. The Prime Minister, Mr. Macmillan, scheduled himself to speak not once but twice in the debate - to open it today and to close it tomorrow - a very rare thing for a Prime Minister to do. Mr. Macmillan's spokesmen say he is doing this because there's danger of a defeat. The Labor opposition has introduced a motion of censure against the government for its handling of the Suez crisis. If enough Conservatives, angry at Macmillan's swallowing Nasser's terms for letting British ships use the Suez Canal, should refuse Macmillan their votes when the House divides tomorrow night, then he would be overthrown. With all that high dramatic potential, the debate may liven up tomorrow. But today, after the main speakers had said their pieces, most observers thought that the newspapers here had been more right than they realized when they called this event "a post mortem" on Suez. Like a couple of extinct volcanos, Mr. Gaitskell, the leader of the opposition, and the Prime Minister for the government tried hard to smoulder at one another the way they did back in the days when the crisis was new and passions were high. But this afternoon, no spark of real fire came out. The key phrase of the debate was Mr. Gaitskell's, who said, "It's no use running your head against facts." That was roughly the Prime Minister's theme, too; so there was no real fight between them. A quick superficial check around the lobby confirmed the impression of this reporter that the British Conservative is probably too well bred to rebel against the party leader with real effectiveness. At most, twenty Conservatives may abstain from voting tomorrow. But since Macmillan has an automatic majority of more than fifty votes in the House of Commons, he is not in real danger. The basic trouble with today's debate is probably that human nature is just organically more concerned with present troubles than it is with past ones. The headline in an afternoon paper here tells about "Traffic Chaos in London as Gasoline Rationing Ends". That is the live concern here. Suez is dead. Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD RO MURROW WITH THE NEWS

WEDNESDAY, MAY 15, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: ... Premier Mollet of France submitted his resignation today, then withdrew it when President Coty persuaded him to stay in office. Mollet said he wanted to resign because he felt deserted by the United States and Britain in the Suez dispute. For the full story, we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: This is Paris in the spring. The chestnuts are blooming and so are crises - Cabinet crises and an international crisis. A new kind of crisis erupted here today when Prime Minister Guy Mollet, in a towering rage, went to see the President of the Republic to offer him his resignation because, he said, "France was not being supported by its allies and because the United Nations had no respect for international law." The President of the Republic congratulated the Premier on his high-minded defense of French interest, but refused to accept his resignation. Mr. Mollet then withdrew it and agreed to stay in office as a patriot doing his duty. Why then did he resign in the first place? And why has he also called for a UN Security Council meeting on Suez? The answer is very obvious here in Paris. This country is in the most desparate of all crises, alone and isolated, way out on a limb in international affairs - a limb that's over a deep pit. The limb - the Suez Canal.

French policy on Suez has been a complete failure. The military invasion of last November had to be called off and the troops withdrawn. The Users Association has backfired. At first, it refused to pay tolls to Egypt or accept Egyptian control, but now the Users have capitulated and are going along pretty much on Nasser's terms, or so it looks over here. So the French are furious. They feel humiliated and betrayed by their best friends, left out on the end of that lonely limb.

The deep pit is North Africa, the endless, almost hopeless war in Algeria. The French will not grant independence there, particularly under duress, but the rebels, being aided and abetted by Nasser, won't quit. So, the deep pit is right there under the lonely limb. France cannot jump off and will not crawl back. There's a kind of mad logic in all this, Ed. Something stirring about it. You can't help but admire someone who will not quit under fire. It's the kind of spirit that might just prevail against heavy odds, but the odds are loaded against France in this new North African and international adventure. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris. The announcement that France will again refer the Suez question to the Security Council took diplomats at the United Nations headquarters by surprise. An Egyptian spokesman called the action "a propaganda move, designed to divert attention from Algeria." He accused France of "plotting" with Israel.

A two-day debate on Suez opened today in the British House of Commons. For that story, we switch now to London and my colleague, Howard K. Smith.

SMITH: Reporters in the House of Commons this afternoon witnessed one of the most distinguished anticlimaxes of recent times - the opening of a two-day debate on the Suez Canal crisis. Sir Winston Churchill, who is rarely seen in Parliament nowadays, was present this afternoon, automatically marking it as a special occasion. The House of Commons was filled to overflowing with lesser members of Parliament. The Prime Minister, Mr. Macmillan, scheduled himself to speak not once but twice in the debate - to open it today and to close it tomorrow - a very rare thing for a Prime Minister to do. Mr. Macmillan's spokesmen say he is doing this because there's danger of a defeat. The Labor opposition has introduced a motion of censure against the government for its handling of the Suez crisis. If enough Conservatives, angry at Macmillan's swallowing Nasser's terms for letting British ships use the Suez Canal, should refuse Macmillan their votes when the House divides tomorrow night, then he would be overthrown. With all that high dramatic potential, the debate may liven up tomorrow. But today, after the main speakers had said their pieces, most observers thought that the newspapers here had been more right than they realized when they called this event "a post mortem" on Suez. Like a couple of extinct volcanos, Mr. Gaitskell, the leader of the opposition, and the Prime Minister for the government tried hard to smoulder at one another the way they did back in the days when the crisis was new and passions were high. But this afternoon, no spark of real fire came out. The key phrase of the debate was Mr. Gaitskell's, who said, "It's no use running your head against facts." That was roughly the Prime Minister's theme, too, so there was no real fight between them. A quick superficial check around the lobby confirmed the impression of this reporter that the British Conservative is probably too well bred to rebel against the party leader with real effectiveness. At most, twenty Conservatives may abstain from voting tomorrow. But since Macmillan has an automatic majority of more than fifty votes in the House of Commons, he is not in real danger. The basic trouble with today's debate is probably that human nature is just organically more concerned with present troubles than it is with past ones. The headline in an afternoon paper here tells about "Traffic Chaos in London as Gasoline Rationing Ends". That is the live concern here. Suez is dead. Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 15, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Britain today tested its first hydrogen bomb. The British announcement said, "The first explosion of a nuclear device in the present series took place today at a high altitude in the Central Pacific. Scientific records are being collected for accurate evaluation. A further statement will be made in due course."

Premier Mollet of France submitted his resignation today...then withdrew it when President Coty persuaded him to stay in office. Mollet said he wanted to resign because he felt deserted by the United States and Britain in the Suez dispute. For the full story, we switch to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: This is Paris in the spring. The chestnuts are blooming and so are crises - cabinet crises and an international crisis. A new kind of crisis erupted here today when Prime Minister Guy Mollet, in a towering rage, went to see the President of the Republic to offer him his resignation because, he said, "France was not being supported by its allies and because the United Nations had no respect for international law." The President of the Republic congratulated the Premier on his high-minded defense of French interest, but refused to accept his resignation. Mr. Mollet then withdrew it and agreed to stay in office as a patriot doing his duty. Why then did he resign in the first place? and why has he also called for a UN Security Council meeting on Suez? The answer is very obvious here in Paris. This country is in the most desperate of all crises, alone and isolated, way out on a limb in international affairs - a limb that's over a deep pit. The limb - the Suez Canal.

French policy on Suez has been a complete failure. The military invasion of last November had to be called off and the troops withdrawn.. The Users Association has backfired. At first, it refused to pay tolls to Egypt or accept Egyptian control, but now the Users have capitulated and are going along pretty much on Nasser's terms, or so it looks over here. So the French are furious. They feel humiliated and betrayed by their best friends, left out on the end of that lonely limb.

The deep pit is North Africa, the endless, almost hopeless war in Algeria. The French will not grant indpendence there, particularly under duress, but the rebels, being aided and abetted by Nasser, won't quit. So, the deep pit is right there under the lonely limb. France cannot jump off and will not crawl back. There's a kind of mad logic in all this, Ed. Something stirring about it. You can't help but admire someone who will not quit under fire. It's the kind of spirit that might just prevail against heavy odds, but the odds are loaded against France in this new North African and international adventuee. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris. The announcement that France will again refer the Suez Question to the Security Council took diplomats at the United Nations headquarters by surprise. An Egyptian spokesman called the action "a propaganda move, designed to divert attention from Algeria." He accused France of "plotting" with Israel.

A two-day debate on Suez opened today in the British House of Commons. For that story, we switch now to London and my colleague, Howard K. Smith.

SMITH: Reporters in the House of Commons this afternoon witnessed one of the most distinguished anticlimaxes of recent times - the opening of a two-day debate on the Suez Canal crisis. Sir Winston Churchill, who is rarely seen in Parliament nowadays, was present this afternoon, automatically marking it as a special occasion. The House of Commons was filled to overflowing with lesser members of Parliament. The Prime Minister, Mr. Macmillan, scheduled himself to speak not once but twice in the debate - to open it today and to close it tomorrow - a very rare thing for a Prime Minister to do. Mr. Macmillan's spokesmen say he is doing this because there's danger of a defeat. The Labor oppostion has introduced a motion of censure against the government for its handling of the Suez crisis. If enough Conservatives, angry at Macmillan's swallowing Nasser's terms for letting British ships use the Suez Canal, should refuse Macmillan their votes when the House divides tomorrow night, then he would be overthrown.With all that high dramatic potential, the debate may liven up tomorrow. But today, after the main speakers had said their pieces, most observers thought that the newspapers here had been more right than they realized when they called this event "a post mortem" on Suez. Like a couple of extinct volcanos, Mr. Gaitskell, the leader of the opposition, and the Prime Minister for the government tried hard to smoulder at one another the way they did back in the days when the crisis was new and passions were high. But this afternoon, no spark of real fire came out. The key phrase of the debate was Mr. Gaitskell's, who said, "It's no use running your head against facts." That was roughly the Prime Minister's theme ., too, so there was no no real fight between them. A quick superficial check around the lobby confirmed the impression of this reporter that the British Conservative is probably too well bred to rebel against the party leader with real effectiveness. At most, twenty Conservatives may abstain from voting tomorrow. But since Macmillan has an automatic majority of more than fifty votes in the House of Commons, he is not in real danger. The basic trouble with today's debate is probably that human nature is just organically more concerned with present troubles than it is with past ones. The headline in an afternoon paper here tells about "Traffic Chaos in London as Gasoline Rationing Ends." That is the live concern here. Suez is dead. Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In Rome, President Gronchi today asked Adone Zoli, a Christian Democrat to try to form a new government. Zoli is described as a "moderate progressive." He was budget minister in the Segni government, which fell on May sixth.

The Central committee of the Polish Communist Party met in Warsaw today for the first time since the "democratization" of the regime last October. Communist Leader Gomulka told the committee..in its opening session...that the road to socialism can very in different countries so long as universal principles" are adhered to, including the dictatorship of the proletariat and socialization fo the means of production. Gumulka said this is "an historically new situation.' And he suggested that Communism in Poland would have taken a different form, even if it had not been for Stalin and what he called "the wrongs and distortions of the cult of the individual." Gomulka appealed for support of the Roman Catholic Church in matters concerning national interest. He apparently made no direct reference to the behind the scene struggle in Poland between the so-called party conservatives and those who favor more independence from Moscow.

Representatives of the United States and Red China met in Geneva today for the 67th time since August, 1955. The talks have concerned repatriation of nationals (eight Americans are still held in China) and relaxation of tensions in the Formosa. area. Today's meeting lasted an hour and 35 minutes, and resulted in no apparent progress. The American representative, Alexis Johnson, is returning to Washington tomorrow on home leave.

President Eisenhower warned Congress today not to "trifle" with the military budget. The President..at his news conference..followed up what he said in his broadcast last night -- that there is no cut - rate price for peace. He referred to reports that a House subcommittee is thinking of cutting two and a half billion dollars from the defense budget. He doubted such a cut could be "honestly" made. But if it is made, he said, "we are going to be in trouble somewhere along the line." Mr. Eisenhower denied that he had become more liberal since taking office in 1952. "If anything," he said, "I think I have grown more conservative." At the same time, he sid that if "any modern political philosophy fails to study the needs of the people today -- not of 1860 -- then in the long run we are sunk." The President said Russia is feeling the arms burden the same as the United States, and that this may be why the Russians seem to be more interested in disarmament. He supported Israel's plan to send a test ship through the Suez Canal. But to use force, he said, would be "reprehensible."

In Congress, the House today voted to kill the Administration's soil bank program..after subsidies are paid to farmers on this year's crops. The vote to eliminate the program was 192 to 187.

The Senate Appropriations Committee added 62-million dollars to supplement a money bill passed by the House. Part of the increase would go for a flood insurance program.

The Justice Department today outlined its policy for admitting additional Hungarian refugees to the United States. In general, admission will be limited to refugees who already have relatives in this country or who possess unusual skills or talents, or whose entry would be "in the national interest."

The Senate rackets committee has decided to call teamsters president Dave Beck back for more questioning, after hearing an additional witness tomorrow.

The committee counsel, Robert Kennedy, says the committee has documentary evidence indicating that the 322 - thousand dollars Beck claims he "borrowed" from the teamsters union actually was stolen. Five vice presidents of the union conferred for more than an hour today with President Meany of the AFL-CIO. There are reports which are not confirmed..that Beck may step down as head of the teamsters, pending determiniation of his innsence or guilt.

A chemical explosion injured four persons today at the atomic research center at Brookhaven, Long Island. One of the injured is reported in serious condition. Six other persons were exposed to acid vapors and required medical attention. The Atomic Energy Commission says no nuclear radiation was involved in the accident.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Geroge Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: With regard to Suez, the United States, Britain and France all made mistakes. This is a time for profiting from the experience, not for looking back and fixing blame. For as Churchill said in another critical time, "If the present now engages in a quarrel with the past, then surely the future will be lost."

Goodnight and good luck.

1676 DLPd Cly Lowell Thomas Acct for Ed Murrow's blast

May 16, 1957

(VIA WESTERN UNION)

2 LT

MAY 16 1957

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, N.Y.

WESTERN UNION
AP - New York

Re 500

2856

Lead to come...

The Japanese government will send a note to London...formally protesting the explosion of Britain's first hydrogen bomb. The nuclear device was set off yesterday at Christmas Island, some 47-hundred miles southeast of Tokyo. Japan's foreign office says it will hold Britain directly responsible for all losses suffered by the Japanese people as a result of the blast.

Prime Minister Macmillan told the British House of Commons today that initial reports indicate that local fallout in the bomb test was "almost negligible". He conceded that an accurate evaluation is still to be made. The Labour opposition called FOR DISCONTINUANCE OF the tests, "now that the ability of this country to detonate a hydrogen weapon has been proved." MACMILLAN rejected the demand. The tests, he said, will put Britain "in a very much better bargaining position in discussing matters of nuclear disarmament and control."

(more)

131

The United Nations disarmament subcommittee...meeting in London... recessed today until May 27th, to enable the delegates to consult their governments. Represented at the talks are the United States, Canada, Russia, Britain and France. The American representative, Harold Stassen, is flying to Washington tonight.

(more)

LT

60

LT/Pa

Peiping radio said today that any American decision to send atomic weapons to South Korea would be a "dangerous step". The Communist radio referred to Secretary Dulles' statement this week that the United States is considering introduction of "more modern weapons" into South Korea.

America's third atomic submarine...the U.S.S. Skate... was launched today at Groton, Connecticut. Undersecretary of the Navy Franke called the Skate the first of the "assembly line" atomic subs. He said it will soon be considered the conventional attack submarine.

The first shot in the spring series of atomic tests in Nevada was postponed for 24 hours today, because of unfavorable weather. And the weather outlook for tomorrow is again reported "not too good."

The tornado death toll at Silverton, Texas, now stands at 18. At least 60 persons were injured. Two are reported missing. Three persons died in northwestern Oklahoma, when a downpour caused the Cimarron River to overflow its banks.

In Berlin, Hitler's economics minister...Walter Funk... was released from prison today because of poor health.

(more) 17V

Think piece....

LT

It is, of course, too soon to say how much of President Eisenhower's budget will be lopped off before Congress is through with it. Congress has a way of making slashes and then restoring some of the funds before the final vote. Now it is in the slashing stage. It is doubtful that the information service will get back any of the funds taken from it in the two Houses. But the Soil Bank, which was killed in the House, has hopes for survival in the Senate. And the two-and-a-half billion dollar cut in Defense, which a subcommittee of the House now contemplates is certainly not final.

But it is not too early to make some observations about the character of President Eisenhower's conduct of the campaign for the budget. He is not making an all-out fight for it. True, he will make another public appeal by television and radio, and will continue to use his influence with individual members of Congress. But he, himself, has left a margin of doubt about the sacredness of the figures he is supporting. He repeated yesterday that it is always possible to squeeze something out of a budget that has to plan two years ahead. That being so, a voter back home may not write his Congressman at all if he seems to be trying to squeeze something out.

President Eisenhower's capacity to fight for something in Congress appears to be limited by his standards as to what his relations with Congress should be, and what his behavior to opponents in his own Party should be. He was asked yesterday if in the 1958 campaign he would punish the Republicans opposed to his budget and reward the Democrats who supported it. He answered quickly that it is not the function of the President to punish anyone who votes for what he believes.

Then he was told that some of his strongest Republican supporters have put themselves at odds with the Party leadership in Congress. And asked if he intended to work through them to get his program through. His reply was that he didn't see how any President can work with Republicans in Congress except through the elected leadership. What that comes down to is to say that the so-called "modern" Republicans -- the Eisenhower Republicans -- like Clifford Case, Bush, Copper, and Javits, are not to be built up, and the President will not say anything -- or presumably do anything -- to weaken Senator Knowland's status as Party Leader, even though Knowland is out to capture the nomination for President as a non-modern Republican.

411

(MORE)

This obviously is not fighting, and a President does have ways of fighting opponents in his own Party without resort to public punishment. These ways Mr. Eisenhower simply does not choose to use. He prefers to be regarded as leader of all the Party, and beyond that, of all parties. History may find it very much to his credit that he was loyal to party leaders in Congress who were not loyal to him. He certainly has won wide approval and affection in that way. It may be quite true that he was reelected because of the esteem won by such qualities. But certainly he did not fight for his second term and he did not get it by being a fighter. Now it remains to be seen whether an unpopular budget, which he considers necessary, can be won without a fight. And whether a modern version of Republicanism can be jammed through the Party machinery without a fight.

One might add that all this bears on the judgment that history will ultimately pass on President Eisenhower. His success as Commander of the victorious coalition in the war was due primarily to a remarkable ability to make a harmonious team out of often discordant elements. Lord Alanbrooke, wartime British Chief of Staff, in his Diary and Notes now being published, tells how he had been worried about Eisenhower during the North African campaign. "It was a moment" he says, "when bold and resolute action might have gathered great prizes." But he goes on to say that Eisenhower learned a lot in the war. "And where he shone," Lord Alanbrooke testifies, "was in his ability to handle allied forces, to treat them all with strict impartiality, and to get the best out of them." And he adds that it was the good fortune of the Allies to have an exceptionally charming individual as Supreme Commander.

These particular qualities made their unique contribution to the Allied victory. One might think that team work and strict impartiality and great personal charm would be even more effective in political life. But it is still to be shown that they can be as victorious in politics where a Supreme Commander may have to lead the fighting himself.

(more)

(56)

Word as follows....

President Eisenhower has no fondness for political in-fighting, but there are circumstances when it would seem necessary. Wendell Phillips warned, "There is no Canaan in politics." And Edwin Whipple said, "A politician amiably in the right is no match for a politician tenaciously and pugnaciously in the wrong." Goodnight and good luck.

Bliss

16 1365

K 7258

May 16, 1957

(VIA WESTERN UNION)

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, N.Y.

This is the news:

Congress today completed action on its first regular appropriations bill. The measure...providing money for the Treasury and Post Office Departments...was passed in rapid-fire order by the House and Senate. Democratic Senate Leader Johnson [redacted] hoped the legislation would be sent to the White House "on roller skates"...so, he said, the people will know the sooner "how much we have saved." The "saving" [redacted] AMOUNTS to 80-million dollars. President Eisenhower [redacted] wanted 3-billion, 965-million dollars. Congress gave him 3-billion, 885-million. The Post Office budget was cut 58-million dollars, despite Postmaster General Summerfield's warning that service would [redacted] be reduced if he did not receive the full amount.

116

(more)

Secretary of Agriculture Benson today attacked yesterday's House vote to discontinue acreage reserve payments under the soil bank program. Benson called the House action "false economy". He predicted that land taken out of the soil bank reserve would be returned to production, that this would pile up new surpluses, and that the government would then have to pay out more in price supports. Benson again called for more more flexibility in fixing supports.

Secretary of Defense Wilson today blamed inflation for much of the increased cost of defense. Wilson told a news conference that if it were not for inflation, his department the armed forces actually would be asked asking for less money than in fiscal 1954. He doubted that any substantial saving could be achieved by further unification of the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Teamsters President Dave Beck appeared before the Senate rackets committee today...and again refused to testify on grounds of possible self-incrimination. Chairman McClellan said the "rascality" revealed in the hearings has indicated the action Congress should take "if the honest people of this country are to be protected. If what we have heard is true," he said, "a house-cleaning in this union is long overdue."

(more)

In London, the Conservative government tonight defeated a censure motion introduced by the opposition Labour Party. The issue was the government's Suez policy. And the vote in favor of the government was 308 to 259.

France requested today that the United Nations Security Council meet on Monday...to discuss the Suez problem. AND THE [redacted] request was [redacted] granted. France wants the security council to order Egypt to comply with the six principles agreed on last year for operation of the Suez Canal. [redacted] Unlike [redacted] the United States and Britain, it refuses to use the canal on President Nasser's terms. British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd told the House of Commons [redacted] that Britain will support France's action in the Security Council. The only difference in the British and French positions, he said, "is in regard to interim use of the canal, pending a final settlement. /Pickup on story on Japanese protest. Script runs six lines over./

Bliss

725P

78
76
16
470

Edward R. Murrow — Thurs., May 16, 1957

~~May 16, 1957~~

~~(VIA WESTERN UNION)~~

~~Edward R. Murrow~~
~~Fordham, N.Y.~~

This is the news:

Congress today completed action on its first regular appropriations bill. The measure...providing money for the Treasury and Post Office Departments...was passed in rapid-fire order by the House and Senate. Democratic Senate Leader Johnson hoped the legislation would be sent to the White House "on roller skates"...so, he said, the people will know the sooner "how much we have saved." The "saving" AMOUNTS to 80-million dollars. President Eisenhower had requested 3-billion, 965-million dollars. Congress gave him 3-billion, 885-million. The Post Office budget was cut 58-million dollars, despite Postmaster General Summerfield's warning that service would be reduced if he did not receive the full amount.

10

(more)

Secretary of Agriculture Benson today attacked yesterday's House vote to discontinue acreage reserve payments under the soil bank program. Benson called the House action "false economy". He predicted that land taken out of the soil bank reserve would be returned to production, that this would pile up new surpluses, and that the government would then have to pay out more in price supports. Benson again called for more more flexibility in fixing supports.

Secretary of Defense Wilson today blamed inflation for much of the increased cost of defense. Wilson told a news conference that if it were not for inflation, the armed forces actually would be asking for less money than in fiscal 1954. He doubted that any substantial saving could be achieved by further unification of the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Teamsters President Dave Beck appeared before the Senate rackets committee today...and again refused to testify on grounds of possible self-incrimination. Chairman McClellan said the "rascality" revealed in the hearings HAS INDICATED the action Congress should take "if the honest people of this country are to be protected. If what we have heard is true," he said, "a house-cleaning in this union is long overdue."

26

(more)

In London, the Conservative government tonight defeated a censure motion introduced by the opposition Labour Party. The issue was the government's Suez policy. And the vote in favor of the government was 308 to 259.

France requested today that the United Nations Security Council meet on Monday...to discuss the Suez problem. AND THE REQUEST WAS ~~The request was immediately~~ granted. France wants the security council to order Egypt to comply with the six principles agreed on last year for operation of the Suez Canal. [redacted]s ~~United States, the United Kingdom, Britain, France, operate the canal on President Nasser's terms. British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd told the House of Commons today that Britain will present its case in the Security Council. The only difference in the British and French positions, he said, is in regard to invoking use of the canal's pending nationalization.~~

70

382/76

May 16, 1957

~~(VIA WESTERN UNION)~~

~~Edward R. Murrow~~

~~Pauling, N.Y.~~

~~Lead to news.~~

The Japanese government says it will send a note to London...formally protesting the explosion of Britain's first hydrogen bomb. The nuclear device was set off yesterday at Christmas Island, some 47-hundred miles southeast of Tokyo. Japan's foreign office says it will hold Britain directly responsible for all losses suffered by the Japanese people as a result of the blast.

Prime Minister Macmillan told the British House of Commons today that initial reports indicate that local fallout in the bomb test was "almost negligible". He conceded that an accurate evaluation is still to be made. The Labour opposition called on Macmillan to discontinue the tests, "now that the ability of this country to detonate a hydrogen weapon has been proved." MACMILLAN rejected the demand. The tests, he said, will put Britain "in a very ~~many~~ much better bargaining position in discussing matters of nuclear disarmament and control."

(more) 5-2

The United Nations disarmament subcommittee...meeting in London... recessed today until May 27th, to enable the delegates to consult their ~~own~~ governments. Represented at the talks are the United States, ~~the~~ Canada, Russia, Britain and France. The American representative, Harold Stassen, is flying to Washington tonight.

(more)

59

Peiping radio said today that any American decision to send atomic weapons to South Korea would be a "dangerous step". The Communist radio referred to Secretary Dulles' statement this week that the United States is considering introduction of "more modern weapons" into South Korea.

America's third atomic submarine...the U.S.S. Skate... was launched today at Groton, Connecticut. Undersecretary of the Navy Franke called the Skate the first of the "assembly line" atomic subs. He said it will soon be considered the conventional attack submarine.

The first shot in the spring series of atomic tests in Nevada was postponed for 24 hours today, because of unfavorable weather. And the weather outlook for tomorrow is again reported "not too good."

The tornado death toll at Silverton, Texas, now stands at 19. At least 60 persons were injured. Two are reported missing. Five persons died in northwestern Oklahoma, when a downpour caused the Cimarron River to overflow its banks.

In Berlin, Hitler's economics minister...Walter Funk... was released from prison today because of poor health.

75

5:30

May 16, 1957

It is, of course, too soon to say how much of President Eisenhower's budget will be lopped off before Congress is through with it. Congress has a way of making slashes and then restoring some of the funds before the final vote. Now it is in the slashing stage. It is doubtful that the information service will get back any of the 54 FUNDS ~~[illegible] million dollars~~ taken from it in the SENATE ~~[illegible]~~. But the Soil Bank, which was killed in the House, has hopes for survival in the Senate. And the two-and-a-half billion dollar cut in Defense, which a subcommittee of the House now contemplates is certainly not final.

But it is not too early to MAKE SOME OBSERVATIONS ~~[illegible]~~ about the character of President Eisenhower's conduct of the campaign for the budget. He is not MAKING AN ALL-OUT FIGHT ~~[illegible]~~ for it. True, he will make another ~~[illegible]~~ public appeals by television and radio, and will continue to use his influence with individual members of Congress. But he, himself, has left a margin of doubt about the sacredness of the figures he is supporting. He repeated yesterday that it is always possible to squeeze something out of a budget that has to plan two years ahead. That being so, a voter back home may not write his Congressman at all if he seems to be trying to squeeze something out.

President Eisenhower's capacity to fight for something in Congress appears to be limited by his standards as to what his relations with Congress should be, and what his behavior to opponents in his own Party should be. He was asked yesterday if in the 1958 campaign he would punish the Republicans opposed to his budget and reward the Democrats who supported it. He answered quickly that it is not the function of the President to punish anyone who votes for what he believes.

Then he was told that some of his strongest Republican supporters have put themselves at odds with the Party leadership in Congress. And asked if he intended to work through them to get his program through. His reply was that he didn't see how any President can work with Republicans in Congress except through the elected leadership. What that comes down to is to say that the so-called "modern" Republicans -- the Eisenhower Republicans -- like Clifford Case, Bush, Copper, and Javits, are not to be built up, and the President will not say anything -- or presumably do anything -- to weaken Senator Knowland's status as Party Leader, even though Knowland is out to capture the nomination for President as a "non-modern" Republican.

29

This obviously is not fighting, and a President does have ways of fighting opponents in his own Party without resort to public punishment. These ways Mr. Eisenhower simply does not choose to use. He prefers to be regarded as leader of all the Party, and beyond that, of all parties. History may find it very much to his credit that he was loyal to party leaders in Congress who were not loyal to him. He certainly has won wide approval and affection in that way. It may be quite true that he was reelected because of the esteem won by such qualities. But certainly he did not fight for his second term and he did not get it by being a fighter. Now it remains to be seen whether an uppopular budget, which he considers necessary, can be won without a fight. And whether a modern version of REPUBLICANISM can be jammed through the Party machinery without a fight.

One might add that all this bears on the judgement that history will ultimately pass on President Eisenhower. His success as Commander of the victorious coalition in the war was due primarily to a remarkable ability to make a harmonious team out of often discordant elements. Lord Alanbrooke, wartime British Chief of Staff, in his Diary and Notes now being published, tells how he had been worried about Eisenhower during the North African campaign. "It was a moment" he says, "when bold and resolute action might have gathered great prizes." But he goes on to say that Eisenhower learned a lot in the war. "And where he shone" Lord Alanbrooke testifies, "was in his ability to handle allied forces, to treat them all with strict impartiality, and to get the best out of them." And he adds that it was the good fortune of the Allies to have an exceptionally charming individual as Supreme Commander.

These particular qualities made their unique contribution to the Allied victory. One might think that team work and strict impartiality and great personal charm would be even more effective in political life. But it is still to be shown that they can be as victorious in politics where a Supreme Commander may have to lead the fighting himself.

Word as follows....

President Eisenhower has no fondness for political in-fighting, but there are circumstances when it would seem necessary. Wendell Phillips warned, "There is no Canaan in politics." And Edwin Whipple said, "A politician amiably in the right is no match for a politician tenaciously and pugnaciously in the wrong." Goodnight and good luck.

EDWARD RM MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 16, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Congress today completed action on its first regular appropriations bill. The measure...providing money for the Treasury and Post Office Departments.. was passed in rapid - fire order by the House and Senate. Democratic Senate Leader Johnson hoped the legislation would be sent to the White House "on roller skates"..so, he said, the people will know the sooner "how much we saved." The "saving" amounts to 8--million dollars. President Eisenhower has requested 3 - billion, 965 - million dollars. Congress gave him 3 - billion, 885 - million. The Post Office budget was cut 58-million dollars, despite Postmaster General Summerfield's warning that service would be reduced if he did not receive the full amount.

Secretary of Agriculture Benson today attacked yesterday's House vote to discontinue acreage reserve payments under the soil bank program. Benson called the House action "false economy". He predicted that land taken out of the soil bank reserve would be returned to production, that this would pile up new surpluses, and that the government would then have to pay out more in price supports. Benson again called for more flexibility in fixing supports.

Secretary of defense Wilson today blamed inflation for much of the increased cost of defense. Wilson told a news conference that if it were not for inflation, armed forces actually would be asking for less money than in fiscal 1954. He doubted that any substantial saving could be achieved by further unification of the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Teamsters President Dave Beck appeared before the Senate rackets committee today...and again refused to testify on grounds of possible self-incrimination. Chairman McClellan said the "rascality"revealed in the hearings has indicated the action Congress should take "if the honest people of this country are to be protected.""If what we have heard is true", he said, "a house - cleaning in this union is long overdue."

In London, the Conservative government tonight defeated a censure motion introduced by the opposition Labour Party. The issue was the government's Suez Policy. And the vote in favor of the government was 308 to 259.

France requested today that the United Nations Security Council meet on Monday...to discuss the Suez problem, and the request was granted. France wants the security council to order Egypt to comply with the six principles agreed on last year for operation of the Suez Canal.

The Japanese government says it will send a note to London..formally protesting the explosion of Britain's first hydrogen bomb. The nuclear device was set off yesterday at Christmas Island, some 47 - hundred miles southeast of Tokyo. Japan's foreign office says it will hold Britain directly responsible for all losses suffered by the Japanese people as a result of the blast.

Prime Minister Macmillan told the British House of Commons today that initial reports indicate that local fallout in the bomb test was "almost negligible". He conceded that an accurate evaluation is still to be made, The Labour opposition called on Macmillan to discontinue the tests, "now that the ability of this country to detonate a hydrogen weapon has been proved." Macmillan rejected the demand. The tests, he said, will put Britain "in a very much better bargaining position in discussing matters of nuclear disarmament, and control."

The United Nations disarmament subcommittee...meeting in London..recessed today until May 27th, to enable the delegates to consult their governments. Represented at the talks are the United States, Canada, Russia, Britain and France. The American representative, Harold Stassen, is flying to Washington tonight.

Peiping radio said today that any American decision to send atomic weapons to South Korea would be a "dangerous step". The Communist radio referred to Secretary Dulles' statement this week that the United States is considering introduction of "more modern weapons" into South Korea.

America's third atomic submarine...the U.S.S. Skate..was launched today at Groton, Connecticut. Undersecretary of the Navy Franke called the Skate the first of the "assembly line" atomic subs. He said it will soon be considered the conventional attack submarine.

The first shot in the spring series of atomic tests in Nevada was postponed for 24 hours today because of unfavorable weather. And the weather outlook for tomorrow is again reported "not too good."

The tornado death toll at Silverton, Texas, now stands at 19, At least 60 persons were injured. Two are reported missing. Five persons died in northwestern Oklahoma, when a downpour caused the Cimarron River to overflow its banks.

In Berlin, Hitler's economics minister...Walter Funk...was released from prison today because of poor health.

It is, of course, too soon to say how much of President Eisenhower's budget will be lopped off before Congress is through with it. Congress has a way of making slashes and then restoring some of the funds before the final vote. Now it is in the slashing stage. It is doubtful that the information service will get back any of the funds taken from it in the two Houses. But the Soil Bank, which was killed in the House, has hopes for survival in the Senate. And the two-and-a-half billion dollar cut in Defense, which a subcommittee of the House now contemplates is certainly not final.

But it is not too early to make some observations about the character of President Eisehower's conduct of the campaign for the budget. He is not making an all out fight for it. True, he will make another public appeal by television and radio, and will continue to use his influence with individual members of Congress. But he, himself, has left a margin of doubt about the sacredness of the figures he is supporting. He repeated yesterday that it is always possible to squeeze something out of a budget that has to plan two years ahead. That being so, a voter back home may not write his Congressman at all if he seems to be trying to squeeze somethnng out.

President Eisenhower's capacity to fight for something in Congress appears to be limited by his standards as to what his relations with Congress should be, and what his behavior to opponents in his own Party should be. He was asked yesterday if in the 1958 campaign he would punish the Republicans opposed to his budget and reward the Democrats who supported it. He answered quickly that it is not the function of the President to punish anyone who votes for what he believes.

Then he was told that someof his strongest Republican supporters have put themselves at odds with the Party leadership in Congress. And asked if he intended to work through them to get his program through. His reply was that he didn't see how any President can work with Republicans in Congress except through the elected leadership. What that comes down to is to say that the so-called "modern"Republicans --the Eisenhower Republicans -- like Clifford Case, Bush, Cooper, and Javits, are not to be built up, and the President will not say anything -- or presumably do anything -- to weaken Senator Knowland's status as Party Leader, even though Knowland is out to capture the nomination for President as a "non-modern" Republican.

This obviously is not fighting, and a President does have ways of fighting opponents in his own Party without resort to public punishment. These ways Mr. Eisenhower simply does not choose to use. He prefers to be regarded as leader of all the Party, and beyond that, of all parties. History may find it very much to his credit that he was loyal to party leaders in Congress who were not loyal to him. He certainly has won wide approval and affection in that way. It may be quite true that he was reelected because of the esteem won by such qualities. But certainly he did not fight for his second term and he did not get it by being a fighter. Now it remains to be seen whether an unpopular budget, which he considers necessary, can be won without a fight. And whether a modern version of Republicanism can be jammed through the Party machinery without a fight.

One mightadd that all this bears on the judgement that history will ultimately pass on President Eisenhower. His success as Commander of the victorious coalition in the war was due primarily to a remarkable ability to make a harmonious team out of often discordant elements. Lord Alanbrooke, wartime British Chief of Staff, in his Diary and Notes now being published, tells how he had been worried about Eisenhower during the North African campaign. "It was a moment" he says, "when bold and resolute action might have gathered great prizes." But he goes on to say that Eisenhower learned a lot in the war. "And where he shone" Lord Alanbrooke testifies, "was in his ability to handle allied forces, to treat them all with strict impartiality, and to get the best out of them." And he adds that it was the good fortune of the Allies to have an exceptionally charming individual as Supreme Commander.

These particular qualities made their unique contributions to the Allied victory. One might think that team work and strict impartiality and great personal charm would be even more effective in political life. But it is still to be shown that they can be as victorious in politics where a Supreme Commander may have to lead the fighting himself.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: President Eisenhower has no fondness for political in-fighting, but there are circumstances when it would seem necessary. Wendell Phillips warned, "There is no Canaan in politics." And Edwin Whipple said, "A politician amiably in the right is no match for a politician tenaciously and pugnaciously in the wrong."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Fri., May 17, 1957

This is the news:

Rescue workers have reached 7-year-old Benny Hooper, Jr., who fell last night into a well his father had just completed digging at their home in Manorville, Long Island. The child is alive. He had been trapped at the bottom of the 21-foot-pit for 23 hours. Earlier reports...now disproved...were that the boy apparently was dead. The official word now is that the child was saved.

President Eisenhower warned again today against cutting either the defense program or foreign aid. He said if the United States weakens itself militarily... or destroys its leadership in the free world..."it could prove the most costly mistake of our entire national life. Peace," he said, "will be maintained only by unrelenting day-by-day sacrifice." Mr. Eisenhower's warning was contained in a message to a regional meeting of Republican leaders in Cincinnati. He said some of his important legislative proposals are making "little progress." He specificially mentioned higher postal rates, civil rights and federal aid to schools. Mr. Eisenhower said the Republicans "must" win control of Congress next year. Only when the same party controls the executive and legislative branches, he said, "can political responsibility be definitely fixed."

The Senate today voted a cut of 258-million dollars in the budget for the Commerce Department and its related agencies. That's a slash of 29 percent in the 872-million-dollar request made by the President. The measure does allow the department 65-million dollars from an old appropriation. But taking this into account, the cut still amounts to 22 percent. The bill was passed on a voice vote...with only about a dozen senators on the floor. It now goes to a Senate-House committee since the Senate took 40-million dollars more out of the measure than did the House.

The House Rules Committee concluded hearings today on President Eisenhower's civil rights program. It will vote on the measure on Tuesday. At today's hearing, Democratic Representative Ashmore of South Carolina called the program "politically inspired". The two parties, he said, are bidding against each other for the minority vote.

Thousands of Negroes...from many parts of the country...gathered at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington today for what sponsors of the event called "the national prayer pilgrimage for freedom." The meeting commemorated the third anniversary of the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools. The Reverend Martin Luther King of Montgomery, Alabama, appealed to President Eisenhower for "strong aggressive leadership" in the cause of civil rights. It was an issue, he said, on which the Administration had been "all too silent". Another speaker...Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters...warned Negroes not to accept Communist support. He said, "We know that Communists have no genuine interest in the solution of problems of racial discrimination but seek only to use this issue to strengthen the foreign policy of the Soviet Union."

Egypt said today that it will take "whatever steps it deems necessary" if Israel tries to send a test ship through the Suez Canal. The [redacted] statement said that according to the Convention of 1888, Egypt has "the right to defend its territory and safeguard its security." (Egypt has barred Israeli shipping on grounds that the two countries are still, technically, in a state of war). The Cairo [redacted] statement denounced France's action in returning the Suez question to the Security Council. "Of all countries which had a right to talk of the Suez question," it said, "France is indeed the last...through her recent aggression against Egyptian territory."

Jordan announced today that four persons will be hanged next week as traitors conspiring with Israel. The announcement said the death sentences were personally approved by King Hussein. The identity of the condemned was not revealed.

~~King Saud of Saudi Arabia left Iraq today...after a six-day visit. A joint communique on his talks with King Faisal is expected over the week-end.~~

Yugoslavia said today that it will have to "reconsider"...whether to accept heavy arms shipments from the United States./The State Department said...last Tuesday...that it had been decided to resume [redacted] shipment of tanks and aircraft to Yugoslavia./The decision was based, it said, on President Eisenhower's finding that Yugoslavia "is, and firmly intends to remain independent." The Yugoslav government says this amounts to "interpretation of the state of relations between Yugoslavia and third countries"---an apparent reference to the Soviet Union. It says this may "not be in conformity with" [redacted] Yugoslavia's "independent policy."

Harold Stassen today returned from London, where the disarmament talks have recessed until May 27th. Stassen told reporters in Washington, "There is no question we are closer to agreement on a first step---a small cut in armaments." And he said if such a first step is taken, it is "clear" there would be aerial inspection to see that the agreement is carried out. He emphasized that there is no agreement on what areas would be subject to inspection. Before returning to London...ten days from now...Mr. Stassen with consult ~~with~~ President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles on what proposals he can make to Russia along this line.

Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko said tonight that Russia will never accept an "open skies" plan which opens up all of the Soviet Union to inspection in return for inspection of all of the United States. Gromyko told reporters...at a diplomatic reception...that such a system would be "unfair" since the Soviet Union has more than twice the area of the United States. ~~He again proposed ~~ the plan Russia advanced at the disarmament talks last month...namely, that the western United States and Alaska be opened up to aerial inspection in exchange for inspection of western Siberia.~~

Edward R. Murrow: May 17, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The current Washington attitude toward disarmament negotiations is a faint but distinct optimism. Obviously things have been said in the negotiations in London that show a change in the Soviet position, or if not an actual change, a willingness to change. Some of the things have been published, such as the Soviet proposal to experiment with open skies inspection over western Siberia and western United States. Things also may have been said in private that are leading our Administration to take Soviet proposals with unusual respect.

Washington observers are putting together the developments in London with recent top-level Soviet statements, and believe they point to a desire by the Kremlin to set up another Summit Conference, either in the Fall or next Spring. Disarmament would supply the chief material for such a meeting, and the Soviet purpose would be to offer this country something substantial in the way of an abatement of the arms race, in return for political considerations.

That at once raises two questions. How much abatement in the arms race, and how big a political price? If the political price were not high, and power relationships were left pretty much as they are, the Administration would welcome an agreement that allowed for a gradual cut in the defense budget. It would be glad to have such an agreement at any time, but especially glad to have it, say, by next Spring, before the Congressional elections, where the prospect of tax reduction would be a boon.

No one, of course, can answer either question. But it is self-evident that once the Soviet Union wants to make a positive start toward disarmament it can be made. The chief obstacle has been that the Soviet Union has not accepted the step-by-step procedure and the rigorous inspection and control demanded by the West. The Soviet strategy has been to get nuclear weapons outlawed first, before tackling reduction of conventional weapons. Now, if there is to be a Summit Meeting on arms, the Russians may accept the step-by-step procedure not only for conventional weapons but for nuclear weapons too.

As Washington observers see things, the political price for such an agreement might not look sensationally high. The Soviet Treasury is just as heavily burdened by the arms race as our own, and the Soviet economy can't carry the load as well as ours. So the Soviet purpose may be simply to offer an easement of the arms race without any new political twists. That is, the Kremlin might ask no more than the status quo in Eastern Europe. That would mean the continued domination of the East European satellites, East Germany in particular, but it could be advertised under the caption of peaceful co-existence. The asking price might include a neutral zone in Central Europe, and the Russians might talk about dismantling NATO and the Warsaw Pact. But the one thing they would require for the disarmament agreement, might be simply the continued division of Germany and a hands-off policy on our part in Eastern Europe.

Such an offer would find two minds in policy-making circles in Washington. One would be attracted by the reduction in defense costs, and the political advantages of a smaller budget with tax cuts. And it would welcome entering a season of lessened world tensions.

But the other mind would be skeptical and even afraid of such a settlement. It would believe that the Russian offer reflects Khrushchev's confidence that sooner or later Germany will fall to the Soviet Union anyway, and this is the way to bring it about. For if the United States makes a bargain with the Soviet Union agreeing to the division of Germany, Chancellor Adenauer will lose his upcoming election, and that would be the end of the days of unquestioning West German adherence to the West.

And that might be the beginning of an era in which all Europe drifted to a neutralism which would be tantamount to Soviet supremacy.

There is another aspect to such a bargain. We would also be accepting the permanent subjugation of the East European satellites. This would be a reversal of our thinking about freedom in the world. Not that we are able to liberate the satellites, or intend to do so by force. But we believe in their liberation and stand ready to help it along, in non-violent ways.

So the Soviet offer may turn out to be very tempting, and it may be good sense to expect it to be. For if we do, we will be prepared to subject it to the analysis that our own future calls for.

We should like to repeat the news---7-year-old Benjamin Hooper, Jr., of Manorville, Long Island, has been rescued alive from the well, in which he was trapped for more than 23 hours. The child is alive...and is being taken to a hospital for treatment.

Word for Today

The disarmament talks may soon boil down to some old-fashioned bargaining. George MacDonald said, "Always make a definite bargain. Never trust to the flattering lie, 'We shan't disagree about trifles'." In any agreement with Russia, it is well to dot every i and cross every t. In Shakespeare's phrase, "to cavil on the ninth part of a hair."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 17, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Rescue workers have reached 7 - year - old Benny Hooper, Jr., who fell last night into a well his father had just completed digging at their home in Manorville, Long Island. The child is alive. He had been trapped at the bottom of the 21 - foot - pit for 23 hours. Earlier reports...now disproved... were that the boy apparently was dead. The official word now is that the child was saved.

President Eisenhower warned again today against cutting either the defense program or foreign aid. He said if the United States weakens itself militarily...or destroys its leadership in the free world..."it could prove the most costly mistake of our entire national life. Peace," he said, "will be maintained only by unrelenting day-by-day sacrifice." Mr. Eisenhower's warning was contained in a message to a regional meeting of Republican leaders in Cincinnati. He said some of his important legislative proposals are making "little progress". He specifically mentioned higher postal rates, civil rights, and federal aid to schools. Mr. Eisenhower said the Republicans "must" win control of Congress next year. Only when the same party controls the executive and legislative branches, he said, "can political responsibility be definitely fixed."

The Senate today voted a cut of 258-million dollars in the budget for the Commerce Department and its related agencies. That's a slash of 29 percent in the 872 - million - dollar request made by the President. The measure does allow the department 64-million dollars from an old appropriation. But taking this into account, the cut still amounts to 22 percent. The bill was passed on a voice vote...with only about a dozen senators on the floor. It now goes to a Senate - House committee since the Senate took 40-million dollars more out of the measure than did the House.

The House Rules Committee concluded hearings today on President Eisenhower's civil rights program. It will vote on the measure on Tuesday. At today's hearing, Democratic Representative Ashmore of South Carolina called the program "politically inspired". The two parties, he said, are bidding against each other for the minority vote.

Thousands of Negroes..from many parts of the country...gathered at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington today for what sponsors of the event called "the national prayer pilgrimage for freedom." The meeting commemorated the third anniversary of the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools. The Reverend Martin Luther King of Montgomery, Alabama, appealed to President Essenhower for "strong aggressive leadership" in the cause of civil rights. It was an issue, he said, on which the Administration had been "all too silent." Another speaker...Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters...warned Negroes not to accept Communist support. He said, "We know that the Communists have no genuine interest in the solution of problems of racial discrimination, but seek only to use this issue so strengthen the foreign policy of the Soviet Union.

Egypt said today that it will take "whatever steps it deems necesaary", if Israel tries to send a test ship through the Suez Canal. The statement said that according to the Convention of 1888, Egypt has "the right to defend its territory and safeguard its security." (Egypt has barred Israeli shipping on grounds that the two countries are still, technically, in a state of war.) The Cairo statement denounced France's action in returning the Suez question to the Security Council. "Of all countries which had a right to talk of the Suez question," it said, "France is indeed the last...through her recent aggression against Egyptian territory."

Jordan announced today that four persons will be hanged next week as traitors conspiring with Israel. The announcements said the death sentences were personally approved by King Hussien. The identity of the condemned was not revealed.

Yugoslavia said today that it will have to "reconsider"...whether to accept heavy arms shipments from the United States. The State Department said..last Tuesday...that it had been decided to resume shipment of tanks and aircraft to Yugoslavia. The decision was based, it said, on President Eisenhower's finding that Yugoslavia "is, and firmly intends to remain independent." The Yugoslav government says this amounts to "interpretation of the state of relations between Yugoslavia and third countries"--- an apparent reference to the Soviet Union. It says this may "not be in conformity with" Yugoslavia's "independent policy."

Harold Stassen today returned from London, where the disarmament talks have recessed until May 27th. Stassen told reporters in Washington, "There is no question we are closer to agreement on a first step -- a small cut in armaments." And he said if such a first step is taken, it is "clear" there would be aerial inspection to see that the agreement is carried out. He emphasized that there is no agreement on what areas would be subject to inspection. Before returning to London...ten days from now...Mr. Stassen will consult President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles on what proposals he can make to Russia along this line.

Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko said tonight that Russia will never accept an "open skies" plan which opens up all of the Soviet Union to inspection of all the United States. Gromyko told reporters ..at a diplomatic reception; that such a system would be "unfair" since the Soviet Union has more than twice the area of the United States

The current Washington attitude toward disarmament negotiations is a faint but distinct optimism. Obviously things have been said in the negotiations in London that show a change in the Soviet position, or if not an actual change, a willingness to change. Some of the things have been published, such as the Soviet proposal to experiment with open skies inspection over western Siberia and western United States. Things also may have been said in private that are leading our Administration to take Soviet proposals with unusual respect.

Washington observers are putting together the developments in London with recent top-level Soviet statements, and believe they point to a desire by the Kremlin to set up another Summit Conference, either in the Fall or next Spring. Disarmament would supply the chief material for such a meeting, and the Soviet purpose would be to offer this country something substantial in the way of an abatement of the arms race, in return for political considerations.

That at once raises two questions. How much abatement in the arms race, and how big a political price? If the political price were not high, and power relationships were left pretty much as they are, the Administration wouldwelcome an agreement that allowed for a gradual cut in the defense budget.

No one, of course, can answer either question. But it is self evident that once the Soviet Union wants to make a positive start toward disarmament it can be made. The chief obstacle has been that the Soviet Union has not accepted the step-by-step procedure and the rigorous inspection and control demanded by the West. The Soviet strategy has been to get nuclear weapons outlawed first, before tackling reduction of conventional weapons. Now, if there is to be a Summit Meeting on arms, the Russians may accept the step-by-step procedure not only for conventional weapons bur for nuclear weapons too.

As Washington observers see things, the political price for such an agreement might not look sensationally high. The Soviet Treasury is just as heavily burdened by the arms race as our own, and the Soviet economy can't carry the load as well as ours. So the Soviet purpose may be simply to offer an easement of the arms race without any new political twists. That is, the Kremlin might ask no more than the status quo in Eastern Europe. That would mean the continued dominatoon of the East European satellites, East Germany in particular, but it could be advertised under the caption of peaceful co-existence. The asking price might include a neutral zone in Central Europe, and the Russians might talk about dismantling NATO and the Warsaw Pact. But the one thing they would require for the disarmament agreement, might be simply the continued division of Germany and a hands-off policy on our part in Eastern Europe.

Such an offer would find two minds in policy - making circles in Washington. One would be attracted by the reduction in defense costs, and the political advantages of a smaller budget with tax cuts. And it would welcome entering a season of lessened world tensions. But the other mind would be skeptical and even afraid of such a settlement. It would believe that the Russian offer reflects Khrushchev's confidence that sooner or later Germany will fall to the Soviet Union anyway, and this is the way to bring it about. For if the United States makes a bargain with the Soviet Union, agreeing to the division of Germany, Chancellor Adenauer will lose his upcoming election and that would be the end of the days of unquestioning West German adherence to the West.

And that might be the beginning of an era in which all Europe drifted to a neutralism which would be tantamount to Soviet supremacy.

There is another aspect to such a bargain. We would also be accepting the permanent subjugation of the East European satellites. This would be a reversal of our thinking about freedom in the world. Not that we are able to liberate the satellites, or intend to do so by force, But we believe in their liberation and stand ready to help it along, in non-violent ways.

So the Soviet offer may turn out to be very tempting, and it may be good sense to expect it to be. For if we do, we will be prepared to subject it to the analysis that our own future calls for.

We should like to repeat the news -- 7 - year - old Benjamin Hooper, Jr., of Manorville, Long Island, has been rescued alive from the well in which he was trapped for more than 23 hours. The child is alive..and is being taken to a hospital for treatment.

This is Ed Muroow. I'll be back in a moemnt with the Word for Today. First, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The disarmament talks may soon boil down to some old-fashioned bar gaining. George MacDonald said, "Always make a definite bargain. Never trust to the flattering lie, 'We shan't disagree about trifles'." In any agreement with Russia, it is well to dot every "I" and cross every "T". In Shakespeare's phrase, "to cavil on the ninth part of a hair."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., May 20, 1957

This is the news:

France today brought the Suez dispute back to the United Nations Security Council. French Foreign Minister Pineau urged the council to arrange new talks with Egypt "as soon as possible." The purpose of these talks, he said, would be to settle the Suez Canal question in accordance with the six principles laid down by the Security Council last October. One of those principles was that operation of the canal should be "insulated" from the politics of any country. Pineau accused Egypt of ignoring these principles and imposing...unilaterally...its own terms. [redacted] Egypt immediately challenged Pineau's statement. It said its declaration of last month...on procedures for operating the canal...contained all the requirements of the Six Principles.

Egypt, furthermore, accused the French government of using the canal for its own political purpose. The Egyptian spokesman noted that Premier Mollet must win a vote of confidence tomorrow in the French Assembly. (I should like to discuss the French action further in a few minutes).

[redacted]

Soviet Premier Bulganin has sent a personal message to Premier Mollet, proposing direct talks between Russia and France for the purpose of overcoming "mistrust". Bulganin told Mollet, "We could sign an agreement on cooperation in the use of atomic energy for peaceful means." He [redacted] expressed "profound concern" that France---in his words---"has taken the decision to let her territories be used for the location of atomic bases." Bulganin called the existence of NATO [redacted] "absolutely without justification." And he suggested an early solution of the Algerian problem---one, he said, "which will take fully into account the national rights of the Algerian people."

The AFL-CIO executive council today removed Teamsters President Dave Beck permanently as a vice president of the AFL-CIO and as a council member. Beck was suspended as an officer of the federation on March 29th, after he refused to testify before the Senate rackets committee on alleged misuse of more than 300-thousand dollars in union funds. The AFL-CIO executive committee accused Beck of conduct "detrimental" to the labor movement. When Beck came before the council today, he refused to answer the charges...arguing that the federation was without authority to take such action. He said the charges related to a time prior to that in which the AFL-CIO constitution went in effect. ~~In any event, he said, a hearing should not be held until after he had an opportunity to defend himself against an income tax indictment in Federal Court.~~ Beck appeared before the council today for about 40 minutes. AFL-CIO President Meany said the council had found Beck guilty of "gross misuse of union funds entrusted to his care." ~~He said, "Whether Beck stole the funds or borrowed them, the record shows he took advantage of his position as a trade union official to use money belonging to dues-paying members for his own personal gain."~~

Senator McClellan, chairman of the rackets committee, today rejected a complaint by the American Civil Liberties Union in connection with the Beck case. The Civil Liberties Union had objected to McClellan's use of the word "theft" in relation to Beck's handling of union funds. "The decision as to guilt," it said, "is a criminal matter to be determined in court." McClellan denied that his committee had "convicted" Beck. "But as an American citizen," he said, "and as chairman of this select committee, I reserve the right to express my views regarding testimony developed before the committee." [redacted]

The Textile Workers Union today asked the Senate rackets committee to investigate what it called the "corrupt" anti-union activities of textile employers "especially but not exclusively in the South." [redacted]

A southern proposal to water down the Administration civil rights bill was defeated in the Senate Judiciary Committee today by a vote of 6 to 4. The amendment was offered by Senator Ervin of North Carolina. It would have killed the provisions calling for creation of a special civil rights division in the Justice Department...and the setting up of a bipartisan commission with power to examine complaints regarding civil rights. It would also have eliminated the provision giving the government the right to seek injunctions in cases of racial discrimination.

The Supreme Court today refused to review a lower court decision ordering the immediate admission of Negroes to Memphis State College. The United States Circuit Court in Cincinnati had ruled against gradual desegregation of the college. Such procedure, it held, was incompatible with the Supreme Court decision of 1954... that integration of public schools be accomplished with "all deliberate speed."

In Haiti, the seven-man council ruling that country today fired the commander of the Haitian army BUT HE REFUSED TO STEP DOWN, AND THE ARMY REPORTEDLY IS BACKING HIM UP. Yesterday, the army commander refused to attack St. Marc, a rebel-held town 50 miles from Port au Prince. Earlier, there were reports that Army leaders might have to assume power, if order was to be restored.

In Tokyo today, a Japanese district judge said he will issue a warrant for the arrest of an American soldier, if the United States refuses to surrender him to Japanese authorities for trial. The soldier is Army specialist third class William Girard, indicted for manslaughter in the death of a Japanese woman who trespassed on an American firing range.

The original decision was turn Girard over to the Japanese for trial. Last week, Secretary of Defense Wilson reversed that decision and ordered U.S. military authorities not to give him up.

~~The British Foreign Office said today that a visit by Queen Elizabeth to the United States is still under consideration. The statement was prompted by a London newspaper story that the trip had been indefinitely postponed. In Washington, the White House says President and Mrs. Eisenhower will be "delighted" to have Queen Elizabeth as their guest "at any time". British sources indicate a definite decision by the end of the month.~~

In Rome, President Gronchi tonight swore in Premier Zoli's new Christian Democratic government. It is the first one-party minority government Italy has had in four years.

Edward R. Murrow: May 20, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

The Security Council of the United Nations again occupied itself with the Suez Canal today, this time at the insistence of France. We and the British already have accommodated ourselves to President Nasser's personal settlement of Canal control. France has been holding out. But after this week's debate, France is expected to fall in line and permit its ships to use the Canal on Nasser's terms. However, it wanted the debate first. It did not expect to get better terms. If anything, it was putting the Security Council in the position of demonstrating that it is incapable of obtaining better terms. This might be called a "thoughtfully contrived drama of futility." The United Nations, which could be mobilized to stop the French-British-Israeli attack on Egypt, could not be mobilized to ~~XXXXX~~ ~~XXXX~~ require Nasser to observe the six principles the Security Council itself voted for a Canal settlement. That was what France was intent on showing.

Premier Mollet's government had several reasons for staging such a demonstration. Its face needed saving at home after the humiliating failure of its Suez policy. The failure will appear not quite so great, if the U.N. is shown to be incapable of getting its own principles for Suez accepted. ~~Mollet is in a domestic crisis over the high cost of putting~~ ~~down the revolt in Algeria, and if a decision is still pending in the United Nations tomorrow night, when he faces a critical Assembly vote in Paris, it may help him.~~ France also is interested in giving Israel support in its claim for the right to use the Canal. Another reason for asking the debate may have been to buy some insurance against future U.N. criticism of its policy in Algeria. Then if France should be formally criticized and ignores the criticism, it will be able to say that the U.N. was unable to get justice from Egypt.

France's case against Egypt rests on the charge of two violations of the Security Council's six principles. The canal is not now quarantined from Egyptian politics, since Nasser can change his settlement at will. And it has not been opened to all without discrimination, since Israel still is not recognized as free to use it. Negotiations have been going on privately to induce Nasser to make the settlement multilateral, that is, not subject to change or cancellation without consent of all the parties to it. There have also been discussions about getting him to levy a charge on Suez shipping to repay the $11,000,000 the U.N. spent in clearing the Canal. It has reported that he was on the point of an agreement on both points, and that now he may back down because of annoyance over this special Security Council session. But since all that France asked today was re-opening of the Canal talks, such a show of temper might lose him friends in his own camp.

Today's debate will put into perspective the next test of Suez policy, which comes when Israel tries to get deliveries through the Canal. Israel had put off the test until France has joined the other maritime countries in allowing their ships to use the Canal, for then the right of using it without discrimination would clearly be at issue.

Israel has stated that if it sends a ship under its own or another flag, and the cargo is stopped, that would be an act of war. But that would not necessarily be to resume open hostilities. It could appeal to the Security Council, or appeal the case to the International Court. It is most unlikely that Israel at this time would re-open hostilities. But it also is unlikely that Israel would expect the Security Council to crack down on Nasser since it would expect a Soviet veto of such action. So that leaves appeal to the court as the likeliest step. But Israel's leaders would not go to the court with any enthusiasm. They believe Nasser is just as capable of disregarding the court as he has been of disregarding the Security Council. The Security Council has little weight behind it, unless the United States and the Soviet Union happen to agree. But the court has non whatever, other than its effect on world opinion.

How the showdown will come this week at the United Nations is not yet clear. The French have not produced their resolution, and a decision is not expected before Wednesday. Some observers think there is an outside chance that the French resolution will be so mild that the Soviet Union will not veto it. But the more general expectation is that it will be vetoed, and the drama of futility will have played its course. If so, the United Nations as an active instrument of justice and pacification will rate somewhat less in world esteem.

Jorge Bergano

Word for Today

Occasionally in United Nations meetings there is a sense of frustration and futility. It is quite certain...in the present ~~instance~~ case...that France does not really expect much better terms. One would do well when thinking of such moves in the United Nations to recall the observation of Warren Austin, who said: "It is better for aged diplomats to be bored than for young men to die."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., May 21, 1957

This is the news:

The government of French Premier Mollet fell tonight, as the result of a ~~[illegible]~~ vote of No Confidence, in the National Assembly. For the story, we switch now to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

(Tape runs 1:20
End on cue "--to Edw. R.
Murrow in N.Y."

Here in New York this afternoon, the Security Council wound up its debate on the Suez question. / No formal action was taken. / Instead, the United States ambassador...Henry Cabot Lodge... delivered what was called a "summation" of the council's views. / Lodge supported the French view, but because his support took the form of a statement---and not a resolution--- there was no possibility of a Soviet veto. / The decision to do this apparently was reached earlier today...when Foreign Minister Pineau had a quick conference with Secretary of State Dulles in Washington. Lodge said the "principal" shortcoming in Egypt's unilateral declaration of April 24 for operation of the Suez Canal, "is the lack of provision for an organized system of cooperation with its users." Also, he said the Cairo declaration fails to make clear how President Nasser intends to assure implementation of the principle that the canal should be "insulated" from the politics of any country. He again called for "non-discriminatory" use of the waterway by ships of all nations, including Israel. ~~And the United States, he said, would be interested in knowing when Egypt intends to deposit with the United Nations its acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court in unresolved disputes.~~

→

In Egypt today, the government "took over" the Marconi radio, telegraph and cable company, which is principally British-owned. The Nasser government said the company is being "Egyptianized".

President Eisenhower today sent Congress a special foreign aid message...calling for expenditure of 3-billion, 800-million dollars. This is 535-million dollars less than Mr. Eisenhower estimated in January would be required. Any further substantial cut, he said, would be a "foolhardy" gamble with American lives. Investments already made in mutual security would be wasted. Our own defense costs, he said, would be increased. He warned that the consequences would include heavier draft calls, and possible new Communist aggression abroad. Refusal to give adequate support to the mutual security program now, he said, "could hardly be more ill-advised or ill-timed." [redacted]

Mr. Eisenhower will repeat this warning tonight in his radio and television speech. "The road to disaster," he will say, "could easily be paved with the good intentions of those blindly striving to save the money that must be spent as the price of peace." He will say that such economy is "neither conservative nor constructive---it could mean the loss of [redacted] peace. It could mean the loss of freedom. It could mean the loss of both."

And [redacted] Mr. Eisenhower will warn the families listening in: "It would mean more of our sons in uniform ." His speech will be carried by most of these CBS Radio stations at 8:30 p.m., Eastern Time.

The House Appropriations Committee today cut President Eisenhower's request for new funds for the Defense Department by two and a half billion dollars. The committee says this "should not be interpreted to mean a reduction...by that amount...in defense spending in 1958." Actual spending in 1958, it says, will include funds appropriated in previous years but not yet spent. But it concedes that the slash eventually will be felt. The President got all the money he requested for new aircraft.

The committee issued a report... calling on the armed services to economize. It accused all three branches of "waste and extravagance" in their procurement programs. It said the Air Force is making too many unnecessary flights. And rivalry between the armed services, it said, "is becoming so serious as to jeopardize the rate of build-up of our military power." The committee said the military threat from Russia "appears, in certain respects, to have somewhat abated." But it warned, "There is no room for complacency." Russia has more than eight times as many submarines as Germany at the outbreak of World War Two. And in the field of guided missiles, it said, "we are in a nip-and-tuck race."

The House Rules Committee today cleared President Eisenhower's civil rights program for House debate. The vote...reporting out the measure... was 8 to 4. Debate on the House floor is expected to start the first week of June. The Senate Judiciary Committee has yet to act on its version of the civil rights program.

President Meany...of the AFL-CIO...today announced that John English, secretary-treasurer of the teamsters union, has been elected to succeed Dave Beck as a vice president of the federation. English will also take Beck's seat on the AFL-CIO executive council. Beck was permanently removed as a federation officer yesterday after the council found him guilty of "gross misuse of union funds."

In Haiti, the army has taken over control. Its commander, General Cantave, said he would call a convention of the country's leaders "without delay", to choose a provisional president. Haiti had been ruled since April fifth by an unpopular seven-man council. The army seized power today without firing a shot.

The death toll in the tornado that swept through the suburbs of Kansas City last night now stands at 38. More than 200 persons were injured. The Missouri Highway Patrol says another tornado hit Desloge, Missouri, late today...causing "extensive damage." There was no immediate word as to the ~~extent~~ number of casualties, if any.

Israel today, in effect, declared its support of the Eisenhower Doctrine. The government said...in a communique...that Israel agrees on "the importance of preserving the political independence and territorial integrity of the countries of the Middle East." It also expressed "appreciation for the assistance rendered in the development of the state of Israel by the government and the people of the United States." ~~The communique did not refer specifically to the Eisenhower Doctrine. It was issued after a cabinet meeting, in which Prime Minister Ben Gurion overcame the opposition of both left-wing coalition parties.~~

~~Russia today announced the creation of a new agency called "The State Committee for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries." Its avowed purpose is to increase cultural and scientific exchanges between East and West, and thus help "liquidate" the Iron Curtain.~~

~~Marshal Tito said today that there is growing understanding between Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union. "If we are realistic," he said, "good relations must come about." Tito indicated he would also like to maintain good relations with the West.~~

Edward R. Murrow: May 21, 1957. 7.45 p.m.

Senator Styles Bridges is chairman of the Republican Policy Committee of the Senate, a fact that gives ~~unquestioned~~ considerable authority to anything he says about Republican policy. Last night, speaking in Chicago before representatives of thirty organizations that are trying to get the budget reduced, he rejoiced over a reduction already made in government spending of two billion three hundred million dollars. This, he said, is two-thirds of the way to the three billion three hundred million he advocates. "The goal is in sight" he declared. "Now is the time for everyone to redouble his efforts to be sure the budget-cutting victory is won."

Today is "Foreign Aid Day" on the Eisenhower calendar. The President sent his special message to Congress on this theme, and tonight is taking it to the people, in a T.V.-radio broadcast. Policy-maker Bridges, as if in anticipation, said in Chicago last night: "I am beginning to be a little fed up with global do-gooders, who want us to spend the hard-earned tax dollars of American citizens in support of a world-wide welfare state. I would remind them" he said, "that foreign aid is for mutual security. Mutual security means a two-way street. I see nothing mutual, in aid for Tito, Nehru or Soekarno." There you have an important and official Republican voice. It seemed to be calling President Eisenhower a "global do-gooder intent on trying to build a world-wide welfare state."

Now let us look at what the President asked from Congress in his special message. He presented a reduced foreign aid program of just over three billion eight hundred million dollars. Of this, two billion eight hundred million is for military assistance. [The President does not think this should appear under the caption of foreign aid, but be part of the defense budget, and he asked for a law that would bring this about. However, he argued against cutting this portion of the foreign aid program because doing so might risk local communist aggression. Then, he said, we would have to expand our own defense forces and send more of our young men abroad, or, as he put it, "supinely accept communist expansion at the expense of the free world."] 6/8

He also pleaded against cutting the other part of the program, the one billion sixty-five millions for economic aid. "We cannot" he said", afford to blight the hope of newly independent peoples who turn to the free world for help in their struggle for economic survival. If we do" he said, "they will be driven toward communist or other totalitarian solutions." [He departed from past practices of outright aid grants, and advocated instead the creation of a development fund, to aid countries by loans allowing for continuous growth. About half the billion dollars asked for economic aid would go to launch this fund, which then would borrow its capital next year and the year after from the treasury. The remainder of the aid money would be divided among items like the technical assistance program, a special assistance fund for the Middle East and other emergency needs, and for the cost of such special programs as atoms-for-peace.

There you have two official Republican views on foreign aid. As I have stated them, the difference between them is profound. But it is profound on only one part of the program. On closer examination what Senator Bridges objects to, is not really the bulk of the military aid, since most of it is linked with collective security agreements, and so meets his test of mutuality. But what Senator Bridges is irreconsilably against, is the little military aid that is outside collective security, such as arms for Tito, and the economic aid. These two categories added together come to less than two cents of the taxpayer's dollar. But Senator Bridges calls this do-gooding and building a world-wide welfare state. President Eisenhower calls it waging peace. The President says it gives Americans more security per dollar invested than any other expenditure the American people make.

There are, to be sure, other aspects to the demand for government economy, than the dislike of foreign aid. There is a nation-wide fear of rising prices. There would be room for considerable economies in the defense department if it can be shown that the price of inter-service rivalries is substantial. Presumably Senator Bridges is moved by these reasons for economy too. But he has identified himself first of all as being against the philosophy of much of the foreign aid program as such.

In a safe world, where peace had already been won, President Eisenhower might be found in Senator Bridges' corner. But in the world as it is, which the President says is not safe and peace has not been won, the Senator is not found in the President's corner. And this is a symbol of the President's problem. As leader of the Republican Party, and of the nation, he finds that he now has to apply pressure on Congress and appeal over the heads of Congress to the people, to preserve what world leadership he still exercises.

George Reedy

Word for Today

President Eisenhower is appealing to the American people for support of his foreign aid program in the interest of national security. The dangers, he is saying, are real. But he would also say with Carl Becker that realities are less dangerous than fancies. And he might say with Josh Billings, "It iz dredful easy to mistake what we think for what we know."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

TUESDAY, MAY 21, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: This is the news. The government of French Premier Mollet fell tonight as the result of a vote of no confidence in the National Assembly. For that story we switch now to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: The peasants of France have put their pitchforks through the heart of the government. That's what happened here in Paris tonight, Ed, as the Guy Mollet Cabinet came crashing down to defeat in a confidence vote after a record-breaking 16 months in office - the longest-lived Cabinet of the Fourth Republic and one of the most durable in French history. The tide has swung against Mr. Mollet even in the countryside. The rural regions in agricultural France, where's there's widespread bitter discontent. French farm prices have been falling for a year while industrial prices have been rising. The Socialist-led government has tended to favor the industrial and urban worker, or so it seemed to the farmer who thus put pressure on its Deputies to vote the government out of office. As for the Conservatives, they too have been protesting against the Socialist policy of new taxes on corporations and on business profits. So down came the Cabinet and right in front of the entire world. For French Foreign Minister, Christian Pineau, is in New York tonight fighting for the interests of his nation at the Security Council. As for the President of the Republic, Rene Coty, he's been getting ready to pack his bags for an official visit to Washington at the end of this month. It's now very likely that Mr. Coty will send his regrets to President Eisenhower, for this looks like a long and severe crisis. This is David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris; now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. FAD

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 21, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M.,E.S.T.

This is the news:

The government of French Premier Mollet fell tonight as the result of a vote of no confidence in the National Assembly. For that story we switch now to David Schoenbrun in Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: The peasants of Frence have put their pitchforks through the heart of the government.

That's what happened here in Paris tonight, Ed, as the Guy Mollet Cabinet came crashing down to defeat in a confidence vote after a record breaking 16 months in office- the longest lived Cabinet of the Fourth Republic and one of the most durable in French history. The tide has swung against Mr. Mollet even in the countryside. The rural regions in agricultural France, where there's widespread bitter discontent. French farm prices have been falling for a year while industrial prices have been rising. The Socialist -led government has tended to favor the industrial and urban worker, or so it seemed to the farmer who thus put pressure on its Deputies to vote the government out of office. As for the Conservatives, they too have been protesting against the Socialist policy of new taxes on corporations and on business profits. So down came the Cabinet and right in front of the entire world. For French Foreign Minister, Christian Pineau, is in New York tonight fighting for the interests of his nation at the Security Council. As for the President of the Republic, Rene Coty, he's been getting ready to pack his bags for an official visit to Washington at the end of this month. It's now very likely that Mr. Coty will sent his regrets to President Eisenhower, for this looks like a long and severe crisis. This is David Schoenbrun reporting from Paris; now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Here in New York this afternoon, the Security Council wound up its debate on the Suez puestion. No formal action was taken. Instead, the United States ambassador...Henry Cabot Lodge..delivered what was called a "summation" of the council's views. Lodge supported the French view, but because his support took the form of a statement -- and not a resolution..there was no possibility of a Soviet veto. The decision to do this apparently was reached earlier today...when Foreign Minister Pineau had a quick conference with Secretary of State Dulles in Washington. Lodge said the "principal" shortcoming in Egypt's unilateral declaration of April 24 for operation of the Suez Canal "is the lack of provision for an organized system of cooperation with its users." Also, he said the Cairo declaration fails to make clear how President Nasser intends to assure implementation of the principle that the canal should be "insulated" from the politics of any country. He again called for "non - discriminatory" use of the waterway by ships of all nations, including Israel.

In Egypt today, the government "took over" the Marconi radio, telegraph and cable company, which is principally British - owned. The Nasser government said the company is being "Egyptianized."

President Eisenhower today sent Congress a special foreign aid message .. calling for expenditure of 3 - billion , 800-million dollars. This is 535 million dollars less than Mr. Eisenhower estimated in January would be required. Any further substantial cut, he said, would be a "foolhardy" gamble with American lives. Investments already made in mutual security would be wasted. Our own defense costs, he said, would be increased. He warned that the consequences would include heaveir draft calls, and possible new Communist aggression abroad. Refusal to give adequate support to the mutual security program now, he said, "could hardly be more ill-advised or ill-timed." Mr. Eisenhower will repeat this warning tonight in his radio and television speech. "The road to disaster", he will say, "could easily be paved with the good intentions of those blindly striving to save the money that must be spent as the price of peace." He will say that such economy is "neither conservative nor constructive -- it could mean the loss of peace. It could mean the loss of freedom. It could mean the loss of both." And Mr. Eisenhower will warn the families listening in: "It would mean more of our sons in uniform." This speech will be carried by most of these CBS Radio stations at 8:30 p.m., Eastern Time.

The House Appropriations Committee today cut President Eisenhower's request for new funds for the Defense Department by two and a half billion dollars. The committee says this "should not be interpreted to mean a reduction..by that amount..in defense spending in 1958." Actual spending in 1958, it says, will include funds appropriated in previous years but not yet spend. But it concedes that the slash eventually will be felt. The President got all the money he requested for new aircraft.

The committee issued a report..calling on the armed services to economize. It accused all three branches of "waste and extravagance" in their procurement programs. It said the Air Force is making too many unnecessary flights. And rivalry between the armed services, it said, "is becoming so serious as to jeopardize the rate of build-up of our military power." The committee said the military threat from Russia "appears, in certain respects, to have somewhat abated." But it warned, "There is no room for complacency."

President Meany...of the AFL--CIO ...today announced that John English, secretary - treasurer of the teamsters union, has been elected to succeed Dave Beck as a vice president of the federation. English will also take Beck's seat on the AFL-CIO executive council. Beck was permanently removed as a federation officer yesterday after the council found him guilty of "gross misuse of union funds."

The death toll in the tornado that swept through the suburbs of Kansas City last night now stands at 38. More than 200 persons were injured. The Missouri Highway Patrol says another tornado hit Desloge, Missouri, late today... causing "extensive damage". There was no immediate word as to the number of casualties, if any.

Israel today, in effect, declared its support of the Eisenhower Doctrine. The government said..in a communique..that Israel agrees on the "importance of preserving the political independence and territorial integrity of the countries of the Middle East." It also expressed "appreciation for the assistance rendered in the development of the state of Israel by the government and the people of the United States."

Senator Styles Bridges is chairman of the Republican Policy Committee of the Senate, a fact that gives considerable authority to anything he says about the Republican policy. Last night, speaking in Chicago before representatives of thirty organizations that are trying to get the budget reduced, he rejoiced over a reduction already made in government spending of two billion three hundred million dollars. This, he said, is two-thirds of the way to the three billion three hundred million he advocated. "The goal is in sight" he declared. "Now is the time for everyone to redouble his efforts to be sure the budget - cutting victory is won."

Today is "Foreign Aid Day" on the Eisenhower calendar. The President sent his special message to Congrees on this theme, and tonight is taking it to the people, in a T.V. - radio broadcast. Policy - maker Bridges, as if in anticipation, said in Chicago last night "I am beginning to be a little fed up with global do-gooders who want us to spend the hard- earned tax dollars of American citizens in support of a world - wide welfare state. I would remind them" he said, "that foreign aid is for mutual security. Mutual security means a two-way street. I see nothing mutual in aid for Tito, Nehru, or Soekarne." There you have an important and official Republican voice. It seemed to be calling President Eisenhower a "global do-gooder intent on trying to build a sorld-wide welfare state."

Now let us look at what the President asked from Congress in his special message. He presented a reduced foreign aid program of just over th ee billion eight hundred million dollars. Of this, two billion eight hundred million is for military assistance.

He also pleaded against cutting the other part of the program, the one billion sixty-five millions for economic aid. "We cannot" he said, "afford to blight the hope of newly independent peoples who turn to the free world for help in their struggle for economic survival. If we do: he said, "they will be driven toward communist or other totalitarian solutions."

There you have two official Republican views on foreign aid. As I have stated them, the difference between them is profound. But it is profound on only one part of the program. On closer examination what Senator Bridges objects to is not really the bulk of the military aid, since most of it is linked with collective security agreements, and so meets his test of mutuality. But what Senator Bridges is irreconsilably against is the little military aid that is outside collective security such as arms for Tito, and the economic aid. These two categories added together become to less than two cents of the taxpayer's dollar. But Senator Bridges calls this do-gooding and building a world-wide welfare state. President Eisenhower calls it waging peace The President says it gives Americans more security per dollar invested than any other expenditure the American people make.

There are, to be sure, other aspects to the demand for government economy, than the dislike of foreign aid. Three is a nation-wide fear of rising prices, There would be room for considerable economies in the defense department if if can be shown that the price of inter-service rivalries is substantial. Presumably Senator Bridges is moved by these reasons for economy too. But he has identified himself first of all as being against the philosophy of much of the foreign aid program as such.

In a safe world, where peace had already been won, President Eisenhower might be found in Senator Bridges'corner. But in the world as it is, which the President says is not safe and peace has not been won, the Senator is not found in the President's corner. And this is a symbol of the President's problem. As a leader of the Republican Party, and of the nation, he finds that he now has to apply pressure on Congress and appeal over the heads of Congress to the people, to preserve what world leadership he still exercises.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN: President Eisenhower is appealing to the American people for support of his foreign aid program in the interest of national security. The dangers he is saying, are real. But he would also say with Carl Becker that realities are less dangerous than fancies. And he might say with Josh Billings, "It iz dredful easy to mistake what we think for what we know."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., May 22, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower won support today for his foreign aid program. The White House says the first 300 telegrams received since the President's broadcast appeal last night favor the program "better than 9 to 1." Mr. Eisenhower also gained support today in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Secretary of State Dulles told the committee it would be "folly" to cut foreign aid in the absence of a "safe-guarded" disarmament system. Dulles said mutual assistance offers "the greatest deterrent against aggression at the least cost. If we were not spending dollars," he said, "we would be spending blood." Dulles said, in answer to questions, that the program entails additional funds for military aid to Yugoslavia "only to a very slight extent." And he assured the committee that Britain's new concept of defense "does not involve our picking up the check."

The senators favored Mr. Eisenhower's proposal that economic aid be handled on a loan basis. Republican Senator Capehart called the whole program "sound in principle". He said, "For the first time in ten years I am going to vote for and support this program." Mansfield of Montana...the Democratic whip...complimented Dulles on his "very excellent presentation." Democratic Leader Johnson said Mr. Eisenhower, in last night's speech, "laid down some general principles which, in my opinion, go a long way to meet the needs of our foreign policy." But Johnson said the President's figures are "not sacrosanct".

At his news conference today, Mr. Eisenhower said he will continue to fight for his budget. He said more than half of the two and a half billion-dollar cut voted yesterday by the House Appropriations Committee in the Defense Department budget is "no cut at all---just a bookkeeping operation." But a billion, 200-million dollars of the cut, he said, is real. And he warned that...if allowed to stand...it will "directly" affect the aircraft procurement and guided missile development programs. Mr. Eisenhower stood by his statement...of a week ago...that he will not "punish" Republican lawmakers who do not go along with his proposals. But he said, "I hope I will never be accused of being so namby-pamby that I don't have degrees of enthusiasm about people that stand with me and those who stand against me." He said he would "never" agree to a tax cut until there is a bigger surplus in the budget. And House Speaker Rayburn conceded today that a tax cut this year is not a "probability".

Mr. Eisenhower spoke at some length on the subject of disarmament. This is a matter, he said, on which we should not be "picayunish" or "recalcitrant". Mr. Eisenhower advocated a "step-by-step" solution of the problem. He said in dealing with a country like Russia, which has "a history of breaking treaties", there must be guarantees. Taking a step at a time, he said, will provide a means of testing Russia's "good faith". Last Sunday, Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, said the Russians are not to be trusted on "anything". Mr. Eisenhower said today that to reduce world tensions, progress in "some kind of disarmament" has got to be made.

The Senate was the scene today of a verbal attack on Democratic Senator Morse. The attack grew out of a speech Morse made last week-end in Detroit...in which he said President Eisenhower and Teamsters President Dave Beck are "two of the same kind of immoralists". Today, Republican senators...led by Bridges of New Hampshire... accused Morse of "character assassination", and demanded that he apologize for what they called his "bad taste". Morse refused to apologize. ~~and challenged the Republicans to introduce a motion of censure. Speaking on the floor, the Democratic senator [illegible] accused Mr. Eisenhower of "political immorality". He said he regarded the Administration policy of tax write-offs for private utilities as "immoral". Bridges replied that there was "no intention of a motion of censure against Morse." But he agreed with Senator Alexander Smith of New Jersey that Morse had made a "preposterous" attack.~~

~~The Senate today approved an appropriation bill for operating the White House and ten executive agencies in the next fiscal year. It provides 16-million dollars, or about 5-million less than requested by the President. The House passed and sent to the Senate a bill providing seven and a half million dollars for work on the new House office building on Capitol Hill.~~

Democratic Representative Durham proposed today that the government launch a new 10-year program to stimulate both private and public development of atomic power. Durham is chairman of the joint congressional atomic energy committee.

A new Senate subcommittee announced today that it will investigate the United States policy of no trade with Red China. Senator Magnuson, the subcommittee chairman, said, "You can't keep 400-million people behind an economic bamboo curtain forever, just because you don't like the policies of their government."

In Jordan today, four persons convicted of spying for Israel were publicly hanged. They were arrested last year and condemned to death two months ago by a military court.

In Paris, President Coty today began the search for a new premier to succeed Guy Mollet, who resigned yesterday after losing a vote of confidence in the National Assembly. The issue was his program of higher taxes to pay for the war in Algeria. The Mollet cabinet will continue in office until a new government is formed. President Coty is still scheduled to visit Washington on June third, he cancelled his Army reservation today... but a French spokesman says he still hopes to come by air.

The case of Army specialist William Girard came up today at President Eisenhower's news conference. Girard has been indicted by a Japanese court on manslaughter charges...growing out of the fatal shooting of a Japanese woman who trespassed on a U.S. Army firing range, outside of Tokyo. The Japanese want to try Girard. They say they have jurisdiction in the case. Secretary of Defense Wilson has ordered the Army not to surrender Girard to the Japanese authorities, pending further study of the case. Mr. Eisenhower said today that the case is being carefully reviewed by the State and Defense Departments "to make certain that no injustice is done any American." My colleague, Bob Pierpoint...whose base of operations is Tokyo...went yesterday to the village where the Japanese victim lived. Here is his first-hand report.

Tape runs 5:17
Ends on cue: "---to Edw. R. Murrow
in New York."

That was the first-hand account of how a Japanese village feels, when it finds itself the center of an international dispute.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) Now here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

The case of William Girard poses no easy problem. In solving it, we might do well to recall the admonition of Frank Vanderlip once made. "Since nothing is settled until it is settled right," he said, "no matter how unlimited power a man may have, unless he exercises it justly, his action will return to plague him."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, May 22, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... My colleague Bob Pierpoint went yesterday to the city where the Japanese victim lived. Here is his first-hand report.

PIERPOINT: Maebashi is a pleasant bustling little city, lying on the lower slopes of the Mikuni Mts., 60 miles northwest of Tokyo. As the county seat of Goma County, Maebashi is the location of the District Court scheduled to try Specialist 3/c William Girard of Ottawa-La Salle, Illinois, on charges of manslaughter. Specialist Girard is accused of having shot and killed, last January, a Japanese woman, Mrs. Naka Sakai, who was trespassing on the Somagahara firing range, just outside Maebashi. Yesterday, this reporter, together with our CBS interpreter, visited Maebashi and the Somagahara firing range. Several points in the now internationally famous Girard case are in better perspective as a result of this trip.

First of all it seems obvious from studying the facts of the incidents, that Specialist Girard did not actually mean to kill Mrs. Sakai. At Somagahara, both sides, Japanese as well as American, generally agree that he meant only to scare her away. Mr. Sakai, her husband, told CBS News yesterday that whichever side, Japan or America, that tries the American soldier who killed his wife, should be merciful. As one Japanese in Maebashi said "Mrs. Sakai and Specialist Girard were both very unlucky." Of course, both of them were more than unlucky. Mrs. Sakai was trespassing and she knew it. Her husband also said yesterday that he had repeatedly warned her to stay away from Somagahara during firing practice. Moreover, there are warning signs posted in English and Japanese all over the range. On the other hand, Specialist Girard did not by any means need to shoot Mrs. Sakai. The claim that he was merely attempting to protect American property is not consistent with the situation. She was there with the tacit agreement of both Japanese and Americans. Even though the firing range is off limits to Japanese, in theory, they're on it constantly. The range is too large and there are too many Japanese living in the area for the American Army and the Japanese Police to keep them all off. The truth is that neither side really tries. Although the United States Army does not like to admit it officially, Japanese farmers and villagers, in the area, are openly allowed on the range when there is no firing going on. These Japanese, nicknamed "brass pickers" by the GIs, are allowed to gather empty shell casings, shrapnel and even dud shells which they sort and sell for scrap metal. The extra income which the people in the Maebashi area earn from the scrap metal, helps supplement the low family budget. But it sometimes makes them take risks they should not take. It can even lead them to enter the firing range before the American soldiers have finished firing for the day. As Mrs. Sakai did on the afternoon she was shot by Specialist Girard.

In order to prevent further accidents of this nature, the Japanese have now organized an association which tightly controls the movements of the "brass pickers" in and around the firing range. The main rule of the Brass Pickers Association is: "No picking during firing." The American Army quietly and wisely cooperates. It does not mind the Japanese picking up the scrap metal. But it is just as anxious as the Japanese to prevent further Girard incidents. But people around Maebashi are very disturbed nowadays at the fact that the Girard case has caused so much trouble between Japan and America. They are afraid the American Army will stop allowing them to gather and sell the scrap metal from the firing range if the trouble continues. Nor are they particularly worried about which side should try Specialist Girard, Japan or America. Several of them told CBS News quite frankly that they never thought much about it, that they had expected the Americans would punish the soldier for his mistake, they had, that is, until representatives of the anti-American Socialist party came up from Tokyo to stir up trouble. With the Girard case the Socialists have been eminently successful in his stirring up of trouble. Immediately after the incident occurred, they managed to pressure the Japanese Government to demanding that Specialist Girard be turned over to Japan over for trial. Despite a fairly clearcut Japanese-American agreement to the contrary, the Japanese eventually persuaded the American military authorities here in Tokyo to surrender Girard. Secretary of Defense Wilson's refusal to hand Girard over to the Japanese has only added fuel to the fire.

As well-intentioned as Mr. Wilson's act may have been, it came too late. Japan had already been officially notified by the proper American authorities that Girard would be handed over for trial in the Japanese courts. The Japanese government now intends to proceed with the trial on that basis.

Thus the Girard case, originally a simple though tragic accident, has become just exactly what the Socialists hoped, a serious threat to Japanese-American relations.

This is Bob Pierpoint in Tokyo. And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. P. O.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, May 22, 1957
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... My colleague Bob Pierpoint went yesterday to the city where the Japanese victim lived. Here is his first-hand report.

PIERPOINT: Maebashi is a pleasant bustling little city, lying on the lower slopes of the Mikuni Mts., 60 miles northwest of Tokyo. As the county seat of Goma County, Maebashi is the location of the District Court scheduled to try Specialist 3/c William Girard of Ottawa-La Salle, Illinois, on charges of manslaughter. Specialist Girard is accused of having shot and killed, last January, a Japanese woman, Mrs. Naka Sakai, who was trespassing on the Somagahara firing range, just outside Maebashi. Yesterday, this reporter, together with our CBS interpreter, visited Maebashi and the Somagahara firing range. Several points in the now internationally famous Girard case are in better perspective as a result of this trip.

First of all it seems obvious from studying the facts of the incidents, that Specialist Girard did not actually mean to kill Mrs. Sakai. At Somagahara, both sides, Japanese as well as American, generally agree that he meant only to scare her away. Mr. Sakai, her husband, told CBS News yesterday that whichever side, Japan or America, that tries the American soldier who killed his wife, should be merciful. As one Japanese in Maebashi said "Mrs. Sakai and Specialist Girard were both very unlucky." Of course, both of them were more than unlucky. Mrs. Sakai was trespassing and she knew it. Her husband also said yesterday that he had repeatedly warned her to stay away from Somagahara during firing practice. Moreover, there are warning signs posted in English and Japanese all over the range. On the other hand, Specialist Girard did not by any means need to shoot Mrs. Sakai. The claim that he was merely attempting to protect American property is not consistent with the situation. She was there with the tacit agreement of both Japanese and Americans. Even though the firing range is off limits to Japanese, in theory, they're on it constantly. The range is too large and there are too many Japanese living in the area for the American Army and the Japanese Police to keep them all off. The truth is that neither side really tries. Although the United States Army does not like to admit it officially, Japanese farmers and villagers, in the area, are openly allowed on the range when there is no firing going on. These Japanese, nicknamed "brass pickers" by the GIs, are allowed to gather empty shell casings, shrapnel and even dud shells which they sort and sell for scrap metal. The extra income which the people in the Maebashi area earn from the scrap metal, helps supplement the low family budget. But it sometimes makes them take risks they should not take. It can even lead them to enter the firing range before the American soldiers have finished firing for the day. As Mrs. Sakai did on the afternoon she was shot by Specialist Girard.

In order to prevent further accidents of this nature, the Japanese have now organized an association which tightly controls the movements of the "brass pickers" in and around the firing range. The main rule of the Brass Pickers Association is: "No picking during firing." The American Army quietly and wisely cooperates. It does not mind the Japanese picking up the scrap metal. But it is just as anxious as the Japanese to prevent further Girard incidents. But people around Maebashi are very disturbed nowadays at the fact that the Girard case has caused so much trouble between Japan and America. They are afraid the American Army will stop allowing them to gather and sell the scrap metal from the firing range if the trouble continues. Nor are they particularly worried about which side should try Specialist Girard, Japan or America. Several of them told CBS News quite frankly that they never thought much about it, that they had expected the Americans would punish the soldier for his mistake, they had, that is, until representatives of the anti-American Socialist party came up from Tokyo to stir up trouble. With the Girard case the Socialists have been eminently successful in his stirring up of trouble. Immediately after the incident occurred, they managed to pressure the Japanese Government to demanding that Specialist Girard be turned over to Japan over for trial. Despite a fairly clearcut Japanese-American agreement to the contrary, the Japanese eventually persuaded the American military authorities here in Tokyo to surrender Girard. Secretary of Defense Wilson's refusal to hand Girard over to the Japanese has only added fuel to the fire.

As well-intentioned as Mr. Wilson's act may have been, it came too late. Japan had already been officially notified by the proper American authorities that Girard would be handed over for trial in the Japanese courts. The Japanese government now intends to proceed with the trial on that basis.

Thus the Girard case, originally a simple though tragic accident, has become just exactly what the Socialists hoped, a serious threat to Japanese-American relations.

This is Bob Pierpoint in Tokyo. And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower won support today for his foreign aid program. The White House says the first 300 telegrams received since the President's broadcast appeal last night favor the program "better than 9 to 1." Mr. Eisenhower also gained support today in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Secretary of State Dulles told the committee it would be "folly" to cut foreign aid in the absence of a "safe-guarded" disarmament system. Dulles said mutual assistance offers "the greatest deterrent against aggression at the the least cost. If we were not spending dollars," he said, "we would be spending blood." Dulles daid, in answer to questions, that the program entails additional funds for military aid to Yugoslavia "only to a very slight extent." And he assured the committee that Britain's new concept of defense "does not involve our picking up the check."

The senators favored Mr. Eisenhower's proposal that economic aid be handled on a loan basis. Republican Senator Capehart called the whole program "sound in principle." He said, "For the first time in ten years I am going to vote for and support this program." Mansfield of Montana...the Democratic whip...complimented Dulles on his "very excellent presentation." Democratic Leader Johnson said Mr. Eisenhower, in last night's speech, "laid down some general principles which, in my opinion, go a long way to meet the needs of our foreign policy." But Johnson said the President's figures are "not sacrosanct."

At his news conference today, Mr Eisenhower said he will continue to fight for his budget. He said more than half of the two and a half -billion collar cut voted yesterday by the House Appropriations Committee in the Defense Department budget is "no cut at all -- just a bookkeeping operation."

But a billion, 200-million dollars of the cut, he said, is real. And he warned that, if allowed to stand, it will "directly" affect the aircraft procurement and guided missile development programs, Mr. Eisenhower stood by his statement of a week ago...that he will not "punish" Republican lawmakers who do not go along with his proposals. But he said, "I hope I will never be accused of being so namby-pamby that I don't have degrees of enthusiasm about people that stand with me and those who stand against me." He said he would "never" agree to a tax cut until there is a bigger surplus in the budget. And House Speaker Rayburn conceded today that a tax cut this year is not a "probability".

Mr. Eisenhower spoke at some length on the subject of disarmament. This is a matter, he said, on which we should not be "picayunish" or "recalcitrant". Mr. Eisenhower advocated a "step-by-step" solution of the problem. He said in dealing with a country like Russia, which has "a history of breaking treaties", there must be guarantees. Taking a step at a time, he said, will provide a means of testing Russia's "good faith". Last Sunday, Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, said the Russians are not to be trusted on "anything". Mr. Eisenhower said today that to reduce world tensions, progress in "some kind of disarmament" has got to be made.

The Senate was the scene today of a verbal attack on Democratic Senator Morse. The attack grew out of a speech Morse made last week-end in Detroit, in which he said President Eisenhower and Teamsters President Dave Beck are "too of the same kind of immoralists" Today, Republican senators ...led by Bridges of New Hampshire, accused Morse of "character assassination" and demanded that he apologize for what they called his "bad taste." Morse refused to apologize.

Democratic Representative Durham proposed today that the government launch a new 10-year program to stimulate both private and public development of atomic power. Durham is chairman of the joint congressional atomic energy committee.

A new Senate Subcommittee announced today that it will investigate the United States policy of no trade with Red China. Senator Magnuson, the subcommittee chairman, said, "You can't keep 400-million people behind an economic bamboo curtain forever, just because you don't like the policies of their government."

In Jordan today, four persons convicted of spying for Israel were publicly hanged. They were arrested last year and condemned to death two months ago by amilitary court.

In Paris, President Coty today began the search for a new premier to succeed Guy Mollet, who resigned yesterday after losing a vote of confidence in the National Assembly.

The case of Ammy specialist William Girard came up today at President Eisenhower's news conference. Girard has been indicted by a Japanese court on manslaughter charges..growing out of the fatal shooting of a Japanese woman who trespassed on a U.S. Army firing range, outside of Tokyo. The Japanese wanted to try Girard. They say they have jurisdiction in the case. Secretary of Defense Wilson has ordered the Army not to surrender Girard to the Japanese authorities, pending further study of the case. Mr. Eisenhower said today that the case is being carefully reviewed by the State and Defense Departments "to make certain that no injustice is done any American." My colleague, Bob Pierpoint..whose base of operations is Tokyo..went yesterday to the village where the Japanese victim lived. Here is his first hand report.

PIERPOINT: Maebashi is a pleasant bustling little city, lying on the lower slopes of the Mikuni Mts., 60 miles northwest of Tokyo. As the county seat of Goma County, Maebashi is the legation of the District Court scheduled to the Socialist 3/c William Girard of the Ottawa - La Salle, Illinois, on charges of manslaughter. Specialist Girard is accused of having shot and killed, last January, a Japanese woman, Mrs. Naka Sakai, who was trespassing on the Somaghara firing range, just outside Maebashi. Yesterday, this reporter, together with our CBS interpreter, visited Maebashi and Somagahara firing range. Several points in the now internationally famour Girard case are in better perspective as a result of this trip.

First of all it seems obvious from studying the facts of the incidents, that specialist Girard did not actually mean to kill Mrs. Sakai. At Somagahara, both sides, Japanese as well as American, generally agree that he meant only to scare her away. Mr. Sakai, her husband, told CBS News yesterday that whichever side, Japan or America, that tries the American soldier who killed his wife, should be merciful. As one Japanese in Maebashi said "Mrs Sakai and Specialist Girard were both very unlucky." Of course, both of them were more than unlucky. Mrs. Sakai was trespassing and she knew it. Her husband also said yesterday that he had repeatedly warned her to stay away from Somagahara during firing practice. Moreover, there are warning signs posted in English and Japanese all over the range. On the other hand, Specialist Girard did not by any means need to shoot Mrs. Sakai. The claim that he was merely attempting to protect American property is not consistent with the situation. She was there with the tacit agreement of both Japanese and Americans. Even though the firing range is off limits to Japanese, in theory, they're on it constantly. The range is too large and there are too many Japanese liiing in the area for the American Army and Japanese Police to keep them all off. The truth is that neither side really tries. Although the United States Army does not like to admit it officially, Japanese farmers and villagers, in the area, are openly allowed on the range when there is no firnng going on. These Japanese named "brass pickers" by the GI's, are allowed to gather empty shell casings, shrapnel and even dud shells which theysort and sell for scrap metal. The extra income which the people in the Maebashi area earn from the scrap metal, helps supplement the low family budget. But it sometimes makes them take risks they should not take. It can even lead them to enter the firing range before the American soldiers have finished firing for the day. As Mrs. Sakai did on the afternoon she was shot by Specialist Girard.

In order to prevent further accidents of this nature, the Japanese have now organized an association which tightly controls the movements of the "brass pickers" in and around the firing range. The main rule of the Brass Pickers Association is: "No picking during firing." The American Army quietly and wisely cooperates. It does not mind the Japanese picking up the scrap metal. But it is just as anxious as the Japanese to prevent further Girard incidents. But people around Maebashi are very disturbed nowadays at the fact that the Girard case has caused so much trouble between Japan and America. They are afraid the American Army will stop allowing them to gather and sell the scrap metal from the firing range if the trouble contines. Nor are they particularly worried about which side should try specialist Girard, Japan or America. Several of them told CBS News quite frankly that they never thought much about it, that they had expected the Americans would punish the soldier for his mistake, they had, that is, until representatives of the anti-American Socialist party came up from Tokyo to stir up trouble. With the Girard case the Socialists have been eminently successful in this stirring up of trouble. Immediately after the incident occurred, they managed to pressure the Japanese Government to demanding that Specialist Girard be turned over to Japan for trial. Despite a fairly clear cut Japanese - American agreement to the contrary, the Japanese eventually persuaded the American military authorities here in Tokyo to surrender Girard. Secretary of Defense Wilson's refusal to hand Girard over to the Japanese has only added fuel to the fire.

As well - intentioned as Mr. Wilson's act may have been, it came too late. Japan had already been officially notified by the proper American authorities that Girard would be handed over for trial in the Japanese courts. The Japanese government now intends to proceed with the trial on that basis.

Thus the Girard case, origianlly a simple though tragic incident, has become just exactly what the Socialists hoped, a serious threat to Japanese American relations.

This is Bob Pierpoint in Tokyo. And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Yhat was the first-hand account of how a Japanese village feels , when it finds itself the center of an international dispute.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The case of William Girard poses no easy problem. In solving it, we might do well to recall the admoninton Frank Vanderlip once made. "Since nothing is settled until it is settled right," he said, "no matter how unlimited power a man may have, unless he exercises it justly, his action will return to plague him."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., May 23, 1957

This is the news:

President Eisenhower held a two-hour meeting with the National Security Council today on the subject of disarmament. Harold Stassen, the President's special adviser on disarmament, sat in on the conference. So did Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff. Last week, Radford said the Russians are not to be trusted on disarmament, "or anything." Stassen, who has been representing the United States at the five-power disarmament talks in London, has expressed "cautious optimism" that these negotiations may lead to a limited accord. Stassen would say nothing to reporters today when he came out of the Security Council meeting. But he and Secretary Dulles did report immediately to a Senate disarmament subcommittee, headed by Senator Humphrey. This meeting also lasted for two hours. When it was over, Humphrey issued a statement "cleared" by both Stassen and Dulles. It said the United States is in a "serious negotiation" with Russia on a first-step agreement for limited disarmament...and that this negotiation "should be pursued." The statement described the first step being sought as a "small arms slice with inspection." It quoted Stassen as saying, "Agreement does not depend on trust in the Soviet Union, but rather on effective inspection and assured mutual benefits." Stassen said he definitely plans to be back in London on Monday, when the disarmament talks resume after a 10-day recess. As a first step, Russia has proposed air inspection of Siberia in exchange for air inspection of the western half of the United States... on a matching, mile-for-mile basis. Stassen is expected to take back an American counter-proposal.

Secretary of Defense Wilson warned the Senate today not to go along with the House in cutting down on military appropriations. "This is no time," he said, "to take the cards and chips away from the President and Harold Stassen, when they're going to engage in this big international poker game." Wilson said he could not go along with the view of the House Appropriations Committee that the Communist threat seemed to be "somewhat abated". This is no time, he said, to gamble on hope alone. Wilson testified before a Senate appropriations subcommittee...while the foreign aid administrator, John Hollister, appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Hollister urged Congress to authorize foreign aid expenditures on a long-term basis. He said a long-range program would make for more efficient operation. Democratic Senator Morse opposed the move, saying that it would involve what he called "a dangerous extension of arbitrary executive power."

The House Post Office Committee today approved a bill that would raise the rate on first, second and third-class mail. Under this measure, the cost of mailing a First Class letter would go up to four cents.

The AFL-CIO today suspended the Laundry Workers Union on charges of corruption. Two other unions...the Distillery Workers and the Allied Industrial Workers ...were placed on a year's probation. In each case, the action grew out of alleged welfare fund irregularities.

Governor Collins of Florida today refused to extradite Mr. and Mrs. Melvin B. Ellis to Massachusetts (ON CHARGES OF KIDNAPPING) their foster daughter, Hildy. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis are of the Jewish faith. The natural mother is a Catholic. Massachusetts courts have ruled that the child, who is 6, should be placed in a Catholic foundling home for adoption within the Catholic faith. The Ellises adopted the child when she was 10 days old.

The French government crisis has run into a new complication. Former Premier Mendes-France resigned today as head of the Radical-Socialist Party, when members of the party challenged his leadership. Mendes-France had asked the party to expel two members who voted for the Mollet government in last Tuesday's confidence vote. The party refused. (Mollet lost the vote in the National Assembly...but is continuing as head of a caretaker government until a new premier is named).

In the United Nations Security Council today, Syria formally accused Israel of violating the 1949 armistice agreement. Syria based the charge on Israel's action in constructing a bridge at Lake Huleh, in the demilitarized zone on the Israeli-Syrian frontier. Syria contended that the bridge gives Israel a military advantage in the area and asked the Security Council to order the bridge removed. The Israeli delegate denied that the bridge has any military purpose. It was built, he said, only to handle equipment for a land reclamation project. The debate continues on Tuesday.

A United States Army court martial on Formosa today acquitted Master Sergeant Robert G. Reynolds of Colora, Maryland...charged with voluntary manslaughter in the fatal shooting of a Chinese civilian. Reynolds said he fired in self-defense after discovering the Chinese in the act of looking through a window of his home at Mrs. Reynolds. The Chinese Ministry of Justice on Formosa denounced the trial as "obviously not impartial". And Reynolds has been given a special police guard because of strong anti-American feeling.

The United States demanded today that Russia pay 756-thousand dollars for the "unprovoked" destruction of a U.S. Air Force plane in November, 1954. The American note rejected Russia's claim that the incident took place over Soviet territory. It said the United States can prove that the aircraft...a B-29 reconnaissance bomber...was attacked by Soviet fighters in international air space, off the coast of Japan. One American crewman was killed.

In some parliaments, the budget is the big order of business and governments stand or fall according to what happens to it. Consequently legislators and the public have some training in fighting the battles of the budget. In Britain, budget day, when the government introduces its budget, is awaited with excitement not unlike a world series in this country. People seem to appreciate that the amount of money in their pockets for the year is being more or less fixed, and they follow the doings of parliament with acute self-interest.

In countries with so-called responsible parliamentary government - where the government falls if it loses its majority - the budget is the monopoly of the party leadership. In England, for example, no member of the government party can bring in a money bill of his own, or even offer amendments to the government's bill. The Cabinet decides what the country needs, and any party member who votes against it must leave the party. There is no such thing, as in this country, where the budget can be publicly criticized by members of the Cabinet, or openly attacked by the party leader in the Senate, or the chairman of the party policy committee, not to mention a substantial proportion of party members.

This week President Eisenhower sent a special message to Congress defending his reduced Foreign Aid Program, then appealed to the public over radio and television, in the hope of lighting a fire under Congress. He may have succeeded. He made a thoroughly persuasive presentation, and Congress already is reacting to it. But surely this is a round-about way to do the nation's financial business. It encourages departments to ask more than they need, knowing they will get less than they ask. Even the Administration itself asks for more than it simply has to have. And the public doesn't know what is the rock-bottom figure for safety and sound government.

In our system, we sometimes have to carry on with a minority government. At present, instead of choosing one policy or the other, that of the Administration or that of the Opposition, Congress tries to mix the two together. The result is that neither party as such is responsible. Both are passing the buck to each other. Nobody dreams of discipline or teamwork, and everybody seems to be jubilantly on his own. As a result the public doesn't learn much about budgets.

This week, in the midst of the battle, the experts of the Joint Congressional Internal Revenue Committee delivered to Congress their forecast of federal spending and revenue for the coming year. They predicted that the amount spent will be greater than estimated, the revenue collected somewhat below expectation. Almost at once Democratic leaders put off plans to cut taxes till next year. But what is the battle of the budget about? Isn't Congress cutting it? It is, but chiefly the appropriations budget. These experts were talking about the spending budget. Obviously the spending budget is the one that matters now. Cutting the appropriations budget is a kind of delayed action. Not only that, the action is often reversed later on when the public isn't looking.

That is one detail that needs to be understood. Another is that cuts in the appropriations budget are not necessarily going to reduce spending. They look like cuts, but are a juggling of figures. As President Eisenhower told his news conference, at least half of the two-and-a-half billion dollar slash in the defense budget proposed by the House committee is sheer book-keeping, and no real saving.

There always is waste effort and compromise in passing a budget under our set-up. But this year the budget has been a special field day for politics. The non-modern Republicans think they see their chance of re-capturing the leadership of the party. The Democrats are hoping to capture both Congress and the White House by exploiting the inability of the Republicans to get together and stay together. It happens that economy is the slogan of the hour and everybody is competing for popularity. As politics, this is exhilarating, and it can be defended as an exercise in democracy, especially so since experience has shown that an astute and persistent president can make this awkward system work.

But so far, the battle of the budget has not contributed much light, if any, to two big questions that have to be answered. One is how much security our economy can afford. The other is how much economizing our security can afford. When the budget is passed it is doubtful if either question will have been satisfactorily answered.

mg 20

Word for Today

Under the American system, there is nearly always a battle of the budget. Hastings Doerr said, "Making a budget is a method of worrying before you spend, instead of afterward." In this day of international danger there could well be some worrying afterward, if cuts were too deep. Publilius Syrus warned us, "There are remedies worse than the disease."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 23, 1957
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower held a two-hour meeting with the National Security Council today on the subject of disarmament. Harold Stassen, the President's special adviser on disarmament, sat in on the conference. So did Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff. Last week, Radford said the Russians are not to be trusted on disarmament, "or anything." Stassen who has been representing the United States at the five-power disarmament talks in London, has expressed "cautious optimism" that these negotiations may lead to a limited accord. Stassen would say nothing to reporters today when he came out of the Security Council meeting. But he and Secretary Dulles did report immediately to a Senate disarmament subcommittee, headed by Senator Humphrey. This meeting also lasted for two hours. When it was over, Humphrey issues a statement "cleared" by both Stassen and Dulles. It said the United States is in a "serious negotiation" with Russia on a first-step agreement for limited disarmament...and that this negotiation "should be pursued". The statment described the first step being sought as a "small arms slice with inspection." It quoted Stassen as saying, "Agreement does not depend on trust in the Soviet Union, but rather on effective inspection and assured mutual benefits." Stassen said he definitely plans to be back in London on Monday, when the disarmament talks resume after a 10-day recess. As a first step, Russia has proposed air inspection of Siberia in exchange for air inspection of the western half of the United States..on a matching mile-for-mile basis. Stassen is expected to take back an American counter proposal.

Secretary of Defense Wilson warned the Senate today not to go along with the House in cutting down on military appropriations. "This is no time," he said, "to take the cards and chips away from the President and Harold Stassen, when they're going to engage in this big international poker game." Wilson said he could not go along with the view of the House Appropriations Committee that the Communist threat seemed to be "somewhat abated." This is no time, he said to gamble on hope alone. Wilson testified before a Senate appropriations subcommittee..while the foreign aid administrator, John Hollister, appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Hollister urged Congress to authorize foreign aid expenditures on a long-term basis. He said a long-range program would make for more efficient operation. Democratic Senator Morse opposed the move, saying that it would involve what he called "a dangerous extension of arbitrary executive power.

The House Post Office Committee today approved a bill that would raise the rate on first, second and third-class mail. Under this measure, the cost of mailing a First Class letter would go up to four cents.

The AFL-CIO today suspended the Laundry Workers Union on charges of corruption. Two other unions..the Distillery Workers and the Allied Industrial Workers..were placed an a year's probation. In each case, the action grew out of alleged welfare fund irregularities.

Governor Collins of Florida today refused to extradite Mr. and Mrs. Melvin B. Ellis to Massachusetts on charges of kidnapping their foster daughter, Hildy. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis are of the Jewish faith. The natural mother is a Catholic. Massachusetts courts have ruled that the child, who is 6, should be placed in a Catholic foundling home for adoption within the Catholic faith. The Ellises adopted the child when whe was 10 days old.

The French government crisis has run into a new complication. Former Premier Mendes-France resigned today as head of the Radical - Socialist Party, when members of the party challenged his leadership. Mendes-France had asked the party to expel two members who voted for the Mollet government in last Tuesday's confidence vote. The party refused. (Mollet lost the vote in the National Assembly...but is continuing as head of a caretaker government until a new premier is named.)

In the United Nations Security Council today, Syria formally accused Israel of violating the 1949 armistice agreement. Syria based the charge on Israel's action in constructing a bridge at Lake Huleh, in the demilitarized zone on the Israeli-Syrian frontier. Syria contended that the bridge gives Israel a military advantage in the area and asked the Security Council to order the bridge removed. The Israeli delegate denied that the bridge has any military purpose. It was built, he said, only to handle equipment for a land reclamation project. The debate continues on Tuesday.

A United States Army court martial on Formosa today acquitted Master Sergeant Robert G. Reynolds of Colora, Maryland...charged with voluntary manslaughter in the fatal shooting of a Chinese civilian. Reynolds said he fired an self-defense after discovering the Chinese in the act of looking through a window of his home at Mrs. Reynolds. The Chinese Ministry of Justice on Formosa denounced the trial as "obviously not impartial." And Reynolds has been given a special police guard because of strong anti-American feeling.

The United States demanded today that Russia pay 756-thousand dollars for the "unprovoked"destruction of a U.S. Air Force plane in November, 1954. The American note rejected Russia's claim that the incident took place over Soviet territory. It said the United States can prove that the aircraft ...a B-29 reconnaissance bomber...was attacked by Soviet fighters in international air space, off the coast of Japan. One American crewman was killed.

In some parliaments, the budget is the big order of business, and governments stand or fall according to what happens to it. Consequently legislators and the public have some training in fighting the battles of the budget. In Britain, budget day, when the government introduces its budget, is awaited with excitement not unlike a world series in this country. People seem to appreciate that the amount of money in their pockets for the year is being more or less fixed, and they follow the doings of parliament with acute self-interest.

In countries with so-called responsible parliamentary government - where the government falls if it loses its majority - the budget is the monopoly of the party leadership. In England, for example, no member of the government party can bring in a money bill of his own, or even offer amendments to the government's bill. The cabinet decides what the country needs, and any party member who votes against it must leave the party. There is no such thing, as in this country, where the budget can be publicly criticized by members of the Cabinet, or openly attacked by the party leader in the Senate, or the chairman of the party policy comitttee, not to mention a substantial proportion of the party members.

This week President Eisenhower sent a special message to Congress defending his reduced Foreign Aid Program, then appealed to the public over radio and television, in the hope of lighting a fire under Congress. He may have succeeded. He made a thoroughly persuasive presentation, and Congress already is reacting to it. But surely this is a round-about way to do the nation's financial business. It encourages departments to ask more than they need, knowing they will get less than they ask. Even the Administration itself asks for more than it simply has to have. And the public doesn't know what is the rock - bottom figure for safety and sound goverement.

In our system, we sometimes have to carry on with a minority government. At present, instead of choosing one policy or the other, that of the Administration or the Opposition, Congress tries to mix the two together. The result is that neither party as such is responsible. Both are passing the buck to each other. Nobody dreams of discipline or teamwork, and everybody seems to be jubilantly on his own. As a result the public doesn't learn much about budgets.

But what is the battle of the budget about? Isn't Congress cutting it? It is, but chiefly the appropriations budget. These experts were talking about the spending budget. Obviously the spending budget is the one that matters now. Cutting the appropriations budget is a kind of delayed action. Not only that, the action is often reversed later on, when the public isn't looking.

That is one detail that needs to be understood. Another is that cuts is the appropriations budget are not necessarily going to reduce spending. They look like cuts, but are a juggling of figures. As President Eisenhower told his news conference, at least half of the two - and - a - half billion dollar slash in the defense budget proposed by the House committee is sheer book- keeping, and no real saving.

There always is waste effort and compromise in passing a budget under our set - up . But this year the budget has been a special field day for politics. The non-modern Republicans think they see their chance of recapture the leadership of the party. The Democrats are hoping to capture both Congress and the White House by exploiting the inability of the Republicans to get together and stay together. It happens that economy is the slogan of the hour and everybody is competing for popularity. As politics this is exhilarating, and it can be defended as an exercise in democracy, especially so since experience has shown that an astute and persistent president can make this awkward system work.

But so far, the battle of the budget has not contributed much light, if any to two big questions that have to be answered. One is how much security our economy can afford. The other is how much economizing our security can afford. When the budget is passed it is doubtful if either question will have been satisfactorily answered.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: Under the American system, there is nearly always a battle of the budget. Hastings Doerr said, "Making a budget is a method of worrying before you spend, instead of afterward." In this day of international danger there could well be some worrying afterward, if cuts were too deep. Pubilius Syrus warned us, there are remedies worse than the disease."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., May 24, 1957

This is the news:

The Chinese Nationalist government today expressed its "profoundest regret" over the anti-American rioting on Formosa in which at least nine Americans were injured. The United States Embassy in the capital city of Taipei was gutted---furniture smashed and records destroyed. The United States Information Agency building was also wrecked. The mob...estimated at 10-thousand...was protesting the acquittal yesterday of an American soldier accused of killing a Chinese civilian. The acquittal was by a United States Army court martial. Today...in tendering his government's formal apology in Washington...the Chinese Nationalist ambassador called the incident "an outbreak of emotion." And persons responsible, he said, were being placed under arrest. The State Department said the United States is demanding "full compensation". In Congress, Senate Republican Leader Knowland called the outbreak "shocking". He said, "The prompt action of the government there in restoring order does not condone the irresponsible mob action." Knowland is a strong supporter of the Nationalist government. The Democratic Leader...Senator Johnson... called it "very regrettable that people for whom we've done so much would destroy our buildings and tear down our flags because of one incident."

The Nationalist government has declared martial law on Formosa, in an effort to prevent further outbreaks. There are about 9-thousand Americans on the island, counting women and children. All embassy personnel are accounted for.

In Paris today, Rene Pleven was chosen prospective premier to succeed Guy Mollet, who lost a vote of confidence earlier this week in the National Assembly. Pleven twice served as premier between 1950 and 1952. President Coty today asked him to see if he could muster the support necessary to form a new government.

France demanded today that Tunisia guarantee "proper application" of the economic treaty between the two countries. On Wednesday, France suspended financial aid to Tunisia...on grounds that it was supporting the rebel movement in Algeria. Last night, the Tunisian premier said that as a consequence the whole treaty...including its special customs provisions... is null and void. Today, the French foreign ministry denied this. But it said France will insist that Tunisia stop giving aid to the Algerian revolt.

Syria announced today that it is withdrawing its troops from Jordan at the request of King Hussein. Syria has maintained a military force in Jordan since the Israeli attack on Egypt last October. A report that these troops will now be replaced by forces from Saudi Arabia is not confirmed.

In Moscow today, the Communist newspaper Pravda criticized Israel's acceptance of the Eisenhower Doctrine. It said the action "runs counter to Israel's pledge not to be party to any alliance...or agreement...pursuing aggressive aims against the Soviet Union." Israel, it said, has embarked on "a dangerous path." Under the Eisenhower Doctrine, the United States is prepared to come to the aid of any Middle East country requesting help against Communist aggression.

The representatives of 11 Arab countries today asked the United States to cut off American aid to France...because of what they called "outrageous acts of terror" committed by French troops in Algeria. They also said their governments would take "any measures necessary" to prevent Israel from sending a test ship through the Suez Canal or using the Gulf of Aqaba. Attempting a test case, they said, could lead only to "unfortunate happenings." The Arab envoys met with Secretary of State Dulles for an hour at the State Department.

Britain and Egypt opened economic talks today in Rome. Egypt is said to have started off by demanding ~~expected to demand~~ reparations for damage done in the Anglo-French invasion. Britain may also demand compensation from Egypt for property seized by the Nasser government, as well as for British interest in the old Suez Canal Company. On ~~these claims and counter-claims, little progress is~~ expected. ~~Arrangements may be made, however, for resumption of trade. The talks will go on for about 10 days.~~

→

The Cuban government says it has broken up an attempted rebel landing on the southeast coast of Cuba, near (KA-BO-NÉE-KO) Cabonico. It was in this same general area that the rebel leader, Fidel Castro, landed with a group of followers last year. Castro is still holding out in the Sierra Maestra mountains. The Cuban government claims there were 27 men in this latest landing attempt...and that two of them were captured. The rest of the force, it says, "dispersed".

In Washington, the Labor Department reports that the cost of living reached a new high in April for the eighth consecutive month. The price index in April went up three-tenths of one percent. As a result of this increase, a million, 400-thousand workers in the auto, electrical and farm equipment industries will receive an automatic two-cents-an-hour boost in pay.

The Federal Reserve Board today advised against placing federal controls on installment buying at this time.

In Seattle today... Dave Beck, Jr., son of the teamsters president, was served with a subpoena ordering him to appear before the Senate rackets committee. He had been sought as a witness for more than a month.

West German Chancellor Adenauer arrived in this country today for a week's visit. He said...in a formal statement...that he hopes to discuss with President Eisenhower "and other leading personalities in Washington" the problem of German reunification. ~~He said, "We know that our alliance with the West offers the best guarantee for the peace of the world and reunification of Germany." Adenauer will spend Sunday at the President's Gettysburg farm.~~

STET

~~The West German defense minister...Franz Joseph Strauss...today ended a two-day conference with British leaders in London. A communique signed by Strauss and the British defense minister, Duncan Sandys, reported "full agreement on the principles of collective defense." The communique declared Britain's "firm intention" to keep a "substantial" military force in Europe...in addition to building up a nuclear deterrent against possible Soviet attack.~~

West Germany today rejected Soviet demands that it ban nuclear weapons from its territory. The rejection was contained in a formal note delivered in Moscow. The note called on Russia to agree to effective disarmament control.

The United States is about to resume "serious negotiation" with Russia, looking toward a "first-step" disarmament agreement. My colleague, Bill Downs, has been covering this story at the State Department. Here is his report:

(Downs tape rune 4:45 Returns on cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow."

That was my colleague, Bill Downs, reporting from Washington. The disarmament story will be continued tomorrow at another White House conference attended by Mr. Stassen and other high officials. The five-power talks resume in London on Monday.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is George Bryan.

Word for Today

There is some debate in this country as to how far we should trust Russia in negotiating even a "first-step" disarmament agreement with inspection. Perhaps the ideal observation in a case like this was made by Arthur Schnitzler. He said, "One can positively never be deceived, if one mistrusts everything in the world---even one's own skepticism."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

FRIDAY, MAY 24, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: It has been announced several times in Washington that the United States is about to resume serious negotiations with Russia looking toward a first-step disarmament agreement. My colleague, Bill Downs, has been covering this story at the State Department. Here is his report.

DOWNS: Not since Mr. Neville Chamberlain flew to Munich has there been such peacetime interest developing as now in the projected flight on Sunday of Mr. Harold Stassen to resume the disarmament negotiations in London. The parallel is unfortunate but the missions of the two men are similar for their times. The umbrella-toting British Prime Minister was devoutly intent on stopping an old fashioned war that threatened to destroy Western Europe and did. Disarmament negotiator Stassen carries a briefcase and in it he will transport new American proposals seeking a practical, workable and safe way to keep all civilization from being erased from the earth.

During the past two weeks here in Washington there has developed an excitement and urgency and anticipation almost in top circles of the government which reminds one of the pre-D-Day atmosphere during the war. Source of this activity obviously was two men - the veteran U. S. Ambassador to Moscow, Charles Bohlen and Harold Stassen. Bohlen debriefed the Pentagon, the Central Intelligence Agency, the State Department and other interested government departments. It was Bohlen's final report as a Russian expert before taking up his new post as U. S. Ambassador to the Phillipines. At the same time, there was a recess called in the eight week old London disarmament talks. The President's special adviser on disarmament affairs, Harold Stassen, returned here to report to Sec. Dulles and to the President. What both men reported was this: That the Russians will continue to be recalcitrant and stubborn on political affairs, impossible in their propaganda and diplomacy, but there is one field of international relations where they are interested in negotiation. This is the field of disarmament.

The Russian change of attitude regarding the certain dangers of nuclear warfare developed after the death of Stalin. Perhaps it was the Soviet scientists themselves who convinced the Kremlin's collective leadership that no nation, no matter how big or powerful, could fight a nuclear war without itself being destroyed. To the Russian people, who suffered some 20,000,000 casualties in the last holocaust, war is a dread thing - a feeling recognized as a political fact in the Kremlin. The recent economic reorganization of the Soviet bureaucracy also confirmed reports that the immense cost of maintaining a gigantic military establishment is being felt in the Russian economy, just as it is in the American.

And then on April the 30th, the Soviet negotiators in London submitted a proposal. It appeared slightly absurd at first, proposing to trade aerial inspection of a part of Siberia for Russian aerial inspection of Alaska and all of the United States west of the Mississippi. But on second reading, the Western negotiators realized that the Russians had done two important things. They had accepted the principle of aerial inspection, which they jeered at when President Eisenhower proposed it at the Geneva Summit conference. And also they dropped their insistence of a banning of hydrogen and atomic weapons as a condition for negotiation of disarmament.

The administration has taken these portents seriously. Today Sec. of State Dulles presided over another conference of top defense officials, atomic energy experts, foreign policy planners and White House representatives to work out with Negotiator Stassen the details of an American counter-proposal on disarmament. The proposal contemplates a multi-national treaty for a first-step international air and ground inspection, possibly over the north polar region of Siberia, Alaska and Canada. There also is envisioned what is called "a small slice" arms cutback program wherein token numbers of warships, tanks, planes and missiles might be turned over to international disarmament depots for safe-keeping. But the ultimate weapons, the H-bomb and the A-bomb and the power of annihilation, would not be touched in these initial negotiations. The U. S. theory of disarmament, apparently, is that the infant has to learn to toddle before it can walk.

So Harold Stassen's briefcase when he leaves for London on Sunday will be jammed with first steps and small slices. That briefcase will also carry the hopes of most people around the world that perhaps having invented a way to blow our civilization to perdition we might also be smart enough to stop the explosion.

Now back to Ed Murrow.

Ed. trans. FAD

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

FRIDAY, MAY 24, 1957
7:45 to 8:00 PM

MURROW: It has been announced several times in Washington that the United States is about to resume serious negotiations with Russia looking toward a first-step disarmament agreement. My colleague, Bill Downs, has been covering this story at the State Department. Here is his report.

DOWNS: Not since Mr. Neville Chamberlain flew to Munich has there been such peacetime interest developing as now in the projected flight on Sunday of Mr. Harold Stassen to resume the disarmament negotiations in London. The parallel is unfortunate but the missions of the two men are similar for their times. The umbrella-toting British Prime Minister was devoutly intent on stopping an old fashioned war that threatened to destroy Western Europe and did. Disarmament negotiator Stassen carries a briefcase and in it he will transport new American proposals seeking a practical, workable and safe way to keep all civilization from being erased from the earth.

During the past two weeks here in Washington there has developed an excitement and urgency and anticipation almost in top circles of the government which reminds one of the pre-D-Day atmosphere during the war. Source of this activity obviously was two men - the veteran U. S. Ambassador to Moscow, Charles Bohlen and Harold Stassen. Bohlen debriefed the Pentagon, the Central Intelligence Agency, the State Department and other interested government departments. It was Bohlen's final report as a Russian expert before taking up his new post as U. S. Ambassador to the Phillipines. At the same time, there was a recess called in the eight week old London disarmament talks. The President's special adviser on disarmament affairs, Harold Stassen, returned here to report to Sec. Dulles and to the President. What both men reported was this: That the Russians will continue to be recalcitrant and stubborn on political affairs, impossible in their propaganda and diplomacy, but there is one field of international relations where they are interested in negotiation. This is the field of disarmament.

The Russian change of attitude regarding the certain dangers of nuclear warfare developed after the death of Stalin. Perhaps it was the Soviet scientists themselves who convinced the Kremlin's collective leadership that no nation, no matter how big or powerful, could fight a nuclear war without itself being destroyed. To the Russian people, who suffered some 20,000,000 casualties in the last holocaust, war is a dread thing - a feeling recognized as a political fact in the Kremlin. The recent economic reorganization of the Soviet bureaucracy also confirmed reports that the immense cost of maintaining a gigantic military establishment is being felt in the Russian economy, just as it is in the American.

And then on April the 30th, the Soviet negotiators in London submitted a proposal. It appeared slightly absurd at first, proposing to trade aerial inspection of a part of Siberia for Russian aerial inspection of Alaska and all of the United States west of the Mississippi. But on second reading, the Western negotiators realized that the Russians had done two important things. They had accepted the principle of aerial inspection, which they jeered at when President Eisenhower proposed it at the Geneva Summit conference. And also they dropped their insistence of a banning of hydrogen and atomic weapons as a condition for negotiation of disarmament.

The administration has taken these portents seriously. Today Sec. of State Dulles presided over another conference of top defense officials, atomic energy experts, foreign policy planners and White House representatives to work out with Negotiator Stassen the details of an American counter-proposal on disarmament. The proposal contemplates a multi-national treaty for a first-step international air and ground inspection, possibly over the north polar region of Siberia, Alaska and Canada. There also is envisioned what is called "a small slice" arms cutback program wherein token numbers of warships, tanks, planes and missiles might be turned over to international disarmament depots for safe-keeping. But the ultimate weapons, the H-bomb and the A-bomb and the power of annihilation, would not be touched in these initial negotiations. The U. S. theory of disarmament, apparently, is that the infant has to learn to toddle before it can walk.

So Harold Stassen's briefcase when he leaves for London on Sunday will be jammed with first steps and small slices. That briefcase will also carry the hopes of most people around the world that perhaps having invented a way to blow our civilization to perdition we might also be smart enough to stop the explosion.

Now back to Ed Murrow.

Ed. trans. FAD

Edward R. Murrow Mon., May 27, 1957

This is the news:

Five-power disarmament talks resumed today in London. The United States representative, Harold Stassen, did not present the new American proposals for a "first-step" arms agreement. Stassen conferred with the delegates of Britain, France and Canada before the session and briefed them on the nature of the proposals. And there is speculation that Stassen may not submit the American program formally for several days, in order to give the other western delegates time to consult their governments. Before they went into today's meeting...which lasted only 20 minutes...Stassen and the Soviet representative, Valerian Zorin, both said they were prepared for serious negotiations.

In Washington today, West German Chancellor Adenauer and Secretary of State Dulles discussed world problems...including unification of Germany and disarmament...for four hours. Adenauer said this evening that they had had a "very frank and very candid discussion." Dulles is said to have reassured Adenauer that West Germany will be "fully consulted" before any first-step disarmament agreement with Russia is developed. The chancellor had luncheon today with President Eisenhower, at the White House. The communique summing up the talks is due tomorrow.

House Republican leaders will try to restore only 300-million of the two and a half billion dollars slashed from President Eisenhower's defense budget by the House Appropriations Committee. Mr. Eisenhower said last week that the Administration would try to "live with" a billion, 300-million dollars of the cut...that it was "nothing but a bookkeeping operation anyway." But the other billion, 200-million, he said, was essential. The House Republican Policy Committee met today and decided to try to restore 300-million dollars. As for the rest of the two and a half billion dollar cut, Republican Leader Martin said, "We've got to face reality." There were signs late today that...with the help of House Democrats...as much as 500-million dollars might be restored.

Special Ambassador James P. Richards testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee today on his recent mission to the Middle East. On that mission, Richards explained the Eisenhower Doctrine to countries of the area...and committed the United States to 120-million dollars in military and economic aid. Richards said today that the program already has scored "a notable success". But Mr. Eisenhower, he said, needs to have continuing authority to act. He warned, "This cannot be a one-shot operation."

President Eisenhower today signed an appropriation bill...carrying 3-billion, 192-million dollars for the Post Office Department in the next fiscal year. This is 58-million dollars less than the Administration requested. Mr. Eisenhower said...in signing the measure...that unless Congress votes more money, postal services will have to be "substantially" curtailed, starting July first. Postmaster General Summerfield says that special delivery rates...and fees for money orders and insured mail...will be raised, effective July first.

The joint congressional atomic energy committee opened hearings today on the effects of radio-active fallout. Dr. Charles Dunham testified that (with care) release of radio-active material in the utilization of nuclear energy can be reduced. "But," he said, "if we continue to reduce the fraction we are willing to release, we eventually reach a "cost of control" which makes the operation prohibitative." Dr. Dunham is director of the Atomic Energy Commission's division of medicine. Dr. Alvin Graves of the Los Alamos laboratory said it is possible to make cleaner bombs. "But complete cleanliness in nuclear weapons," he said, "is impossible to achieve."

~~President Eisenhower today nominated James Langley, newspaper publisher of Concord, New Hampshire, to be ambassador to Pakistan. Langley would succeed Horace Hildreth, who resigned the first of the month.~~

The United States ~~today rejected~~ indicated today that it will reject Hungary's demand that 13 members of the staff of the American legation in Budapest be sent home. The Hungarian note had accused legation personnel of "illegal intelligence activity". A State Department spokesman said, "The United States rejects the concept implicit in this note that the Hungarian regime enjoys the prerogative of deciding the size of our diplomatic mission." It was indicated, however, that some members of the legation staff will be withdrawn.

Russia and Hungary have signed an agreement covering the status of Soviet troops "temporarily" based in Hungary. According to the Soviet news agency Tass, Russian troops stationed in Hungary will be subjected to Hungarian law.

